1864, April 29. The Danes retreat from Fredericia, and establish themselves in Fühnen, thus leaving the whole of Jutland in the hands of the allies.—May 8. A meeting of 50,000 Sleswig-Holsteiners at Rendsburg declares in favour of separation from Denmark, and the establishment of an independent duchy under Frederick VIII.—May 9. Naval victory of the Danes off Heligoland (q. v.).—May 12. Commencement of a suspension of hostilities resolved upon by the congress of London.—June 8. The king opens the railway from Copenhagen to Elsinore.—June 11. The ministry of Count Moltke assumes office.—June 25. The belligerents reject the bases of peace proposed by the congress of London. — June 26. Hostilities are resumed. — June 29. The Prussians seize the island of Alsen. —July 5. Gen. de Steinmann is appointed commander-in-chief of the Danish army.—July 10. The Prussians occupy Skagen.—July 13. The Austrians seize the islands of Mors and Sylt.—July 18. The Austrians occupy the island of Fochr.—July 19. Capt. Hammer surrenders a Danish flotilla of 19 boats and 252 men.—July 20. A truce is commenced.—July 21. The federal troops quit Rendsburg, which is occupied by the Prussians.—July 26. A conference for the restoration of peace assembles at Vienna.—Aug. 1. Preliminaries of peace are signed at Vienna, and a truce is concluded till Sep. 15.—Sep. 6. The Prince and Princess of Wales, with their infant son, visit Denmark.—Sep. 29. The Princess Dagmar is betrothed to the Czarewitch Nicholas.—Oct. 30. Peace is concluded at Vienna, Denmark agreeing to resign the duchies, to pay a large sum of money, and to acquiesce in a ratification of the frontier of Jutland.—Nov. 25. The Prussians complete the evacuation of Jutland.

1865, March 7. Death of Gen. de Gerlach.—June 21. A postal convention is concluded with Prussia.—Nov. 6. A new ministry is formed under Count Fayesenborg.

DENNEWITZ (Battle).—The allied Prussian, Swedish, and Russian army defeated the French, under Marshal Ney, at the village of Dennewitz, in Prussia, Sep. 6, 1813. The Prussians, who for some time maintained their ground against overwhelming numbers, were, by the arrival of Bernadotte with the Swedes and Russians, strongly reinforced, when the French were completely routed. They lost 13,000 men, 43 pieces of cannon, three standards, and 6,000 stand of arms, whilst the loss of the allied army was about 6,000 men.

DENOMINATIONS.—(See THREE DENOMINATIONS.)

DEODAND.—By 9 & 10 Vict. c. 62 (Aug. 18, 1846), the forfeiture of any chattel for having been the cause of the death of a man, was abolished from and after Sep. 1, 1846. Deodands, at first given to the Church, afterwards became the property of the Crown.

DEOGAUM (Treaty).—By a treaty concluded at this place, in Hindostan, Dec. 17, 1803, the Rajah of Berar ceded Cuttack (q. v.) to the British.

DE ONORO.—(See FUENTES DE ONORO.)

DEORHAM (Battle).—Ceawlin, King of the West Saxons, defeated the Britons at Deorham, supposed to be Dirham, in Gloucestershire, in 577. Three British kings fell in the battle, and the victors took possession of Bath, Cirencester, and Gloucester.

DEPHLOGISTICATED MURIATIC ACID.—(See CHLORINE.)

DEPTFORD (Kent).—Henry VIII. established a storehouse here about 1513, and granted a charter to the shipmen and mariners of England to found a guild in the parish church, under the name of the "Guild of the Most Glorious and Undivided Trinity," May 20, 1514. Here, too, Queen Elizabeth visited the Golden Hind, in which Drake had circumnavigated the globe, April 4, 1581. The town suffered from a fire in 1652, and from a flood in 1671. Trinity House hospital was founded in 1685. In 1698 Deptford was the residence of the Czar Peter the Great, during his initiation into the mysteries of shipbuilding. Waterworks were erected here in 1699; and the victualling office, built in 1745, was burned in 1749. The ancient hall of the Trinity House was taken down in 1787, and the hospital was rebuilt in 1788.

DEPUTIES (Chamber of).—The French legislative assembly received this title by a charter of Louis XVIII. in 1814, and retained it till the publication of Louis Napoleon's constitution, Jan. 14, 1852, which appointed the Corps Législatif in its stead.

DERBEND (Asia), the capital of Daghistan, occupies the site of the ancient Albana. The Russians took it in 1722, restoring it to the Persians in 1735. It again fell into the power of Russia in 1796, and was incorporated with that empire early in the present century.

DERBY (Derbyshire) is supposed to have been founded by the ancient Britons. At the Conquest in 1066, it was granted to William Peverell, natural son of William I., and in 1160 a Benedictine nunnery, of which some vestiges still remain, was founded. The grammar-school, which is supposed to be one of the most ancient endowments in England, was granted to the corporation in 1554. In 1592 the plague visited the town and carried off many of its inhabitants, and in 1745 it was the extreme point reached by the Pretender in his invasion of England. Dr. Darwin founded the Philosophical Society of Derby in 1783. The silk manufacture was introduced by John Lombe in 1717, that of porcelain in 1750, and here in 1793 Messrs. Strutt erected the first fire-proof mill in England. The infirmary was erected in 1800, and the town hall in 1828. In 1833–4, 2,400 factory hands struck work, and the prosperity of the town suffered in consequence. The arboretum, which was presented to the town by Mr. Joseph Strutt, was opened Sep. 16, 1840; and in Oct., 1841, the town hall was destroyed by fire. A new cattle market was opened in 1861. The new market hall was opened Tuesday, May 29, 1866.

DERBY ADMINISTRATIONS.—The first was formed on the resignation of the Russell Administration, officially announced Feb. 23, 1852. The cabinet was thus constituted:—

Treasury	Earl of Derby.
Lord Chancellor	Lord St. Leonards.
President of the Council	Earl of Lonsdale.
Privy Seal	Marquis of Salisbury.
Chancellor of Exchequer	Mr. Disraeli.
Home Secretary	Mr. Walpole.
Foreign Secretary	Earl of Malmesbury.
Colonial Secretary	Sir John Pakington, Bart.
Admiralty	Duke of Northumberland.
Board of Control	Mr. Herries.
Public Works	Lord John Manners.
Board of Trade	Mr. Henley.
Postmaster-General	Earl of Hardwicke.

They were defeated on their budget Dec. 16, 1852, and on the following day resigned the seals of office. (See ABERDEEN ADMINISTRATION.)——The second was formed on the resignation of the first Palmerston Administration, Feb. 20, 1858. The cabinet was thus constituted:—

Treasury	Earl of Derby.
Lord Chancellor	Lord Chelmsford.
President of the Council	Marquis of Salisbury.
Privy Seal	Earl of Hardwicke.
Chancellor of Exchequer	Mr. Disraeli.
Home Secretary	Mr. Walpole.
Foreign Secretary	Earl of Malmesbury.
Colonial Secretary	Lord Stanley.
Admiralty	Sir John Pakington, Bart.
Board of Control	Earl of Ellenborough.
Secretary at War	Colonel Peel.
Public Works	Lord John Manners.
Board of Trade	Mr. Henley.

Lord Stanley became president of the Board of Control and, on the passing of the India bill, minister for India on the resignation of the Earl of Ellenborough in June, 1858; and Sir E. Bulwer-Lytton, Bart., took Lord Stanley's place as Colonial Secretary. Mr. Walpole resigned the Home Secretaryship, and Mr. Henley the presidency of the Board of Trade, Feb. 28,

1859. The former office was filled by Mr. Sotheron Estcourt, and the latter by the Earl of Donoughmore. An amendment to the address was carried against the ministry June 10, 1859, and they resigned on the following day. (See PALMERSTON (SECOND) and THIRD DERBY ADMINISTRATIONS.)

DERBY RACE.—This great national race, held at Epsom, and founded by the Earl of Derby, was first run May 4, 1780, when it was won by Sir C. Bunbury's chesnut horse Diomed. The race was originally run on Thursday, but since 1838 it has taken place on the Wednesday after Trinity Sunday.

DERBY TRIALS.—At the assizes held at Derby, July 26, 1817, the grand jury found an indictment of high treason against Brandreth, Turner, Ludlam, and others. As participators in the Luddite insurrections, they were charged with levying and making war against the king. Special commissions were opened Sep. 25, and the trial commenced Oct. 15, and terminated Saturday, Oct. 25, when 23 of the prisoners received sentence of death. Brandreth, Turner, and the elder Ludlam were executed at Derby, Nov. 7, and the others were reprieved.

DERRICKS.—A. V. Newton, of Chancery Lane, patented certain improvements in "derricks for raising heavy bodies," Aug. 9, 1849. The great floating derrick of the Thames Iron Ship-building Company, built on a plan invented by Bishop, an American, was erected at Blackwall in 1859.

DERRY (Bishopric).—The date of the establishment of this Irish bishopric is unknown. Columbkille founded a monastery at Derry about 546. The first bishops of the district were called bishops of Tyrone, and had their see at Ardsrath or Ardstraw, in Donegal county; but in 597 they removed to Rathlone or Maghera, in Londonderry. In 1158 a council of bishops decreed that Derry should be erected into a see, and a bishop was apparently appointed, though there is no regular succession of bishops of Derry till 1279. The Church Temporalities Act, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 37, s. 32 (Aug. 14, 1833), directed that on the death of the Bishop of Raphoe, then in office, that diocese should be united to Derry. Under this provision the union of the two sees took place in 1834.

DERVISH.—These Mohammedan monks, professing rules for the most part similar to those of Christian monachism, originated at an early period in the history of Islam. They are divided into several orders, usually named after their founders, and of which the chief are the Bestamis, founded in 874; the Kadris in 1165; the Rufaji in 1182; the Mevelevis in 1273; the Nakshibendis in 1319; the Bektashis in 1357; the Rushenis in 1533; the Shemsiss in 1601; and the Jemalis in 1750.

DESIGN.—The Government School of Design, established at Somerset House, was opened June 1, 1837.

DESOLATION ISLAND (Indian Ocean) was discovered by the French navigator Kerguelen in 1772, and named after him. Capt. Cook landed Dec. 24, 1776, and having discovered that it was not a continent, as Kerguelen supposed, changed the name from Kerguelen Land to the Island of Desolation.

DESPARD'S PLOT.—In the year 1800 Col. Edward Marcus Despard began to plot against the government, and having induced about 36 persons to join him, formed a conspiracy to assassinate George III. and to subvert the government. The blow was fixed for Tuesday, Nov. 16, 1802, the day that had been appointed for the opening of Parliament. Despard and about 30 of his associates were arrested at their place of assembly, the Oakley Arms public-house, in Lambeth, on the night of Nov. 16. After a long examination, Col. Despard and 14 others were committed to take their trial for high treason before a special commission. The ringleader and six of his associates were executed at Horsemonger Lane Gaol, in presence of an immense crowd, Feb. 21, 1803.

DESSAU (Battle). — Wallenstein defeated Mansfeld and John Ernest of Weimar, in an engagement at the bridge of Dessau, in Anhalt-Dessau, in Germany, April 25, 1626. It was the scene of several encounters between the French and the allied squadrons in 1813.

DESVENTURADAS, or UNHAPPY ISLANDS (Pacific), were discovered by Magellan during his voyage across the Pacific in the spring of 1521. The name was given to them by this enterprising navigator on account of their lonely and deserted appearance. It is doubtful whether they have been visited by any European since their discovery.

DETROIT.—(See FORT DETROIT.)

DETROIT (United States) was founded by the French in 1670. The English captured it in 1759, and it suffered greatly during the revolutionary war. It was incorporated in 1802. The act of incorporation having been withdrawn in 1810, it was again incorporated in 1815. Lansing took its place as the capital of Michigan in 1847.

DETTINGEN (Battle) was fought June 16 (O.S.), or 27 (N.S.), 1743, near the village of Dettingen, in Bavaria, and is memorable as being the last battle in which a King of England appeared in person on the field. The Hessians and Hanoverians, under George II. of England, defeated the French under Marshal Noailles. The former lost 1,500, and the latter 3,000 men.

DEUTERONOMY.—This book, the last of the Pentateuch (q. v.), is supposed to have been written by Moses before B.C. 1451.

DEVA.—(See CHESTER.)

DEVI-COTTA FORT (Hindostan) was taken from the Rajah of Tanjore by Clive in 1749. The French took it in 1758, but it was recaptured by the English in 1759.

DEVIZES (Wiltshire) is a very ancient town, although no authentic information remains respecting its early history. The castle, at one time one of the strongest in the kingdom, was erected by Roger, Bishop of Salisbury, about 1132. In 1233 it was the prison of Hubert de Burgh; and in 1293 was, together with the town and park, settled by way of dower on Margaret, queen of Edward I. In July, 1643, the army of Charles I. was besieged here by the Parliamentary forces. The latter sustained a total defeat near the town, July 13. The county bridewell was erected in 1810.

DEVONPORT (Devonshire) received its present title in 1824, having previously been styled Plymouth Dock. A mechanics' institute was established in 1825; and the column to commemorate the change in the name of the town was erected in 1827. (See PLYMOUTH.)

DEVONSHIRE (Bishopric). — (See EXETER, Bishopric.)

DEVONSHIRE ADMINISTRATION took office in Nov., 1756. The cabinet was thus constituted:—

Treasury	The Duke of Devonshire.
President of the Council	Earl of Granville, better known as Lord Carteret.
Privy Seal	Earl Gower.
Chancellor of Exchequer	Hon. Henry Bilson Legge.
Secretaries of State	Mr. Pitt, afterwards Earl of Chatham.
	Earl of Holderneese.
Admiralty	Earl Temple.
Board of Trade	Earl of Halifax.
Secretary at War	Viscount Barrington.
Treasurer of the Navy	Rt. Hon. George Grenville.

The great seal was placed in commission. The king demanded the seals of office from Lord Temple April 5, 1757. Pitt was dismissed a few days later, and the administration was dissolved. An interregnum of nearly three months' duration followed. (See NEWCASTLE AND PITT ADMINISTRATION.)

DEVONSHIRE CLUB (London), formed in 1859 as the "Westbourne Club," was reorganized in 1864 under the name of the Devonshire Club.

DEWANGIRI (Hindostan).—The Bhotanese were repulsed in an attack upon this city Jan. 30, 1865, but they returned and compelled the British to evacuate it, Feb. 5. Gen. Tombs recaptured it April 2, and it was destroyed and abandoned by the troops under his command April 6.

DHARWAR (Hindostan), taken from the Mahrattas by Hyder Ali in 1778, was recaptured in 1791. In 1837, religious disputes between the Brahmins and Lingayets occurred, and the British Government was compelled to interfere.

DIABLINTES.—This Gallic tribe assisted the Veneti (q. v.) against Julius Cæsar, B.C. 56. The name occurs as late as the 7th century, and the situation of the nation is supposed to have been near the modern Mayenne.

DIADEM. — Selden (Titles of Honour) states that although the crown (q. v.) and the diadem have been from ancient times confounded, yet the latter was a very different thing from what a crown now is or was. The diadem was a fillet of silk, or linen; and no other crown was used, excepting in some Asiatic kingdoms, before the Christian æra. Diocletian assumed the diadem in 303.

DIAL.— (See SUN-DIAL.)

DIAMOND.—This gem is mentioned as the sixth jewel of Aaron's breastplate, B.C. 1491 (Exod. xxviii. 18). Some authorities consider that the original would be more correctly rendered by some other word. Pliny, in the "Natural History," written A.D. 77, speaks of it as the most costly of human possessions, and states that the ancient writers mention Ethiopia as its locality, but that it had been brought from India shortly before his own time. India, and especially the districts around Golconda, furnished nearly all the diamonds in Europe, until the discovery of the Brazilian mines in 1728. In 1730, the Rio Janeiro fleet brought 1,146 ounces of diamonds into Europe. These mines were let, in 1740, to a company of Rio Janeiro merchants. The diamond mines of the Ural mountains were discovered June 22, 1829. In 1373 the Emperor Charles IV. had the clasp of his cloak adorned with diamonds, and they were employed, roughly cut, in the decoration of church ornaments at a still earlier date. The art of cutting diamonds is, however, usually ascribed to Louis van Berghem, of Bruges, who discovered a process for cutting the gem into regular facets, in 1456. The diamond was first used for writing on glass in the 16th century. In 1562, ornaments cut with a diamond on Venetian glasses were common. In 1564 Clement Birague, of Milan, succeeded in engraving on them. The inflammability of the diamond was first asserted by Boetius de Boot in 1607, and demonstrated at Florence in 1694; while the products resulting from its combustion were ascertained by Lavoisier in 1772. Among celebrated diamonds may be mentioned the Kohinoor, which was found in one of the Golconda mines before the Christian æra. In 1526 it passed into the hands of the Emperor Baber, by whose descendant, Mohammed Shah, it was surrendered to Nadir Shah, in 1739. Runjeet Singh, the lion of the Punjaub, obtained it as a ransom from Shah Shooja in 1813, and in 1849 it was delivered to the English by Dhuleep Singh. Queen Victoria received it from the chairman of the East India Company June 3, 1850, and it formed one of the attractions of the Great Exhibition of 1851. In 1852 it was recut, and now weighs 102 carats, being worth £276,768.——The Pitt or Regent diamond was bought by T. Pitt, Esq. (grandfather of Wm. Pitt), during his governorship of Fort St. George, for £12,500, in Feb., 1702. In 1717 it was purchased by the Regent of Orleans for £135,000. It was exhibited in the Paris Exhibition of 1855. It weighs 137 carats, and is the most perfect diamond in the world.——The Orloff, or great diamond of the Russian sceptre, originally formed the eye of an Indian idol. In 1775 it was sold to Catherine II. for £90,000, an annuity of £4,000, and a patent of nobility. It is said to weigh 193 carats.——The Pigott diamond was brought to England by Earl Pigott, and sold by lottery in 1801. It weighs 49 carats, and is worth £40,000.——The great diamond of the Emperor of Brazil was discovered in 1808 by a negro slave. It is uncut, and weighs 1,680 carats: its value has been estimated at £5,044,800.——The Star of the South, discovered in Brazil by a negro in 1853, which originally weighed 254½ carats, has been reduced in cutting to 125 carats. It was exhibited in the International Exhibition of 1862. Free importation and exportation of diamonds were permitted by 6 Geo. II. c. 7 (1733). They were allowed to be landed without entry, report, or warrant, by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 52, s. 2 (Aug. 28, 1833).

DIAMOND NECKLACE.—Boehmer and Bas-

sanges, the court jewellers of France, were commissioned by Louis XV., in 1774, to collect the most beautiful diamonds, for a necklace, which he intended to present to Madame du Barry. Louis XV. died before the necklace was completed; but the jewellers persevered with their work, hoping that Louis XVI. would purchase it for Marie Antoinette. The necklace was valued at 1,800,000 francs, or £72,000. An intriguing woman, Madame Lamotte, who took the title of countess, pretending to have received authority from Marie Antoinette to purchase the necklace, induced the jewellers to part with it in return for orders, to which the forged signature of the queen was attached, amounting to 1,400,000 francs, or £56,000. This negotiation was completed in Jan., 1785. Several persons connected with the court became the dupes of Madame Lamotte, and a girl named Leguet, or D'Oliva, was on one occasion made to personate the queen. The Cardinal de Rohan, Grand Almoner, who had been employed as an instrument to carry out her schemes by Madame Lamotte, was arrested Aug. 15, 1785, and Madame Lamotte herself was taken at Bar-sur-Aube Aug. 19. They were, with Madame Lamotte's husband, sent to the Bastille. At the trial that ensued, brought to a close May 31, 1786, the cardinal's innocence was clearly established, and Monsieur and Madame Lamotte were sentenced to be flogged, branded on both shoulders, and imprisoned for life. She managed, however, after an imprisonment of about 10 months' duration, to take refuge in England. Having been pursued for debt, she endeavoured to escape by a window on the second story of her house, and falling from the window-sill, was killed on the spot. The scandal created by this affair proved most disastrous. Talleyrand-Périgord wrote to a friend: "Attend narrowly to that miserable affair of the necklace: I should not be surprised if it overturned the throne."

DIAMPER (Hindostan).—The Archbishop of Goa held a council here in 1599, for the purpose of compelling the inhabitants to abjure the heresies of the Nestorians.

DIANA (Temple).—(See EPHESUS.)

DIARBEKIR (Asia).—This town, occupying the site of the ancient Amid or Amida, was sacked by Tamerlane in 1393. It was frequently besieged, and was captured by Selim I. in 1515. The Persians regained possession in 1605, but it reverted to the Turks at the peace in 1639. It is the seat of a Nestorian archbishop and of a Jacobite patriarch. The Turks call it Kara Amid, or Black Amid, in allusion to the black basalt used in the construction of the houses, &c.

DIBIO.—(See DIJON.)

DICE are said to have been invented by Palamedes, at the siege of Troy, about B.C. 1183, though some authors ascribe their origin to the Lydians, B.C. 600. They were used by the Romans, by whom they were called tesseræ. The talus, though frequently mentioned as a species of dice, is hardly entitled to the distinction, as it always signified a figure with only four sides on which it could rest. The practice of cogging dice was known to the Romans. The Council of Eliberis about 300 passed a general canon forbidding laymen to play at dice, under the penalty of suspension from communion for a whole year. The Council of Constantinople in 691 prohibited the use of dice to both clergy and laity, the penalty for the former being deprivation, and for the latter excommunication. Dice were introduced into England at a very early date, and about 1066 they formed one of the chief amusements of the people, who played with them in a most extravagant manner. By 9 Geo. IV. c. 18, s. 2 (May 9, 1828), the duty on dice was fixed at 20*s.* the pair.

DICTATOR.—The Roman dictators possessed sovereign power in the state, and were the generals-in-chief of the army. The first was Titus Lartius, who was appointed B.C. 501. The dictators were at first chosen from the patrician order of the people; but, B.C. 356, Marcius Rutilus, a plebeian, obtained the honour. The office was finally abrogated by the law of Antony, B.C. 44.

DICTIONARY.—The earliest dictionary of which any record remains is one in the Chinese language, compiled by Pa-out-she, about B.C. 1100. Marcus Terentius Varro, who flourished B.C. 116—B.C. 28, was one of the first classic authors who turned his attention to lexicography; but the most celebrated dictionary of antiquity is the Onomasticon of Julius Pollux, which was completed early in the 3rd century. The earliest Latin dictionary of modern times was published by John Balbi of Genoa in 1460; but that of Calepio, published in 1502, is much superior. Sebastian Munster's Chaldee Dictionary appeared in 1527; Pagninus's Lexicon of the Hebrew language in 1529; Robert Stephens's Thesaurus in 1535; Erpenius's Arabic Dictionary in 1613; Schindler's Lexicon Pentaglottum in 1612; Edmund Castell's Lexicon Heptaglotton in 1669; and Phillips's New World of Words in 1658. Moreri published his Biographical, Historical, and Geographical Dictionary in 1673. Elisha Coles's English Dictionary appeared in 1677; and Bayle's Historical and Critical Dictionary and the Dictionary of the French Academy in 1694. Dr. Johnson's English Dictionary was completed in May, 1755; Walker's Dictionary appeared in 1791; and Francis Grose's Dictionary of the Vulgar Tongue in 1785.

DIDYMIUM, a rare metal, the discovery of which was announced by Mosander in 1841.

DIEG (Hindostan).—(See DEEG.)

DIEPPE (France), as early as the 10th century, was a fishing village possessing some fortifications, and in the 11th century was called Bertheville. Henry II. erected the castle in 1188, and the church of St. Jacques was commenced in 1200. Dieppe was attacked by the English in 1442, and again July 12–13, 1694, being on the latter occasion nearly destroyed by fire.

DIERSHEIM (Battle).—Moreau effected the passage of the Rhine at this place, after a series of combats with the Austrians, April 19 and 20, 1797. Desaix and Davoust distinguished themselves in these encounters.

DIEST (South Brabant).—This town, taken from the French by the Duke of Marlborough in 1705, was recaptured by them in the same year.

DIET.—The name given to the assembly of the German states, which was instituted in the most ancient times, and reconstituted by Charles IV. in 1356, on the publication of the "Golden Bull." These sittings were made permanent at Ratisbon, Dec. 23, 1663. They were removed to Frankfort by the "Confederation of the Rhine," July 17, 1806. The following are some of the most celebrated diets:—

A.D.
1180. Diet of Würzburg, which deposed Henry the Lion, Duke of Brunswick.
1467. Diet of Nuremberg, which divided the states into the College of Electors, the College of Princes, and the College of Imperial Towns.
1521. Diet of Worms, at which Luther refused to recant.
1529. Diet of Spires, which prohibited the spread of the reformed religion, and occasioned the famous protest from which the reformers are called Protestants.
1530. Diet of Augsburg, summoned by Charles V., to reunite the princes of Christendom, and secure their co-operation against the Turks. (See AUGSBURG CONFESSION AND DIET.)
1541. Diet of Ratisbon, summoned to reunite the Protestants with the Papists, who were unable to agree respecting 22 articles of faith submitted to their consideration by the Pope's legate.

DIEU ET MON DROIT, or God and my Right, the motto of the royal arms of England, was the parole of the day given by Richard I. at the battle of Gisors, Sep. 20, 1198. It was assumed by him and his successors, but did not appear on the broad seal before the time of Henry VIII. Anne discontinued "Dieu et mon Droit," substituting "Semper eadem" in its place; but George I. restored the old motto.

DIFFERENCE ENGINE.—(See CALCULATING MACHINE.)

DIFFUSION.—(See USEFUL KNOWLEDGE.)

DIGEST.—The first digest of the Roman laws was made by Varro, B.C. 66. Gregorianus, in 306, Hermogenianus in 365, and Theodosius II. (the Younger) in 438, also compiled and simplified the laws; but the term "Digest" is usually applied to the Pandects of Justinian, which formed the second part of his code, finished in 529. They were in 50 books, and a copy of them was found at Amalphi in 1137.

DIGGERS.—These levellers, who pretended that the earth ought to be held in common, and commenced cultivating some waste land in Surrey, were dispersed by the military, April 16, 1649.

DIGIT.—The term applied to any whole number under 10. The system of notation by digits, commonly called the Arabic system, was used by the Hindoo Aryabhatta in the 5th century, and was first employed in Arabia by Mohammed Ben Musa towards the latter part of the 9th century. By the end of the 10th century it was established throughout Arabia, and was soon after introduced into Europe. Its general adoption by European accountants was, however, very gradual; and even at the beginning of the 16th century the Roman notation was common.

DIGNITY (Cap of).—(See MAINTENANCE.)

DIJON (France), the ancient Dibio, or Divio, is said to have been founded by Marcus Aurelius. Clovis I. defeated the Burgundians in a battle near this place in 500. It was burned in 1137, rebuilt in 1157, and in 1179 became the residence of the dukes of Burgundy. Dijon is the seat of a bishop. Councils were held here in July, 1077, in 1116, and from Dec. 1 to 13, 1199. On the anniversary of St. Bartholomew's Day, Aug. 24, 1865, a marble slab was erected, commemorating the deliverance of that part of the country from the massacre of Aug. 24, 1572, by Chabat, Count of Charny, the governor of the province. The cathedral dates from 1291, and the church of Notre Dame was completed in 1334. René of Anjou, defeated and made prisoner by Antony of Vaudémont at Bulgnéville (q.v.), July 2, 1431, was confined for many years in the tower of Bar, at this city. The castle was completed in 1513.

DILETTANTI.—This society, for encouraging a taste for the fine arts, was established in 1734 by some gentlemen who had travelled in Italy. They sent an expedition to the East, which left England June 9, 1764, and returned Nov. 2, 1766. The result of their investigations was the "Ionian Antiquities," of which part i. was published in 1769, part ii. in 1797, and part iii. in 1840; Chandler's "Travels in Asia Minor," published in 1775; Chandler's "Travels in Greece," in 1776; and a volume of Greek Inscriptions, in 1774. Another expedition was sent to the Levant in 1811. "The Unedited Antiquities of Attica" appeared in 1817, and "Antique Sculpture" in 1835. The society consists of 50 members, who dine together at the Thatched House tavern the first Sunday in every month from Feb. to July.

DINAN (France).—The cathedral of this old town of Britanny dates from the 11th or 12th century. In 1280, Dinan, long governed by independent counts, was annexed to the duchy of Britanny, and in 1300 it was fortified by a castle, now used as a prison. It was taken by Du Guesclin in 1379, by Oliver de Clisson in 1379, and in 1585 it passed into the possession of the Duke of Mercœur, who retained it till 1598. A plaster statue of Du Guesclin, whose heart was deposited in the cathedral, was erected in 1823.

DINANT (Belgium).—Notice of this town occurs in records of the 6th century. It was taken Monday, Aug. 25, 1466, and destroyed in March, 1467, by Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy. It was speedily rebuilt, and was again seized by the Duke of Nevers in 1554. The French, under the Marshal de Créqui, took it in 1675; under Marshal Saxe in 1746; and again in 1794, when it was erected into the chief town of the department of Sambre-et-Meuse. It was restored to Holland in 1814.

DINAPORE (Hindostan).—Three native regiments revolted at this military station in Bengal, about 25 miles from Arrah, July 25, 1857, and for a short time carried on a desultory warfare.

DINDIGUL (Hindostan) was conquered by the Rajah of Mysore in 1755, taken from Tippoo Saib by the British in 1783, and restored in 1784. In 1792 it was ceded to the British Government. In 1809, 1810, and 1811, this town and its neighbourhood were visited by a very fatal epidemic, which carried off numbers of the population.

DIOCESE.—Bingham (Antiq. ix. c. 1, s. 2), speaking of the division of the Roman empire into dioceses, says,—"It is generally owned that the division of provinces is more ancient than that of dioceses: for the division into dioceses began only about the time of Constantine" (306—337). A list of the dioceses of the empire is given in the "Notitia Imperii," said to be written about 400, at which time they seem to have numbered 13. The term was first used in its episcopal sense about the time of the Council of Arles, in 314, which addressed a letter to Pope Sylvester I., wherein mention is made of his holding "the greater dioceses." The first division of a large diocese into several smaller ones took place in 569. The establishment of dioceses in Britain was coeval with the introduction of Christianity, but information on the subject is very meagre. British bishops attended the Council of Arles in 314, as well as that of Sardica in 347.

DIOCLETIAN ÆRA, or the ÆRA OF MARTYRS, dates from the proclamation of Diocletian as Emperor, Aug. 29, 284. This æra was generally used by Christians, till the introduction of the Christian æra about 527.

DIONYSIA.—These festivals, in honour of Dionysus, or Bacchus, which originated in Egypt, were introduced into Greece by Melampus, B.C. 1415. They were four in number,—the rural or lesser Dionysia, which was the most ancient; the Lenæa, the Anthesteria, and the Dionysia proper, all of which were celebrated annually, with much extravagant merriment, though they were not disgraced by the excesses of the Roman Bacchanalia (q. v.).

DIORAMA.—This mode of exhibiting paintings of landscapes, architecture, &c., with such effects of light as to produce most complete optical illusion, was first established at Paris by MM. Daguerre and Bouton in 1822. In 1823 a building was erected for its exhibition at Regent's Park, London. For some time the speculation proved prosperous. It was closed in 1852, and the building was sold in 1855, and converted into a Baptist chapel.

DIOSPOLIS (Palestine).—This city, the Lod of the Old and Lydda of the New Testament, was founded about B.C. 1300, by Shamed, the descendant of Benjamin (1 Chron. viii. 12), and after the return from the captivity was possessed by the children of the same tribe, B.C. 445 (Nehem. xi. 35). At the request of Jonathan Maccabæus (circ. B.C. 152), Lydda, with other towns, was released from tribute by Demetrius Soter, and it was one of the places seized by Cassius, who sold all the inhabitants into slavery to pay the heavy taxes he demanded, B.C. 45. St. Peter visited Lydda in 33, and performed there his miraculous cure of Æneas, who had "kept his bed eight years, and was sick of the palsy" (Acts ix. 32–35). The town was burned by Cestius Gallus in 66, and was taken by Vespasian in 68, suffering on both occasions severely. In 136 it was rebuilt, and Paganism being in the ascendant, the name was changed to Diospolis. Aetius signed the acts of the Council of Nicæa as Bishop of Lydda, in 325. It is believed that the see is of much earlier foundation, its origin being traditionally referred to Zenas the lawyer, who was one of the 70 disciples. The Council of Diospolis, at which Pelagius was acquitted of heresy, was held Dec. 20, 415. Diospolis, seized and ravaged by the Saracens early in the 8th century, was restored and fortified by the Crusaders in 1099. It was again destroyed by Saladin in 1191, and, according to tradition, was rebuilt by Richard I. (Cœur de Lion). At present it is a mere village, the inhabitants of which are much afflicted with blindness and diseases of the eyes.

DIPHTHERIA, a diseased state of the mucous membrane of the throat, which causes the development of a false membrane. The best authorities believe it to be the "putrid sore throat" described by early writers. The ancient Greek physician Aretæus refers to a similar disease. It prevailed in an epidemic form in Italy, Spain, and other European countries in the 16th and 17th centuries. In England, the continent of Europe, and North America, it broke out in the 18th century. It appeared again at Tours, in France, in 1818, and in 1856 raged with epidemic violence at Boulogne. The first accurately described cases in this country occurred in 1857. M. Brétonneau, of Tours, gave it the name of "diphthérite" in 1821.

DIPLOMACY.—By 6 Anne c. 7 (1707) salaries or pensions enjoyed as the rewards of diplomatic service disqualified the possessor from sitting in the House of Commons. This provision, as far as it was affected by 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 116 (Aug. 16, 1832), was repealed by 22 & 23 Vict. c. 5 (Aug. 8, 1859). The Foreign Office List, forming a complete British Diplomatic and Consular Handbook, compiled by E. Hertslet, contains full information on the subject. Diplomatic agents are divided into four classes:—1. Ambassadors, legates, and nuncios. 2. Envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary. 3. Envoys, ministers, and others accredited to sovereigns. 4. Chargés d'affaires. (See AMBASSADORS.)

DIPLOMATICS.—(See PALÆOGRAPHY.)

DIRECTORY.—The first London Directory, "A Collection of the Names of Merchants, &c," was published by Lee and Major in 1677. The first bearing the name was published in 1734, under the title of "Kent's Directory; or, A List of the Principal Traders in London." The Post-Office Directory appeared in 1800.

DIRECTORY (French).—The French Directory was appointed by the constitution published June 23, 1795. It exercised authority from Oct. 27, 1795, till Nov. 11, 1799, when the consular government was established in its stead. It was composed of five members, one of whom was to retire yearly, and governed the republic conjointly with the Council of Ancients and the Council of the Five Hundred.

DIRECTORY FOR PUBLIC WORSHIP.—During the civil war, the Puritans supplied the place of the Book of Common Prayer by a volume bearing the above title. It was prepared by a committee appointed by the Westminster Assembly (q. v.), Oct. 17, 1643, and was established by Parliament Jan. 3, 1645.

DIRHAM.—(See DEORHAM.)

DISCIPLINE.—The first book of discipline was drawn up by the ministers of the Scottish Church in 1560, for the purpose of establishing discipline and uniformity in the Church. It abolished the government of bishops and the observance of fasts and saint days, and established kirk sessions, besides settling other minor particulars. The second book of discipline, approved by the General Assembly in April, 1578, did not receive the sanction of Parliament, and then only in a modified form, until 1592.

DISPENSARIES were set up in monasteries and the houses of the wealthy during the Middle Ages. They were established in their present form towards the end of the 18th century. The following list contains names of the principal dispensaries in the metropolis, with the date of foundation:—

A.D.
1770.	Royal General, Smithfield.
1774.	Westminster General.
1777.	Surrey.
1779.	Metropolitan.
1780.	Finsbury.
1782.	Public.
1782.	Eastern.
1785.	St. Marylebone General.
1789.	City.
1789.	Western.
1801.	Bloomsbury.
1810.	Northern.
1816.	Royal.
1817.	St. George's and St. James's General.
1821.	Islington.
1821.	Royal South London.
1828.	Farringdon General.
1830.	Western City.
1830.	Western General.
1834.	Blenheim Street Free.
1837.	St. Pancras Royal General.
1838.	Paddington Provident.
1840.	Kensington.
1840.	Holloway and North Islington.
1845.	St. John's Wood and Portland Town Provident.
1848.	Camden Town.
1848.	Paddington Free.
1849.	City of London and East London.

DISPENSATIONS. — Papal dispensations were first granted by Innocent III. in 1200. Subjects of the English sovereign were forbidden to appeal for them by 25 Hen. VIII. c. 21 (1533), which, however, empowered the Archbishop of Canterbury to grant, by an instrument under his seal, unto the king and his successors, for causes not contrary to the laws of God, all such dispensations as were formerly from the see of Rome.

DISPENSING POWER. — The power of suspending or dispensing with the laws, or the execution of the laws, claimed and exercised by some of the English sovereigns, was declared illegal, and formally abolished by the Bill of Rights (1 Will. & Mary, sess. 2, c. 2 passed in 1689.

DISPERSION OF MANKIND took place at the building of the tower of Babel (Gen. xi. 8), to which various dates are assigned by different authorities. It occurred, according to the chronology adopted in the English Bible, B.C. 2234.

DISSECTION.—(See ANATOMY and ANATOMY LAWS.)

DISSENTERS.—English Protestants holding different views from the Church of England are thus named. About the year 1565 they were called Puritans. On the passing of the Act of Uniformity, 13 & 14 Charles II. c. 4 (1662), about 2,000 clergymen seceded, and received the name Nonconformists or Dissenters. The Test Act, 25 Charles II. c. 2 (1673), excluded from government employment all who refused to take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, and the sacrament according to the rites of the Established Church. The Toleration Act, 1 Will. & Mary c. 18 (1689), gave Dissenters legal security in the celebration of their worship; and the Corporation and Test Repeal Act (9 Geo. IV. c. 17, May 9, 1828) enabled them to accept public employment without taking the sacrament. Dissenters were first authorized to solemnize marriages in their own places of worship, or at a registrar's office, by 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 85 Aug. 17, 1836).

DISSIDENTS.—The term applied to dissenters from the established religion of Poland, viz. the Roman Catholic. They were allowed the free exercise of their religion by the pacta conventa, in 1573, but were persecuted in 1718. In 1766 Russia and Prussia supported them in their claims for unrestricted worship, and in 1775 their rights, with a few exceptions, were completely restored.

DISTAFF.—Spinning by distaff was introduced into England in 1505. The day after the Epiphany, or Twelfth Day, was jocularly called St. Distaff's or Rock Day, because the Christmas holidays having then terminated, housewives resumed the distaff, &c.

DISTILLATION.—This art, said to have originated amongst the inhabitants of northern Europe, was, with many others connected with chemical science, introduced into Spain by the Moors about 1150. Argand's improvements in mechanical processes were perfected about 1780. The art of distillation was much improved by Adam in 1801, and by Pistorius in 1817.

DITCH, or THE NATIONS.—The third expedition of the Koreish against Mohammed, in 625. Gibbon (ch. l.) remarks:—"This third expedition is variously named, from the nations which marched under the banner of Abu Sophian, from the ditch which was drawn before the city, and a camp of 3,000 Mussulmans. The prudence of Mahomet declined a general engagement: the valour of Ali was signalized in single combat; and the war was protracted 20 days, till the final separation of the confederates. A tempest of wind, rain, and hail overturned their tents: their private quarrels were fomented by an insidious adversary; and the Koreish, deserted by their allies, no longer hoped to subvert the throne, or to check the conquests, of their invincible exile."

DIU (Hindostan).—This island was taken in 1515 by the Portuguese, who made it a strong fortress. The Arabs of Muscat assailed and pillaged it in 1670. It was garrisoned by British troops in 1809.

DIVAN. — This term, which, during the caliphate of Omar I. (634—644), signified the system employed in the distribution of military booty, was subsequently applied to the Ottoman council of state. This assembly, consisting of the two Cadiaskers or military judges of Roumelia and Anatolia, the Beylerbeys of Greece and Asia Minor, the two Defterdars or treasurers for Europe and Asia, the Aga of the Janissaries, the Beylerbey of the sea, or high admiral, and the Nischandschi or secretary, was held, previous to the reign of Bajazet II. (1481—1512), under the presidency of the Sultan, but afterwards under that of the Grand Vizier. Selim I. (1512—1520) added to the council a third Cadiasker, who exercised military jurisdiction over his African and Asiatic conquests, and a third Defterdar. When business of extraordinary importance was under discussion, such as the commencement of a war, &c., the Sultan and his advisers assembled for the Divan on horseback; but this custom, having degenerated into an empty show, was ultimately abandoned.

DIVINATION.—The Israelites were prohibited from practising divination of any kind by the law of Moses (Deut. xviii. 9—12, B.C. 1451). (See BIBLIOMANCY.) Among the ancients, divination was practised in many different forms. It is supposed to have originated among the Etruscans. (See DIVINING ROD.)

DIVINE RIGHT OF KINGS.—The doctrine that kings are entitled to the unqualified submission of their subjects was maintained by the Convocation Book of 1603, by Hobbes in 1642, by Sir Robert Filmer in his "Patriarcha" in 1680, and by Sherlock in 1684. Dr. Pusey, in a sermon preached Nov. 5, 1837, sets forth the views of modern High Church writers on the subject.

DIVING-BELL.—In the time of Aristotle (B.C. 384—322), divers used a kind of kettle to enable them to continue long under water. The earliest positive mention of the use of the diving-bell in Europe occurs in the works of John Taisnier, who was born in 1509. In 1665 it was employed to raise some portions of the Spanish Armada, which had been wrecked off the Isle of Mull, and in 1687 William Phipps succeeded by its means in recovering £200,000, which had been lost in a Spanish vessel off the coast of Hispaniola. The instrument was much improved by Witsen in 1671. Dr. Halley's plan for introducing a supply of fresh air, which he effected about 1715, is the most important event in the history of the apparatus. Further improvements were effected by Mr. Spalding, who was drowned while prosecuting some experiments with the diving-bell, June 1, 1783. Smeaton first applied it to engineering operations in 1779, and in 1788 he contrived a means of supplying air by means of a forcing air-pump.

DIVINING-ROD, or VIRGULA DIVINA.—Disraeli (Amenities of Literature ii. 258) remarks:—"The mystery of the divining-rod is as ancient as the days of Cicero. The German miners introduced its practice among our Cornish miners." It is not mentioned earlier than the 11th century, but since that time has been in frequent use. Arthur Phippen, in 1853, published an account of two professional diviners, who alleged that they were able by this means to discover subterranean springs, &c.

DIVIO.—(See DIJON.)

DIVONA.—(See CAHORS.)

DIVORCE was permitted by the Mosaic law B.C. 1451 (Deut. xxiv. 1—4). The first instance among the Romans occurred B.C. 331, and the custom afterwards became very frequent, in spite of the Lex de maritandis ordinibus, passed B.C. 18, and the Lex Poppia-Poppæa, A.D. 9, which attempted to restrain the facilities for obtaining it. In England divorces were of two kinds,—first à mensâ et thoro, when the parties lived separate but without a dissolution of the marriage vow, and secondly à vinculo matrimonii, when their union was declared illegal from the first, and was consequently totally dissolved. The first example of a divorce effected by act of Parliament, without the previous consent of the spiritual court, was that of the notorious Countess of Macclesfield, who was separated from her husband April 2, 1698. In 1798 Lord Loughborough obtained the passing of a series of resolutions which required every application for divorce to be supported by an ecclesiastical sentence and by a previous verdict at law. Previously to 1840, divorce bills in the House of Commons were decided by the whole house; but in that year they were referred to a committee of nine members. In Dec., 1850, commissioners were appointed to inquire into the law of divorce. The Divorce and Matrimonial Causes Act (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, Aug. 28, 1857) abolished all authority of the Ecclesiastical Court respecting divorces, and vested it in the "Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes," which was to be presided over by three judges, the judge of the Probate Court being one. This act was amended and extended by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 108 (Aug. 2, 1858), by 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61 (Aug. 13, 1859), and by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144 (Aug. 28, 1860).

DIXMUDE (Belgium).—This town, first surrounded by walls in the 10th century, and fortified in 1270 and 1411, was ravaged in 1513 by a fire which destroyed more than 300 houses. It was taken by the Count of Rantzau in 1647, and by Turenne in 1658. Seized by Louis XIV. in 1683, it was restored by the truce of the Hague, June 20, 1684. It was retaken by the French under Luxemburg in 1690, and was ceded to the house of Austria by the peace of Utrecht, April 11, 1713. It was taken by the French June 30, 1744.

DIZIER, ST. (France), was besieged by Charles the Fifth's army, commanded by Ferdinand de Gonzaga, in 1544, and surrendered after a brave resistance. In 1775 the town was nearly destroyed by fire through the carelessness of a baker. Here Napoleon I. repulsed the allies Jan. 27, and March 27, 1814.

DJEVAN-BOULAK (Battle).—The Russians gained a victory over the Persians at this place, in Persia, July 18, 1827.

DJIDDA, JEDDA, or JIDDA (Arabia), was surrounded by a wall in 1501 by the Sultan of Egypt. In 1803 Sherif Pasha attempted to render the town independent of the Sherif of Mecca, but failed, and died suddenly in 1804, about which time it surrendered to the Wahabees, who expelled the Turks. In 1811 Mehemet Ali took measures to recover it, and in 1812 he succeeded in obtaining possession. The celebrated traveller Burckhardt arrived here July 15, 1814. (See JEDDA.)

DOBRAN (Treaty).—Christian V. of Denmark, and Frederick William, Elector of Brandenburg, by a secret treaty concluded at this place in Mecklenburg, Oct. 5, 1675, agreed to carry on war against Charles XI. of Sweden, till he should be compelled either to pay the expenses, or to restore Schonen, Halland, and Blenkingen to Denmark, to relinquish the freedom of the Sound, and to abandon his Pomeranian territories to the Elector, who agreed, on his part, to surrender Wismar and Rügen to Denmark.

the head of a Russian army, defeated the Swedes at this place, in the Ukraine, Sep. 20, 1709.

DOBRYNITCHI (Battle) was fought in this plain, in Russia, by the pretender Dmitri, at the head of about 20,000 Poles and Cossacks, against 70,000 Russians, led by the generals of the Czar, Jan. 20, 1605. The former was defeated, with the loss of seven-eighths of his army and all his baggage and artillery.

DOCETÆ, or DOCETES.—These heretics, who contended that Christ was a god, and that he did not really suffer death on the cross, but only in appearance, arose in the 1st century. Gibbon says:—"While his blood was still recent on Mount Calvary, the Docetes, a numerous and learned sect of Asiatics, invented the phantastic system, which was afterwards propagated by the Marcionites, the Manichæans, and the various names of the Gnostic heresy." They denied the resurrection and ascension, and separated into various divisions under different leaders.

DOCKS.—The first docks constructed in England were the Commercial Docks at Rotherhithe, part of which existed as the Howland Great Wet Dock in 1660. The present title was adopted in 1807. Docks were commenced at Glasgow about 1662. The first dock at Liverpool was completed about 1710, and the first at Hull in 1778. The West India Docks, London, were commenced in Feb., 1800, and partially opened in Aug., 1802. The south dock was added in 1829. The East India Docks were opened in 1806. Bristol floating harbour, which has all the characteristics of a dock, was commenced in 1804, and finished in 1809. The first stone of the London Docks was laid June 26, 1802, and they were opened in Feb., 1805, and till Jan., 1826, were the only docks at which ships bound for the Thames, with cargoes of wine, brandy, tobacco, and rice (except ships from the Indies), were permitted to unload. These docks were improved by a new entrance in 1832, and by an enlargement of the basin in 1858. St. Katharine's Docks were partially opened Oct. 25, 1828, and the Victoria Docks in Nov., 1855.

DOCKYARDS.—The formation of dockyards commenced in England during the reign of Henry VIII. There are seven in England, viz. Woolwich, founded before 1515; Portsmouth, before 1548; Deptford, about 1513; Chatham, established by Elizabeth; Sheerness, by Charles II.; Plymouth, founded soon after 1688, and called Devonport Dockyard since 1824; and Pembroke, originally established at Milford Haven in 1790, and removed to Pembroke in 1814.

DOCTOR.—Doctors of law existed among the Jews. Some authorities state that the Venerable Bede and John of Beverley received the title of doctor, at Cambridge, before 721; but this is doubtful. The degree was introduced at Bologna in the 12th century by Irnerius; and in 1207 it was conferred in England. Doctorships in medicine existed in 1384, and in music in 1463.

DOCTORS' COMMONS (London).—Soon after the accession of Henry VIII., in 1509, some civilians privileged to plead in the court of Arches formed a plan of association, by which they were to occupy contiguous houses, and board in common. The spot first selected by them is not recorded; but in Feb., 1568, Dr. Henry Hervie procured a lease of Montjoy House and other tenements, which he devoted to the accommodation of the advocates, and which received the title of Doctors' Commons. The original edifice was destroyed in 1666 during the great fire. The courts were held in Essex House, Strand, until the college was rebuilt in 1672. They were incorporated in June, 1768, as "The College of Doctors of Law, exercent in the Ecclesiastical and Admiralty Courts." Doctors' Commons consisted of five courts, viz. the Court of Arches, the Prerogative Court, the Court of Faculties or Dispensations, the Consistory Court, and the High Court of Admiralty. The new courts of Divorce and Matrimonial Causes and of Probate were established in Jan., 1858.

DOCTOR WILLIAMS'S LIBRARY (London) was founded by Dr. Daniel Williams, a Presbyterian, who died Jan. 26, 1716, and left his books for public use, with a sum of £1,600 per annum for a building. Premises were erected in Red-cross Street, Cripplegate, which were opened in 1729. A catalogue was printed in 1841.

DOCTRINAIRES.—This party, formed in France soon after 1815 by Royer-Collard and others, having for their object and doctrine the establishment and preservation of constitutional government, and the reconciliation of authority and liberty, royalty, and national representation, obtained power in 1830, and ceased to exist as a distinct political sect on the fall of the French monarchy in 1848.

DODONA (Greece).—The site of this ancient town in Epirus, celebrated for its oracle of Jupiter, has not been ascertained. The Ætolians razed the temple of the god B.C. 219. It was a bishopric in the early Church, and one of its bishops is mentioned as late as 516. Notice of the town itself occurs in the 6th century.

DOG.—The act for preventing the stealing of dogs (10 Geo. III. c. 18) was passed in 1770. A tax was imposed upon dogs by 36 Geo. III. c. 124 (May 19, 1796), which was extended to Ireland by 48 Geo. III. c. 42 (May 27, 1808). The use of dogs for purposes of draught was abolished in London by 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47, s. 56 (Aug. 17, 1839), and the prohibition was extended to all parts of the United Kingdom by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 60, s. 2 (July 31, 1854). By 25 & 26 Vict. c. 59 (July 29, 1862), owners of dogs in Ireland were made liable for injuries to sheep, and further regulations were introduced by 28 and 29 Vict. c. 50 (June 18, 1865). By 28 and 29 Vict. c. 60 (June 29, 1865), owners of dogs in England and Wales were made liable for injuries to cattle and sheep.

DOG-DAYS.—The Venerable Bede (672—735) gives as the commencement of the dog-days July 14. In a calendar prefixed to Queen Elizabeth's Book of Common Prayer, ordered to be used in 1559, they are made to begin July 6, and to end Sep. 5, which arrangement continued till the Restoration in 1660, when they were omitted altogether from the Prayer-book, and made to begin July 19, and end Aug. 20.

On the reformation of the British calendar in 1752, the commencement was fixed July 30, and the termination Sep. 7. They now begin July 3, and end Aug. 11.

DOG-SHOW.—An exhibition of dogs, similar in plan to several that had previously been held at Birmingham, took place at the Horse Repository, Holborn, in 1861 and 1862. The dog-show was first held in the Agricultural Hall June 24, 1862.

DOGE. — According to some authorities, Venice was governed by a doge, or duke, bearing the title of doge, as early as 440; but Daru assigns 697 as the date of the creation of the honour, and mentions Paul Luke Anafesto as the first who bore it. The Genoese revolted against their counts in 1330, and elected a doge in 1334.

DOGGER-BANK (Sea-fight). — An English fleet, commanded by Admiral Sir Hyde Parker, engaged the Dutch near this sand-bank, between Great Britain and Holland, Aug. 5, 1781. After an obstinate conflict the Dutch bore away. The English fleet, having suffered severely in the action, was not able to follow in pursuit.

DOGGET'S COAT AND BADGE.—A rowing-match, which takes place on the Thames Aug. 1 every year, between the Old Swan, near London Bridge, and the White Swan at Chelsea, when the tide is strongest against the competitors, was instituted by Thomas Dogget, the actor, to mark his attachment to the house of Hanover, Aug. 1 being the date of the accession of George I. It was first rowed for Aug. 1, 1715. Dogget died at Eltham, in Kent, Sep. 22, 1721, and bequeathed a sum of money, the interest of which was to provide annually a waterman's coat and badge, to be rowed for in perpetual remembrance of the day.

DOIT, or DOITKIN, a base coin of small value, the circulation of which was prohibited by 3 Hen. V. c. 1 (1415).

DÖL (France). — William I. suffered some very severe losses in a vain attempt to capture this town, in Britanny, in 1075. A dispute which broke out between the churches of Dôl and Tours, respecting the metropolitan rights which the former claimed against the latter, was decided in favour of Tours in 1199. In 1793, during the war in La Vendée, Rossignol, at the head of the republican forces, was defeated at this town.

DOLCINITES.—This sect, according to Milman (Lat. Christ. vol. v., b. xii. ch. 6), was of "kindred tenets with the Fraticelli, or Spiritual Franciscans, with some leaven of the old doctrines of the Patarines (the Puritans) of Lombardy." It was founded by Dolcino, who was born at a village near Novara. He denounced the popes. The Dolcinites made their first appearance at Gattinara, and the Val Sesia, in Piedmont, in 1304. The Inquisition sent forces against them in 1307, and after a brave resistance, during which numbers perished, Dolcino and a few of his followers were made prisoners. They were cruelly tortured, and afterwards burned alive.

DOLE (France), the Dola Sequanorum of the Romans, is a very ancient place, formerly the capital of Franche-Comté. Its university was founded in 1426, by Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy, and a parliament was established in 1442. The French failed in attempts to capture it in 1435 and in 1477; but it was taken and sacked by Louis XI. in 1479. Charles V. erected strong fortifications here in 1530, and in 1636 it was unsuccessfully besieged by the French, who obtained it with the rest of Franche-Comté in 1668. By the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, concluded May 2, 1668, it was restored to Spain, which finally lost all power over it in 1674, when it was seized by the army of Louis XIV. Its parliament was transferred to Besançon in 1676, and its university in 1691, since which time Dole has declined in importance.

DOLLAR.—This coin, as well as the German thaler, derives its name from the town of Joachims-Thal (Joachim's Valley), in Bohemia, where silver pieces, of an ounce weight, were first coined in 1518. It is the principal coin of the United States, where Spanish dollars, worth 4*s.* 4½*d.*, passed current until 1772, when a new coinage was struck. Spanish dollars were issued from the Bank of England March 10, 1797, the value being 4*s.* 9*d.* each. They were recalled Oct. 3 in the same year. By an act passed in the United States in 1837, the dollar must weigh 412½ grains of standard silver. Its value is 4*s.* 4*d.* of our money.

DOLLS.—The Greek and Roman children used dolls of wax, wool, plaster, and ivory, which were buried with them when they died. A terra-cotta doll, with legs and arms moved by a string, has been found in a tomb. The Christians continued the practice of burying the toys of their children. During the Middle Ages, doll-makers were styled coroplastes, and dolls dressed in imitation of infants were common playthings. The Autoperipatetikos, or walking doll, was patented July 15, 1862.

DOMESDAY BOOK, defined by Ellis as "the register from which judgment was to be given upon the value, tenure, and services of lands therein described," was undertaken by William I., but the precise year in which he commenced it is not known. The frequently assigned date, 1080, is founded on an erroneous quotation of the Red Book of the Exchequer, and there is good reason to believe the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle is correct in fixing its commencement in 1085, and its completion in 1086. Domesday Book continued the authority as to the amount of taxation till 1522, when Henry VIII. caused a more accurate survey to be taken, which is known as the New Domesday Book. In 1767, George III. ordered the publication of the original survey, which was commenced about 1770, and completed early in 1783. Ingulphus says the book was so called because it was as general and conclusive as the last judgment will be. Copies of this survey by the process of photozincography (q. v.) were completed Jan. 23, 1864.

DOMINGO, SAN or ST. (Hayti).—This city was founded in 1497 by Bartholomew Columbus, by whom it was first called Nueva Isabella. In 1502 it suffered severely from the effects of a hurricane, and was rebuilt by Ovando soon afterwards, and adorned with a fine Gothic cathedral in 1540. In the latter part of 1585 it was taken by Sir Francis Drake, who exacted from the inhabitants a ransom of £6,875. By the treaty of Basel, July 22, 1795, it was ceded to France, together with the other Spanish possessions in the island, and in 1801 it was seized by the negro chief Toussaint l'Ouverture. (See HAYTI.)

DOMINICA (W. Indies) was discovered by Columbus, Sunday, Nov. 2, 1493, whence its name Dominica, i. e. the Lord's Day. In 1668 it submitted to the English, by whom it was again captured June 6, 1761. By the treaty of Paris, Feb. 10, 1763, it was ceded to Great Britain, and it was erected into a separate government under Sir W. Young, July 18, 1770. In 1778 it was taken by the French, but was restored to Great Britain by the treaty of Versailles, Sep. 3, 1783. The French made an ineffectual attempt to retake it in 1795, and in 1802 it was disturbed by an insurrection of the negroes. The French again assailed it Feb. 22, 1805, when they opposed 4,000 men to the resident force of 200; but, after having destroyed Roseau by fire, they were compelled to retreat without achieving any substantial success.

DOMINICAL LETTER. — The first seven letters of the alphabet are used in ecclesiastical and other calendars to signify the days of the week, and the letter which stands for Sunday is known as the Dominical letter. Jan. 1 is always expressed by A; hence the Dominical letters change every year.

DOMINICALS.—The name anciently given to the lessons of Scripture appointed to be read on Sundays. Alcuin, tutor of Charlemagne, is said to have instituted them between 750 and 760; but the custom of selecting the Sunday lessons in a systematic order was not generally adopted till the 12th century. An oblation made on Sundays to the rector of the church in which a person attended service and received the sacraments, was also, in the early English Church, known by this name.

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC (Hayti). — The eastern portion of Hayti, which became French territory in 1795, and was ceded to Spain in 1814, assumed independence in 1822, and in 1843 established itself as a distinct state, under the title of the Dominican Republic. It was reunited to Spain in May, 1861.

DOMINICANS. — This order of preaching Friars, called in England Black Friars, and in France Jacobins, was founded at Toulouse by St. Dominick, and confirmed by Innocent III. in 1215. Honorius III. renewed the approval in 1216, and constituted the order under the rules of St. Augustine, which enjoined perpetual silence, almost continual fasts, poverty, and other mortifications. At the first general chapter of the order, in 1220, the renunciation of all possession and revenue was enjoined. The convent in Paris was founded in 1218. In 1221 the order was introduced into England, where the monks were called Black Friars, their first establishment being formed at Oxford. In 1276 the corporation of London granted the order two lanes near the Thames, where a monastery was erected, the neighbourhood of which still retains the name Blackfriars.——The order of the Dominican nuns was founded by St. Dominick in 1206.

DONABEW (Battles). — Gen. Cotton was defeated by the Burmese at this town of Pegu, March 8, 1825.——Capt. Granville Loch fell, at the head of a party of Sepoys and seamen, in an unsuccessful attack upon the Burmese at the same place, Feb. 4, 1853.

DONATISTS.—On the election of Cecilianus to the see of Carthage, in 311, the minority chose another bishop, who, dying in 313, was succeeded by Donatus. He formed the malcontents into a separate party, named after himself. The peculiarity of the sect was its strictness in matters of church discipline. Severe laws were passed against it in 316, and it was condemned by the Council of Carthage in 411. It was not totally extinguished till the 7th century.

DONAUWERTH, or DONAUWORTH (Bavaria) was the scene of the execution of Mary of Brabant, by her husband, Louis the Severe, on an ill-founded charge of infidelity, Jan. 18, 1256. In consequence of its adherence to the reformed religion, it was placed under the ban of the empire in 1607, and was seized by an army of 17,000 men under Maximilian of Bavaria, who abolished the Protestant religion, and transferred the city's municipal privileges to the elector. The Duke of Marlborough gained an important victory here over the Bavarian army of the Count of Arco, July 2, 1704 (O.S.), when the allied army lost nearly 5,000 men. In 1706, Donauwerth recovered its rights as an imperial city, but again lost them by the peace of Baden, signed Sep. 7, 1714. Its subjection to Bavaria was finally determined by an agreement signed June 18, 1782. Another battle was fought here Oct. 6, 1805, between the French, under Soult, and the Germans, in which the former were victorious.

DONCASTER (Yorkshire).—This town, the ancient Danum, was destroyed in 794 by the Danes, who were defeated here by Egbert in 833. St. George's Church was founded about 1071, and in 1204 the town was entirely destroyed by fire. James I. visited Doncaster in 1617. In 1642 the town was garrisoned by the Parliamentary army, and in 1648 Col. Rainsford was killed in the midst of his troopers, by a small party from Pontefract. Doncaster races were established about 1703. The St. Leger Stakes were founded in 1776, and the grand stand was erected in 1777. The betting-room was built by the corporation in 1826. The dispensary was established in 1792; and the North Midland Railway opened July 1, 1840.

DONELSON FORT (United States). — This Confederate stronghold, situated in Kentucky, was invested by Gen. Grant Feb. 12, 1862. A naval attack under Com. Foote was repulsed Feb. 14, but owing to the superior numbers of the Federals, Gen. Buckner was compelled to surrender, with about 10,000 prisoners and 40 pieces of cannon, Feb. 16. The Confederate Col. Forrest attacked the fort Feb. 3, 1863, and was defeated with considerable loss.

DONGA.—(See ANGOLA.)

DONKEY SHOW.—A show of mules and donkeys, similar in character to the annual cattle, dog, and horse shows, was opened in the Agricultural Hall, London, Tuesday, Aug. 9, 1864.

DONNELAN LECTURESHIP, in Dublin University, was established Feb. 22, 1794, the expense being defrayed from a legacy of £1,243, bequeathed by Mrs. Ann Donnelan to the College of Dublin. It is a divinity lecture.

D'ONORE.—(See FUENTES DE ONORO.)

DORCHESTER (Bishopric), founded at this town in Oxfordshire in 635, was removed to Winchester in 676. Another see, established here in 886, was removed to Lincoln (q. v.) in 1078.

DORCHESTER (Dorsetshire), the Roman Durnocaria or Durinum, contains the remains of a Roman amphitheatre. The free grammar-school was founded in 1579. Judge Jefferies presided over a special commission here in 1685, which he rendered infamous by the cruelty and injustice of his judgments. In 1705, 10,000 persons assembled in the Roman amphitheatre to witness the burning of Mary Channing. The town hall was built in 1791, and the hospital in 1840.

DORIANS.—A people of ancient Greece, who asserted their descent from Dorus, son of Hellen, and the nymph Orseis, or of Apollo and Phthia, who is said to have flourished B.C. 1400. The Heraclidæ, of Doric extraction, returned to the Peloponnesus B.C. 1104; settled in that part of Greece, and overran Attica B.C. 1045. About B.C. 800 they were attacked by the Thebans, who expelled them from their country, of which they took possession. The Phocæans declared war against them B.C. 458, and seized most of their important towns.

DORIC ORDER of architecture originated among the Dorians about B.C. 1104. It is more airy and graceful in style than the Tuscan, and ranks second of orders.

DORMANS (Battle.)—The German allies of the French Huguenots, under Montmorenci de Thoré, were defeated at this place in France by Henry Duke of Guise and his brother the Duke of Mayenne, Oct. 10, 1575.

DORNOCH, or DORNICH.—The manufacture of this figured linen, originally carried on at Tournay, or Dornich, in the Netherlands, was transferred thence to Norfolk, by Dutch fugitives from the persecutions of the Duke of Alva. (See HOLLAND.) The manufacture was restricted to Norwich and Pulham by 5 & 6 Edw. VI. c. 24 (1552). By 4 Will. & Mary c. 5, s. 2 (68) (1692), a duty of 10 per cent. was imposed on all imported Dornocha, except those brought from France.

DOROGOBUSH (Battle).—The Russians defeated the French at this town, in Russia, Oct. 12, 1812.

DORPAT, or DÖRPT (Russia).—This town, in Livonia, formerly belonged to Sweden. Gustavus Adolphus founded its university in 1632. Having been removed to Pernau in 1656, it was re-established at Dorpat in 1802. The town was taken by Peter the Great, July 23, 1704; and was destroyed by fire in 1775.

DORSET (England).—The Danes landed at Wareham, in this county, in 876. They renewed their ravages in 982, 998, 1001, and 1015. They were defeated and put to flight in 1016 by Edmund Ironside.

DORSET GARDENS THEATRE (London), situated on the south side of Fleet Street, and fronting the river, was opened by Betterton Nov. 9, 1671. The company united themselves with the Drury Lane players, Nov. 16, 1682, and the theatre became a place of exhibition for wrestling, boxing, fencing, &c.

DORT, or DORDRECHT (Holland).—This town, capital of a district of the same name, was founded in 994, and is said to be the oldest town in Holland. Fortifications were erected in 1231. In 1421 it was separated from the mainland by an inundation, which covered upwards of 70 villages, and drowned 100,000 persons. The church of Notre Dame, founded in 1366, and a large part of the town, were destroyed by fire in 1457. The first meeting of the States of Holland after their successful revolt from Spanish dominion was held here in 1572, when William, Prince of Orange, was made stadtholder. The celebrated synod of Dort assembled Nov. 13, 1618, and ended its sittings May 25, 1619. It was a meeting of the Protestant clergy for the purpose of deciding whether Calvinism or Arminianism is the true doctrine of Scripture, and they declared in favour of the former system.

DORTMUND (Prussia).—This ancient town possesses the Marien Kirche, a fine gothic church of the 13th century, and a provincial academy, established in 1543. In 1802 it became the property of the Nassau-Diez family; in 1806 it formed the capital of the French department of La Roer; and in 1815 it was ceded by the Congress of Vienna to Prussia.

DORYLÆUM (Battle).—The Crusaders defeated Soliman and the Turks at this town, in Phrygia, July 4, 1097. Three thousand Pagan knights are said to have fallen in this battle. The Turks lost above 30,000 men. Soliman's camp was pillaged, and large quantities of spoil fell into the hands of the Crusaders.

DOUAI (France), the Roman Duacum, at which a synod was held in 871, was taken by Philip IV. in 1297. In 1368 it was given to Louis, Count of Flanders, and in 1562 Philip II. of Spain founded its university. The college for English Papists was established by the same monarch in 1569. Louis XIV. took Douai from the Spaniards in 1667. It was captured by the allies, under the Duke of Marlborough, June 25, 1710; but Marshal Villars retook it in 1712. The peace of Utrecht, signed April 11, 1713, finally restored Douai to France.

DOUAI BIBLE.—This Bible, which was translated into English by the students at the Roman Catholic college of Douai, is the only English translation which is sanctioned by the Pope, and was published at Douai in 1609. It only contains the Old Testament, as the English college at Rheims had printed a translation of the New in 1582.

DOUBLE CRESCENTS (Order).—(See COCKLE, Order.)

DOUGLAS (Isle of Man).—Near this town, the name of which is said to be derived from the rivers Doo and Glass, on which it is situated, are the ruins of a nunnery erected by

St. Bridget early in the 6th century. In 1292 a synod was held in the ancient church of Braddan, which was partially rebuilt in 1773. Douglas has much improved since the establishment, in 1830, of steam communication with Liverpool. The tower of refuge was erected in 1833 by Sir William Hillary, for the safety of shipwrecked mariners. Since 1851 the government of the town has been vested in nine commissioners, who levy rates for the purpose of lighting, sewerage, &c.

DOURO.—The British army, under Sir Arthur Wellesley, succeeded in crossing this river in spite of a very resolute opposition by the French under Marshal Soult, May 12, 1809. The English casualties amounted to 23 killed, among whom was Lieut.-Gen. Paget; 96 wounded, and two missing. The French lost 500 killed and wounded, five guns, and a large quantity of ammunition. They left 700 sick and wounded in the hospital of Oporto, and 50 guns in the arsenal.

DOVER (Kent), the Roman Dubris, where Julius Cæsar landed, Aug. 26, B.C. 55, is one of the Cinque Ports. Some authors consider him the founder of the castle, but it was most probably built by Mandubratius, King of the Trinobantes, who died B.C. 19. It was strengthened by Arviragus, in 70. In 209 the Emperor Severus built a gate, of which the foundations still remain; and in 367 a cohort of 1,100 men was stationed in the town. Withred, King of Kent, fortified the town, and built St. Martin's Church, about 700. In 1051 the inhabitants resisted the troops of Eustace, Earl of Boulogne. In 1052 Godwin, Earl of Kent, compelled them to give him hostages and ships, and in 1066 the town was burnt by the Norman invaders. The priory was founded by Archbishop Corboil in 1132. In 1216 Hubert de Burgh held the castle against Louis, the Dauphin of France; and in 1299 a mint was established in the town by Edward I. By a statute passed in 1330, the charge for conveying passengers from Dover to Calais was fixed at sixpence for a foot-passenger, and two shillings for a man and a horse. All travellers to the continent were compelled to embark at Dover in 1339. In 1515 a fellowship of Trinity pilots was established. A pier was built in 1549; and in 1606 a charter was granted by James I., which tended very considerably to increase the maritime importance of the place. During the civil war, the Parliamentary forces took Dover by stratagem, Aug. 21, 1642. Charles II. landed here on his restoration, May 27, 1660. In 1780 important alterations were commenced in the castle, which has since been entirely remodelled. The theatre was built in 1790, and the custom house in 1806. In May, 1808, the town received considerable injury from a fire. An ancient well was discovered in the keep in 1811. Louis XVIII. embarked here for France on his restoration to the throne, April 23, 1813; and the Emperor of Russia and the King of Prussia landed June 6, 1814. Lighting by gas was introduced into the town in 1822. Prince Albert landed here, previous to his marriage with Queen Victoria, Feb. 6, 1840. The London and Dover (South-Eastern Railway was opened Feb. 7, 1844; and the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway in 1861. The Admiralty pier was commenced in 1844. The submarine telegraph to Calais was permanently established Oct. 13, 1851.

DOVER (Sea-fight).—Blake, with a squadron of 15 vessels, reinforced during the engagement by eight under Capt. Bourne, fought a severe action with the Dutch fleet, consisting of 42 ships, under the command of Admiral Van Tromp, May 19, 1652. The action was maintained with great gallantry for five hours. Blake captured one ship and destroyed another, and the Dutch withdrew to the coast of Holland during the night.

DOVER (Treaty).—Charles II. and Louis XIV. concluded a secret treaty, which was signed at Dover May 22, 1670. Charles II. agreed to reconcile himself with the Church of Rome as soon as the affairs of the kingdom should be sufficiently established to permit him. Louis XIV. engaged to pay him two millions of livres Tournois, one half three months after the ratification of the treaty, and the remainder in six months; and to furnish and maintain, at his own cost, 6,000 troops to assist Charles II. in his design. Charles II. also engaged to aid Louis XIV. in subjugating Holland, and in upholding the Bourbons in Spain. It was ratified by Louis XIV. June 10.

DOVER (United States), in New Hampshire, was founded in 1623 by Edward and William Hilton. It was placed under the jurisdiction of Massachusetts in 1642; and it was attacked by Indians, who burned five or six houses and mills, and killed several of the inhabitants, June 27, 1689.

DOWER.—Wharton (Laws relating to Women, b. iv. c. 1, s. 6) defines dower as "the right which a widow has in the third part of the lands and tenements of which her husband died solely and beneficially possessed." By 5 & 6 Edw. VI. c. 11 (1551), the widows of traitors lost all right to dower. Five kinds of dower originally existed; viz. dower by the common law, dower by custom, dower ad ostium ecclesiæ, dower ex assensu patris, and dower de la plus belle. The last was abolished by 12 Charles II. c. 24 (1660), and the third and fourth by the Dower Act, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 105 (Aug. 29, 1833), which came into operation Jan. 1, 1834, and virtually placed the right of dower entirely at the husband's disposal.

DOWLATABAD, or DOWLETABAD (Hindostan).—This town, considered the key of the Deccan, the ancient Deoghir, was taken by the Mohammedans under Allah-ud-Deen in 1293, and in 1306 was rendered subject to the Emperor of Delhi, who changed its name to Dowlatabad, and endeavoured to make it the capital of his dominions. About 1595 it surrendered to Ahmed Nizam Shah, of Ahmednuggur, whose dynasty becoming extinct in 1600, it was seized by an Abyssinian slave, named Mallik Amber. In 1634 it was taken by the Mongols, from whom it was wrested in 1717 by Nizam-ul-Mulk, whose descendants have ever since retained it. In 1758 it was occupied for a time by a French force under M. Bussy.

DOWN (Ireland).—This see is supposed to have been founded about 499, and to have been originally fixed at Downpatrick (q. v.). The diocese was united to Connor, at an early period, but they were separated in 1136 or 1137. They were permanently united by the Pope in 1441. In 1609 James I. made the church of the Holy Trinity at Downpatrick the cathedral of the diocese; but this having fallen into decay, Charles II. transferred the title to the parish church of Lisburn, by a patent dated Oct. 27, 1662. On the death of James Saurin, Bishop of Dromore, April 9, 1842, that see was united to Down and Connor, according to the provisions of the Church Temporalities Act (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 37, Aug. 14, 1833).

DOWNING COLLEGE (Cambridge).—Sir E. Downing, Bart., by his will dated Dec. 20, 1717, left estates, which, on the failure of heirs in a certain line of succession, were to be devoted to the foundation and maintenance of a college at the university of Cambridge. The college was founded by charter, Sep. 28, 1800, and the statutes were framed in 1805. Land having been purchased, the first stone of the college buildings was laid May 18, 1807, and undergraduates were admitted to reside in 1821.

DOWNPATRICK (Ireland).—One of the most ancient towns in Ireland, existing in the days of St. Patrick, who is said to have founded the cathedral. He died in 493. In 1538 its church was pillaged by Lord Deputy Grey, and in 1609 it was made the cathedral of the diocese of Down. In consequence of the decayed state of the building, Charles II. transferred the title of cathedral to Lisburn church Oct. 27, 1662; but in 1790 Downpatrick cathedral was restored for divine service.

DOWNS (Sea-fights).—Admiral Blake defeated the Dutch fleet of De Ruyter and De Witt in the Downs, Sep. 28, 1652. He gained a second victory, over Van Tromp, Nov. 29, 1652.

DRABESCUS (Battle).—The Athenian colonists of Amphipolis (q. v.), to the number of 10,000, were defeated by the Thracian Edonians on this plain, to the north-west of Philippi, in Greece, B.C. 465.

DRACO'S CODE, which punished all offences with death, and was consequently said to be written in blood, was compiled about B. C. 624, and remained in force until superseded by the milder legislation of Solon, B.C. 594.

DRAFT.—(See CHEQUE.)

DRAGONNADES.—The persecutions of the French Protestants by Louis XIV., especially the military expeditions, consisting chiefly of dragoons, which were despatched into the southern provinces by Louvois in 1684 and 1685, are known in history as the Dragonnades. They were followed by the revocation of the Edict of Nantes (q. v.), Oct. 22, 1685.

DRAGOONS.—Knights called dracones, because they fought under the standard of a dragon, are of very ancient date. Modern dragoons are of French origin, having been instituted by Charles de Cossé, Marshal of Brisac, about 1600. In 1632 two kinds existed, called pikemen and musketeers. The oldest English regiment of dragoons is the Scots Greys, first enrolled Nov. 19, 1683.

DRAINAGE was practised by the ancient Egyptians and Assyrians at a very early date. Attempts were made to drain the Pontine marshes B.C. 160, but without permanent effect. Baldwin I., Count of Flanders, is believed to have commenced the drainage of his territories about 863, but they were not effectually protected from inundations of the sea till 1180. In 1633 the Spaniards constructed works for the purpose of draining the city of Mexico, which, from its situation in the centre of a lake, was subject to frequent inundations. The draining of the Bedford Level, under the management of the Earl of Bedford and others, was completed March 25, 1653. In consequence of the frequent recurrence of cholera, measures have recently been adopted for securing a better system of drainage in this country. The Metropolitan Board of Works, appointed by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, s. 43 (Aug. 14, 1855), exercises control over all main sewers of the city of London, and, by the terms of the act, was bound to complete sewers, to prevent the passage of any sewage into the Thames near London, before Dec. 31, 1860 (s. 135). By 21 & 22 Vict. c. 104 (Aug. 2, 1858), the board was to commence, as soon as possible, works for the main drainage of the metropolis, and for preventing the further pollution of the Thames, the shores and bed of which they were empowered to improve by embankments, &c. To enable them to effect this, they were permitted to borrow money to the amount of £3,000,000, and to levy a rate of threepence in the pound on the annual value of property in London and its environs, on the basis of the county rate. This rate is called the Metropolis Main Drainage Rate. The works were opened in presence of the Prince of Wales and a large assemblage, April 4, 1865.

DRAKE'S CIRCUMNAVIGATION OF THE GLOBE.—This, the first voyage round the globe accomplished by an Englishman, was performed by Sir Francis Drake, who sailed from Plymouth Dec. 13, 1577. He arrived in the La Plata April 14, 1578, and entered Port St. Julian June 20. Here Drake executed Mr. Thomas Doughtie on a charge of mutinous conduct, after which he resumed his voyage, Aug. 17. He seized Callao, where he captured 17 heavily laden ships, Feb. 15, 1579; and he took a Spanish galleon, March 1, which yielded a booty of about £150,000. After completing the circumnavigation of the globe, and meeting many surprising adventures, the expedition returned to Plymouth in safety, Sep. 26, 1580, where Queen Elizabeth visited him on board his ship and knighted him.

DRAMA.—The ancient drama originated with the Greeks, whose efforts were at first wholly extempore. Comedy was introduced at Athens, B.C. 578, by Susarion and Dolon, whose company of buffoons performed on waggons, and smeared their faces with lees of wine, instead of concealing them with masks. The chorus, which was of Doric origin, was added B.C. 556. Thespis of Icaria introduced a single actor, who related the mythological deeds of Dionysius or Bacchus, and carried on serious conversations with the chorus, B.C. 535. He is therefore regarded as the founder of tragedy. Phrynichus introduced other subjects besides the deeds of Bacchus, and also employed female characters in his productions, B.C. 511. Written comedy began with Epicharmus of Cos, who attired his performers in costume, and adorned his stage with purple curtains. He flourished about B.C. 500. Anaxandrides, the comic poet, who flourished B.C. 376, was the first who wrote plays with regular plots. The principal Greek poets were :—Tragic : Æschylus (B.C. 525—456), Sophocles (B.C. 495—405), and Euripides (B.C. 480—406). Comic : Eupolis (B.C. 429—?), Aristophanes (about B.C. 427; last comedy, B.C. 388), and Menander (B.C. 342—291). Theatrical exhibitions were introduced at Rome during a pestilence, B.C. 364, in order to propitiate the favour of the gods, or to divert the minds of the populace from the miserable condition to which they were reduced. The actors were Etruscans, and their performances consisted of dances without words or dramatic plot. Songs, however, were soon added, as accompaniment, and Livius Andronicus, who flourished about B.C. 240, wrote Latin plays with regular plots and fables. In consequence of losing his voice from the frequency of his performances, he employed a boy to sing the ode whilst he himself danced; thus introducing a most important improvement. Tragedy never flourished at Rome, although several distinguished authors endeavoured to render it popular. The chief of these were Nævius, who flourished B.C. 235, and Ennius (B.C. 239—169). The principal Roman comic dramatists are Plautus (B.C. 227—184), Statius (died B.C. 168), and Terence (B.C. 195—159). The old drama maintained its footing till the 4th century, when Gregory of Nazianzus banished it from the theatres at Constantinople, and introduced in its stead dramatic compilations from the Sacred Writings. From Constantinople these productions were conveyed to Italy. They were succeeded by the mysteries, or religious comedies, from which the modern drama is almost entirely derived. Thus the "Feast of Fools" and the "Feast of the Ass," with other religious celebrations, were instituted by Theophylact, Patriarch of Constantinople, about 950. These mysteries were introduced into England about 1110, when the Story of St. Catherine was exhibited at Dunstable. In 1264 a society del Gonfalone was established at Rome to represent the passion of the Saviour, and before 1300 sacred dramas were performed in Germany. The Chester mysteries are referred by Warton to 1327, though Hallam considers that date a century too early. The "Confrarie de la Passion" was established in France as a regular theatrical company about 1400. The earliest drama of a secular kind was Bibiena's comedy of the Calandra, which was performed at Venice in 1508. Udal's "Ralph Roister Doister," written about 1540, and printed in 1565, is the first secular English play. The office of master of the revels, whose duty was to arrange the theatrical entertainments of the court, was established in 1544, and contributed greatly to the rise of the British drama. In 1574 the Earl of Leicester's servants received a patent to act plays in any part of England, and in 1576 they built the theatre at Blackfriars, which was the first building of the kind in England. Marlowe's "Edward II.," which appeared in 1593, is regarded as the earliest English historical play. "Celestina," written in Spanish by Fernando de Roias, translated into English by James Mabbe, and published in 1631, in 21 acts, is the longest play on record. Burbage, Shakespeare, Heminings, and others, received a license to act plays in any part of the kingdom, May 19, 1603. Actresses, who were originally from France, first appeared in England, at the Blackfriars Theatre, in Michaelmas, 1629; but the innovation was vehemently opposed by the stricter portion of the community, and in great part occasioned the publication of Prynne's "Histrio-Mastix, or Players' Scourge," which appeared in 1633. During the supremacy of the Puritans the drama was discouraged, all the theatres being closed by a parliamentary order dated Sep. 2, 1642, and their fittings and furniture destroyed by another dated Jan. 22, 1648. Sir William Davenant, however, opened a kind of theatre in Rutland House, Charterhouse Yard, May 23, 1656, on which occasion scenes were first employed in a public theatre; and, in 1662, both he and Killigrew obtained patents to open playhouses by monopoly, from Charles II. Davenant's theatre in Lincoln's Inn Fields was opened early in 1662, the actors being styled "the Duke of York's Company of Comedians." Killigrew's company, known as the "King's Company," opened Drury Lane in 1663. The theatre in Dorset Gardens was opened in 1671; and in 1682 the King's and the Duke's Companies united patents, and removed to Drury Lane. The popularity of operas so injured the pay of the actors, that Betterton and other leading performers opened another theatre in Lincoln's Inn Fields in 1695. By 10 Geo. II. c. 28 (1737), plays were ordered to be revised and licensed by the lord chamberlain before they could be legally performed. 3 Will. IV. c. 15 (June 10, 1833), known as the Authors' Dramatic Copyright Protection Act, prohibited the performance of any play unless the sanction of the author had been previously obtained. The provisions of this act were extended to operatic performances by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, ss. 20 & 21 (July 1, 1842).

DRAMATIC COLLEGE.—Mr. Henry Dodd having placed five acres of land and 100 guineas at the disposal of a provisional committee, for the founding of an institution to bear this name, a public meeting was held at the Princess's Theatre Wednesday, July 21, 1858. Mr. C. Kean presided, and was, with three others, appointed trustees. A dispute commenced between Mr. Dodd and the committee, Sep. 20, respecting the conditions of the gift, and at a meeting held at the Adelphi Theatre, Jan. 12, 1859, Mr. Dodd's offer was rejected, and arrangements were made for erecting the building elsewhere. A site was subsequently selected at Maybury, near Woking, and the foundation-stone of the college was laid by Prince Albert, Friday, June 1, 1860. A meeting for the purpose of establishing public schools for both sexes, in connection with the college, was held in the Adelphi Theatre, under the presidency of Mr. Charles Dickens, May 11, 1864. The central hall of the college was opened by the Prince of Wales, June 5, 1865.

DRANESVILLE (Battle.)—The Confederate Gen. Stuart was defeated by the Federals, with a loss of 200 men, at this place, in Virginia, Dec. 22, 1861.

DRAPERS' COMPANY was incorporated in 1430. The patent for their arms bears date 1439. The company established themselves in 1541 in the house of the attainted Thomas Cromwell, Earl of Essex, situated in Throgmorton Street. It was destroyed in the great fire of 1666, and the present building was commenced in 1667.

DRAPIER LETTERS. — These letters, written by Dean Swift under the signature of M. B. Drapier, condemned the government for granting a patent, in 1722, to supply a deficiency of £108,000 in the copper coinage of Ireland, to a man named Wood. They began to appear in 1723, and created a sensation in Ireland, perhaps unparalleled in the literary history of the country. In April, 1724, Harding, the printer of the letters, was imprisoned and prosecuted by the crown; but, in spite of this, he refused to betray their author. In consequence of the excitement in the country, the patent was abandoned, after £40,000 in halfpence had been coined; and Wood, who received an indemnity of £3,000 per annum for 12 years, was compelled by the popular indignation to leave the country.

DRAUGHTS.—This game, called in France Les Dames, and in Scotland Dambrod, which was unknown to the ancients, is mentioned as early as 1551.

DRAWING.—This art is evidently of extreme antiquity, being, at least, as old as the Egyptian hieroglyphics, which were invented about B.C. 2122. The Greeks attribute its origin to the ingenuity of a young girl of Sicyon, who traced, with a piece of charcoal, the shadow of her lover's profile on the wall, in order that she might possess a likeness of him during his absence.

DREADNOUGHT HOSPITAL.—This vessel, which fought at Trafalgar (q. v.) Oct. 21, 1805, was moored off Greenwich as an hospital ship for seamen of all nations, June 20, 1831.

DREPANUM (Sea-fight).—During the first Punic war, the Roman consul, P. Claudius Pulcher, was defeated, B.C. 249, off Drepanum, in Sicily, with a loss of 93 ships, by the Carthaginian fleet. The Roman commander is said to have given battle in defiance of the augurs, and, when told that the sacred chickens would not eat, exclaimed "Let them drink!" and ordered them to be thrown into the sea.

DRESDEN (Battle).—An allied Austrian, Russian, and Prussian army, about 150,000 strong, under Prince Schwartzenberg, attacked 131,000 French troops, led by Napoleon I., at Dresden, Aug. 26, 1813. The battle, which commenced at four o'clock P.M., was renewed Aug. 27, when Napoleon totally defeated his opponents. The allied army lost above 6,000 men in this battle, and Gen. Moreau, who was engaged as a volunteer, fell in the conflict. The French loss amounted to 4,000 men.

DRESDEN (Saxony) was originally a miserable fishing village, founded in the 11th century. In 1136 it was beautified and enlarged by Henry the Illustrious, and in 1485, on the division of Saxony between the sons of Frederick II., it fell to the lot of Albert, who made it his residence. In 1491 it was destroyed by fire, but was speedily rebuilt, and, in 1534, a castle was erected by George le Barbu. In 1548 it became the capital of the electorate, and in 1610 was visited by war, plague, and famine. The academy was founded in 1697. The Prussians took it in 1745 and in 1756, when they were commanded by Frederick the Great, who again laid siege to it July 13, 1760. He was, however, compelled to retire July 22, after submitting the city to a bombardment, which reduced some of its noblest buildings to ruins. The institution for the blind was founded in 1809. An Austrian army entered Dresden June 11, 1809, and, after various reverses, quitted it July 21. The allies, who occupied the city April 26, 1813, abandoned it soon after, and it was taken by the French (See BATTLE OF DRESDEN), who in their turn withdrew Nov. 11. Riots occurred Sep. 9–13, 1830, when the town hall was attacked and plundered, and many excesses were committed. Another insurrection broke out June 3, 1849, which was finally suppressed June 7. Mr. Paget, an English traveller resident in Dresden, was arrested on a false charge of aiding the Hungarian revolution, Sep. 2, 1852. His liberation took place Sep. 25.

DRESDEN (Treaties).—Several treaties have been concluded at Dresden, the most important being the Alliance of Dresden, signed June 28, 1709, by which Frederick IV. of Denmark, and Augustus II. of Saxony, united against Charles XII. of Sweden; and the peace of Dresden, Dec. 25, 1745, between Saxony, Prussia, and Hungary.

DRESDEN CHINA.—John Frederick Böttcher, an apothecary's assistant at Berlin, having fled to Dresden to avoid prosecution for alchemy, was protected by the Elector Augustus II., who provided him with means to discover the philosopher's stone. Although unsuccessful in this enterprise, he unexpectedly produced something so like oriental porcelain, that he abandoned his former useless pursuits, and directed his attention to the perfection of his new discovery. After several years of arduous labour, he, in 1709, succeeded in his attempt, and manufactured the first white porcelain made in Europe. A factory was established at Meissen in 1710, of which he was appointed director; and in 1715 he brought his invention to perfection.

DRESS.—In the "Book of Costume" it is stated that "all ancient nations seem to have had the same costume, formed of long garments, without much shape or ornament; and as these were all much alike, they descended from father to son for many generations. The colours most valued among the ancients appear to have been purple, red, and violet, but white was the most used by the Israelites." The costumes of the early Greeks were remarkable from their close fit, loose flowing garments being of later introduction. Among the Romans, the toga, a dress derived from the Etruscans, was the characteristic costume; and, although discouraged by Augustus (B.C. 27—A.D. 14) and Domitian (81—96), it maintained its popularity till the removal of the seat of government to Constantinople in 330, when it was superseded by the Greek pallium. The earliest mention of the Britons is by Herodotus (B.C. 478), who alludes to their custom of staining their bodies with woad as a proof of high descent. Strabo (B.C. 71—A.D. 14) says that their dress consisted of a long black robe bound round the breast; and Herodian, writing in 207, states that the inhabitants of the fenny districts wore little or no clothing, both that they might be at liberty to swim and wade through the marshes, and that their tattooed bodies might be seen and appreciated. The Druids wore long white robes and mantles, with oak-leaves bound round the forehead, and the chief priest was adorned with a breastplate of a crescent form, which was believed to possess the power of strangling the wearer if he ever gave false judgment. When the Romans conquered England, they of course introduced their costume, which Tacitus states began to be adopted in the time of Agricola. The Saxons introduced drawers, trowsers, long and short tunics, whence the modern rustic smock is derived; cloaks, caps of wool, felt, or fur; stockings, usually cross-gartered; boots, shoes, and gloves. The Danes wore dresses similar in style, but more ornamental; and the Normans introduced no novelty on their first arrival, except the ladies' surcoat, a short cloak, with long and ugly sleeves. Particoloured coats were first worn in England in the reign of Henry I., chaplets, or wreaths of artificial flowers, in the time of Edward III., hoods and taborts in the reign of Henry IV., hats in the time of Henry VII., shoes in 1633, and breeches superseded trunk hose in 1654. In the 13th century the tabard, a sleeveless garment, consisting of two pieces, hanging before and behind, came into use, and in the 14th century a great variety of sleeves, cloaks, and head-gear, with pantaloons, sleeveless spencers, scarfs, and long-pointed shoes, became characteristic features. The women of this century were chiefly distinguished by the whimsical designs of their head-dresses; they also wore stay-like garments outside their other dress. In the 15th century tight breeches and slashed sleeves were introduced. Strutt states:—"At the close of the 15th, the dress of the English was exceedingly fantastical and absurd, insomuch that it was even difficult to distinguish the one sex from the other. The men wore petticoats over their lower clothing; their doublets were laced in the front like a woman's stays across a stomacher; and their gowns were open in the front to the girdle, and again from the girdle to the ground." The horned head-dress for ladies appeared at the beginning of this century, and continued in vogue till 1461, when the steeple fashion became prevalent. Swords, as a part of domestic dress, were introduced in the latter part of the 15th century. The chief innovations of the 16th century were the enormous puffed doublets and trunk breeches of the men, and the hooped fardingales and high wing-like collars of the ladies. In the 17th century, judges' wigs, coats with short sleeves, puffed breeches, and boots with very large tops, were favourite fashions, and the Puritans embroidered their garments with religious maxims. Muffs for the hands are mentioned as having been used by gentlemen during the frost of 1683–4. In the early part of the 18th century, the ladies' commodes, introduced in 1687, attained the extravagant height which excited Addison's raillery in the Spectator; and the hooped petticoats were so altered in fashion, that, in the words of a writer in the Weekly Journal of 1718, "when a slender virgin stands upon a basis so exorbitantly wide, she resembles a funnel, a figure of no great elegancy." Gentlemen wore square-cut coats, stiffened by wire and buckram. Towards the middle of the century, head-dresses of enormous height were worn by the ladies, who, according to the London Magazine for 1768, used such expensive modes of dressing the hair, that it was sometimes left nine weeks without attention, which time, says the author, is "as long as a head could well go in summer." The formation of the Macaroni Club in 1772 contributed greatly to extravagance of costume, which continued undisturbed by any important novelty until the introduction of the modern round hat for gentlemen in 1789. Short waists became fashionable in 1794, but in 1798 they resumed more graceful proportions, and at length regained their proper shape.——Various laws have been enacted at different times for the regulation of costume in England. Such are 37 Edw. III. c. 8, &c. (1363); 3 Edw. IV. c. 5 (1463); 22 Edw. IV. c. 1 (1482); 1 & 2 Phil. & Mary c. 2 (1554); and 13 Eliz. c. 19 (1570). The last act required every person above six years old, except maidens, ladies, and gentlewomen, and lords, knights, and gentlemen of 20 marks a-year, to wear on Sundays and holidays a woollen cap of English manufacture, under a penalty of 3*s.* 4*d.*

DREUX (France).—This town was taken and destroyed by the English in 1188. An obstinate battle was fought between the Roman Catholic army and the Huguenot forces, led by Condé, at this place, Dec. 19, 1562. Both commanders were made prisoners. Henry IV. of France took the town, after a siege of 18 days, in 1593.

DRINKING-FOUNTAINS. — A meeting in support of the movement to erect drinking-fountains was held at Willis's Rooms, April 12, 1859. The first public fountain in London was erected by the Metropolitan Drinking-Fountains Association, at the expense of Mr. S. Gurney, at the corner of St. Sepulchre's churchyard. It was opened for general use April 21, 1859. Numbers of drinking-fountains have since been erected in London, and in various provincial towns.

DROGHEDA (Ireland) was fortified by Turgesius the Dane, in 911. Lucas, Archbishop of Armagh, founded a Dominican convent in 1224, and in this building the four Irish kings, O'Neill, O'Hanlon, O'Donnell, and Macmahon, did homage to Richard II., March 10, 1395. In 1412, Henry VI. granted a corporation, and the town afterwards became of considerable political importance, courts and parliaments being held in it by the English viceroys. "Poynings's Law," which rendered the Irish parliament subservient to that of England, was passed at Drogheda in 1494. Cromwell stormed and took the town Sep. 11, 1649, putting 3,000 of the inhabitants to the sword; and in 1690 it resisted an assault by King William III.'s army, to which it surrendered after the battle of the Boyne. The first stone of the Whitworth Institution was laid by its founder, Mr. Benjamin Whitworth, May 24, 1864.

DROMORE (Ireland) was erected into a bishop's see by St. Coleman about 510, but there is no regular succession of bishops till the 12th century. Jeremy Taylor became Bishop of Dromore in 1661. The Church Temporalities Act (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 37, Aug. 14, 1833) provided that, when next vacant, the see of Dromore should be united to those of Down and Connor (q. v.). This occurred on the death of Bishop Saurin, April 9, 1842.

DRONTHEIM, or TRONDHJEM (Norway).—This town, founded by Olaf I. in 997, was the capital of Norway, until that kingdom was united to Denmark. The cathedral was commenced in 1033. Drontheim was made an archbishopric in 1151, was ceded to Sweden in 1658, and restored to Denmark in 1660. The Swedes invested Drontheim, but without success, in Oct., 1718.

DROOP MOUNTAIN (Battle). — The Confederates, under Gen. Echols and Col. Jackson, were defeated, with a loss of 300 men, by a superior force of Federals under Gen. Averill, near this mountain in Virginia, Nov. 6, 1863.

DROTNINGHOLM (Treaty).—The Empress Catherine II. of Russia, and Gustavus III. of Sweden, concluded an alliance at this island, called also Queen's Island, in the Mälar Lake, near Stockholm, Oct. 19, 1791. It was purely of a defensive character, and was contracted in order that Gustavus, relieved from fear of invasion on the part of his more powerful neighbour, might be at liberty, should an opportunity arise, to lead his forces against the French Republic. It was very unpopular in Sweden.

DROWNING. — This punishment, common amongst many nations of antiquity, was treacherously inflicted near Nicomedia in 370, on 80 legates, who complained of certain grievances, which the Emperor Valens found it inconvenient to redress. It was awarded, by a charter of Richard I., dated 1189, to any crusader of his army who should kill a fellow-soldier on shipboard. In this country it was long a punishment inflicted upon women. It prevailed in Scotland as late as 1685. The last execution by drowning in Switzerland took place in 1652, in Austria in 1776, and in Iceland in 1777. During the French Revolution, it was revived by the monster J. B. Carrier, who, in 1793, constructed vessels in which 100 victims might be drowned at once. (See NOYADES.)

DRUIDS, the priests of the ancient Gauls and Britons, who revered the oak and mistletoe, and were the legislators and teachers of the people. Their origin is unknown. Suetonius Paulinus put numbers of them to the sword, when he took Anglesey, the ancient Mona, in 61, and from that time their authority declined.

DRUM.—Representations of this instrument occur on Egyptian sculptures of the 16th century B.C., where it is always depicted as being struck by the hands. It was introduced into Europe by the Saracens, and was played, probably for the first time in France, on the entry of Edward III. into Calais in 1347.

DRUMCLOG (Battle).—Graham of Claverhouse was defeated here by the Scottish Covenanters, Sunday, June 1, 1679 (O. S.). Forty of the royalists and one of the rebels fell in the action, and Claverhouse himself was nearly made prisoner.

DRUNKARDS.—By a law of Pittacus, B.C. 589, the ancient Greeks inflicted double punishment upon such as committed crime in a state of intoxication; one penalty being awarded for the actual offence and the other for the intemperance which occasioned its commission. The Apostolical Canons, in 250, declared all drunken priests degraded from their sacred office, and Pope Eutychian (275—283) denounced sentence of excommunication against laymen guilty of intoxication. In England a law was passed against drunkenness in 975, and by 4 James I. c. 5 (1606), and 21 James I. c. 7, s. 3 (1623), offenders are liable to a fine of five shillings, to be devoted to the use of the poor, or six hours in the stocks, and for a second offence to be bound with two sureties in £10 for good behaviour.

DRURY-LANE THEATRE (London) was opened by the King's Company under Thomas Killigrew, April 8, 1663. In Jan., 1672, it was burned down, and a new one, erected from the designs of Sir Christopher Wren, was opened May 26, 1674. This theatre became the only one in London, when Davenant's Company united with the King's, Nov. 16, 1682. After undergoing considerable alterations, it was reopened Sep. 23, 1775. The Theatrical Fund was established by Garrick in 1776. The last performance in Wren's theatre took place June 4, 1791, after which it was pulled down and rebuilt by Henry Holland. The new building was opened with a performance of sacred music, March 12, 1794. It was burned down Feb. 24, 1809. The first stone of a new theatre, designed by Mr. B. Wyatt, was laid Oct. 29, 1811, and the new building was opened with a prologue by Lord Byron, Oct. 10, 1812.

DRURY'S BLUFF (United States).—The garrison of the forts at this point on the James River, Virginia, about eight miles below Richmond, repulsed an attack by a powerful squadron of Federal iron-clads, May 8, 1862.

DRUSES, a people of Syria, who trace their descent from Darazi, a disciple of the Fatimite caliph Hakem (996—1020). In 1588 they were subdued by Amurath III., but regained a portion of their independence in the middle of the 18th century. An insurrection occurred among the Druses and Maronites in the spring of 1840. It was suppressed by the Turks in 1841. In the summer of 1860 they rose in arms against the Maronite Christians, and slew about 12,000 men, women, and children, of whom 200 were priests; besides destroying 163 villages, 220 churches, and 7 convents. The massacre was suspended July 10, and the Sultan despatched Fuad Pasha as commissioner to restore tranquillity. The consequence was, that 167 of the most guilty Druses were publicly executed at Damascus Aug. 20, and many others sent to Constantinople to undergo imprisonment and hard labour.

DUBLIN (Archbishopric).—St. Patrick is said to have placed a bishop over the church he founded at Dublin, in 448; but no names of prelates remain earlier than Livinus, who was promoted to the see in 633. In 1152, Bishop Gregory was raised to the archiepiscopal dignity, and in 1214 the diocese was enlarged by the addition of the see of Glendaloch. George Brown, who succeeded to the archiepiscopal throne in 1535, was the first Protestant archbishop of the diocese. In agreement with a provision of the Church Temporalities Act (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 37, Aug. 14, 1833), the see of Kildare was united to Dublin, Aug. 8, 1846.

DUBLIN (Ireland) is mentioned by Ptolemy, under its Latin name "Eblana," A.D. 140. Its early history is involved in obscurity.

DUBLIN INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION.—At a meeting of the Royal Dublin Society, held June 24, 1852, Mr. William Dargan offered to place the sum of £20,000 in the hands of a committee of 25 gentlemen, for the construction of a building in which an Irish industrial exhibition might be held. The offer was accepted, and the committee held its first meeting July 5. The building, designed by Mr. John Benson, was sufficiently advanced to admit exhibitors to deposit their goods, March 1, 1853; by which time Mr. Dargan's advances fell little short of £80,000. The ceremony of opening the exhibition was performed by Earl St. Germains, the lord-lieutenant, May 12. It was visited by Queen Victoria and Prince Albert, Aug. 29, and after a most successful season was closed Nov. 1.

DUCAT.—This gold coin is said to have been first struck in the 6th century by Longinus, Duke or duca of Ravenna. Others attribute its introduction to Roger II., Duke of Apulia, who coined a large number of ducats in 1140. Gibbon attributes the origin of the name to the dukes of Milan. The Venetians adopted them in 1280, and they subsequently became the favourite medium of the commercial republics of Italy. A silver coin, known as the ducatoon, was extensively used in Spain and Holland.

DUCKING STOOL.—(See CUCKING STOOL.)

DUDLEY (Worcestershire).—Dodo, a Saxon prince, erected a castle here about 760. It was demolished during the rebellion, and was ultimately destroyed by fire in 1750.

DUDLEY'S CONSPIRACY.—In Feb., 1556, Sir Henry Dudley, cousin to the Duke of Northumberland, entered into a conspiracy, with other young men, to dethrone Queen Mary and establish the Princess Elizabeth in her stead. The French agreed to furnish means, and it was proposed to rob the Treasury; for which purpose five of the conspirators were selected. The plot was, however, betrayed, and Throgmorton, and about 15 more, were arrested and committed to the Tower, March 18. Dudley succeeded in making his escape. Throgmorton was executed April 28; Captain Stanton, May 19; Derrick, June 2; and Sir Henry Peckham and John Daniel, July 7.

DUELLING.—No doubt this mode of settling disputes originated in the old system of assize of battle, the first instance in England resembling the modern duel being the encounter between William Count d'Eu and Godfrey Baynard, in 1096. In 1361, a projected duel between Henry, Duke of Lancaster, and the Duke of Brunswick, was prevented by John, King of France; and in 1398 Richard II. prohibited one arranged between the Dukes of Hereford and Norfolk. Hallam remarks that duelling in the modern sense of the term was unknown before the 16th century. In 1528 Francis I. challenged the Emperor Charles V. to a mortal encounter; but, though accepted, the challenge led to no engagement. Charles IX. of France prohibited the practice in his dominions in 1566. The celebrated duel between Jarnac and La Châtaigneraie took place in the presence of Henry II. of France in 1547. Duelling with small-swords was first introduced into England in 1587. In 1597 duelling was allowed in England by Queen Elizabeth. Henry IV. of France, in 1602, published an edict by which all persons engaging in a duel, or acting as seconds, were guilty of high treason. The law was found to be too severe, and a milder edict was issued in 1609. Cromwell published an ordinance for its suppression in 1654, and Charles II. issued a proclamation denouncing death against any who should kill another in a duel in 1679. A severe edict against duelling was published in Bavaria, Nov. 9, 1773, which enacted that principals and seconds in a duel, even although no wounds were given, should suffer death, and be buried as criminals. A court of honour was established for its suppression in Prussia in 1786, by deciding questions which otherwise would have occasioned duels. An anti-duelling association was formed in England before May, 1843, and three new articles of war were issued in 1844 to abate the practice in the English army. The following are some of the most remarkable duels:—

A.D.

DUISBURG (Prussia).—The church of St. John the Baptist in the ancient city was founded in 1187. In the 13th century Duisburg was an important member of the Hanseatic League. St. Salvador's church was erected in 1415, the gymnasium was established in 1599, and the Protestant university, founded in 1655, was abolished in 1802. Duisburg, which had previously been a free city of the empire, was ceded to Prussia in 1815.

DUKE, the highest title of nobility in England, is derived from the Latin dux, a leader. It is applied to the descendants of Edom, in Genesis xxxvi. 15—43 (B. C. 1575—1533), and was used as a title of honour by the Roman governors of provinces under the later emperors. It was introduced into England by Edward III., who created his son, the Black Prince, Duke of Cornwall, in 1337. The order had become extinct in 1572, and was revived by James I. The first Irish duke was Robert Vere, created Duke of Dublin in 1385. The title was introduced into Scotland by Robert III., who created his son David Duke of Rothesay in 1399. The title of archduke is said to have been created by Rodolph I., Emperor of Germany, in favour of his son Albert, in 1284. The first grand-duke was Cosmo de Medici, of Florence, who received the title from Pope Pius V. in 1569.

DUKE OF YORK'S ISLAND (South Pacific Ocean) was discovered by Com. Byron, June 24, 1765.

DUKE OF YORK'S SCHOOL.—(See ROYAL MILITARY ASYLUM.)

DULCIMER appears to be a modification of the most primitive stringed instrument found among savage nations, which usually consisted of strings stretched over a hollow piece of wood or a calabash. It existed in Asia in very ancient times, and was used by the Assyrians, the Babylonians, and the Persians, who employed an instrument differing but little in form from that used in 1536, the earliest kind known in modern times.

DULWICH COLLEGE (Surrey) was founded by Edward Alleyn, the actor, and designed by Inigo Jones. The chapel was finished in 1616, and the foundation opened Sep. 13, 1619. Its original name was God's Gift College, and its purpose the maintenance of a master, 4 fellows, 6 poor brethren, 6 sisters, 12 scholars, and 30 out-members. Alleyn was buried in the chapel Nov. 27, 1626. The east wing was finished in 1740. The girls' school was founded by James Allen, Aug. 31, 1741, and the picture-gallery was completed in 1813. The paintings were bequeathed by Sir Francis Bourgeois Dec. 20, 1810, and the gallery, sometimes called from its founder the Bourgeois Gallery, was opened to the public in 1817. Owing to the increased value of land, the wealth of the college accumulated so fast, that provisions were made for extending its benefactions by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 84 (Aug. 25, 1857).

DUMB.—(See DEAF AND DUMB.)

DUMBARTON (Scotland).—The castle of Dumbarton, which is of very ancient date and supposed to be the Roman station Theodosia, resisted a siege by Agricola, and was taken by Eadbert, King of Northumbria, in 756. In 1221 the town was erected into a burgh by Alexander II., and in 1456 the Countess of Lennox founded a collegiate church, of which nothing but the ruins remain. In 1563 Mary, Queen of Scots, visited the castle, and in May, 1571, it was taken, under circumstances of remarkable daring, by Capt. Crawford. Queen Victoria inspected this fortress Aug. 17, 1847.

DUMBLANE, or DUNBLANE (Bishopric), was founded in 1153, and having been suppressed was restored in 1731. The cathedral was commenced in 1240.

DUMBLANE, or DUNBLANE (Scotland).—A battle (see SHERIFF-MUIR) was fought near this town between the forces of the Pretender, under the Earl of Mar, and those of George I., under the Duke of Argyle, Sunday, Nov. 13, 1715 (O. S.), in which both parties claimed the victory.

DUM DUM (Hindostan).—The mutiny of the native troops in India broke out at this military depôt of Bengal, situated about midway between Calcutta and Barrackpore (q. v.). The Sepoys, alleging that the cartridges provided for the Enfield rifles were greased with the fat of oxen and pigs, which they could not use without loss of caste, broke into open insubordination in Feb., 1857.

DUMFERMLINE, or DUNFERMLINE (Scotland).—King Malcolm III. (Canmore) and his queen Margaret, who resided at this town in Fifeshire, founded, between 1070 and 1093, a Benedictine abbey, the nave of which was consecrated in 1150, and the choir built about 1250. Edward I. of England, who wintered here in 1303, partly destroyed the abbey church, Feb. 10, 1304, and it received further injuries from the Puritans, March 28, 1560. The Confession of Faith of 1581 was signed here by James VI., who erected the town into a royal burgh in 1588. His son Charles I. was born here, Nov. 19, 1600, and Charles II. resided here in 1640. The Covenants of 1638, 1643, and 1650 were signed at this town (see COVENANTERS), which was plundered by Cromwell's troopers in 1651. The Guildhall was built in 1808. The skeleton of King Robert I. (Bruce) was disinterred in 1818, during the removal of a ruined portion of the old abbey preparatory to the erection of the new abbey church, which was completed in 1821.

DUMFRIES (Scotland).—This town was erected into a burgh in the reign of David I. (1124—1153). A monastery was founded about 1200, in the chapel of which Robert Bruce stabbed Sir John Comyn, Feb., 1306. Dumfries was occupied and burned by the Highland army in 1745. Of the two bridges over the Nith, the oldest, to which a remote antiquity is sometimes erroneously ascribed, was built in the 17th century; the other was erected in 1795.

DUNA, or DWINA (Battle).—Charles XII. of Sweden defeated the Saxons and Poles under Marshal Steinau, on the banks of this river, near Riga, July 20, 1701.

DUNBAR (Scotland) was conferred upon the Earl of Northumberland in 1072 by Malcolm III. (Canmore). John Warren, Earl of Surrey, defeated John Baliol, in a great battle fought here, April 29, 1296, which for the time decided the fate of Scotland as a conquest of Edward I. It was destroyed in 1333, rebuilt in 1336, and was successfully defended in 1338. In 1567 Queen Mary and Bothwell took refuge in the castle, which was demolished by order of Parliament. Cromwell gained a victory over the Scottish army at the Race of Dunbar, near this place, Sep. 3, 1650, killing 4,000, and taking 10,000 prisoners.

DUNDALK (Ireland), seized by Edward Bruce in 1315, was the scene of his coronation as King of Ireland in 1317, and of his death in a battle fought with Lord Bermingham, Oct. 5, 1318. In 1641 it was taken by Sir Phelim O'Neill, who destroyed its castle and fortifications, and in 1642 it was stormed by Lord Moore and Sir Henry Tichbourne. It surrendered to Cromwell in 1649, and was occupied by the forces of William III., June 27, 1690. (See CAMBRIC.)

DUNDEE (Scotland). — Malcolm III., who reigned from 1057 to 1093, built a palace here, in which he sometimes resided. It was made a royal burgh in 1210, and placed under the government of a constable in 1298. Edward I. was at Dundee in 1296 and 1303, and Edward Bruce took it in 1313. It was sacked by the Duke of Lancaster in 1385. In 1544 the plague committed great ravages among its population, and in 1641 Charles I. conferred upon it the present charter. In 1645 it was besieged and taken by the Earl of Montrose. Charles II. resided here in 1651, after his coronation at Scone, and it was sacked by Monk, who massacred about 1,300 of its inhabitants. Queen Victoria landed at Dundee in Sep., 1844, in commemoration of which a magnificent triumphal arch has been erected. Nineteen persons were killed by a boiler explosion at one of the linen-factories, April 15, 1859. The People's Park, the gift of Sir D. Baxter, was opened Sep. 9, 1863. An accident, from overcrowding at the doors of an evening entertainment, which caused the death of nine young women and ten youths, and serious injury to many more, occurred here Jan. 2, 1865.

DUNEDIN (New Zealand), the chief town of Otago (q. v.), founded in 1848, was erected into a bishopric in 1865. An Industrial Exhibition was held from Jan. 12 to May 6, 1865.

DUNES (Battle), fought on the dunes or sands, whence the name, near Dunkirk, during the siege of that town by the combined armies of France and England, June 4 (14 N. S.), 1658. The Spaniards, who had advanced to the relief of Dunkirk, were totally defeated by the allied troops, led by Turenne, and Dunkirk capitulated June 23.

DUNGAN-HILL (Battle), fought at this place, in Ireland, between the Parliamentary army, under Col. Michael Jones, and the Irish, under Gen. Preston, Aug. 8, 1647. The numbers were nearly equal, and Jones gained a complete victory.

DUNGANNON (Ireland). — A Franciscan monastery was erected at this town of Tyrone, during the reign of Henry VII. (1485—1509). The castle, which till 1607 was the chief seat of the O'Neils, was destroyed by the Parliamentary army in 1641.

DUNGENESS (Kent).—A French fleet of 14 ships of the line anchored off this point Jan. 22, 1744, but sailed away on the approach of the English squadron commanded by Sir John Norris, and was subsequently scattered by a storm. Towards the end of the last century a lighthouse was erected on this cape, after the model of the Eddystone, and in 1807 a series of martello towers was commenced, to defend the coast between Dungeness and Folkestone.

DUNKELD (Bishopric), erected in 1127, was, with the rest of the Scotch sees, suppressed at the Revolution in 1688. It was restored in 1727, received Dumblane in 1776, and was removed to St. Andrews in 1844. The choir of the cathedral was erected between 1318 and 1337, the nave between 1406 and 1464, and the tower and chapter-house between 1470 and 1477.

DUNKELD (Scotland). — The Culdees had a monastery at this place, in Perthshire, as early as 729, which was erected into a cathedral by David I. in 1127. Kenneth II. removed the remains of St. Columba to Dunkeld in 850. James VI. founded the grammar-school in 1567, and the bridge over the Tay was built in 1809.

DUNKERS, or GERMAN BAPTISTS.—This religious sect was founded in Germany by Alexander Mack about 1708. In 1723 they were driven by persecution to America, where they established themselves at Germantown, and founded a church. They are for the most part vegetarians, and insist upon the necessity for good works, and the separation of the sexes. The origin of the name Dunkers is unknown.

DUNKIRK, or DUNKERQUE (France), was founded by Baldwin III., Count of Flanders, about 960. It afterwards passed into the possession of the counts of Hainault, who sold it to its former lords in 1280. In 1388 it was burned by the English, and in 1435 was transferred to the house of Luxemburg, whose right passed by marriage to the Bourbons in 1487. Early in the 16th century it was seized by the Spaniards, who retained it till July, 1558, when it was retaken by the French. The Duke of Parma re-annexed it to the Spanish empire in 1585. In 1646 it was taken by the great Condé, and in 1652 was again seized by the Spaniards. Marshal Turenne retook it June 23, 1658, after the battle of Dunes (q. v.), fought June 14, and gave it to the English, who had assisted him in its capture. Charles II.

sold it to France for £500,000, Oct. 17, 1662. Louis XIV. increased its fortifications, which were sufficiently strong to resist a bombardment by the united fleets of Great Britain and Holland, July 26, 1694. By the treaty of Utrecht, April 11, 1713, it was agreed that all the military defences should be destroyed; but these conditions were evaded, and the restriction was consequently renewed by the treaty of Paris, Feb. 10, 1763. The enforcement of the order was, however, found impracticable. It was repealed by the treaty of Versailles, Sep. 3, 1783, and the works have since been much increased. The Duke of York was defeated in an attempt to take Dunkirk, Sep. 7, 1793. The fortifications were enlarged, and Dunkirk was made a free port in 1816.

DUNMOW (Essex).—The priory was founded in 1104, by Juga Baynard. The manor is held by a curious tenure. The prior and canons were obliged to give a flitch of bacon to any couple who could swear, a year and a day after their wedding, that they had never quarrelled, or wished themselves unmarried again. It is unknown who originated this tenure, but probably it was one of the Fitz-Walters, the first of whom died in 1198. The flitch was claimed and awarded in 1445, 1467, 1510, 1701, 1751, Thursday, July 19, 1855, and in 1860. In 1855 the ceremony was performed at Great Dunmow Town Hall, as the lord of the manor refused to revive the custom. The happy candidates were Mr. and Mrs. Barlow, and the Chevalier de Chatelain and his lady. A similar custom prevailed in the manor of Wichnor, Stafford, where corn was given in addition to the flitch of bacon.

DUNSE (Pacification).—By this treaty, signed at Dunse, in Berwickshire, June 18, 1639, Charles I. granted all the demands of his Scotch subjects, consenting to withdraw his fleet and army, and to summon a general assembly and parliament to discuss the bases of reconciliation. The Scotch also agreed to disband their army.

DUNSINANE (Battle).—The army of the usurper Macbeth was defeated at Dunsinane, in Perthshire, July 27, 1054, by Malcolm, the eldest son of the murdered Duncan, assisted by an English force under Siward, Earl of Northumberland. Macbeth escaped to Lanphananan, where he was slain in 1056.

DUNSTABLE (Bedfordshire) was founded by Henry I., and granted to a priory of Black canons in 1131. The corpse of Queen Eleanor rested here on its way from Lincolnshire to London in 1290. The cross erected to commemorate the event was pulled down during the Interregnum. Cranmer opened a court here to consider the validity of Henry VIII.'s marriage with Catherine, May 10, 1533, and pronounced a divorce May 23. The free school was founded in 1727. A large quantity of Roman copper coins of the reigns of Antoninus and Constantine was discovered here in 1770.

DUNWICH.—The seat of the bishopric of East Anglia, founded in 630, was fixed at Domnoc, or Dunwich. It was removed to Thetford in 1078. (See NORWICH.)

DÜPPEL, DUPPELN, or DYBBÖL (Battles).—This village of Sleswig, separated from the island of Alsen (q. v.) by a narrow sound, has been the scene of several conflicts in the struggles for the settlement of the Sleswig-Holstein question. Here the Danes defeated the Prussians, May 28, 1848, and compelled them to retreat to Gravenstein. A second engagement took place June 5, 1848, when the Danes were driven from their position, which, however, they regained June 6. It was carried by an assault of the Saxons and Bavarians, April 13, 1849. The bulk of the Danish army having taken up its position at Düppel, Feb. 6, 1864, the village was besieged by the Prussians, who commenced a bombardment, March 15, which terminated in the defeat of the Danes, April 18.

DUPPLIN-MOOR (Battle).—The English forces under Edward Baliol defeated the Scotch under the Earl of Mar, on this moor, in Perthshire, Aug. 11, 1332. The loss of the Scotch amounted to 13,000 men, while the English only lost two knights, 33 squires, with a few common soldiers.

DU QUESNE FORT.—(See PITTSBURG.)

DURANGO, GUADIANA, or CIUDAD DE VICTORIA (Mexico).—This city was founded by Velasco in 1559, and erected into a bishop's see in 1620.

DURAZZO, DYRRACHIUM, or EPIDAMNUS (Albania).—This city, when founded by the Corcyreans, B.C. 627, was called Epidamnus. It was seized by Glaucus, King of Illyria, B.C. 312. Pompey compelled Julius Cæsar to raise the siege, B.C. 48. It was taken by the Normans, under Robert Guiscard, Feb. 8, 1082; and in 1216 withstood a siege by the Venetians, who effected its capture in 1386. The Sultan, Bajazet II., took it in 1500, and annexed it to the Ottoman empire.

DURBAR.—This name, given in India to the apartment in which great potentates admit their vassals to audience, has been applied in consequence to such audiences themselves. The Tongso Penlow having insulted the Hon. Ashley Eden in open durbar, March 29, 1864, war was declared against Bhotan (q. v.). Sir John Lawrence, Viceroy of India, held a durbar at Lahore, Oct. 18, 1864. The custom of requiring Europeans to remove their shoes on entering native durbars, was ordered to be henceforth discontinued in Rajpootana at the request of Gen. G. St. P. Lawrence, to whom the chiefs desired to show a token of respect, Oct. 21, 1864.

DÜREN, or MARK-DUREN (Prussia).—Several cohorts of the Ubii were defeated at this place, the ancient Marcodurum, by the Batavian chief Civilis, A.D. 70; and Charlemagne held diets here in 775 and 779, previous to his conflict with the Saxons. In 1543 it was besieged and taken by Charles V., and in 1642 was restored to Prussia by Duke Frederick William, who again surrendered it to the Imperialists the same year. The French seized it in 1794, and erected it into the capital of the department of Roër; but it was finally restored to Prussia in 1814.

DURHAM was founded by the monks of Lindisfarne, or Holy Island, in 995. In 1040, Duncan, King of Scotland, made an ineffectual attempt to capture it; and in 1069 the inhabitants were so oppressed by Robert Comyn, Earl of Northumberland and governor of the city, that they rose in rebellion and slew him, with 700 of his followers, Jan. 28. It was to avenge this atrocity that William I. devastated the northern counties in the latter part of the same year. The castle was founded in 1072; and a riot, in which Bishop Walcher was killed, took place May 14, 1080. In 1323 the walls were restored by Bishop Beaumont, and in 1424 the city was the scene of the marriage of James I., of Scotland, with Lady Jane Seymour. The plague raged with great fury in 1416, 1589, and 1597. In 1633 it was the residence of Charles I., and in 1640 was taken by the Scotch. It sent two members to the House of Commons in 1675. The infirmary was founded in 1791, and the county gaol and court-house erected in 1809. The palatine jurisdiction of the county was transferred from the see to the crown, by 6 Will. IV. c. 19 (June 21, 1836). The church of Sherburn Hospital, supposed to have been erected about 1184, was entirely destroyed by fire Dec. 4, 1864.

DURHAM (Bishopric).—In 634, Aidan came from Scotland to Northumberland at the solicitation of King Oswald, who established him as bishop in Lindisfarne, or Holy Island, in 635. In 664 the see was merged in the diocese of York, but in 678 was again separated. In 875 the see was removed to Chester-le-Street, and in 995 was transferred to Durham. The cathedral, commenced in 1093, was not finished till 1500. The see was suppressed by 7 Edw. VI. c. 17 (1553), which provided that two sees were to be established at Durham and Newcastle, and all the temporalities were granted to the Duke of Northumberland. The deanery and 12 prebends had been appointed by charter, dated May 12, 1541, which was confirmed by 1 Mary, s. 3, c. 3 (1554), re-establishing the see.

DURHAM LETTER.—The Pope having published a bull establishing a Roman Catholic hierarchy in England and Wales, Sep. 30, 1850, Lord John Russell, who was then premier, addressed a letter on the subject to the Bishop of Durham. In this letter, which dated Nov. 4, he not only expressed the strongest indignation at the attempted aggression, but condemned as "unworthy sons of the Church of England" all clergymen who approved of "the honour paid to saints, the claim of infallibility for the Church, the superstitious use of the sign of the cross, the muttering of the Liturgy so as to disguise the language in which it is written, the recommendation of auricular confession, and the administration of penance and absolution."

DURHAM, or NEVILLE'S CROSS (Battle).—Philippa, Queen of Edward III., totally defeated the Scottish army under David II., and took the king prisoner, at Neville's Cross, near Durham, Oct. 12, 1346. The loss of the Scotch in this battle was estimated at 15,000.

DURHAM UNIVERSITY.—A college founded here in 1290 was suppressed by Henry VIII. Oliver Cromwell signed a writ of privy seal for establishing a university at Durham, May 15, 1657, which was suppressed at the Restoration. The present university was founded, with the consent of the bishop, by an act of chapter, Sep. 28, 1831, and Parliament sanctioned the proposal by a private act (2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 19), which received the royal assent July 4, 1832. The university was opened Oct. 28, 1833, and its regulations were approved by convocation, March 4, 1836. It was incorporated by royal charter, June 1, 1837, and the first degrees were conferred June 8. Durham Castle, founded in 1072, was devoted to the accommodation of the students by an order in council, dated Aug. 8, 1837. Bishop Hatfield's Hall was opened in 1846, and enlarged in 1849; and Bishop Cosin's Hall was opened in 1857. Durham University held the same position as the other universities in the Medical Act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 90, Aug. 2, 1858), and like them it elects a member of the General Council of Medical Education and Registration. By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 82 (Aug. 6, 1861), entitled "An Act for the Good Government and Extension of the University of Durham," a commission, the duration of which was limited to Dec. 31, 1862, was appointed. The commissioners framed 16 ordinances, June 13, 1862, which they presented in their report, June 4, 1863. These ordinances, having been rejected by the Privy Council, were subsequently abandoned by the commissioners.

DUROVERNUM.—(See CANTERBURY.)

DÜRRENSTEIN (Battle).—Richard I. was confined in the castle at this village in Lower Austria, by Leopold, Duke of Austria, in 1192. A division of the French army under Marshal Mortier was attacked by the Russians under Doctoroff, while marching through a defile near this place, Nov. 11, 1805. The French, though surrounded on all sides, fought with determined valour, and were at length rescued by the division of Dupont, after losing 3,000 men and three standards.

DÜSSELDORF (Prussia). — Adolphus V., Duke of Berg, raised this place from a village into a municipal town, in 1288. The town-hall was built in 1567, and the bridge over the Rhine in 1680. Carlstadt, the handsomest part of the city, was founded by the elector, Charles Theodore, in 1786. In 1794 Düsseldorf was bombarded by the French, and in 1802 the fortifications were demolished in accordance with one of the articles of the treaty of Luneville. In 1806 the Grand-duke of Berg fixed his residence here, and made it the seat of government; and in 1815 it was ceded to Prussia, together with the rest of the duchy. In 1829 it was made a free port. A famous picture-gallery, founded in 1710, by the elector John William, was removed to Munich in 1808. The academy was founded in 1767 and reorganized in 1822. The Art-Union, established in 1828, still exists.

DUSSINDALE (Battle).—The Earl of Warwick defeated the Norfolk rebels at this place, near Norwich, Aug. 27, 1549, when about 3,500 of the latter were cut down.

DUTCH AMERICA.—The possessions of the Dutch in America consist of Surinam, or Dutch Guiana, the islands of Curaçoa, St. Eustatius, and St. Martin.

DUTLINGEN (Battle).—The Austrian army, under Gens. Von Werth, Mercy, and Hatzfeld, defeated the French at this place in 1643. The latter lost many men in the action, and all their general officers were made prisoners.

DUUMVIRI, two patricians, first appointed in Rome by Tarquinius Superbus, to take charge of the Sibylline books and consult them in times of public difficulty, B.C. 520. They held their office for life, and were exempted from military service. The title was given to various authorities at Rome in cases where the functions of the office were vested in two persons.

DUVAL'S BLUFF (United States). — This place, on the White River, Arkansas, was taken by the Federal Gen. Gorman Jan. 15–19, 1863.

DWARFS.—The custom of employing dwarfs to contribute to the amusement of the great is of high antiquity in the East, where the art of retarding human growth was successfully practised. This art passed into Greece B.C. 324, and thence to Rome about A.D. 50. Domitian exhibited gladiatorial contests between dwarfs and beautiful women in 81, and the Roman ladies employed them as domestic servants. The passion for dwarfs reached its height in Europe during the reigns of Francis I. and Henry II. of France (1515—1559). The last prince who kept them for his amusement was Stanislaus, Duke of Lorraine, whose favourite dwarf died in 1764. The following are some of the most famous dwarfs:—

B.C.
330—285. Philetus of Cos, a poet and philosopher, was so short or thin, that he was jocularly said to carry lead in the soles of his shoes, lest he should be blown away.

A.D.
5th century. Alypius, a philosopher of Alexandria.
1557. Birth of Jean d'Estrix, who was scarcely a yard high at the age of 35.
1619. Birth of Geoffrey Hudson, who was 18 inches high at 7 years old, after which he did not grow till he was 30, when he attained the height of 3 feet 9 inches. In 1644 he attended Queen Henrietta Maria to France, and in 1682 was seized on suspicion of being implicated in the Popish plot, and imprisoned in the Gatehouse, Westminster, where he died, aged 63.
1728. Birth of John Coan, who, when 22 years old, weighed 34 lb., including his clothes, and measured 38 inches when in his hat, wig, and shoes.
1736. Birth of Hopkin Hopkin, who was only 13 lb. in weight, and 2 feet 7 inches in height, at the age of 15 years, when he exhibited all the infirmities of advanced old age.
1739. Birth of Borowlawski, a Polish gentleman, who attained the height of 39 inches, and died at Durham, Sep. 7, 1837. He was remarkable for the acuteness of his intellectual faculties, and had a sister so much shorter than himself, that she could stand under his arm.
1741. Birth of Nicolas Ferry, or Bébé. He lived at the court of Stanislaus, King of Poland, who was much attached to him. At the age of 15 he displayed symptoms of old age, and he was only 22 when he died, at which time he measured 33 inches.
1746. Birth of Anne Theresa Souvray, who was only 33 inches high at the age of 73 years, when she was remarkable for her gaiety and vigour.
1846, March 16. Gen Tom Thumb appeared at the Lyceum Theatre, London.

DYEING.—This art, which originated in Asia with the Phœnicians, was practised by the Egyptians at a very early date, and appears to have been introduced into Canaan before B.C. 1728 (Gen. xxxvii. 3). The Tyrian purple was known as early as B.C. 1500, and (Exod. xxxv. 23) mention is made of blue, purple, scarlet, and of red skins of rams, B.C. 1491. On the decline of the Roman empire, and the consequent decay of the arts in Europe, dyeing was neglected; but in the 8th century some advance was made. In 1353 scarlet and a few other colours were dyed in England, and in 1429 the first book on the subject appeared in Venice. The Dyers' Company in London was incorporated in 1471. Before 1643 English cloth was exported to Holland to be dyed, but in that year the whole process was performed in England. The art of dyeing cotton scarlet or crimson was discovered in 1779. Turkey red was introduced in 1785. The principal statute relating to the business of the dyer is 23 Geo. III. c. 15, passed in 1783, and entitled "The Act for Preventing Frauds and Abuses in the Dyeing Trade." A great number of new colouring materials have been discovered and rendered available for dyeing purposes since 1850. (See BLEACHING.)

E.

EAGLE. — Xenophon (B.C. 444–359) states that the eagle was first used as a military ensign by the Persians. It was adopted as the sole standard of the Roman legions in the second year of the consulate of Marius, B.C. 104. Gibbon (ch. i.) remarks—"The golden eagle, which glittered in the front of the legion, was the object of the fondest devotion of the Roman troops." Though the double-headed eagle is said to have been introduced by Constantine I. (306—337), its origin may with greater justice be attributed to Charlemagne, who, in 802, added the second head to the eagle, to denote that the empires of Rome and Germany were united under him. The Roman eagle was adopted by Napoleon I., and confirmed by Napoleon III., as the standard of imperial France. Austria, Russia, and Prussia use the double-headed eagle as their national ensign. Prescott states, on the authority of the Spanish annalists, that a golden eagle with outspread wings, in the fashion of a Roman signum, richly ornamented with emeralds and silverwork, was the great standard of the republic of Tlascala.

EAGLE.—A base coin of this denomination was current in Ireland about 1272, and was declared illegal by 27 Edw. I. stat. De falsâ Monetâ (1299). The American eagle of 10 dollars, together with the half and quarter eagles, were first coined by order of an act of congress, April 2, 1792. The value of the American eagle is £2 1*s.* of English money.

EAGLE (Orders of the).—The order of the White Eagle of Russia was instituted by George Ossilinsky, Great Chancellor of Poland, and confirmed by Pope Urban VIII. in 1634. It was, however, soon suppressed, and in 1713 was reconstituted by Augustus II., King of Poland. In 1831 this order was united with those of Russia.——The order of the Black Eagle was founded by Frederick I., of Prussia, on his coronation day, Jan. 17, 1701.——The Golden Eagle was instituted at Würtemberg in 1702, and reconstituted in 1807.——The order of the Red Eagle, or of Sincerity, was founded in Prussia by George William, hereditary prince of Anspach and Bayreuth, in 1705; and reorganized by George Frederick Charles, July 13, 1734. In 1791 Frederick William II. erected this into the second Prussian order, and it was reorganized in 1810 and 1830.

EARL.—Selden believes that this title, which originally signified a man of birth, was synonymous with the Saxon etheling, and that it was applied to ealdormen about 1020. In the reign of Edward the Confessor the whole kingdom was divided among five earls. The first English earl created after the Conquest was William Fitz-Osbern, made Earl of Hereford in 1066. Sir John de Courcy, made Earl of Ulster in 1181, is the first Irish earl. Previous to the creation of dukes in 1335, earls were the highest nobility in England: they now rank third, after marquisses. Originally earls had the third part of the profits arising from the pleas of the country. Their privileges, however, were much diminished by 27 Hen. VIII. c. 24 (1535). The title of countess was first borne by the wives of earls in the 9th century.

EARL MARISCHAL OF SCOTLAND.—This officer, whose duty was to command the Scottish cavalry, was always chosen from the Keith family, the founder of which obtained it at the battle of Barry, fought in 1010, against the Danes. At first, the title was great marischal; James II. made it earl marischal before July 4, 1451. In 1593 the holder of the title founded the college at Aberdeen, which is called after him the Marischal College. The office became extinct in 1716, owing to George Keith's participation in the rebellion of the Earl of Mar.

EARL MARSHAL OF ENGLAND.—This, the eighth officer of state, is the only nobleman who bears the title of earl by virtue of his office. The title is of great antiquity. Roger de Montgomery, marshal of the Norman army at the Conquest, is said to have been the first marshal of England. The first on record was in 1135. King Stephen conferred the office upon Gilbert de Clare, afterwards Earl of Pembroke, in 1139. Originally the holders of it were merely styled lord marshals. The title of earl marshal was conferred upon Thomas, Earl of Nottingham, by special charter of Richard II., signed Jan. 12, 1386. The duties of the office were allowed to be discharged by deputy by a grant of Charles II., signed Oct. 19, 1672. The earl marshal, with the lord high constable, presided over the Court of Chivalry.

EARLY ENGLISH STYLE.—In architecture, a modification of the Gothic succeeded the Norman in the 12th, and was merged in the Decorated (q. v.) before the 14th, century. The term was first used by Dr. Millers in 1805.

EAR-RINGS are first mentioned Gen. xxiv. 22 (B.C. 1857). Jacob is said to have buried the idols of his household, with the "earrings which were in their ears." They were worn by the ladies of Greece and Rome, and by males in Lydia. The Parisian ladies adopted them in the 13th century, but they did not come into general use till the 15th and 16th centuries; when, Stubbes says, the ladies "are not ashamed to make holes in their ears, whereat they hang rings, and other jewels of gold and precious stones." English gentlemen also wore them in the reigns of Elizabeth and James I.

EARTHENWARE.—The art of the potter is probably one of the most ancient in existence. It was introduced into Greece from Egypt, B.C. 1490, and was encouraged at Rome by Numa Pompilius, about B.C. 700. The funereal earthenware of the Greeks was manufactured until about 350. After the decline of the Western empire, none but the coarsest pottery was manufactured. A better kind was introduced into Spain by the Moors in 711, and was thence taken to Italy by the Pisans in 1115. In the 13th century the Italians made earthenware overlaid with an opaque coloured glaze, which was considerably improved after 1300. Earthenware was manufactured at Beauvais, in the 12th century, and French Palissy ware was invented by Bernard Palissy about 1556. The Germans invented a glaze for earthenware in 1278, and exported stoneware in the 16th century. The earliest specimens of native British ware consist of earthenware tiles of the 13th century. Pitchers and jugs were soon afterwards introduced. Wedgwood's most important discoveries were made between 1760 and 1762. A duty of 10*d.* per lb., levied on all imported earthenware, by the "Additional Book of Rates" attached to 11 Geo. I. c. 7 (1724), was repealed by 15 Geo. III. c. 37 (1775). A duty of 50 per cent. on the value of imported earthenware was levied by 49 Geo. III. c. 98 (June 10, 1809). All duties on imported earthenware were abolished by the Customs Amendment Act, 23 Vict. c. 22, s. 5 (May 15, 1860).

EARTH-HOUSES.—(See PICTS' HOUSES.)

EARTHQUAKE.—No satisfactory account of the causes which produce this phenomenon has yet been given to the world. Humboldt remarks: "The phenomena of volcanoes, and those of earthquakes, have been considered of late as the effects of voltaic electricity, developed by a particular disposition of heterogeneous strata. It cannot be denied, that often, when violent shocks succeed each other within the space of a few hours, the electricity of the air sensibly increases at the instant the ground is most agitated; but to explain this phenomenon, it is unnecessary to recur to an hypothesis, which is in direct contradiction to everything hitherto observed respecting the structure of our planet, and the disposition of its strata."

EAST ANGLES.—This Anglo-Saxon kingdom, which comprised Norfolk, Suffolk, and Cambridgeshire, was founded by Uffa about 527, and became extinct at the death of Edmund the Martyr in 870.

EAST ANGLES (Bishopric).—In 628 its king Eorpwald was converted to Christianity, and in 630 it was erected into a bishopric under Felix. In 673 the see was divided into Dunwich and Elmham, which were reunited in 955, and in 1078 the see was removed to Thetford, whence it was transferred to Norwich in 1092.

EAST COWES (Isle of Wight).—This town, separated from West Cowes (q. v.) by the estuary of the Medina, owes its origin to a fort or block-house erected by Henry VIII. (1509–1547). The chapel-of-ease to Whippingham church, founded here by the Princess afterwards Queen Victoria, in 1831, was consecrated in 1833.

EASTER, the festival in commemoration of the Resurrection, is so called from Eastre, or Eostre, a Saxon goddess, whose feast was anciently celebrated in the month of April. Some ascribe its institution to the Apostles, but the more general opinion is, that it was first observed by their immediate successors, about 68. The Council of Arles, in 314, decreed that the day for keeping this festival should be the Sunday after the 14th day of the March moon, and the Council of Nicæa, in 325, confirmed this decision. The Roman method was not established in France till 525, and in Britain and Ireland till about 800. By the alteration of the calendar by Gregory XIII. in 1582, the first Sunday after the full moon immediately following the 21st of March was fixed as the day for observing this festival. Offerings, oblations, &c., were collected at Christmas, Easter, Whitsuntide, and other particular occasions, before the reign of Edward VI. By 2 and 3 Edw. VI. c. 13 (1548), it was enacted that such offerings should thenceforth be collected at Easter.

EASTER ISLAND, or DAVIS'S LAND (Pacific Ocean), was discovered by Davis in 1686. It was visited and named by Roggewein, who thought it was a new discovery, April 6, 1722, and visited by Capt. Cook, March 11, 1774.

EASTERN BATHS.—(See TURKISH BATHS.)

EASTERN (called also the BYZANTINE and GREEK) EMPIRE.—Valentinian I. first divided the Roman empire in June, 364, when Valens became Emperor of the East. The final separation took place in 395. Gibbon (ch. xxxii.) remarks, "The division of the Roman world between the sons of Theodosius marks the final establishment of the empire of the East, which, from the reign of Arcadius to the taking of Constantinople by the Turks, subsisted one thousand and fifty-eight years in a state of premature and perpetual decay."

A.D.

EAST INDIA COMPANY.—This celebrated association for the purpose of carrying on trade with the East Indies was formed in London in 1599, and obtained its charter Dec. 31, 1600. In 1635 a rival company was established by Sir William Courten, and chartered by Charles I. The two associations united in 1649. In 1657, Cromwell renewed their charter, which was confirmed by Charles II. April 3, 1661, and again Oct. 5, 1677. In 1694 the East India trade was thrown open, but in 1698 a new company obtained a monopoly, in exchange for a loan to Government of £2,000,000. In 1702, however, the old and new companies amalgamated, and formed the "United Company of Merchants of England trading to the East Indies." In 1772 the company was compelled to apply for a loan, and in 1784 the Board of Control was erected by 24 Geo. III. c. 25, to regulate the civil and military government of the company's territories. By 53 Geo. III. c. 155, s. 7 (July 21, 1813), the importation of any goods but tea from any place except China was declared free to all British subjects, and the commercial character of the company was abolished by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 85 (Aug. 28, 1833). The number of directors was reduced from 24 to 18 by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 95 (Aug. 20, 1853), and the government of India was finally transferred from the company to the crown, by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 106 (Aug. 2, 1858). The Dutch East India Company was formed in 1595. Charles VI. founded an East India Company at Ostend in 1719. It was dissolved in 1731. The Swedish East India Company was formed in 1731; the French in 1740, and dissolved in 1770; and the Danish was formed in 1740. The Scotch East India Company was established by an act of the Scottish Parliament in 1695. (See DARIEN.)

EAST INDIA HOUSE (London).—The old house of the East India Company, situated in Leadenhall Street, was erected in 1726, and the new house in 1798. The library, rich in Oriental MSS., was founded by the Court of Directors about 1805–6. In 1861, when the library and museum were removed—the former to Cannon-row West, the latter to Fife-House, Whitehall-yard—70,000 volumes of records of the company were sold for waste paper. The building was sold by tender to a private company for £155,000, June 20, 1861.

EAST INDIAN UNITED SERVICE CLUB (London) was founded Jan. 1, 1850.

EAST INDIES.—(See INDIA.)

EASTLAND COMPANY.—This association was incorporated in 1579 to trade to all places within the Sound except Narva. When the trade to Norway and Sweden was thrown open, this company declined in importance.

EBERSBERG (Battle).—The Austrians under Gen. Hiller were attacked and defeated by the French under Bessières and Oudinot at this place near Linz, in Austria, May 3, 1809.

EBIONITES.—A sect of Christian Jews founded at Pella, about 66, which attained importance in the 2nd century. They spread in the villages around Damascus, and had a church at Aleppo. Gibbon (ch. xv.) says: "The name of Nazarenes was deemed too honourable for those Christian Jews, and they soon received, from the supposed poverty of their understanding, as well as of their condition, the contemptuous epithet of Ebionites." They believed Christ to be a man, though endowed with divine power, and they maintained that the ceremonial law of Moses must be observed. The sect was in existence in the 4th century.

EBORACUM.—(See YORK.)

EBRO.—(See TUDELA, Battle.)

ECBATANA (Media).—This city is said to have been founded by Semiramis, though Herodotus mentions Dejoces as its founder. An account of the building of the city by Arphaxad is given in the book of Judith i. 2—4). It was the summer residence of Cyrus and the succeeding kings of Persia. It is mentioned by Ezra under the name of Achmeta, and the modern Hamadan occupies its site.

ECCENTRICS.—This convivial club, an offshoot of the Brilliants, held its first meeting about May, 1800, at a tavern in Chandos Street, Covent Garden, whence they removed to May's Buildings, St. Martin's Lane, where they held their meetings till 1840.

ECCLESIASTES.—This book, written by King Solomon before B.C. 976, derives its title from the name, signifying preacher, by which its author always refers to himself. Some commentators have supposed that it was not the work of Solomon, but of some later writer who assumed the name and style of the wisest of men to add force to his teaching. On this supposition, the dates assigned for its production have extended over a period of more than 300 years.

ECCLESIASTICAL COMMISSION.—William IV. issued a commission of inquiry into the state of the Church of England, Feb. 4, 1835, which published its first report March 17. A new commission was issued June 6, and by 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 77 (Aug. 13, 1836) the commissioners became a corporation, with perpetual succession and a common seal. The constitution of this corporation was materially amended by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 113 (Aug. 11, 1840), and 4 & 5 Vict. c. 39 (June 21, 1841).

ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS.—Previous to the Conquest, all offences were tried in civil courts; but in 1085 William I. published a charter of separation, which established ecclesiastical courts. By 24 Hen. VIII. c. 12, s. 2 (1532), all ecclesiastical jurisdiction was declared to be immediately from the crown. This act, repealed by 1 & 2 Mary c. 8, s. 6 (1554), was revived by 1 Eliz. c. 1, s. 4 (1558). In July, 1830, a commission was appointed to inquire into their practice and jurisdiction, which recommended sundry important changes in 1832. The Probate and Divorce Court, established by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 3 (Aug. 25, 1857), abolished all the authority of the Ecclesiastical Courts in matters relating to wills, &c.

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.—The narrative of the foundation and early history of the Christian Church is drawn from the inspired record in the New Testament. Hegesippus, in the 2nd century, and Eusebius, Bishop of Cæsarea (265—338), chronicled the course of events to their own times, and their accounts were continued by Socrates Scholasticus, whose history extends to the year 439; by Hermias Sozomenus, who died after 443; and by Theodoret, Bishop of Cyrus (393—457). Evagrius Scholasticus (536—600); the Venerable Bede (672 or 3—May 26, 735); and Simeon Metaphrastes, who died about 976, wrote on the same subject. Cardinal Cæsar Baronius (1538—June 30, 1607), author of the "Annales Ecclesiastici;" Archbishop Usher (1580—March 21, 1656); Rev. Thomas Fuller (1608—Aug. 15, 1661); Rev. Joseph Bingham (1668—Aug. 17, 1723); Lewis Anthony Muratori (1672—Jan. 21, 1750); John Lawrence Mosheim (1694—Sep. 9, 1755); John A. W. Neander (1789—July 14, 1850.); Rev. George Townsend, Canon of Durham (1788—Nov. 23, 1857); Rev. Henry Hart Milman, Dean of St. Paul's, born Feb. 10, 1791; John Henri Merle D'Aubigné, born in 1794; and Rev. James C. Robertson, born in 1813, have contributed valuable works to this department of history.

ECCLESIASTICAL LAW.—(See CANON LAW, ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS, LEGANTINE and PROVINCIAL CONSTITUTIONS.)

ECCLESIASTICAL TITLES BILL.—In consequence of the papal bull of Sep. 30, 1850, by which an attempt was made to establish a Roman Catholic hierarchy in England, Lord John Russell, then prime minister, introduced a measure into Parliament Feb. 7, 1851, which was read a third time and passed July 4. By this act (14 & 15 Vict. c. 60, Aug. 1, 1851), the papal brief was declared null and void, and a fine of £100 was imposed on all such as should endeavour to carry it into effect.

ECCLESIASTICUS.—This book of the Apocrypha (q. v., called in the Septuagint "The Wisdom of Jesus the son of Sirach," the date of whose life is not known, was translated into Greek, according to some authorities, about B.C. 230, though others assign it to B.C. 130. Its name is derived, not from the profession of the author, which is unknown, but from the fact that it was the chief of the ecclesiasti libri, or uninspired books, which, from their edifying nature, were accepted as proper to be read in churches. Numerous commentaries were published in the 16th and 17th centuries, Linde's German translation appeared in 1785, and his Greek text in 1795. The more complete version of Bretschneider was published in 1806.

ECIJA (Spain), the ancient Astigi, celebrated for an aqueduct completed by Abderahman III., in 949. The Merines defeated the Castilians near this town in 1275.

ECKENWALD.—(See CAMPO FORMIO.)

ECKMÜHL (Battle).—At this place, in Bavaria, the Austrian army, under the Archduke Charles, was defeated by the French, under Napoleon I. and Davoust, April 22, 1809.

ECLECTICS, a sect of ancient philosophers, founded by Potamon of Alexandria, who is said by some authorities to have lived in the time of Augustus, and by others in the 2nd century. He persuaded his disciples not to join any of the existing schools of philosophy, but to select from each what seemed most conformable to true reason. Between 200 and 235 similar principles were taught in reference to Christianity by Ammonius Saccas, who founded the school of the New Platonists. Another sect of Eclectics arose in the 17th century.

ECLIPSE signifies "failure," namely, of light. The Brahmins appear to have been the first astronomers who attained the power of calculating solar and lunar eclipses. In their great astronomical work, the "Suryá Siddhantá," it is stated that a total eclipse of the sun occurred Feb. 18, B.C. 3102, and modern calculations have proved the assertion true. Next in order the Chinese calculated eclipses, and based their entire chronology on their observations of these phenomena, which date from the year B.C. 2940. The Babylonian register of eclipses commenced in the year B.C. 2226. Hales says, "In the age of Thales, at least, the elements of the calculation of eclipses were known in Greece; for Herodotus says that he foretold to the Ionians the year of the remarkable eclipse that put an end to the battle between the Medes and Lydians."

B.C.
625. A total eclipse, predicted by Thales, interrupts the battle of Halys (q. v.). Various dates between B.C. 625 and B.C. 583 are given for this event.
603, May 17. A total eclipse is recorded by the Persian historians.
479, March 14. The army of Xerxes is alarmed by a total solar eclipse.
424. An eclipse is observed at Athens.
309, Aug. 15. The total eclipse of Agathocles.

A.D.
59. A total eclipse takes place at the death of Agrippina.
346, June 6. An eclipse occurs soon after the siege of Nisibis.
447. Idatius mentions an eclipse.
593, March 19. An eclipse occurs during the march of the Emperor Maurice to Thrace.
840, June 20. A total eclipse occurs at the death of Louis I. of France.
1030, July 29. A total eclipse takes place during the battle of Sticklastad.
1140. A total eclipse is visible in England.
1191, June 22. A very remarkable eclipse is visible in England.
1239, June 3. An eclipse is visible in England.
1433. A total eclipse is visible in the British islands.
1598. Another total eclipse is visible in the British islands.
1652. A total eclipse occurs, which is visible in the British islands.
1706. A total eclipse is visible in the south of Europe.
1715, May 3. A total eclipse takes place, during which the stars are visible at London in the daytime.
1724. A total eclipse of the sun is visible in England.
1733, May 2. A total eclipse is visible in the north of Europe. The red appearances round the moon, since known as Baily's beads, were first noticed on this occasion.
1806, June 16. A total eclipse is visible in North America.
1842, July 7. A total eclipse is visible in the south of Europe.
1850, Aug. 8. A total eclipse is observed by M. Kutczyeki in the Pacific Ocean.
1858, March 15. A great annular eclipse is visible in England.—Sep. 7. A total eclipse is visible in South America, and observed by order of the Brazilian government.
1860, July 18. A total eclipse, visible in Spain, is observed by a party of English astronomers.

ECNOMUS (Battle).—The Carthaginians, under Hamilcar, defeated Agathocles, Tyrant of Syracuse, in a great battle fought near this hill in Sicily, B.C. 311.

ECNOMUS (Sea-fight).—The Roman fleet, consisting of 330 ships, commanded by the consuls L. Manlius and M. Atilius Regulus, defeated the Carthaginian fleet, consisting of 350 ships, under the command of Hanno, off Ecnomus, near Agrigentum, in Sicily, B.C. 256. Some authorities contend that the Roman fleet had sailed from Ecnomus, and that the encounter took place at another part of the island, off Heraclea Minoa.

ÉCOLE POLYTECHNIQUE (Paris). — In 1794, a school for the education of young men in military, naval, and civil engineering, called the École Centrale des Travaux Publics, was established at the Palais Bourbon. In 1795, the name was changed to École Polytechnique, and the pupils were required to wear a uniform, and were instructed in artillery; and in 1804 the organization was made more strictly military by Napoleon I. In consequence of the strong political demonstrations of the students, the school was dissolved for a time in 1816, 1830, and 1832. It was reorganized Nov. 1, 1852, and is now called L'Ecole Impériale Polytechnique.

ECONOMISTS, a sect of philosophers, who first began to propagate their views in France, about 1761, and endeavoured to establish a system of government and social life founded on a knowledge of human nature as it actually exists. Francis Quesnay (see PHYSIOCRATS), born in 1694, and M. de Gournay, in 1712, are considered the founders of the school. The latter was made intendant of commerce in 1751, in which capacity he strove vigorously to release mercantile men from the numerous restrictions the legislature of the day imposed upon them. The first assemblies of the Economists were held in Madame de Pompadour's drawing-room.

ECONOMY (United States).—This Socialist village, in Pennsylvania, was founded by Germans in 1825.

ECUADOR, or EQUATOR (South America). —This country was discovered by Pizarro in 1526, and it remained under Spanish rule until the rebellion of 1812. Its independence was secured in 1821, when it formed part of the republic of Colombia. On the disruption of the Colombian republic in 1831, Quito, with its associated provinces, assumed the rank of an independent republican state, with the name of Ecuador or Equator. The navigation of the rivers of this republic was declared free from all dues for 20 years in 1853. In consequence of the interference of Gen. Mosquera, President of New Granada, in the affairs of Ecuador, the government declared war against him, Nov. 20, 1863. (See NEW GRANADA.) A revolution was suppressed in June, 1865.

EDDAS, two ancient Scandinavian books, one of which is in verse and the other in prose. Some of the songs in the former probably existed as early as the 6th century, but the majority date from the 7th and 8th. In the 12th century they were collected and arranged by Saemund Sigfusson, an Icelandic priest, who died in 1133. The MSS. were discovered by Bishop Brynjolf Svendson, who gave them the name Edda, or "grandmother," in 1643. ——The prose Edda was written by Snorro Sturleson, who died Sep. 20, 1241. It contains the mythological history of Scandinavia, was discovered in Iceland in 1628: and was first printed in 1665. Complete editions of the Eddas were published at Stockholm in 1818.

EDDYSTONE LIGHTHOUSE. — The first lighthouse on the Eddystone, a narrow rock 14 miles from Plymouth, erected by Winstanley in 1696, was destroyed by a violent tempest, Nov. 27, 1703. Its reconstruction was ordered by 4 & 5 Anne, c. 20 (1705), and completed by Mr. Rudyard in 1708. The new building was destroyed by fire Dec. 4, 1755. In 1757 Smeaton began the present lighthouse, which he constructed on improved principles, and completed Oct. 9, 1759. In 1770 the upper portion, which was of wood, was burned. It was reconstructed of stone in 1774, and the lighthouse has since remained uninjured.

EDEN.—"It would be difficult," says a writer in Smith's "Dictionary of the Bible" (i. 482), "in the whole history of opinion, to find any subject which has so invited, and at the same time so completely baffled, conjecture, as the Garden of Eden. The three continents of the old world have been subjected to the most rigorous search; from China to the Canary Isles, from the Mountains of the Moon to the coasts of the Baltic, no locality which in the slightest degree corresponded to the description of the first abode of the human race has been left unexamined. The great rivers of Europe, Asia, and Africa, have in turn done service as the Pison and Gihon of Scripture, and there remains nothing but the New World wherein the next adventurous theorist may bewilder himself in the mazes of this most difficult question." Philo Judæus (flourished about 20) first broached the allegorical theory of interpretation, teaching that paradise shadowed forth the governing faculty the soul, and that the tree of life represented religion, the true means of immortality. Origen (circ. 186—253 or 254), adopting a somewhat similar view, regarded Eden as heaven, the trees as angels, and the rivers as wisdom; and Ambrosius (333 or 340, April 4, 397), considered the terrestrial paradise and the third heaven, mentioned by St. Paul (2 Cor. xii. 2–4), as identical. Luther (Nov. 10, 1483—Feb. 18, 1546) taught that Eden was guarded by angels from discovery and consequent profanation until the Deluge (q. v.), when all traces were destroyed. Swedenborg (Jan. 29, 1689—March 29, 1772), who regarded the first 11 chapters of Genesis as constituting a divine allegory, taught that Eden represented the state of innocence in which man was originally created, and from which he degenerated in consequence of the Fall. For the dates assigned by different chronologists to the planting of Eden, &c., see CREATION.

EDESSA (Mesopotamia), called Antiochia Callirhoe, or Antioch of the Fair Streams, by the Greeks, is said to have been built by Nimrod, though Appian ascribes its foundation to Seleucus. It became independent of Syria, B.C. 137, and was taken by the Emperor Trajan in 102, and erected into a Roman colony in 216, when Abgarus, its last sovereign, was sent in chains to Rome. Christianity is said to have been introduced by Thaddæus, and was certainly established in the 1st century. In 260 it was the scene of a battle between the Emperor Valerian and Sapor I., King of Persia, in which the latter was victorious. Julian confiscated the whole property of the church here, in consequence of the turbulence of the Arians, in 362, and in 489 its celebrated theological school was pulled down by the Emperor Zeno. A destructive flood did considerable injury to the city in 525; in 611 it was taken by Chosroes II., King of Persia; and in 718 it was reduced to ruins by an earthquake. Baldwin, Count of Flanders, erected Edessa into a Christian principality in 1097. It was seized by the Mohammedans, under Zingis, in 1144. The Turks took it in 1184, and from that time it gradually declined, but has lately become important for its commerce, under the modern name of Orfah or Urfah. Niebuhr believes it to have been the ancient Rocca or Roccha.

EDESSA, or ÆGÆ (Greece).—This city was at an early period the capital of Macedonia (q. v.), though the government was afterwards removed to Pella (q. v.). Philip II. was assassinated here by Pausanias, B.C. 336. It was taken by the Emperor Basil II. (976—1025), and is now called Vodhená.

EDGECOTE (Battle).—The Earl of Warwick defeated Edward the Fourth's army at Danesmore, or Edgecote, near Banbury, July 26, 1469. The queen's father and brother, and the Earl of Pembroke, captured in this encounter, were put to death.

EDGEHILL (Battle).—At this hill, near the village of Keinton, or Kineton, in Warwickshire, Charles I. and the Royalist forces under Prince Rupert encountered the Parliamentary troops, led by the Earl of Essex, Sunday, Oct. 23, 1642. It was the first great battle in the Civil War, and proved very disastrous to both armies, though the losses were so nearly equal that neither could claim a decisive victory. Among the slain was the Earl of Lindsay, who had led the king's infantry. Clarendon estimates the total number of killed at 5,000 men.

EDICT OF NANTES.—This celebrated act of toleration, granted by Henry IV. of France to his Protestant subjects, April 13, 1598, confirmed all their former privileges, removed every obstacle to their deriving benefit from the universities and public schools, and allowed them to establish places of worship throughout his kingdom. It was confirmed by Louis XIII. in 1610, and revoked by Louis XIV. Oct. 22, 1685. This arbitrary act drove from France about half a million Protestants, many of whom settled in England, and introduced various arts and manufactures not previously practised in this country.

EDICTS.—The principal Roman laws so named are the Perpetual edict, prepared by Salvianus Julianus, and promulgated by the Emperor Hadrian, in 132, and the edict of Theodoric in 500.

EDINBURGH, the capital of Scotland, was founded in the 7th century, and was described as a considerable village in the 8th. During the earlier period of its history it was the scene of numerous contests.

EDINBURGH REVIEW.—The first number appeared Oct. 10, 1802.

EDINBURGH UNIVERSITY. — In 1558, Robert Reid, Bishop of Orkney, bequeathed 8,000 merks for the purpose of founding a university in the city of Edinburgh; but the money was detained by the Abbot of Kinloss for 24 years before it could be applied to the proposed object. Efforts were, however, made by Mary, Queen of Scots, April 23, 1561, and in 1563 part of the present site was purchased. In 1581 the magistrates applied for a charter, which was granted by James VI. April 14, 1582, and in 1583 Robert Rollock was nominated first principal of the new university. The library was founded in 1580, the Speculative Society in 1764, the Dialectic Society in 1787, the Natural History Museum in 1812, the Scots Law Society in 1815, the Diagnostic Society in 1816, the Hunterian Medical Society in 1824, and the Anatomical Museum in 1826. EDMUNDSBURY (St.). — (See BURY ST. EDMUNDS.)

EDMUNDS SCANDAL.—It was ascertained from an inquiry into the state of the Patent Office, ordered in March, 1864, that Mr. Leonard Edmunds, Clerk of the Patents, who had been permitted to resign, and also petitioned to be allowed to retire, with the usual pension, from the Clerkship of the House of Lords, had not accounted for £9,617 of the public money. On the motion of Lord Chancellor Westbury, this petition had been referred to a committee of the Lords, at the recommendation of which a pension of £800 a-year had been awarded him, the vacant office being conferred by the Chancellor on his son, the Hon. Slingsby Bethell. These circumstances having created much public scandal, Lord Westbury proposed a committee of inquiry of the Lords, March 7, 1865. The report, laid before the House May 5, confirmed all the charges brought against Mr. Edmunds, and censured the Chancellor for having withheld, in presenting that person's petition, the circumstances under which it was made. Mr. Edmunds' pension was accordingly rescinded, May 9. (See LEEDS BANKRUPTCY COURT AFFAIR.)

EDMUND'S (St.) HALL (Oxford), named after St. Edmund, Archbishop of Canterbury (1234—45), was devoted to educational purposes in 1269.

EDOM, or IDUMÆA (Asia), is the name given to the country inhabited by the descendants of Esau, who was living there B.C. 1739 (Gen. xxxii. 3). The inhabitants refused to allow the Israelites to pass through their territory on their retreat from Egypt, B.C. 1452 (Num. xx. 14—21). Saul made war upon them B.C. 1093 (1 Sam. xiv. 47), and David established garrisons in their land B.C. 1040 (2 Sam. viii. 14). Solomon built a navy at Ezion-geber B.C. 992 (1 Kings ix. 26), and Amaziah, King of Judah, gained a great victory, and took Selah, B.C. 825. The Edomites subsequently extended their borders as far north as Hebron, where they were defeated by Judas Maccabæus B.C. 163, and the country was overrun by the Arabs in the 7th century.

EDRISITES. — This independent dynasty, which founded the kingdom and city of Fez, lasted from 829 to 907. The founder was Edris, a posthumous child of a descendant of Ali.

EDUCATION.—Among the ancient Greeks and Romans, education was chiefly carried on in the schools of philosophy. The Britons left it to the Druids. The Saxon children were taught to repeat the psalms and other books by heart, reading being still uncommon in the time of Alfred. The English language was not spoken in the 12th century; but after the Norman period children learned their lessons in English, and afterwards translated them into French. Reading and writing became the chief branches of education in the 14th century. The following are some of the most important dates connected with the subject:—

EDWARD THE FIRST, the eldest son of Henry III. and Queen Eleanor, was born at Westminster June 18, 1239. He married Eleanor of Castile in 1254, by whom he had four sons and eight daughters. Edward I. was proclaimed king, Sunday, Nov. 20, 1272. He was then absent at the Crusades, and reached England Aug. 2, 1274, and was crowned, Sunday, Aug. 19. Eleanor died near Grantham, Nov. 28, 1291, and Sep. 10, 1299, Edward married Margaret, daughter of Philip III., and sister of Philip IV. of France, by whom he had two sons and one daughter. Edward I. died at Burgh-on-the-Sands, near Carlisle, July 7, 1307, and was buried in Westminster Abbey Oct. 27. His second wife survived him, dying in 1317. Edward was surnamed Long-shanks, from the length of his legs. He is sometimes called Edward IV., the three Saxon kings of the name of Edward being reckoned.

EDWARD THE SECOND, the fourth son of Edward I. and Queen Eleanor, was born at Caernarvon, April 25, 1284, and ascended the English throne, Saturday, July 8, 1307. He married Isabella, daughter of Philip IV. of France, Jan. 28, 1308, and was crowned Feb. 25. His wife bore him two sons and two daughters, namely, Edward (see EDWARD III.); John, born Aug. 25, 1315, and created Earl of Cornwall in 1328, died in Oct., 1334; Eleanor, born in 1318, married to Count Reyald II. of Gueldres, in 1332, died at Deventer, April 22, 1355; and Joan, born in the Tower, in 1321, married to David II. of Scotland in 1329, and died Sep. 7, 1362. Edward II. was deposed Jan. 20 or 21, 1327, and assassinated at Berkeley Castle, Sep. 21. Isabella died in 1357. Edward was surnamed Caernarvon.

EDWARD THE THIRD, the eldest son of Edward II. and Isabella of France, was born at Windsor, Nov. 13, 1312. The formal deposition of his father took place Jan. 20 or 21, 1327, and Edward III. was proclaimed king Jan. 24, and crowned Sunday, Feb. 1. He married Philippa of Hainault, Jan. 24, 1328, by whom he had five sons and five daughters. The most celebrated were, Edward, surnamed the Black Prince, born at Woodstock, June 15, 1330; he died June 8, 1376, and left by his wife, Joan of Kent, one son, afterwards Richard II. (q. v.); Lionel, born at Antwerp, Nov. 29, 1338, created Duke of Clarence, and died in Italy in 1368; and John of Gaunt, born at Ghent in 1340. He was created Earl of Derby and Duke of Lancaster, and died Feb. 3, 1399. Edward III. died at Shene, now Richmond, June 21, 1377, and was buried at Westminster. His queen, Philippa, died at Windsor, Aug. 15, 1369.

EDWARD THE FOURTH, second son of Richard, Duke of York, and his wife Cicely, was born at Rouen, April 29, 1441. He acceded to the throne March 4, 1461, was crowned at Westminster, June 28 or 29, and though Henry VI. resumed authority from Oct. 9, 1470, to April, 1471, Edward's reign is usually reckoned as if no interruption had occurred till his death, which took place at Westminster, April 9, 1483. Edward IV. married Elizabeth Woodville, widow of Sir Thomas Grey, May 1, 1464. She died June 8, 1492. They had three sons and seven daughters. Their eldest son became king (see EDWARD V.), and their daughter Elizabeth, born Feb. 11, 1466, united the houses of York and Lancaster, by her marriage with Henry VII. (q. v.).

EDWARD THE FIFTH, the fourth child and eldest son of Edward IV. and Elizabeth Woodville, was born at Westminster, Nov. 4, 1470. He was proclaimed king April 9, 1483, and is supposed to have been assassinated in the Tower by order of Richard III., who usurped the royal authority June 26, 1483. The last document of his reign is dated June 17, 1483.

EDWARD THE SIXTH, the son of Henry VIII. and Jane Seymour, being the only child of that marriage, was born at Hampton Court, Oct. 12, 1537. He succeeded to the throne Friday, Jan. 28, 1547, and died at Greenwich, July 6, 1553. Edward VI. was buried at Westminster, Aug. 8, 1553.

EGERTON CLUB (London), in St. James's Street, was established in May, 1861.

EGGS.—By 17 & 18 Vict. c. 122 (Aug. 12, 1854), a duty of 8*d*. per cubic foot was charged on eggs imported from foreign countries, and of 4*d*. per cubic foot on those from British possessions. It was repealed by 23 Vict. c. 22, s. 9 (May 15, 1860).

EGHAM (Surrey).—Runnymede (q. v.), where Magna Charta (q. v.) was signed, is in this parish. A railway collision, by which four persons were killed and 25 injured, occurred June 7, 1863. A verdict of manslaughter was returned by the coroner's jury against the engine-driver and stoker, June 18.

EGLINTON TOURNAMENT.—A magnificent festivity, in imitation of the mediæval tournaments, was held by the Earl of Eglinton, afterwards Earl of Eglinton and Winton, at his castle in Ayrshire, Aug. 28, 29, and 30, 1839. The Marquis of Londonderry officiated as "king of the tournament," and Lady Seymour as "queen of love and beauty." Many of the guests were in ancient costumes, and the expense of the entertainment is said to have amounted to £40,000. The Emperor Napoleon III., then Prince Louis Napoleon, was one of the mimic warriors on this occasion.

EGYPT (Africa).—This country, called in the hieroglyphic inscriptions Chemi, in the Hebrew Scriptures Mizraim, and in the Arabic Mesr, was one of the earliest seats of civilization. Its history is involved in obscurity. Hales (iv. 400) remarks:—"The mysteries of Egyptian chronology are not inferior, perhaps, to those of the Apocalypse; both running into vast and unknown periods of time, the one before, the other since, the creation of the world." The following table has been compiled from the works of the best authorities:—

B.C.
- 5717. Menes, the first King of Egypt, and founder of the Thinite dynasty, begins to reign. Lepsius assigns B.C. 3893; Bunsen, B.C. 3643; Hales, B.C. 2412; and Wilkinson, B.C. 2320, as the year of the accession of this mythic sovereign, the founder of Memphis (q. v.) and Thebes (q. v.).

51. Death of Ptolemy XI., who leaves his kingdom to Ptolemy XII. and Cleopatra.
49. Ptolemy expels Cleopatra, and civil war ensues.
48. Julius Cæsar, in assisting Cleopatra, besieges and burns Alexandria (q. v.).
47. Ptolemy XII. is defeated by Cæsar, and drowned while crossing the Nile. The Egyptian throne is shared by Cleopatra and her younger brother, Ptolemy XIII.
44. Cleopatra poisons her brother.
42. Mark Antony summons Cleopatra to trial for her brother's murder. They meet on the Cydnus; and he is so overcome by her beauty, that he follows her into Egypt.
36. Antony confers Phœnicia, Cyrene, and Cyprus on Cleopatra.
35. Antony confers all Asia, from the Mediterranean to the Indus, on Cleopatra.
31. Sep. 2. The battle of Actium (q. v.).
30. Invasion and subjugation of Egypt by Octavius, and suicide of Antony and Cleopatra. Egypt becomes a Roman province.
23. It is invaded by 30,000 Ethiopian subjects of Queen Candace, who are repulsed by Petronius.

A.D.
19. Germanius visits Egypt.
115. Insurrection of the Egyptian Jews.
122. Egypt is visited by Hadrian.
130. Rebellion of the Jews, and second visit of Hadrian.
171. The Egyptians revolt against the Roman Government.
202. The Emperor Severus visits Egypt.
215. Caracalla visits Egypt, and massacres all the youth of Alexandria for having ridiculed him.
265. Rebellion of Æmilianus, who is proclaimed Emperor at Alexandria.
269. Egypt is invaded by Zenobia, Queen of Palmyra.
272. Firmus renders Upper Egypt independent of Rome.
273 Aurelian regains possession.
278. Probus repels a dangerous invasion of the Blemmyes.
288. Upper Egypt rebels under Achilleus.
292. Diocletian besieges and takes Coptos and Busiris.
297. Siege and capture of Alexandria by Diocletian, who suppresses the rebellion of Achilleus. The Egyptian coinage ceases.
365. An inundation and an earthquake destroy many of the inhabitants.
379. Theodosius prohibits Pagan worship, in consequence of which the Serapion and other famous Egyptian temples are destroyed
616. Egypt is conquered by Chosroes II., King of Persia.
640, Dec. 22, Friday. Amer, or Amron, reduces all Egypt under Saracen domination.
750. The dynasty of the Abassides (q. v.) is established.
868. Egypt regains independence for a short period under the Toulounides.
969. It is conquered by the generals of El Moez, the Fatimite caliph of Mahadi.

A.D.
1168. It is invaded by Amalric, King of Jerusalem, who penetrates to Cairo, and is then compelled to retreat.
1250. It is conquered by the Mamelukes, who establish their dynasty.
1516. Battle of the Darik (q. v.).
1517. Overthrow of the Mamelukes (q. v.) by Sultan Selim I., who adds Egypt to the Ottoman empire.
1770. Ali Bey's rebellion.
1798. Egypt is invaded by the French, under Napoleon Buonaparte.
1799. July 25. Battle of Aboukir (q. v.).
1801. Expulsion of the French by the English and the Turks.
1806. Mehemet Ali is made Pasha.
1807, March 27. The English are defeated in an attempt to occupy Rosetta.—Sep. 23. They re-embark.
1811, March 1. Massacre of the Mamelukes at Cairo, by Mehemet Ali.
1814. The Turkish army in Egypt is remodelled.
1815—17. Belzoni prosecutes his discoveries.
1820. Alexandria is connected with the Nile by the Mahmoud Canal.
1829. The first Egyptian newspaper is published.
1831. Mehemet Ali, Pasha of Egypt, revolts from Turkey, and invades Syria.
1834. The cholera visits Egypt.
1835. The plague ravages Egypt.
1839. Mohammed Ali revolts, and claims hereditary possession of Egypt and Syria.
1840. The Egyptians are defeated by the British at Beyrout.
1841, July 11. The dispute with Turkey is adjusted.
1854, July 14. Said Pasha succeeds his brother Abbas as Viceroy of Egypt.
1856, Oct. 12. An earthquake is felt in Egypt.
1858, May 14. Achmed Pasha, eldest son of Ibrahim Pasha, and heir to his titles, is killed at the Kaffer-Said Railway station.
1862, March 27. The Prince of Wales visits Cairo.—June 3—Aug. 4. The Viceroy visits Egypt.
1863, Jan. 18. Death of the Viceroy Said Pasha, who is succeeded by his brother, Ismail Pasha.—April 7—May 1. The Sultan Abdul-Aziz visits Egypt.
1864, May. The Viceroy, on the demand of the Porte, despatches a body of troops against Arabian insurgents in Yemen.
1865, Aug 15. Opening of a portion of the Suez Canal (q. v.).

DYNASTY OF THE LAGIDÆ, OR PTOLEMIES.

B.C.
306. Ptolemy (I.) Soter I.
284. Ptolemy II. Philadelphus
246. Ptolemy (III.) Euergetes I.
221. Ptolemy IV. Philopator
204. Ptolemy V. Epiphanes.
180. Ptolemy VI. Philometer.
145. Ptolemy (VII.) Euergetes II.
116. Cleopatra Cocce and Ptolemy (VIII.) Soter II.
106. Cleopatra Cocce & Ptolemy (IX.) Alexander I.
87. Ptolemy (VIII.) Soter II.
81. Cleopatra Berenice.
80. Ptolemy (X.) Alexander II.
80. Ptolemy XI. Neus Dionysus.
57. Cleopatra Tryphæna and Berenice.
51. Cleopatra.

EGYPTIAN ÆRA.—The year of the ancient Egyptians, consisting of 365 days, brought back the commencement of the year to the same place in the seasons every 1461 years, which is termed the Sothic period. The first of these periods commenced B.C. 1322. To remedy the inconvenience of this calculation, the astronomers of Alexandria (B.C. 30) caused five days to be added every fourth year; and the reform commenced five years after that date.

EHRENBREITSTEIN (Prussia).—This strong fortress and town, on the left bank of the Rhine, opposite Coblentz, is mentioned under another name as early as 1153. The works having been rebuilt on a more extensive scale, were, in 1160, on account of their breadth, named by Hermann Hillin, Archbishop of Trèves, "Ehrenbreitstein," or the "Broad Stone of Honour." The French, under Marshal Boufflers, failed in an attempt to capture it in 1688. Jourdan invested Ehrenbreitstein for a short time in 1795, and returned June 9, 1796; but the French forces were compelled to withdraw Sep. 17. In April, 1797, the French again blockaded the fortress, which surrendered Jan. 24, 1799. The French, who restored it by the treaty of Luneville, Feb. 9, 1801, blew up the fortifications before they withdrew. Since the peace of 1814-15, the Prussian Government have devoted large sums to the restoration of its defences.

EICHSTADT (Bavaria), the capital of a principality belonging to prince-bishops, was secularized, and conferred upon Austria in 1802. It was ceded to the Elector of Bavaria by the peace of Presburg, Dec. 26, 1805, and was given to Prince Eugène Beauharnais, Duke of Leuchtenberg, in 1817. The bishopric was established in 745, and the cathedral was founded in 1259.

EIDER, or EYDER.—This river, flowing between Sleswig and Holstein, was connected with the Baltic by the Kiel Canal in 1784. It is 23 miles long, and was commenced in 1777.

EIDOGRAPH.—This instrument for copying drawings was invented by Wallace in 1821.

EIKON BASILIKE; or, The Portraiture of His Sacred Majesty King Charles I. in his Solitude and Suffering.—The first edition of this work appeared in 1648, and such was its popularity, that no less than 50 editions are said to have appeared in England and elsewhere before the end of 1649. The question of the authorship has excited considerable controversy, some ascribing it to Charles I., while others attribute it to Dr. Gauden, the king's chaplain.

EIMBECK, or EINBECK (Hanover).—This town originated in the pilgrimages to the Chapel of the Holy Blood, founded here by Count Alexander von Darul in 1094. It was a place of considerable importance in the 15th century, and, having been partially burned in 1826, has since been restored.

EIMEO (Society Islands).—This island, discovered by Quiros in 1606, was, in 1814, the first place in Polynesia where Christianity was popularly received. The South Sea College of the London Missionary Society has been established here since.

EINSIEDELN (Treaty).—By this compact, signed in 1450, Zurich renounced alliance with the house of Austria, and rejoined the Swiss Confederacy.

EINSIEDELN, or NOTRE-DAME-DES-ERMITES (Switzerland). — The Benedictine abbey of this place, founded in 946, the abbot of which was made a prince-abbot in 1274, and in which the Swiss reformer Zwinglius sought shelter about 1516, was rebuilt in 1719. The town was seized by the French in 1798.

EISENACH (Germany) was founded in 1140, and till 1406 was the residence of the landgraves of Thuringia. The Minnesingers had a trial of skill here in 1207. In 1521 it afforded shelter to Luther on his return from the diet of Worms. A considerable portion of the town has been rebuilt during the present century, and it was the scene of a meeting between the members of the new liberal party in Germany, who recommended the adoption of a central government instead of the diet, and proposed the formation of a national assembly, Aug. 14, 1859.

EISENSTADT (Hungary).—The palace of this town, erected by Prince Paul Esterhazy, Palatine of Hungary in 1683, was rebuilt in 1805.

EISLEBEN (Prussian Saxony).—Celebrated as the birthplace of Martin Luther, Nov. 10, 1483. He died here Feb. 18, 1546. The house in which he was born was destroyed by fire, June, 1689, and another erected on its site was opened as a free school, Oct. 31, 1693.

EISTEDDFOD, the name given to the annual assemblies of the British bards. They were of very ancient origin, being held at least as early as the 6th century of our æra, although there is no description of one previous to that of 1176, held by Rhys ap Gryffyd at Cardigan Castle. The last of these gatherings, convened by royal authority, was summoned by a commission of Queen Elizabeth, dated Oct. 20, 1567. They were revived towards the close of the 18th century, to encourage the study of the Welsh tongue, &c. An eisteddfod was held at Aberdare from Aug. 20 to 23, 1861.

EKATERINBURG (Asiatic Russia) was founded by Peter the Great in 1723.

EKATERINOGRAD (Russia).—This town, in the Caucasus, was founded by Prince Potemkin in 1777.

EKATERINOSLAV (Russia), the capital of a government of the same name, was founded by Catherine II. in 1787. It is also called Jekaterinoslav.

EL ARISCH (Egypt).—At this place, the ancient Rhinocorura, near Jaffa, the French defeated the Turks, Feb. 18, 1799. The fort capitulated Feb. 20, and was taken by the English Dec. 29, 1799. By the convention of El Arisch, signed Jan. 24, 1800, between the French and the Turks, it was stipulated that the French army should be permitted to return to Europe with its own arms and baggage, and that the fortresses of Egypt, excepting Aboukir, Alexandria, and Rosetta, should be given up within 45 days.

ELBA (Mediterranean).—This island, on the coast of Tuscany, the Ilva of the Romans and the Æthalia of the Greeks, was ravaged by a Syracusan fleet B.C. 453. During the Middle Ages it was subject to various Italian powers, and was seized by the British July 10, 1796, by whom it was evacuated Feb. 18, 1797, when part of it was ceded to France by Tuscany. The remainder was given up to France by the treaty of Florence, March 28, 1801, and was annexed by a decree of the senate Aug. 26, 1802. By a treaty between Napoleon I. and the allied powers, signed at Paris April 11, 1814, the island of Elba was conferred upon him, with an annual revenue of 2,000,000 francs, he being permitted to retain the title of emperor. Napoleon I. resided in the island from May 3, 1814, till Feb. 26, 1815, when he re-embarked for France, of which he recovered possession. Elba was retaken by the Tuscans, July 30, 1815.

ELBING (Prussia) was founded by the Teutonic knights about 1229. It was ceded to Poland in 1466, taken by Peter the Great in 1709, and united to Prussia in 1772. Frederick William III., King of Prussia, concluded a humiliating convention with Napoleon I. at Elbing in 1807.

ELBŒUF.—(See CAUDEBEC-LÈS-ELBŒUF.)

ELCESEANS, or ELCESAITES. — The followers of Elxai or Elcesai, a Jew, who flourished in the reign of Trajan (98—116). They engrafted many opinions derived from Oriental philosophy on a mixture of Judaism and Christianity. Epiphanius says it is doubtful whether the Elcesæans should be classed among the Christian or Jewish sects.

ELCHINGEN (Battle).—Marshal Ney, at the head of a French army, defeated the Austrians at this village, in Bavaria, Oct. 14, 1805. For this victory Ney received the title of Duke of Elchingen in 1808.

ELDERS.—A writer in Smith's "Dictionary of the Bible" (i. 517), says:—"Wherever a patriarchal system is in force, the office of the elder will be found as the keystone of the social and political fabric; it is so at the present day among the Arabs, where the sheikh (i.e., the old man) is the highest authority in the tribe." Among the Jews, elders constituted the national senate from the origin of the people. They are first mentioned as acting in concert at the time of the Exodus, B.C. 1491: and they retained their position under all the political changes their country experienced. Lay elders, not authorized to teach or administer the sacraments, but constituting a spiritual court of jurisdiction, and appointed for the assistance of pastors, were instituted by Calvin (July 10, 1509—May 27, 1564), and continue functionaries of the Presbyterian Church. An act of the Scotch General Assembly of that denomination, adopted in 1722, laid down stringent regulations for ensuring personal religion in the holders of this office.

EL DORADO, or "the Golden Land," is the name given by Orellana, in 1531, to a country which he pretended to have discovered in the interior of South America, between the rivers Orinoco and Amazon. He asserted that gold and precious stones existed in this region in great abundance. In 1595 Sir Walter Raleigh fitted out an expedition for the purpose of taking possession of El Dorado for the English Government. The term has been since applied to various regions in which gold has been found.

ELEASA (Battle).—Judas Maccabæus was defeated and slain by the Syrians under Bacchides and Alcimus at this place, in Palestine, near Ashdod, B.C. 160.

ELEATICS, a sect of philosophers, founded at Elea, in Sicily, by Xenophanes of Colophon, about B.C. 538. Zeno, who flourished B.C. 464, Empedocles, B.C. 435, and Melissus, B.C. 428, were leading philosophers of this school. They opposed the idea of a plurality of gods, but mingled this truth with many puerile and absurd conceits, which obscured and weakened its efficacy.

ELECTION PETITIONS. — Controverted elections to Parliament, originally tried as party questions by the whole House of Commons, were first referred to the decision of select committees by the Grenville Act, 10 Geo. III. c. 16 (1770), which provided that the committee should be chosen by ballot. Similar regulations in the case of Irish elections were introduced by 42 Geo. III. c. 106 (June 26, 1802), which was amended by 47 Geo. III. c. 14 (Feb. 19, 1807). The English law was consolidated and amended by 9 Geo. IV. c. 22 (May 23, 1828); and the appointment of the committee by ballot was repealed, and other changes effected by 2 & 3 Vict. c. 38 (Aug. 17, 1839). Further amendments were introduced by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 103 (Aug. 9, 1844), and by the Election Petitions Act, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 98 (Sep. 4, 1848), which was amended by 28 Vict. c. 8 (April 7, 1865). (See BRIBERY, &c.)

ELECTOR PALATINE.—This title was first assumed by Rodolph I., Count Palatine of the Rhine, in 1294.

ELECTORS.—By 8 Hen. VI. c. 7 (1429), no person was allowed to vote at the election of a member of Parliament unless possessed of 40*s.* yearly in land. Excise and custom-house officers were prohibited from voting by 22 Geo. III. c. 41 (1782). The mode of polling at elections was regulated by 9 Geo. IV. c. 59 (July 15, 1828). Several new regulations were introduced by the Reform Bill, 2 Will. IV. c. 45 (June 7, 1832); and the Crown received power to increase the number of polling-places in counties and boroughs, on the petition of the justices of those counties and boroughs, by 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 102 (Aug. 20, 1836).

ELECTORS OF GERMANY.—The German empire became elective after the death of Conrad I., in 919, when the right of choosing his successor was exercised by the Dukes of Saxony, Bavaria, Franconia, and Swabia. In 1257, there were seven electors; viz., the Archbishops of Mayence, Trèves, and Cologne, with the Count Palatine of the Rhine, and the rulers of Brandenburg, Saxony, and Bohemia. These were recognized by the States in 1338, and confirmed by Charles IV. in the Golden Bull of 1356. The treaty of Westphalia added another elector in 1648 in the person of the palatine, Frederick V., whose vote had been conferred upon the Duke of Bavaria; and in 1692 the Emperor Leopold I. granted the privilege to the Duke of Brunswick-Luneburg, who became the ninth elector. In 1777 the electorate of Bavaria was reunited to the palatinate, which reduced the number to eight; but in 1803 the diet of Ratisbon increased the number to ten; viz., the Arch-chancellor of Mayence, Bohemia, Bavaria, Salzburg, Saxony, Brandenburg, Brunswick, Würtemberg, Baden, and Hesse. In 1804, Francis I. declared the empire hereditary, in consequence of which the dignity of elector became merely nominal. The title is now only borne by the princes of Hesse-Cassel.

ELECTRIC CLOCK.—Professor Wheatstone's electro-magnetic clock was exhibited and explained to the Royal Society Nov. 25, 1840; and Mr. Bain patented an electric clock, Jan. 8, 1841, which he exhibited at the Polytechnic Institution March 28. Mr. Shepherd's electro-magnetic clock was one of the most remarkable objects of the Great Exhibition of 1851. An electric clock, which has since been removed, was set up in the Strand in 1852.

ELECTRICITY is so called from the Greek word electron, amber, because the first electrical phenomenon of which we have any record is the property that substance possesses of attracting light bodies when it is rubbed. This peculiarity was observed by Thales of Miletus B.C. 600. No progress was made, however, in the science, until about 1600, when Dr. Gilbert, of Colchester, discovered that other substances also possess the same property. He is therefore regarded as the founder of the sciences connected with electricity. The first electrical machine was made by Otto Guericke, of Magdeburg, who flourished between 1602 and 1686. The following are some of the most important dates connected with the subject :—

B.C.
600. Thales of Miletus observes that amber, when rubbed, possesses the property of attracting light bodies.

A.D.
415. Eustatius mentions that a certain philosopher emitted sparks while dressing and undressing.
1600. Dr. Gilbert, of Colchester, commences a series of experiments which prove that other bodies besides amber possess the property of attracting light bodies.
1675. Boyle publishes his "Experiments on the Origin of Electricity."
1705. Hawksbee notices the electric light produced by passing air through mercury in a vacuum.
1709. Hawksbee uses a glass electrical machine.
1730. Grey classifies all bodies as electrics or non-electrics.
1733. Dufay discovers vitreous and resinous electricity.
1740. The Leyden phial is discovered. Three persons claim the merit of this discovery; viz., a monk named Kleist, Professor Muschenbroech, of Leyden, and a man named Cunens.
1747, July 14. Dr. Watson conveys a shock across the Thames.
1751, June. Dr. Franklin discovers the identity of lightning and the electric spark.
1753, Aug. 6. Professor Richman, of St. Petersburg, is killed while prosecuting some experiments.
1767. Lane invents the discharging electrometer.
1773. Mr. Walsh and Dr. Ingenhouz prove the electric nature of the shock of the torpedo.
1776. Volta invents the electrophorus.
1785. Coulomb invents the torsion balance, and discovers static electricity.
1787. Cavendish demonstrates the formation of nitric acid, and decomposes atmospheric air by means of electricity.
1790. Galvanism (q. v.) is discovered by Galvani.
1800. Volta discovers Voltaic electricity. (See VOLTAIC PILE.)
1807. Sir Humphry Davy decomposes the fixed alkalies by electricity.
1820. Oersted discovers electro-magnetism, and Bohnenberger invents the electroscope.
1822. Dr. Seebeck discovers thermo-electricity.
1834. Professor Wheatstone experiments on the velocity of electricity.
1837. Professor Jacobi, of St. Petersburg, discovers electro-metallurgy.—The Electrical Society is established in London.
1839. The wreck of the Royal George, after being submerged for 60 years at Spithead, is blown up by electricity.
1840. Mr. Armstrong invents the hydro-electric machine.
1843, Jan. 26. Round Down cliff is destroyed by electro-blasting.
1847. Professor William Thompson publishes his theory of electrical images and reflections.
1851. Ruhmkorff constructs his electro-dynamic coil.
1862. Messrs. Newall and Co. patent their electric bells, which are fixed in Windsor Castle and in other large buildings.—M. Serrin's apparatus for illuminating streets by electricity is exhibited in London.—The magneto-electric light is employed at Dungeness lighthouse.
1863. Engraving is accomplished by electricity.—Gisborne's electric steering apparatus is adopted in several large vessels.
A.D.
1865. An electrical torpedo is tested with great effect in the harbour of Toulon.

(See ATLANTIC, ELECTRIC, and SUBMARINE TELEGRAPH.)

ELECTRIC LIGHT.—As early as 1802 the Chevalier Bunsen conceived the idea of obtaining light by fixing cones of charcoal to the poles of the conductor of a battery, in an exhausted glass globe. In 1846 Messrs. Greener and Staite patented an electric lamp, which was improved by the last-named gentleman in 1847, and exhibited at Hanover Square Rooms, and in Trafalgar Square, London, in 1848. A new system of electric illumination was employed the same year to light the theatre in the Palais Royal, Paris, and this was also exhibited in London with great success, Dec. 5 and 7. In 1850 Mr. Allman performed experiments at the Polytechnic Institution with an instrument of his own invention, the light of which continued longer, and was more equable in quality, than that of any former apparatus. Staite's light was again exhibited at Manchester, May 9, 1851. In 1853 Dr. Watson explained a process of his own invention, by which brilliant light was supplied, and costly pigments were simultaneously prepared by the same instrument; and in 1858 the same gentleman lighted the works of new Westminster Bridge by means of electricity. The electric light was employed in the lighthouse at the South Foreland in 1859. Mr. Gassiot invented an instrument in 1860, in which electricity, discharged from the induction-coil through a spiral carbonic-acid vacuum-tube, is made to produce a brilliant white light.

ELECTRIC LOOM.—This instrument was invented by Bonelli, of Turin, in 1854. In 1855 it was exhibited at the Paris Exhibition, and in 1859 was much improved by Froment. Faraday lectured upon it at the Royal Institution, June 8, 1860.

ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH.—The success of Dr. Watson's experiments to prove the instantaneous transmission of electricity through great distances, made in 1747, originated the idea of employing this property for purposes of telegraphic communication. The first attempt to realize this scheme was made by Lesage in 1774, when a series of 24 wires was established at Geneva, which communicated with an apparatus for indicating particular letters when the machine was in operation. Modifications of this plan were attempted by Betancourt in 1787, by Reiser in 1794, and by Salva in 1796. Sömmering of Munich applied the voltaic battery to telegraphic purposes in 1811, and in 1816 Ronalds, of Hammersmith, invented an instrument in which pith balls were used to point out the letter intended. Oersted's discovery of electro-magnetism was applied to telegraphic purposes by Ampère in 1820, his plan being to employ as many conducting wires and magnetic needles as there are letters, so that each letter being under a different needle, signals might be transmitted to a great distance. This proposition was lectured upon in England by Ritchie in 1830, and carried into effect by Baron Schilling at St. Petersburg in 1832. In 1833 Gauss and Weber attempted to introduce an apparatus in which a single bar gave all the signals, but its mechanism was too delicate, and its results too uncertain, to render it of practical utility. Cook and Wheatstone's first patent for an electric telegraph was sealed June 12, 1837, and Professor Morse's American instrument, which wrote the message it transmitted, was constructed the same year. Cook and Wheatstone's electro-magnetic telegraph was patented Jan. 21, 1840, and their signal-needle telegraph May 6, 1845. The magneto-electric telegraph was patented by Henley in 1848. (See ATLANTIC and SUBMARINE TELEGRAPH.)

ELECTRO-PHYSIOLOGY.—Animal electricity was to some extent known to the ancients, as Aristotle (B.C. 384—322) and Pliny (A.D. 77 both mention the benumbing power of the torpedo, the electrical organs of which were engraved by Lorenzini in 1678, and the shock of which was proved to be electric by Walsh and Dr. Ingenhouz in 1773. Symmer performed several interesting experiments on human electricity in 1759, by means of silk and worsted stockings, and in 1786 important discoveries were made by Hemmer respecting the same subject. Galvani's discoveries in 1790 shed fresh light on the science, which has since been illustrated by the experiments of Humboldt and Gay-Lussac in 1805, of Todd in 1812 and 1816, and of Professor Faraday, who examined the electricity of the gymnotus in 1838. Several interesting discoveries have also been made by Matteucci, who performed some fine experiments at York in 1844, and in May, 1855, the subject was brought before the members of the British Institution by some lectures of Dr. Du Bois-Reymond.

ELECTRO-TINT.—This application of the electrotype to the art of engraving was invented by Edward Palmer, who published an account of it in the Philosophical Magazine for June, 1840, and patented it June 12, 1841. The process was afterwards improved by him, and again patented, under the name of glyphography, Jan. 15, 1842.

ELECTRO-TYPE.—The art of plating by electricity was invented almost simultaneously by Spencer, of Liverpool, and Professor Jacobi, of St. Petersburg, in 1837; made public by the latter, Oct. 5, 1838, and by the former, Sep. 12, 1839. Murray applied blacklead to non-metallic bodies as a conducting surface in Jan. 1840. Messrs. Elkington, of Birmingham, took out their patent for gilding, &c., March 25, 1840; and in the following April the first specimen of printing from an electrotype appeared in a London periodical.

ELEPHANT (Order). — The date of the foundation of this celebrated Danish order of knighthood is very uncertain, some authorities referring it to the period of the first crusade (1096), others to the reign of Canute VI. (1182—1202), and others to that of Christian I. (1448—1481). The Danish official documents ascribe its foundation to the earlier part of the 15th century, and state that it was merely renewed by Christian I. in 1458. As originally constituted, it was of a religious character; but it became secular on the alteration of its statutes by Christian V., Dec. 1, 1693. This order, as well as that of the Danebrog (q. v.), is under the presidency of a chapter of the royal orders, established at Copenhagen June 28, 1808. The annual special festival of the order is celebrated on the 1st of Jan.

ELEPHANTA ISLAND (Hindostan).—This island, near Bombay, is remarkable for a huge unwieldy statue of an elephant, cut out of the solid rock, and for a great temple. The date of both curiosities is unknown, though, from their rapid decay since they were first examined, it is thought they cannot be of very high antiquity. In 1814 the neck and head of the elephant dropped off; and in 1824 only two-thirds of the columns of the temple were in a sound condition. A visitor to the island in 1836 states that the whole of the elephant, excepting three legs and a fragment of the fourth, had been at that time destroyed.

ELEPHANTINE (Egypt).—A small island in the Nile, opposite Syene, bears this name. It was the last fortified place in the dominions of Psammetichus I., and the Romans held it for some time. Diocletian built a temple of Concord here in 297. It was destroyed by Justinian I. in 531.

ELEPHANTINE KINGDOM (Egypt).—This small kingdom, situated on an island in the Nile, flourished at a period prior to the age of authentic history, and declined about B.C. 1450, when its importance was eclipsed by the rising grandeur of Thebes.

ELEPHANTS.—The Hindoos employed these animals for military purposes from the most remote periods, but they were not introduced into the regions west of the Indus until about the year B.C. 331, when they were used by Darius against Alexander III. at the battle of Arbela. At the battle of Hydaspes, B.C. 327, Porus brought about 100 elephants into the field, 80 of which fell alive into the hands of the victorious Alexander. They were introduced into Italy by Pyrrhus, who used 20 at the battle of Heraclea, B.C. 280; and they were soon adopted as an important branch of military power by the Carthaginians, who surrendered 104 to the Romans at the battle of Panormus, B.C. 250. In consequence of this capture, the Romans also began to use elephants, which they employed with great effect against the barbarous Arverni and Allobroges, B.C. 121. Towards the close of the Roman republic, the use of elephants in war was abandoned to the Orientals.

ELEUSINIAN MYSTERIES.—Festivals held annually, in Sep., at Eleusis, a town of Attica, in honour of the goddess Demeter, or Ceres. According to some authorities, they were instituted by Cadmus, B.C. 1550; others refer their origin to Erichthonius, B.C. 1494; but the usual opinion is that they were commenced by Eumolpus, the first hierophant, B.C. 1356. Great secrecy was observed in the celebration of the festivals, consisting of the greater and lesser mysteries; and it was a capital offence to reveal any of the rites. They existed about 18 centuries, and ceased during the invasion of Alaric I. in 396. Hales says they were brought from Egypt to Attica, about B.C. 1399, by Erechtheus, and that they were ultimately borrowed from the Jewish feast of Tabernacles.

ELGIN (Scotland).—This city, capital of the county of Elgin or Morayshire, was anciently called Helgyn, in honour of Helgy, a Norwegian chief, who ravaged the vicinity in the 9th century. The castle was a royal fortress prior to 1188, the cathedral was founded in 1224, and the city was made a royal burgh by Alexander II. in 1234. The town and cathedral were much injured by fire in 1270; in 1390, when they were burned by Alexander Stewart, Earl of Buchan, surnamed the "Wolf of Badenoch," a natural son of Robert II.; in 1402, when Elgin was attacked by Alexander, son of the Lord of the Isles; and in 1452, when it was partially burned by the Earl of Huntly. The cathedral was rebuilt in 1414, but the lead having been stripped from the roof in 1568, the interior decayed, and the grand central tower fell in 1711. Gray's Hospital was opened in 1819; the new parish church was erected in 1828; Anderson's Institute, for the education of the young and the maintenance of the aged, was opened in 1833; and the pauper lunatic asylum was built in 1834.

ELGIN MARBLES.—This collection of antique statuary is chiefly composed of fragments of the Parthenon at Athens, which was built by Pericles about B.C. 448. In 1799, Lord Elgin conceived the idea of forming such a collection, and in 1800 he proceeded to Athens, accompanied by several artists, who were permitted by the Porte to make drawings of the Acropolis. In 1801, however, owing to the success of British arms in Egypt, the Turkish Government granted him permission to "view, draw, and model the ancient temples of the idols, and the sculptures upon them; and make excavations, and take away any stones that might appear interesting to him." In this manner he obtained the series of marbles which now bears his name. Mr. Perceval wished to buy them for the nation in 1811, but the sum offered (£30,000) was deemed insufficient, and the proposal was rejected. In 1812 more remains were obtained, and in 1815 Lord Elgin petitioned the House of Commons to secure the collection for the national benefit. A select committee was appointed, and an act was passed, 56 Geo. III. c. 99 July 1, 1816, by which the marbles were purchased for £35,000, and deposited in the British Museum.

EL HADIR.—(See ATRA.)

ELIBERIS, ELVIRA, or ILLIBERIS (Spain).—This ancient city of Grenada is celebrated for an important council on discipline, held about 300 or 301.

ELIS (Greece), which lay to the west of Arcadia, and was called the "Holy Land" of Greece, appears to have been originally peopled by Pelasgians, and to have been taken by a party of Ætolians under Oxylus, B.C. 1104. In the 8th century B.C., its inhabitants had extended their conquests as far as the river Neda, and had wrested from the Pisatans the presidency of the festival of Zeus, at Olympia. This presidency was, however, restored to Pisa by Pheidon, Tyrant of Argos, B.C. 747; and Pantaleon, King of Pisa, celebrated the games to the exclusion of the Eleans, B.C. 644. The Eleans invaded Pisa B.C. 588, and were in their turn invaded by the Pisatans, B.C. 572; in consequence of which the Eleans razed their city to the ground. A quarrel broke out between Sparta and Elis B.C. 421, which led to the exclusion of the Spartans from the Olympic festival, B.C. 420. The Eleans with their allies were defeated by the Spartans at the battle of Mantinea, B.C. 418, and were invaded by Agis B.C. 402, and compelled to purchase peace by the surrender of several important towns, B.C. 400. They attempted to recover some portion of the ceded territory, B.C. 371, but were prevented by the Arcadians, against whom they declared war, B.C. 366, and by whom they were defeated, B.C. 365 and 364. In consequence, however, of the Arcadians having pillaged the temple of Olympia, so strong a feeling was excited against them, that they were compelled to restore several of their conquests and conclude peace, B.C. 362. Telesphorus, a general of Antigonus, seized the town of Elis B.C. 312, and attempted to erect it into an independent principality; but it was soon afterwards recovered by Ptolemæus. After the capture of Corinth by Mummius, B.C. 146, Elis, with the rest of the Peloponnesus, passed under the dominion of Rome. Theodosius I. abolished the Olympic games in 394, thereby destroying the last remnant of the ancient glory of the country, which was soon afterwards ravaged by Alaric I. in 396.

ELIZABETGRAD (Russia) was founded by the Czarina Elizabeth in 1754.

ELIZABETH, the only surviving child of Henry VIII. and Anne Boleyn, was born at Greenwich, Sep. 7, 1533, ascended the English throne Nov. 17, 1558, and was crowned at Westminster, Jan. 13, 1559. She was never married, and died at Richmond, March 24, 1603. Elizabeth was buried at Westminster, April 28, 1603.

ELIZABETH, ST. (Orders).—One for females was instituted in Bavaria in 1766.——The Royal order of St. Elizabeth of Brazil, for females, was founded in 1804.

ELIZABETHTOWN (United States).—This town of New Jersey, erected on land bought from the natives in 1664, and settled in 1665, was formerly the capital of the state.

ELIZABETOPOL, or KANDSAG (Asiatic Russia), was taken by the Seljukian Turks in 1088, and by the Mongols in 1235. Gen. Paskewitch defeated a Persian force here, Aug. 8, 1826, and afterwards occupied the town.

ELKHORN, or PEA RIDGE (Battle).—The Confederates, under Gens. Van Dorn and Price, drove the Federal right wing, under Gen. Curtis, from their position at this place, in Arkansas, March 7, 1862. At the same time, Gen. Sigel repulsed, with great slaughter, an attack upon the left wing. The battle was resumed March 8, when Gen. Sigel, by means of his artillery, routed the enemy.

ELLANDUNE, or ELLENDUNE (Battle).—Egbert, King of Wessex, defeated Beornwulph, King of Mercia, with great slaughter, at Ellandune, Ellendune, or Ealla's Hill, near Wilton, in 823.

ELLISON GALLERY (London).—Mr. Richard Ellison, of Sudbrook Holme, Lincolnshire, having desired that some portion of his collection of water-colour pictures should be given to the nation, his widow presented 50 works by leading artists to Kensington Museum, in April, 1860, "until a separate and permanent building shall be erected for the purpose of holding a national collection of water-colour paintings."

ELLORA, or ELORA (Hindostan). — The rock temples of this place in the Deccan, hewn from the solid mountain, and exhibiting traces not only of immense labour, but of considerable architectural skill, date, according to the Brahmins, from about B.C. 6080, and are supposed to have been excavated at least as early as B.C. 640. From the sculpture employed in the decorations, they appear to be of a later period than the ancient Hindoo epic poems Ramayana or Mahabharata, or than the rock edifices in the island of Elephanta. Ellora, ceded to the British in 1818, was granted by them to the Nizam in 1822.

EL MINA (Western Africa).—This fortress, erected by the Portuguese in 1481, was wrested from them by the Dutch in 1637.

ELOPEMENT. — By the statute of Westminster 2, 13 Edw. I. c. 34 (1285), any wife voluntarily leaving her husband forfeited for ever all right to dower, unless her husband willingly, and without coercion, restored her to his favour.

ELPHIN (Bishopric).—This Irish see was erected about 450, by St. Patrick, who appointed a monk named Asicus the first bishop; but there is no regular succession of prelates till 1262. The Church Temporalities Act (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 37, Aug. 14, 1833) provided that it should be annexed to Kilmore, and this was accomplished in 1841.

ELSINORE (Denmark).—This place obtained the privileges of a city in 1425, and was mentioned in a treaty with England, as entitled to levy the tax known as the Sound dues, in 1450. In 1522 it was taken by the inhabitants of Lubeck, from whom it was recovered by Christian II. in 1535. In 1576 its population was increased by an immigration of Dutch colonists, and about 1580 the celebrated Castle of Cronenberg was erected. This fortress was taken by the Swedes, under Wrangel, in 1658, but almost immediately evacuated. A treaty was concluded here between Sweden and the States-general, Dec. 9, 1659. In 1801 the British fleet, under Sir Hyde Parker and Nelson, forced the passage of the Sound previous to the bombardment of Copenhagen, and in 1807 Admiral Gambier passed the Great Belt. Elsinore is celebrated as the scene of the tragedy of "Hamlet." The railway to Copenhagen was opened by Christian IX., June 8, 1864. The Prince and Princess of Wales visited Elsinore Sep. 6 and Oct. 6, 1864.

ELSTER (Battle).—Henry IV. of Germany was defeated near the Elster, or Elbe, during his struggle against Rodolph of Swabia, Oct. 13, 1080. Both Henry IV. and his rival, Rodolph, were slain in the battle.

ELTEKEH.—(See ALTAKU, Battle.)

ELVAS (Portugal).—This town, besieged by the Spaniards in 1385, was raised into a city by King Emanuel in 1513, and was again besieged by the Spaniards, who were repulsed by the inhabitants in 1659. Taken by the French, under Marshal Junot, in March, 1808, it was restored by the convention of Cintra (q. v.), Aug. 22, 1808.

ELVIRA.—(See ELIBERIS.)

ELY (Bishopric). In 1108 a charter was obtained from Henry I. for its erection into a separate diocese, which was effected in 1109. Hervens was consecrated its first bishop, July 27, 1109. In 1837 and 1839 parts of the diocese of Lincoln were transferred to Ely.

ELY (Cambridge).—Etheldreda, daughter of Egric Anna, King of the East Angles, founded a monastery on this island about 673. The Danes destroyed it in 870, and it was rebuilt by Ethelwold, Bishop of Winchester, in 970.

EMANCIPATION.—Slavery was abolished throughout the British colonies by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 73 (Aug. 28, 1833).——The Roman Catholic Emancipation Bill (10 Geo. IV. c. 7) received the royal assent April 13, 1829.——The Emancipation Society, founded in London Nov. 11, 1862, was dissolved in 1865, on the termination of the American civil war. (See SLAVERY.)

EMANUEL COLLEGE (Cambridge).—This college was founded in 1584 by Sir Walter Mildmay, Chancellor of the Exchequer and privy councillor to Queen Elizabeth.

EMBALMING. — This custom originated among the Ethiopians, from whom the Egyptians received it at a very early period. It is usually very difficult to ascertain the precise age of mummies, but there is little doubt that many of those in our museums have been preserved at least 3,000 years. Pettigrew mentions one of that age which he opened, and found uninjured by the lapse of time; but when he soaked out the preservative drugs, the work of putrefaction immediately commenced. We learn from Scripture that Joseph caused the body of his father Jacob to be embalmed (Gen. l., 2, 3), B.C. 1635, and also that 40 days were taken up in the operation. Herodotus (B.C. 484) and Diodorus Siculus (B.C. 44) have left descriptions of the manner in which this process was performed by the Egyptians. It was much used by the early Christians. St. Augustine says it was still practised at the beginning of the 5th century.

EMBANKMENT. — (See THAMES EMBANKMENT.)

EMBARGO is the prohibition of ships from sailing, and the right to impose it may be lawfully exercised by the crown in time of war. But an embargo laid upon corn in 1766 being opposed to certain statutes, a special act (7 Geo. III. c. 7) was passed to indemnify such as had endeavoured to enforce it. An embargo was imposed on all Russian, Swedish, and Danish vessels in British ports, Jan. 14, 1801.

EMBDEN, or EMDEN (Hanover), the chief commercial town of Hanover, was formed after the inundation of the Ems in 1277. An African trading company existed here in 1682. It was made a free port in 1751. The French took it in July, 1757, and evacuated it March 19, 1758, at the approach of an English squadron. The French again obtained possession in 1761, but were speedily expelled. A bank was established Feb. 1, 1769. Embden came into the possession of Holland in 1808, was incorporated with Hanover in 1815, and suffered from an inundation in 1826.

EMBER WEEKS.—Pope Callixtus I. (219—222) appointed certain fast days for imploring the Divine blessing on the fruits of the earth and on the ordinations of priests, which were celebrated at these times. From the custom of strewing ashes or embers upon the head on these occasions, the days were called ember days, and the weeks in which they fell, ember weeks. They occur four times a year, being the Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday after the first Sunday in Lent, after Whit-sunday, after Sep. 14 (the Feast of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross), and after Dec. 13 (the Feast of St. Lucia).

EMBROIDERY.—This art is of very ancient origin, and is supposed to have been invented by the Phrygians. It was practised with great success by the women of Sidon, and was employed by Moses in the decoration of the tabernacle, B.C. 1490 (Exod. xxxv. 35, and xxxviii. 23). A machine was invented by Heilmann, and exhibited in Paris in 1854, by the aid of which a lady could embroider any design as correctly and quickly with 140 needles as formerly with one. The company of the Embroiderers was incorporated in 1562.

EMBRUN (France).—This ancient city, the capital, in the 4th century, of the maritime Alps, was, at an early period, erected into an archbishopric. St. Marcellinus, the first occupant of the see, died in 372. After undergoing several sieges by the Vandals and Huns, it was burned by the Moors in 966, and again destroyed during the religious wars in 1573. In 1589 it was ceded to France by Savoy, and in 1692 it was attacked by Victor Amadeus II. The archbishopric was suppressed in 1789.

EMENDINGEN (Battle). — Moreau was defeated at this place, in Germany, by the Austrian forces of the Archduke Charles, Oct. 19, 1796.

EMERALD.—This gem is mentioned as one of those forming the breast-plate of Aaron, B.C. 1491 (Exod. xxviii. 18); but it is uncertain whether the Hebrew word is correctly translated. The earliest emeralds known were brought from the mountains between Ethiopia and Egypt, where extensive mines were worked by the Ptolemies (B.C. 306—B.C. 30). This gem became very rare during the Middle Ages. Only one specimen, which adorned the tiara of Pope Julius II. (1503—1513), was known to have existed previous to the discovery of the Peruvian mines by Pizarro in 1545. The finest emerald in the world, weighing 8 oz. 18 dwt., was exhibited at the Great Exhibition of 1851.

EMESA, or EMISSA (Syria), the modern Hems, is remarkable for a magnificent temple of the sun. Its young priest, Bassianus, was raised to the imperial dignity in 218 under the name of Elagabalus, corrupted into Heliogabalus. He was assassinated by the Prætorian guards March 10, 222. His mutilated body was dragged through the streets of Rome, and thrown into the Tiber. Aurelian defeated Zenobia, Queen of Palmyra, near Emesa, in 272. The Arabs took Emesa in 635.

EMIGRANTS.—The French refugees (émigrés) began to leave France in July, 1789. Napoleon I. published an amnesty in their favour April 26, 1802, at which time there were 50,000, the greater part of whom returned to France. On the restoration of the Bourbons, in 1814, others returned, and a law was passed by the French Chambers, April 27, 1825, to indemnify them for the injury their affairs had sustained during their exile.

EMIGRATION was placed under the regulation of a government commission in 1831. It was one of the modes of relief proposed by the Poor Law Amendment Act, 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 62 (Aug. 14, 1834), and in Jan., 1840, was placed under the supervision of commissioners, appointed under the royal sign manual, as the Land and Emigration Board. The conveyance of emigrants from the United Kingdom was at first regulated by 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 53 (Aug. 31, 1835), which was amended by the Passengers Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 107 (Aug. 12, 1842). The recent extensive emigration from Ireland commenced in 1846.

Emigration from the United Kingdom from 1815 to 1863, inclusive.

Average annual emigration from the United Kingdom:—
From 1815 to 1863 111,894
For the ten years ending 1863 168,928

EMINENCE. — Pope Urban VIII. granted this title to cardinals, Jan. 10, 1631. Previously they were called illustrissimi. This title was also granted to ecclesiastical electors and to the Grand Master of Malta.

EMIR, the title borne by the descendants of Mohammed, who are also allowed to wear green turbans, was instituted by Fatima, daughter of the Prophet, in 650.

EMLY (Bishopric), one of the most ancient in Ireland, was founded by St. Ailbe, about 448. In old annals it is referred to as "Imleach Iubhair." Originally it was the metropolitan see of Munster; but in the year 1152 Pope Eugenius III. rendered it subordinate to Cashel, with which see it was incorporated in 1568.

EMMETSBURG (North America). — This town, in Pennsylvania, was occupied by the Confederate cavalry of Gen. Stuart, Oct. 11, 1862.

EMMETSVILLE (Battle).—The Confederate cavalry, under Gen. Stuart, drove the Federals from their position at this place, in Virginia, but were subsequently compelled, by the enemy's reinforcements, to retreat, Nov. 10, 1862.

EMPALEMENT is still used as a capital punishment by the Turks. It was formerly practised in this country on the bodies of those who committed suicide, but was abolished by 4 Geo. IV. c. 52, s. 1 (July 8, 1823).

EMPEROR. — The Romans distinguished their successful generals by the title Imperator, which was assumed by Julius Cæsar on his elevation to the perpetual dictatorship, B.C. 46. The succession of Roman emperors dates from Augustus Cæsar, B.C. 27, and that of the Eastern emperors from Valens, in 364. Charlemagne was crowned Emperor of the West in 800. The Ottoman empire began under Ottoman or Othman I., in 1299. The Czar Peter assumed the title of Emperor of all the Russias in 1721, and Napoleon I. that of Emperor of the French, May 18, 1804, in which year Francis II. of Germany adopted the style of Emperor of Austria. Brazil became an independent empire under Don Pedro IV. in 1825, and Soulouque was proclaimed Emperor of Hayti, by the title of Faustin I., Aug. 24, 1849. The present imperial government of France began under Napoleon III., Dec. 1, 1852.

EMPIRICS, a sect of physicians who taught that all knowledge of medical matters must be derived from experiment and observation. This doctrine was first promulgated by Acron of Agrigentum, a Greek physician, who flourished B.C. 430; but his disciples did not form themselves into a separate sect until the time of Philinus of Cos, and Serapion of Alexandria, B.C. 250.

ENAMELLING.—The inventor of this art is unknown, but the Egyptians, Etruscans, and other nations of antiquity practised it with considerable success. Having fallen into disuse, it was revived in Italy during the pontificate of Julius II. (1503—1513), and was much improved by Jean Toutin, a goldsmith of Châteaudun, who invented the art of painting with opaque enamel in 1630. Enamelled pottery was first made in England in 1642. A process for coating the interior of iron saucepans, &c., with enamel, was patented by Dr. Hickling in Dec., 1790, and improved by Clarke's method, which was patented May 25, 1839.

ENCÆNIA, or "anniversary feasts kept in memory of the dedication of churches" (Bingham, b. xx. c. viii. s. 1), commenced in the time of Constantine I. (306—337). They were introduced into England by Gregory I. (the Great) (590—604), who ordered Augustine and Mellitus, the first English bishops, "to allow the people liberty, on their annual feasts of the dedication of their churches, to build themselves booths round about the church, and there feast and entertain themselves with eating and drinking, in lieu of the ancient sacrifices while they were heathens." Hence arose our church-wakes.

ENCAUSTIC PAINTING.—In this art the colours are prepared with wax. It was anciently practised by Praxiteles, B.C. 360, but gradually fell into disuse until some experiments were made by Bachelier in 1749. The Count Caylus and M. Mignot published a description of the results in 1765, but the art was not recovered until 1785. This was effected by Miss Greenland, afterwards Mrs. Hooker, of Rottingdean, Sussex, and the account of her proceedings is given in the Transactions of the Society of Arts, 1792, vol. x.

ENCKE'S COMET.—M. Mechain, of Paris, discovered a telescopic comet, Jan. 17, 1786; Miss Caroline Herschel observed one, just visible to the naked eye, Nov. 7, 1795; and M. Pons of Marseilles, Professor Huth of Frankfort, and M. Bouvard of Paris, discovered a comet almost simultaneously, Oct. 20, 1805. M. Pons also detected a comet Nov. 26, 1818, which remained visible till Jan. 12, 1819. Its orbit being found to coincide with none of the ordinary calculations, Professor Encke, by a series of careful observations, proved that its real path was an ellipse, and that its period was about three years and a quarter, thus establishing its identity with the comets above named, and demonstrating, for the first time, the existence of comets of short period. This comet has been frequently observed on its periodical reappearances.

ENCRATITES, or ABSTAINERS, the followers of Tatian, an Assyrian, and a disciple of Justyn Martyr. He held matter to be the source of all evil, and corrupted Christianity by introducing various doctrines of the oriental philosophers. His followers discarded all external comforts, and held wine in such abhorrence, that they used water in the Lord's Supper. Tatian flourished about 172. His followers were also called Tatianists, Apostolians, and Hydroparastates. They were also called Aquarians and Continents.

ENCUMBERED ESTATES ACT.—In consequence of the number of encumbered estates in Ireland, and the difficulty of disposing of them, three commissioners were appointed by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 77 (July 28, 1849), to superintend their sale and transfer. By this act the owner or incumbrancer of encumbered land of which the lease had run on for at least 60 years, was empowered to apply within three years to the commissioners for a sale (s. 16). The Commissioners' Court in Dublin commenced its business Oct. 25, 1849, and ceased Aug. 31, 1858, having sold property to the amount of £23,161,093 6*s.* 7*d.* A new court, to be called the Landed Estates Court, Ireland, was appointed by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 72, s. 2 (Aug. 2, 1858).——An Encumbered Estates Court for the West Indies was provided by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 117 (Aug. 11, 1854), which was amended by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 96.

ENCYCLOPÆDIA.—The earliest encyclopædia in existence is one in MS. by Alfarabius, a philosopher of the school of Bagdad, who flourished in the 10th century. The first printed work with this title is the Encyclopædia, seu Orbis Disciplinarum, which was published at Basel in 1555. The most celebrated encyclopædias in the order of their publication are:

ENCYCLOPÉDISTS.—The French Encyclopédie, projected in 1750, and published at Paris in 28 volumes, between 1751 and 1772, was afterwards enlarged by a supplement in five volumes, produced at Amsterdam (1776—1777), and an index in two volumes, which appeared at Paris in 1780. Its projectors and authors, Diderot, D'Alembert, Helvetius, Raynal, and others, who professed the atheistic philosophic materialism of Voltaire, employed the work as a vehicle for advocating their opinions, and are consequently known as the Encyclopédists.

ENDEAVOUR RIVER (Australia).—Capt. Cook anchored at the mouth of this river, July 17, 1770, and remained until Aug. 4, when he named it after the ship in which he sailed.

ENDERBY'S LAND (Antarctic Ocean), was discovered by Biscoe in 1831.

ENDOR (Palestine).—Saul, who consulted the sorceress at this village on the eve of the battle of Mount Gilboa (1 Sam. xxviii. 7–25), B.C. 1055, was defeated, and committed suicide (1 Sam. xxxi. 4–6).

ENDOSMOSE, the power possessed by a dense fluid of attracting to itself through an animal or vegetable membrane any less dense fluid, was discovered by M. Dutrochet, who published an account of its properties in 1826. Endosmose is the term applied to this phenomenon when the attraction is from the outside to the inside. In the contrary case it is called exosmose.

ENFIELD (Middlesex).—The free school of this town was endowed in 1413. Enfield Chase was disforested in 1779, and an old palace in which Edward VI. held his court, and his sister, the Princess Elizabeth, used to reside, was destroyed in 1792. Experiments to test the powers of small fire-arms were conducted here by Government in 1852.

ENFIELD MUSKET.—In consequence of experiments made by Government in 1852, to test the capabilities of various rifle arms, the Enfield rifle-musket was adopted in the British army in 1853. (See NEEDLE GUN.)

ENGAGERS.—A name given to the Duke of Hamilton, and other Scottish noblemen, who shared the counsels of Charles II. during his visit to Scotland in 1650–51. All who happened to be obnoxious to the Presbyterians were branded either as Engagers or Malignants.

ENGEN (Battle).—The Austrians were defeated at Engen, in the Grand Duchy of Baden, by the French, May 3, 1800.

ENGHIEN (Belgium).—This town of Hainault passed into possession of the Bourbon family in 1485, and was sold by Henry IV. of France in 1607 to Charles de Ligne, Count of Arenberg. It gave title to a branch of the Condé division of the Bourbon house, which became extinct with Louis Antoine Henri de Bourbon, Duke of Enghien, who was shot, at Vincennes, by order of Napoleon I., early in the morning March 21, 1804.

ENGINEERS.—The architectural and other remains of Egypt, Assyria, Greece, Rome, China, and Hindostan, prove that in those countries the science of engineering attained considerable perfection at a very early period. Holland, in consequence of its marshy character, became celebrated during the Middle Ages for mechanical and civil engineering, and supplied England with its first practitioners in those arts. As early as 1300 the English army comprised engineers, who were frequently monks, and received sixpence daily. The corps of engineers was not formed, however, till 1763; in 1783 it became a royal corps, and in 1812 was augmented by several companies of sappers and miners. The Institution of Civil Engineers was established in 1818, and incorporated by royal charter June 3, 1828. The Institution of Civil Engineers of Ireland was founded Aug. 6, 1835, and remodelled Oct. 16, 1844. (See BRIDGES, CANALS, DRAINAGE, RAILWAYS, STEAM ENGINE, THAMES EMBANKMENT, &c., &c., &c.)

ENGLAND.—This name is derived from Angles and land, signifying land of the Angles. Sharon Turner doubts the story that the name of England was first given to the country at a council summoned at Winchester by Egbert, in 829, and considers that Athelstan may with greater propriety be entitled the first King of England. (See BRITANNIA.)

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.—Hallam (Introd. to Lit., pt. i. c. i. s. 47) says:—"Nothing can be more difficult than to determine, except by an arbitrary line, the commencement of the English language." The Saxon Chronicle was continued till the death of Stephen, in 1154, and considerable change may be noticed in the language of the later years. Layamon's translation of the French Brut romance, completed about 1200, exhibits further digressions from the primitive Saxon tongue; and some metrical lives of saints which were written about 1250, may be called the earliest specimens of English. The first dated document in the language is a proclamation by Henry III. in 1258, and the earliest English book is Sir John Mandeville's travels, written in 1356. By 36 Edw. III. c. 15 (1362), pleadings in courts of law were ordered to be in English, and in 1536 the language was introduced into Ireland. The use of English in all proceedings in English and Scotch law courts was rendered compulsory by 4 Geo. II. c. 26 (1731). The development of the English language has been divided into the following periods:—

A.D.
449—1066.	Anglo-Saxon.
1066—1250.	Semi-Saxon or Norman.
1250—1550.	Early English.
1550——.	Modern English.

ENGLISH AND WELSH BISHOPRICS.—Many bishoprics were founded in this country during the early period of the Church. All particulars, and even, in some cases, the names of the sees, are lost. British bishops were present at the councils of Arles in 314, of Nicæa in 325, and of Ariminum in 360; and their signatures are affixed to the canons passed at these synods. By 10 & 11 Vict. c. 108 (July 23, 1847), which provided for the erection of the see of Manchester, it was enacted that the number of bishops having seats in the House of Lords should not be increased, and that in case of a vacancy, London, Durham, and Winchester being excepted, the junior bishop should remain without a seat. The Bishop of Sodor and Man never sat in Parliament, and consequently this arrangement did not affect that see. It is impossible to ascertain the exact date of the foundation of all the English bishoprics, and in cases in which this is not known, the earliest notice of them that occurs is given in the following list. The sees printed in Italics have either been suppressed or merged into others.

ENGRAVING was practised at a very early date by the Egyptians, who used wooden stamps engraved with hieroglyphics for the purpose of marking their bricks. It is first mentioned, B.C. 1491, by Moses (Exod. xxviii. 9), who was commanded to "take two onyx stones, and grave on them the names of the children of Israel." Its revival in Europe dates from about the 15th century. Engraving on diamonds is said to have been invented in 1500, though some refuse it an earlier origin than 1564. Mezzotint engraving was invented by Col. von Siegen, about 1643; engraving in colours by J. C. Le Blond, about 1725; in imitation of pencil, by Gilles des Marteaux, in 1756; and aquatinta engraving by Le Prince, about 1762. The property of engravings was vested in the designer for 14 years by 8 Geo. II. c. 13 (1735); which was amended by 7 Geo. III. c. 38 (1767). These acts having proved ineffectual, persons infringing them were made liable to damages and double costs by 17 Geo. III. c. 57 (1777), and the provisions of all three were extended to Ireland by 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 59 (Aug. 13, 1836). Copyright was applied to foreign engravings by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 12 (May 10, 1844); and the various statutes on the subject were explained by the Copyright Amendment Act, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 12 (May 28, 1852).

ENGRAVING ON COPPER, or CHALCOGRAPHY, is said to have been practised in Germany about 1450. The invention is also claimed for the Italian goldsmith Finiguerra, in 1460, though no plate exists of earlier date than 1461. Andrea Mantegna (1431—1506) produced many fine works in this branch of art.

ENGRAVING ON STEEL.—Some early prints by Albert Durer, dated 1515 and 1516, are believed to be impressions from steel plates. This metal, however, was very rarely employed by engravers: only one specimen, executed by Mr. J. T. Smith in 1805, being known until 1818, when Mr. C. Warren exhibited an impression from a soft steel plate to the Society of Arts. Bank notes are now printed by this means.

ENGRAVING ON WOOD is said to have been practised by the Chinese as early as B.C. 1120. The precise date of its introduction into Europe is unknown. Some authorities state that a series of woodcuts, illustrative of the career of Alexander the Great, was engraved by the two Cunio in 1285. This story is, however, doubtful; and, perhaps, the origin of the art may be traced to the wooden blocks used by notaries for stamping monograms in the 13th century, and to the engraved playing cards which appeared in France about 1340. The earliest woodcut in existence represents St. Christopher with the infant Saviour, and is dated 1423. Many block-books exist of about the year 1430, but the art was not brought to great perfection till the commencement of the 16th century. Albert Durer (1471—1528); Lucas of Leyden (1494—1533); Holbein, whose "Dance of Death" (q. v.) appeared at Lyons in 1538; Gerard Audran (1640—1703); Woollet (1735—1785); Thomas Bewick (1753—1828); Nesbit, born in 1775; and Harvey, born in 1796, rank foremost among wood-engravers.

ENIGMA.—(See ÆNIGMA.)

ENKIOPING (Battle).—At this place Albert I., King of Sweden, in 1365, defeated Haco of Norway, who had been elected King of Sweden in 1363.

ENLISTMENT.—The enlistment of British subjects to serve in foreign armies was prohibited by 59 Geo. III. c. 69 (July 3, 1819). By 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 24 (Aug. 21, 1835), enlistment of sailors was limited to 5 years; and by 10 & 11 Vict. c. 37 (June 21, 1847), military service was restricted to 10 years in the infantry and 12 years in the cavalry, artillery, and marines.

ENNISKILLEN (Ireland) was not a place of much importance when taken by the English in 1602. In 1612 it was erected into a corporate town, and subsequently became an important asylum for the Protestants of Ulster. The inhabitants proclaimed William III. and Mary, March 11, 1689, and, mustering to the number of 2,500 men, defeated 6,000 Jacobites under Macarthy, Lord Moncashel, at Newton Butler, July 30. The volunteers who gained this battle, and otherwise distinguished themselves in the war of the Revolution, are the origin of the Enniskillen (6th) Dragoons. In 1776 the town gave its name to a viscount, who was made Earl of Enniskillen in 1789.

ENOCH. — The original version of this apocryphal work, written in Chaldee or Hebrew, is lost, as well as the Greek translation. In 1821, Dr. Lawrence translated the Ethiopic version, brought from Abyssinia by the traveller Bruce in 1773. Dr. Davidson supposed it to have been written about B.C. 40.

ENORORE (Battle), fought in Hindostan in 1760.

ENSIGN. — This officer, who carries the colours in infantry regiments, is mentioned in a list of the English army for 1557, when his pay was one shilling per diem. Ward, in his "Animadversions of Warre," published in 1639, says of this rank:—"The office of the ensigne being a place of repute and honour, doth not suite every yeoman, taylor, or fidler." (See CORNET.)

ENSISHEIM, or ENTZHEIM (Battle). — Marshal Turenne defeated the Imperialists at this place, in Alsace, Oct. 4, 1674, and compelled them to retire from the province.

ENTAIL.—Wharton defines an estate-tail as "a freehold of inheritance, limited to a person and the heirs of his body general or special, male or female." The custom of confining the succession to property in this manner resulted from the desire of the nobility to retain their possessions in their own families. It was commenced by the second statute of Westminster, 13 Edw. I. c. 1 (1285). Owing to the inefficacy of attainders of treason when estates were protected by entails, they were evaded in 1472 by a decision that common recoveries should constitute a bar to an entail. By 26 Hen. VIII. c. 13 (1534), high treason confiscated entailed property to the crown; and by 21 James I. c. 19, s. 12 (1623), entailed estates were permitted to be sold in cases of bankruptcy. This latter act was repealed by 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 65 (May 2, 1825), which was set aside by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 74, ss. 55–65 (Aug. 28, 1833), and 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 208 (Aug. 1, 1849). Leases made by tenants in tail are regulated by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 120 (July 29, 1856).

ENTOMOLOGY.—Aldrovandus published a history of insects in 1604, and Moufet's "Theatrum Insectorum" appeared in 1634; but no good description existed till the appearance of Swammerdam's "General History of Insects," in 1669. In 1710, Ray's "Methodus Insectorum" was published, and in 1735 Linnæus announced his classification. Latreille's "Précis des Caractères des Insectes" appeared in 1797. The French Société Entomologique was established in 1832, and the Entomological Society of London in 1833.

ENVELOPES.—The practice of using envelopes for letters is supposed to have originated in France. Le Sage mentions them in "Gil Blas." An envelope attached to a letter, dated May 16, 1696, was found in the State Paper Office. Envelopes were not introduced for letters sent through the post till 1840, as till then it was customary to charge double postage on paper enclosed in another paper. The penny postage system commenced Jan. 10, 1840; but the use of envelopes did not become general until May 6, 1840, when stamped and adhesive envelopes were introduced. In 1841, about half the letters which passed through the Post-office were in envelopes, and in 1850, 300 out of every 336 were thus protected. Hill and De la Rue's ingenious machine for folding envelopes was patented March 17, 1845.

ENVOY.—This minister, in the third class of diplomatic agents, is said to have been first appointed by Louis XI. (1461—83) of France.

EOLODICON. — This musical instrument was invented by Eschenbach, in 1815, and an account of it was published at Leipsic in 1820.

EOOA, or MIDDLEBURG (South Pacific), the most eastern of the Friendly Isles, was discovered by Abel Jansen Tasman, who gave it the name of Middleburg, Jan. 19, 1643.

EPERIES, or PRESSOVA (Hungary).—This town, taken from the Turks by the Austrians, under Gen. Schulz, Aug. 11, 1685, became, in 1768, the head-quarters of the confederation of Bar (q. v.). It was erected into a Greek Catholic bishopric in 1807.

EPERNAY (France).—This town, burned by Francis I., in 1544, to prevent its falling into the hands of his rival, Charles V., was subsequently rebuilt at his own expense. In 1569 it was sold to defray the expense of the ransom of Mary, Queen of Scots, and in 1592 it was taken by Henry IV. after an obstinate siege, in which Marshal de Biron was killed. It 1642 it was delivered to the Duke de Bouillon, in exchange for the county of Sedan. It is the chief depôt of the growers of champagne (q. v.).

EPHESIANS (Epistle).—St. Paul addressed this letter to the church at Ephesus, during his first captivity at Rome, about 61. De Wette, in his commentary on this epistle, published in 1847, and in his "Introduction to the New Testament," in 1848, endeavoured to prove that it is merely a paraphrase and expansion of the Epistle to the Colossians.

EPHESUS (Asia Minor) was founded at a very early date, and first inhabited by the Carians and Leleges. It was burned by the Amazons B.C. 1141, and rebuilt by the Ionians, who entered Asia Minor under the leadership of Androclus, son of Codrus, B.C. 1045. Crœsus, King of Lydia, seized Ephesus B.C. 559, and the temple of Artemis or Diana was erected B.C. 552. Ephesus surrendered to Cyrus B.C. 544, and remained under the Persian yoke until B.C. 501, when, with other Ionian cities, it revolted, and regained its independence. The Athenian and Eretrian fleets remained here previous to their assault on Sardis, B.C. 499, and the Spartan general Lysander established his head-quarters in the city, and defeated the Athenians in a sea-fight fought in its vicinity, B.C. 407. The temple was burned by the maniac Herostratus, B.C. 356, on the same day on which Alexander III. (the Great) was born. Its re-erection occupied 220 years, and the new building was regarded by the ancients as one of the seven wonders of the world. Ephesus was destroyed by an inundation B.C. 322, but Lysimachus rebuilt it on a more elevated site B.C. 300. The Romans gave this city to the King of Pergamum, B.C. 190, and on the formation of their province of Asia, B.C. 129, erected it into the capital. It was reduced to ruins by an earthquake in 17. St. Paul preached here in 56, and made so many converts that a riot was stirred up in 59 by Demetrius, the silversmith, in consequence of the decreased demand for silver shrines for the goddess Diana (Acts xix. 23—41). Paul, in 65, ordained Timothy first bishop of the diocese. Ephesus was one of the seven churches of Asia. The temple of Diana was destroyed by the Goths in 262, and on the occasion of the third general council, in 431, the city was the scene of disgraceful ecclesiastical riots. Councils were held here in 196; 245; 401; 431, June 22—July 31 (the third general), 449; and in 476.

EPHORI, or EPHORS, magistrates, five in number, instituted in Sparta by Theopompus, B.C. 757. Thirlwall (vol. i. c. ix. p. 407) says of them:—"The royal dignity was forced on all occasions to bow to them; and as they could control the proceedings of the kings by their orders, could fine them for slight offences at their discretion, and could throw them into prison to await a trial on graver charges, so they alone, among all the Spartans, kept their seats while the kings were passing; whereas it was not thought beneath the majesty of the kings to rise in honour of the ephors; and it was their acknowledged duty to attend, at least on the third summons, before the ephoral tribunal."

EPHRATH.—(See BETHLEHEM.)

EPHYRE.—(See CORINTH.)

EPICUREANS.—This sect of philosophers was founded by Epicurus of Samos (born B.C. 342), who established a school at Athens B.C. 306, and continued to teach until his death, which occurred B.C. 270. He maintained that happiness is the object of life, and that it consists in the recollection or anticipation of sensual pleasures; and as a future state would interfere with his doctrines on this subject, he denied its existence altogether.

EPIDAMNUS.—(See DURAZZO.)

EPIDAURUS (Greece).—This town of the Peloponnesus was seized at an early period by the Dorians, who established a considerable commerce, which declined in the 6th century B.C., in consequence of the increasing importance of Ægina. The Argives were defeated in an attack upon the city B.C. 419. The temple of Æsculapius, or Asclepius, at this town, was so celebrated that the Romans sent a deputation to implore the aid of the Epidaurian deity against a pestilence which ravaged their city, B.C. 293. This temple was still rich with the gifts of the votaries of the god, when it was visited by L. Æmilius Paulus, B.C. 167. A congress convoked at this town, Dec. 15, 1821, proclaimed the independence of Greece in 1822.

EPIDEMICS.—See BLACK DEATH, CATTLE PLAGUE, CHOLERA, PLAGUE AND PESTILENCE, SMALL-POX, SWEATING SICKNESS, &c.)

EPIDEMIOLOGICAL SOCIETY (London) was established in 1850 by Mr. J. H. Tucker.

EPIGRAMS, originally inscriptions upon tombstones, on offerings to the gods, &c., were written by Archilochus, who flourished B.C. 688, and Simonides, B.C. 500. The Latin poet Martial (43—104) is considered to have excelled all other writers in this species of composition. The best English epigrams are those of Ben Jonson (June 11, 1574—Aug. 16, 1637); Dr. Donne (1573—March 31, 1631); Robert Herrick (born in 1591); John Wilmot, Earl of Rochester (April 10, 1647—July 29, 1680); Matthew Prior (July 21, 1664—Sep. 18, 1721); Alexander Pope May 22, 1688—May 30, 1744); Jonathan Swift (Nov. 30, 1667—Oct. 29, 1745); John Byrom (1691—Sep. 28, 1763); David Garrick (1716—Jan. 20, 1779); Richard Porson (Dec. 25, 1759—Sep. 26, 1808); Richard Brinsley Sheridan (September, 1751—July 7, 1816); Theodore Edward Hook (1788—Aug. 24, 1841); and Thomas Moore (May 28, 1779—Feb. 25, 1852).

EPIPHANY.—This feast, celebrated Jan. 6, is said by Bingham (b. xi. c. vi. s. 7) to commemorate "the day on which Christ was baptized and manifested to the world." It was first observed by the Gnostic followers of Basilides of Alexandria, who flourished about 125, and does not appear to have been celebrated by the Church at large till long afterwards, as it is excluded from the list of feasts given by Origen (230). Its observance as a separate feast commenced in 813.

EPIRUS (Greece) was originally peopled by Pelasgians, but very little is known of its early history.

B.C.
1170. Arrival of Neoptolemus, or Pyrrhus, son of Achilles.
635. The Corinthians found the city of Ambracia.
340. Accession of Alexander I., uncle to Alexander the Great.
326. Alexander I. falls in battle in Italy.
295. Pyrrhus, the greatest sovereign of Epirus, establishes himself on the throne.
291. He makes war against Demetrius, King of Macedonia.
289. Demetrius invades Epirus.
288. Pyrrhus invades Macedonia, and is expelled by Demetrius.
287. Pyrrhus again invades Macedonia, where he reigns, conjointly with Lysimachus, for about seven months.
280. Pyrrhus invades Italy, and gains a splendid victory over the Romans.
279. Battle of Asculum.
276. Pyrrhus again invades Italy.
274. Pyrrhus is defeated by the Romans, under Curius Dentatus, who expels him from Italy.
273. Pyrrhus wrests Macedonia from Antigonus Gonatus.
272. Pyrrhus is killed at Argos, by a tile thrown from a house-top.
219. The Epirotes unite with Philip V. of Macedon against the Ætolians.
167. Æmilius Paulus destroys 70 towns of Epirus, and carries away 150,000 of the inhabitants as slaves.
30. Augustus founds Nicopolis (q. v.), the Roman capital of Epirus.

A.D.
1204. The Despotat of Epirus, the rulers of which were known as the Despots of Albania, is founded by Michael I.
1350. Epirus is conquered by Stephen Dusclan, King of Servia.
1370. Epirus is invaded by Charles Tocco, Count of Cephalonia, and Duke of Leucadia.
1431. The Turks take Janina, or Joannina, and Ætolia.
1466. Epirus is annexed to the Ottoman empire.
1854, Jan. 28. The Epirotes rise in insurrection.—June 18. The rebellion is suppressed.

EPISCOPACY. — Church government by bishops was established by the Apostles. (See BISHOP.)

EPITAPHS.—Pettigrew says of the custom of placing inscriptions upon tombs, that "the Egyptians may lay claim to be the earliest recorders of this description, by the writing of their names, their descent, their functions, &c., upon their sarcophagi and coffins." Numerous epitaphs are found on Greek and Roman tombs, but the Saxons and Danes have left few memorials of this kind. Some interesting inscriptions of the latter part of the 7th century have, however, been discovered at Hartlepool. Epitaphs did not become general in England till the 11th century, when they were written in Latin, and chiefly inscribed upon the tombs of kings and ecclesiastical dignitaries. In the 12th century Leonine verses were very general. French epitaphs were not used in France till the 13th century; they were afterwards introduced into England, where they continued in use till the 15th, after which time epitaphs became general.

EPITHALAMIA, or HYMENEAL HYMNS, composed to be chanted at weddings. Sappho, who flourished B.C. 611—592, and Stesichorus, B.C. 632—552, are celebrated for the beauty of their productions of this kind.

EPITOMIZERS, or COLLECTORS OF CANONS, Byzantine authors, who flourished for the most part in the 12th century, wrote epitomes of the canons, &c. The principal were Constantine Harmenopulus, Alexius Aristenus, and Simeon Magister.

EPITON.—(See BATTLE ABBEY.)

EPSOM (Surrey).—The mineral springs from which Epsom salts are extracted were discovered in 1618, when the town became a fashionable watering-place. The public rooms were, however, pulled down in 1804. The parish church was rebuilt in 1824; the Grand Stand was erected in 1829–30; and the Royal Medical College was established in 1851. (See DERBY RACE, OAKS, HORSE-RACING, &c.)

EPULONES.—Three priests, appointed by the pontifices to superintend the feasts in the sacred games, were instituted B.C. 196. In the time of Sylla (B.C. 88—79) they were increased in number to seven.

EQUATOR.—(See ECUADOR.)

EQUESTRIAN ORDER.—Romulus (B.C. 753—B.C. 715) caused the curiæ to elect 300 equites or horsemen, which number increased under his successors till it reached 3,600. Originally each eques received a horse from the state, but at the siege of Veii, B.C. 403, many citizens volunteered to serve with their own horses, and a new class of equites, who received payment in money in lieu of horses, was instituted. The Lex Sempronia of Caius Gracchus required all juries to be chosen from the equestrian order, thus raising it to immense power in the state. This provision was, however, repealed by Sylla, B.C. 80–79, and the Lex Aurelia, B.C. 70, ordained that juries should be elected from the senators, equites, and tribuni ærarii. The Lex Roscia Othonis, B.C. 63, appropriated to the equites the first 14 seats in the theatre behind the orchestra. Augustus (B.C. 27—A.D. 14) reorganized the order, placing at its head the heir presumptive to the throne, and making it the corps from which all the higher military officers and civil dignitaries were chosen. It gradually became extinct during the empire, in consequence of the indiscriminate manner in which honours were bestowed.

EQUITY (Courts).—The Romans, though preserving a distinction between the written laws and the jus prætorium, or equity, vested the administration of both in one tribunal. A dispute, commenced in 1616, as to the right of courts of equity to set aside judgments at common law, was decided in favour of the former. Sir Heneage Finch, afterwards Lord Nottingham, so improved this branch of law during his occupation of the Lord High Chancellorship (1673—1682), that he has been called "The Father of Equity." (See CHANCERY (Court of); COUNTY COURTS; ROLLS COURT; VICE-CHANCELLOR, &c.)

ERA.—(See ÆRA.)

ERASTIANS, the name given to persons who adopted the views of Thomas Lieber, or Erastus, a German physician and divine, who was born Sep. 7, 1524, and died Dec. 31, 1583. They formed a separate party in the Assembly of Divines in 1643, and unsuccessfully advocated their peculiar views respecting the exclusively persuasive authority of the pastoral office, and the consequent impropriety of ecclesiastical excommunications, &c.

ERECTHEUM CLUB (London), established by Sir John Dean Paul in 1836, was afterwards merged in the Parthenon (q. v.).

EREMITES.—(See AUGUSTINE FRIARS and CAMALDULENSIANS.)

ERFURT, or ERFURTH (Prussian Saxony), said to have been founded by Erpes in the 5th century, and called Erpesford, was, in the time of Charlemagne, one of the most important commercial towns of Germany. A bishopric was established in 740. Its university, founded in 1392, is celebrated as having numbered Martin Luther among its students in 1501. In 1664 the town was taken by the French, who ceded it to the Elector of Mayence in 1667. In 1803 it was annexed to Prussia, but was again taken by the French under Murat, Oct. 15, 1806, when 14,000 Prussians, including Marshal Mollendorf and the Prince of Orange, were made prisoners. Napoleon I. and the Emperor Alexander of Russia had an interview here, Sep. 27, 1808. It resulted in a letter which they addressed to George III., Oct. 12, desiring him to accede to offers of peace. A reply was sent Oct. 28, to the effect that England could only treat in concert with Sweden and Spain. Erfurt was restored to Prussia Jan. 6, 1814. Its university was suppressed in 1816. A German parliament assembled here March 20, 1850.

ERICSSON'S PATENT. — A small vessel built to test the capabilities of Ericsson's (a distinguished engineer, born in Sweden in 1803) screw propeller, first patented in 1833, in an experimental trip on the Thames, May 25, 1837, towed a ship of above 600 tons, at the rate of 4½ knots per hour, against the tide. In 1851 Ericsson changed the form of his engine and built another vessel of 1,000 tons, named after the inventor, to be propelled by hot air instead of steam. In her trial trip, in 1853, she is said to have equalled Ericsson's expectations; but she ultimately proved a failure, and never crossed the Atlantic, for which she was specially designed. In 1855 the caloric engine was taken out of the Ericsson, and steam-engines were substituted.

ERITH (Kent).—Richard de Lucy, Chief Justice of England, founded an abbey of canons regular of the order of St. Augustine, at this place, in 1178. Two powder magazines blew up in Plumstead Marsh, in the vicinity of Erith, Oct. 1, 1864, killing 10 and wounding several persons. A boat of the training ship Worcester capsized off this place Feb. 28, 1865, when 10 cadets were drowned.

ERIVAN, ERIWAN, or IRWAN (Asiatic Russia).—This town of Armenia, which rose to importance in the 7th century, became in the 16th century the residence of the Shahs of Persia. It was seized by the Turks in 1553 and in 1582, but was restored in 1618, and in 1629 was the seat of an Armenian school, which was removed in 1631 to Ejmiadzin. In 1635 the town was removed a short distance from its former site, and was captured by the Turks, who also seized it in 1724 and in 1735. In 1742 it was recovered by Nadir Shah, and in 1769 was annexed to the Persian sceptre. The Russians, repulsed in 1808, captured it in 1827, when their leader, Gen. Paskewitch, received the surname of Erivanski, and it was permanently ceded to them by the treaty of Turkmanshai, Feb. 22, 1828. Erivan was much shaken by an earthquake in 1840.

ERLANGEN (Bavaria).—The new town was founded in 1686, and its Protestant university in 1743. The town suffered severely from a fire in 1706, and came into the possession of Bavaria in 1800.

ERLAU (Hungary). — A bishopric was founded here by St. Stephen in the 11th century, and it was made an archbishopric in 1804. The hospital was founded in 1730.

ERMIA.—This order of knights was instituted by Francis I., Duke of Britanny, in 1450. The order became extinct when Britanny was annexed to France in 1532.

ERROAD, or EROUAD (Hindostan).—The English reduced Erroad in 1768. Hyder Ali having captured it, they regained possession in 1790, but it was again wrested from them the same year by Tippoo Saib. It was, however, ceded to the East India Company in 1792.

ERYX (Sicily).—This city, near Drepanum, was celebrated for a temple of Venus, of which Æneas was said to be the founder. The Carthaginians were defeated by the Syracusans in a sea-fight off Eryx, B.C. 406. It maintained several sieges, was taken by Pyrrhus B.C. 277, and was destroyed by Hamilcar, who removed the inhabitants to Drepanum, B.C. 260. It was afterwards restored, and was warmly contested between the Romans and Carthaginians.

ERZEROUM, or ERZERUM (Asiatic Turkey).—Anatolius, general of Theodosius II., erected, near Arsen, the fortress of Theodosiopolis, which afterwards formed the centre of a town called Arsen-er-Rum. It was flourishing in 1040, and passed under the authority of the Seljukian Turks in 1201. In 1241 it was taken by the Mongols, by whom the inhabitants were either massacred or sold into slavery; and in 1517 it was seized by the Turks. A treaty of peace was concluded here between Persia and Turkey, July 28, 1823. The city was taken by the Russians under Count Paskewitch, July 9, 1829. It was destroyed by an earthquake, which lasted from June 11 to July 17, 1859.

ESCHEATS.—Stephens (Com. b. ii. pt. i. c. 12) says of the word escheat, that it is "originally French or Norman, in which language it signifies chance or accident: but with us it is applied to the case where the tenant of lands in fee dies without having aliened them in his lifetime, or disposed of them by his last will and testament, and leaves no heir behind him to take them by descent, so that they result back, by a kind of reversion, to the original grantor or lord of the fee." By 13 & 14 Vict. c. 60 (Aug. 5, 1850), beneficiaries and mortgagors were protected from the ordinary law of escheat in the event of a trustee or mortgagee dying heirless and intestate.

ESCHENDUN.—(See ASHDUNE.)

ESCORIAL, or ESCURIAL.—This ancient palace of the kings of Spain was, according to the generally received account, erected by Philip II., in consequence of a vow made during the battle of St. Quentin, Aug. 10, 1557, that he would, if victorious, found a church, a monastery, and a palace. The three are said to be combined in the Escorial, dedicated to St. Lorenzo, on whose day the vow was made. In honour of the martyrdom of the saint, who was broiled to death Aug. 10, 261, the ground plan of the new edifice was designed in form of a gridiron. The first stone was laid April 23, 1563, and the building was completed Sep. 13, 1584. The library was added about 1580. A subterranean passage, connecting the palace with an adjoining village, was added in 1770, for use during the hurricanes of winter, which are of astonishing fury. A French force under La Houssaye sacked the Escorial in Dec., 1808, and carried away a large quantity of valuables. The palace was repaired in 1842.

ESDRAS (Books).—Though usually ascribed to Ezra, the authorship and date of the first and second books of Esdras are involved in great obscurity. Lawrence supposes the second book to have been written B.C. 28—25. They were admitted as canonical by the Council of Carthage in 397 or 419, but have since been included in the Apocrypha.

ESDUD.—(See ASHDOD.)

ESHER (Surrey).—Sandon priory, founded here by Robert de Watevile early in the reign of Henry II. (1154—1189), was granted in 1436 to the hospital of St. Thomas, Southwark. William Wainfleet, Bishop of Winchester from 1447 to 1486, erected a palace, which was enlarged by Cardinal Wolsey in 1528. Claremont (q. v.) is in this parish.

ESPINOSA, or ESPINOSA-DE-LOS-MONTEROS (Battle).—Marshal Victor defeated the Spaniards under Gen. Blake and the Marquis de la Romana at this place in Spain, Nov. 10 and 11, 1808.

ESQUIMAUX, or ESKIMO.—A tribe of savages, who are supposed to have been identical with the modern Esquimaux, appeared in West Greenland in 1349, and destroyed several of the Norwegian settlers. In 1733 the Esquimaux were visited by some Moravian Brethren, who established a mission in Labrador in 1752; but the missionaries were compelled to return, in consequence of the ill-feeling of the natives. A second attempt, made in 1764, proved more successful. Hearne discovered Esquimaux near the Polar Sea in 1772, and MacKenzie in 1789.

ESQUIRE.—This title is of considerable antiquity, and, like armiger, scutifer, scutarius, and écuyer, is derived from the shield, and other portions of the knight's arms, which the esquire used to carry. Selden states that it was first used to express the next rank below a knight, about 850, and it is said to have been applied to other persons than attendants upon knights as early as 1245.

ESSAYS AND REVIEWS.—This volume, which created much controversy, was published in 1860, and went through several editions. It contained the following essays:—"The Education of the World." By Frederick Temple, D.D.—"Bunsen's Biblical Researches." By Rowland Williams, D.D.—"On the Study of the Evidences of Christianity." By Baden Powell, M.A.—"Séances Historiques de Genève."—"The National Church." By Henry Bristow Wilson, B.D.—"On the Mosaic Cosmogony." By C. W. Goodwin, M.A.—"Tendencies of Religious Thought in England, 1688—1750." By Mark Pattison, B.D.—"On the Interpretation of Scripture." By Benjamin Jowett, M.A. The judgment of the Court of Arches, delivered by Dr. Lushington, Monday, Dec. 15, 1862, sentencing Messrs. Williams and Wilson to one year's suspension and costs, for their contributions to this work, was reversed by the judicial committee of the Privy Council, Feb. 8, 1864.

ESSECK, or ESZEK (Austria), the capital of Slavonia, is built on the site of the ancient Mursia or Mursa. The Turks defeated the Germans, in a great battle at this place, in 1537. The fortress, commenced in 1712, was completed in 1719.

ESSENDINE (Battle).—(See ASSINGDON.)

ESSENES, or ESSENIANS.—A sect of ascetics which sprang up amongst the Jews after the return from the Babylonish captivity. They were also called Therapeutæ. Some writers are of opinion that John the Baptist belonged to this sect.

ESSEQUIBO (South America).—Pinzon discovered this river in 1499, and in 1580 the Dutch formed a settlement on its banks. This was captured by the English in 1796. It was restored to the Dutch in 1802. Having been recaptured Sep. 20, 1803, it was finally ceded to England by the convention signed with the Netherlands, Aug. 13, 1814. (See BRITISH GUIANA, DEMERARA, &c.)

ESSEX (England).—At the time of the Roman invasion, this county was in the possession of the Trinobantes. Erchenwin, in 527, established the Saxon kingdom of the name, which comprised Middlesex and parts of Bedfordshire and Hertfordshire, and continued in existence until its incorporation with Wessex in 823. In 1381 the inhabitants rebelled under Wat Tyler to oppose the poll-tax; and, in 1659, Mr. Thomas Fanshaw incited them to rise in behalf of Charles II. Previous to 1832 Essex returned two members to Parliament, but the number was then increased to four. The earldom of Essex was created in 1572, by Queen Elizabeth, in favour of Walter Devereux.

ESSEX CONSPIRACY.—Robert Devereux, second Earl of Essex, having shown great want of judgment in his administration of Irish affairs during his government in 1599, suddenly returned to England without orders, in Sep., and was confined to his own house, and denied the privileges of his rank and functions in consequence. He was restored to freedom, but not to royal favour, Aug. 26, 1600, and was induced by his secretary Cuffe to conspire to remove his enemies from the royal councils. He detained several of the council who were sent to question him, Sunday, Feb. 8, 1601, and was proclaimed a traitor, and compelled to surrender, after several lives had been lost in his defence. Essex, who with the Earl of Southampton was arraigned for high treason, Feb. 19, and found guilty, was executed on Tower Hill, Feb. 25.

ESSEX HEAD CLUB (London).—Founded by Dr. Johnson in 1783 for the purpose of assembling the surviving members of the Ivy Lane Club (q. v.), met at the Essex Head, Essex Street, Strand. In a letter to Sir Joshua Reynolds, Dec. 4, 1783, Johnson says, "the company is numerous and, as you will see by the list, miscellaneous. The terms are lax, and the expenses light. * * * * We meet twice a week, and he who misses forfeits twopence." This club continued in existence for several years after Johnson's death, Dec. 13, 1784.

ESSLING (Battle).—(See ASPERN, Battle.)

ESSLINGEN (Würtemberg), founded in the 8th century, became a free city of the empire in 1209. The Frauen Kirche, or Church of Our Lady, was erected in 1440. Esslingen was ceded to Würtemberg Feb. 15, 1803.

ESTAPLES, or ÉTAPLES (France).—Peace between France and England was concluded at this town Sep. 3, 1492.

ESTATE (Cap of).—(See MAINTENANCE.)

ESTE (House).—In a Latin history of this house by Pignon, its origin is carried back as far as 418. Its most direct ancestor is Albert Azzo II., who was born about 996. In 1071, Guelph IV. established his authority in Bavaria, and thus founded the German branch of the family; and in 1176 Azzo V. acquired Ferrara by marriage, and became chief of the Guelphs of Venetia. The town of Este was destroyed by Ezzelin in 1247.

ESTHER.—This book, the author of which is not known, though some have supposed it to be the production of Mordecai, was written about B.C. 312.

ESTHONIA, or ESTLAND (Russia).—This province, conquered by the Danes in 1220, was sold by Denmark to the Teutonic Knights in 1346, and was given up to Sweden by the peace of Oliva, May 3, 1660. Peter the Great captured it in 1710, and it was ceded to Russia by the treaty of Nystadt, Aug. 30, 1721. It is sometimes called the province of Revel (q. v.).

ESTREMOZ (Battle).—A castle was erected here in 1360, and the Portuguese defeated the Spaniards at this place in 1663.

ETAMPES (France).—Clotaire II. was defeated, near this ancient town, in 604. The Northmen pillaged it in 911. It was besieged in 1420, and it suffered greatly during the religious wars. Henry IV. took it and destroyed the fortifications in 1590. A council was held here in 1130.

ÉTATS GÉNÉRAUX, or STATES GENERAL.—The first assembly of this name, consisting of clergy, nobles, and commons, was convoked by Philip IV. (the Fair), in 1302, to settle the questions in dispute between him and Pope Boniface VIII. From this date they met at short intervals till 1614, when, in consequence of contentions between the three orders, they were dissolved. They were again summoned by Louis XVI., and met at Versailles May 5, 1789, when the commons, insisting that the states should constitute but one body, changed the title to National Assembly (q. v.), June 17.

ETCHING.—The inventor of this art is not known. It was practised by Albert Durer, whose print of the "Canon," in 1518, is perhaps the first example of its employment. Parmegiano, who died in 1540, is regarded by some as the inventor of etching. Henry Schwanhard discovered the art of etching on glass in 1670.

ETHANDUNE (Battle).—Alfred defeated the Danes at Ethandune, supposed to be Edington, near Westbury, in 878.

ETHER is thought to have been known in some form to Paracelsus, who flourished 1520—1541. Basil Valentine obtained it in the 16th century by distilling alcohol and sulphuric acid, and in 1681 nitric ether was discovered by Kunckel. In Middleton's "Women beware Women," printed in 1657, the following passage occurs:—

> "I'll imitate the pities of old surgeons
> To this lost limb; who, ere they show their art, > Cast one asleep, then cut the diseased part."
> Act iv. sc. i.

Its preparation was, however, lost, until rediscovered by Navier in 1742. Nitric ether was first analyzed by Boulay and Dumas in 1828. Hydratic, or, as it is incorrectly termed, sulphuric ether, was discovered by Gay-Lussac, and acetic ether by the Count de Lauragnais. Muriatic ether was first obtained by Gehlen in 1804, œnanthic ether by Liebig and Pelouze in 1836, and real sulphuric ether by Wetherill in 1848.

ETHICS, a word of Greek origin, signifying morals. The chief writers on the subject are Plato (B.C. 428—May, B.C. 347); Aristotle (B.C. 384—Aug., B.C. 322); Seneca (died in 65); St. Augustine, Bishop of Hippo (354—Aug 28, 430); Thomas Aquinas (1224—March 7, 1274); Adam Smith (1723—July 8, 1790); Adam Ferguson (1724—Feb. 22, 1816); William Paley (1743—May 25, 1805); Jeremy Bentham (1748—June 6, 1832); Dugald Stewart (1753—June 11, 1828); Sir William Hamilton (1788—May 6, 1856); and William Whewell (1794—March 6, 1866). (See PHILOSOPHY.)

ETHIOPIA (Africa), the Cush of the Scriptures. The term was applied to the extensive territories between the Red Sea and the Atlantic, and in a more restricted sense to the kingdom of Meroë.

B.C.

1615. The Ethiopians establish themselves in the south of Egypt.

941. Terah, King of Ethiopia, is defeated by Asa, at Mareshah.

719. Shebek, or Sabaco, leads an immense army into Egypt, where he establishes an Ethiopian dynasty.

698. Tirhakah, King of Ethiopia, marches to the assistance of Hezekiah against Sennacherib, but returns, in consequence of the miraculous destruction of the Assyrian army.

630. A great migration of warriors from Egypt to Ethiopia.

600. Ethiopia is invaded by Psammis, King of Egypt.

B.C.
524. Cambyses leads an army of 50,000 men into Ethiopia, all of whom are buried beneath the burning sands of the desert.
245. Ptolemy (III.) Energetes I. extends his power in Ethiopia.
22. Candace, Queen of Ethiopia, is defeated by Petronius.

ETHNOLOGY.—This science, which treats of the various races of mankind, owes its origin to the researches of Thunmann, Schlözer, Buhle, Klaproth, De Sacy, Ritter, &c. An ethnological society was established at Paris in 1839, and the Ethnological Society of London was founded by Dr. King in 1843.

ETIENNE ST. (France).—This town, founded in the 10th century, possesses the remains of a fine church erected in the 11th century, and was surrounded with walls by Charles VII. about 1441. In the 16th century it became a centre of the hardware and riband manufacture, the royal factory for fire-arms having been established in 1585. In 1585, 1628, and 1629 it was nearly depopulated by the plague. A large fire-arm manufactory was founded in 1764. St. Etienne, which has increased greatly in importance since the peace of 1815, became the capital of the department of the Loire, Jan. 1, 1856.

ETNA.—(See ÆTNA, MOUNT.)

ETOGES (Battle).—A fierce but indecisive contest took place Feb. 14, 1814, at this village of France, between the army of Silesia, under Marshal Blucher, and the French, under Napoleon I. and Marshal Marmont. Both sides claimed the victory.

ETON COLLEGE (Buckinghamshire) was founded by Henry VI., as the "College of the Blessed Marie of Eton by Wyndesore," Sep. 12, 1440. The charter was confirmed by act of Parliament at Westminster, May 4, 1441. The original foundation was a provost, 10 priests, 4 clerks, 6 choristers, 25 poor grammar-scholars, and a master to teach them, and the like number of poor men. It now consists of a provost, 7 fellows, 2 conducts, 7 clerks, 70 king's scholars, 10 lay clerks, 10 choristers, and a number of inferior officers and servants. The Duke of Newcastle founded and endowed three scholarships of the annual value of £50 each in 1829, and Prince Albert instituted the annual prize of £50 for promoting the study of modern languages in 1842.

ETON MONTÈM.—This triennial procession of the scholars of Eton College is thus described by Lyson (Magna Britannia, i. 557):—"The chief object of the celebrity is to collect money for salt, as the phrase is, from all persons present, and it is exacted even from passengers travelling the road. The scholars who collect the money are called salt-bearers, and are dressed in rich silk habits. . . . This ceremony has been frequently honoured with the presence of his majesty (George III.) and the royal family, whose liberal contributions, added to those of many of the nobility and others who have been educated at Eton and purposely attend the meeting, have so far augmented the collections, that it has been known to amount to more than £800. The sum so collected is given to the senior scholar who is going off to Cambridge, for his support at the university." The date of its institution is not known, but it is of very early origin. At first it was celebrated Dec. 6, but in 1758 it was transferred to Whit-Tuesday. The ceremony was abolished May 25, 1847.

ETRURIA.—By the 5th article of the treaty of Luneville, Feb. 9, 1801, the duchy of Tuscany was raised into the kingdom of Etruria, and bestowed upon Louis, son of the Duke of Parma, who began to exercise authority July 21. Napoleon I. suppressed this kingdom, adding it to the kingdom of Italy in 1807. (See TUSCANY.)

ETRURIA (Staffordshire).—This village, manufactory, and mansion, were founded by Mr. Josiah Wedgwood, the eminent improver of British pottery, in 1771. He died here Jan. 3, 1795.

ETRURIA, TYRRHENIA, or TUSCIA (Italy), the modern Tuscany.

B.C.
800. The Etruscans settle in Campania.
538. They unite with the Carthaginians in an expedition against the Phocæan colonists of Corsica.
521. They attack Cumæ.
506. Defeat of Porsenna at Aricia, by the Greeks and Romans.
474. Hieron of Syracuse defeats an Etruscan fleet.
453. The Syracusans ravage the coasts of Etruria.
396. The Romans capture Veii.
384. Dionysius of Syracuse invades Etruria.
351. The Etruscans conclude a 40 years' truce with the Romans.
310. Battle of the Vadimonian Lake (q. v.).
295. Battle of Sentinum (q. v.).
283. Second battle at the Vadimonian Lake.
265. Etruria is finally reduced to a Roman province.
89. The Etruscans receive the Roman franchise.
41. Etruscan nationality is extinguished by the capture of Perugia (q. v.).

ETTRICK (Scotland).—James V. of Scotland in 1530 vigorously suppressed the bands of moss-troopers who infested this village of Selkirkshire.——James Hogg, the poet (1772—Nov. 21, 1835), from his birth and residence in this place, is known as the Ettrick Shepherd.

EU (France).—This town was burned by Louis XI. to save it from the English in 1475. In 1578 the Duke of Guise rebuilt the castle, which in 1675 was purchased by Mademoiselle de Montpensier. Louis Philippe improved and extended it in 1821. Here the monarch received Queen Victoria and Prince Albert, Sep. 2, 1843. A series of grand entertainments was given, and the royal guests returned to England Sep. 7, 1843.

EUBŒA (Ægean Sea).—This island was invaded by the Athenians, who defeated the inhabitants of its chief city, Chalcis (q. v.), and established a colony of 4,000 of their own countrymen, B.C. 506. The city of Eretria was destroyed by the Persians B.C. 490, and the island soon afterwards became subject to the Athenians. It revolted B.C. 445 and B.C. 411, and was in each case speedily reduced to tranquillity; but after the battle of Chæronea, B.C. 338, it was seized by Philip II. of Macedon, whose descendants retained possession of it till the Romans restored it to independence, B.C. 194. An insurrection against the Turks broke out in Eubœa in 1822. (See NEGROPONT.)

EUCHARIST.—(See CHEESE, COMMUNION SERVICE, and SUPPER OF THE LORD.)

EUCHITES, or MESSALIANS.—This sect, says Bingham (Antiq. iv. b. xi. c. 2, s. 5), "were so called from the Greek word εὐχὴ prayer, and Messalians from the Syriac word metsalack, which is much of the same signification, because they resolved all religion into prayer." They arose in the 4th century.

EUGUBIAN, or EUGUBINE TABLES.—These tablets of brass were dug up between Cortona and Gubbio, the ancient Eugubium, or Iguvium, in 1444. The number of the tablets is seven, of which five contain Umbric inscriptions mixed with Etruscan and two Latin inscriptions. They are generally ascribed to the 4th century B.C.

EUNOMIANS.—The followers of Eunomius, Bishop of Cyzicus in 360, adopted the extreme tenets of Arianism. Theodosius I. published edicts against them in 394, by which they were forbidden to appoint bishops, and were declared incapable of inheriting property or making a will.

EUNUCHS. — Semiramis, the mythical Queen of Assyria, is said to have been the first who employed eunuchs as servants, B.C. 2017. The custom seems to have originated in Libya, whence it extended to Egypt, Assyria, Persia, and other Eastern nations. Constantine I. (323—337) and the other Christian emperors of Rome suppressed, with severe penalties, the making of eunuchs, and the Council of Nicæa (June 19—Aug. 25, 325) condemned and excluded from holy orders those who, from excess of zeal, practised self-mutilation.

EUNUCHS, or VALESIANS.—This heretical sect, founded by Valesius in the 3rd century, mutilated not only their own male children, but all upon whom they could lay hands.

EUPATORIA, or KOSLOV (Crimea), the ancient Pompeiopolis. The mosque of Devlet-Ghiri-Khan was built in 1552. This town was taken by the Russians in 1726 and 1771. It was occupied by the allied forces, Sep. 14, 1854, who repelled an attack of the Cossacks, Oct. 11. Omar Pasha defended it against a Russian force under Gen. Chruleff, Feb. 17, 1855, and it was finally restored to the Russians, May 31, 1856.

EUPHON, or EUPHONON.—This musical instrument was invented by Chladni in 1790, and improved in 1822.

EUPHRATENSIS.—(See COMMAGEN.)

EUPHUISM.—This affected style of phraseology, common in the reign of Elizabeth, was introduced or made popular by John Lilly, whose "Evphves," or "The Anatomy of Wit," and "Euphues and his England," were published in 1581. These works, says Gifford, "did incalculable mischief by vitiating the taste, corrupting the language, and introducing a spurious and unnatural mode of conversation and action."

EUROPE.—The Phœnicians founded colonies in Europe, the smallest of the four divisions of the world, between the 12th and 8th centuries B.C. The earliest notice of this quarter of the globe is found in the writings of the Greeks, who began to form settlements in the south of Europe in the 6th century B.C.

EURYMEDON (Battle).—Near this river of Asia Minor, Cimon, son of Miltiades, defeated a Persian fleet of 350 vessels, 200 of which he captured, B.C. 466. At the same time he encountered the land forces of the Persians on the banks of this river, and completely routed them.

EUSEBEA.—(See CÆSAREA.)

EUSEBIANS. — This ecclesiastical faction, followers of Eusebius, Bishop of Nicomedia, opposed Athanasius at the Council of Tyre in 335, and supported Arius at the Councils of Jerusalem in 335, and of Constantinople in 336.

EUSTACE, ST. (Battle).—The rebels were defeated at this place, in Lower Canada, Dec. 14, 1837. The insurgents laid down their arms, and their leaders took to flight.

EUSTATHIANS. — The Arians called the orthodox by this name, after Eustathius, or Eustace, Bishop of Antioch, about 325. It also distinguishes the followers of Eustathius, Bishop of Sebaste, who prohibited marriage. He was deposed for his errors by the Councils of Melitena in 357, and of Neo-cæsarea in 358, and his disciples were condemned by the Council of Nicopolis in 372.

EUSTATIUS, ST. (West Indies), one of the Leeward Islands, was colonized early in the 17th century by the Dutch, to whom it now belongs. It was taken and retaken several times during the 17th and 18th centuries. Admiral Rodney captured it Feb. 3, 1781. The French took it Nov. 26, 1781. The English regained possession, and the island was finally transferred to the Dutch by the convention with Great Britain, signed at London Aug. 13, 1814.

EUTAW SPRINGS (Battle).—The Americans were defeated by the English in a severely-contested action at Eutaw Springs, in South Carolina, Sep. 8, 1781. The American army consisted of 4,000 men, and the English force was greatly superior in point of numbers.

EUTYCHIANS, the disciples of Eutyches, an ecclesiastic of Constantinople, who began to publish his views respecting the nature of Christ in 446. He taught that, after his incarnation, the Saviour only possessed one nature, compounded of Godhead and manhood. This doctrine was condemned by the Council of Constantinople Nov. 8–22, 448, and Eutyches was deprived of his office; but the Council of Ephesus in 449 declared him orthodox, and reinstated him in his dignity. His doctrines were, however, again condemned by the fourth general council, held at Chalcedon Oct. 8, 451. (See ACEPHALI and MONOPHYSITES.)

EUXINE.—(See BLACK SEA.)

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.—A conference was held at Liverpool in Oct., 1845, to consider the possibility of uniting all branches of the Christian Church into one grand confederacy. Two meetings were held at the same town, Dec. 16, to consider the proposed alliance, and a conference, composed of members from all parts of the United Kingdom and several foreign countries, met at Freemasons' Hall, London, under the presidency of Sir Culling Eardley Smith, Aug. 19—Sep. 2, 1846, when nine propositions were adopted as the basis of the union. Meetings in connection with this society were held at Paris in 1855, at Berlin in 1857, and at Geneva in 1861.

EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION was organized in the United States by German immigrants in 1803.

EVANGELICAL UNION, a religious body formed in Scotland by the Rev. J. Morison, of Kilmarnock, in 1843. (See MORISONIANS.)

EVANGELISTS.—This term, formerly applied to all writers or preachers of the Gospel, is now generally confined to the writers of the four gospels, Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John. Matthew's is assigned by different authorities to various dates between 38 and 64; Mark's to 60 or 63; Luke's to 63 or 64; and John's to 97 or 98.

EVESHAM (Battle).—Near this town, in Worcestershire, Prince Edward, afterwards Edward I., defeated (Aug. 4, 1265) the English barons under De Montfort, and released his father, Henry III., who had been taken captive at the battle of Lewes. De Montfort and his son Henry were both killed. (See BARONS' WAR.)

EVIL MAY-DAY.—Stow remarks:—"The apprentices of London are so considerable a body that they have sometimes made themselves formidable by insurrections and mutinies in the city, getting some thousands of them together, and pulling down houses, breaking open the gates of Newgate and other prisons, and setting the prisoners free." Their resentment was generally directed against foreign merchants and artisans for supposed interference with their trade. A general insurrection occurred May 1, 1517, and the day received the name of "Evil May-day." Much damage was done, and many lives were lost, when Henry VIII. sent some troops, who quelled the riot, and took 300 prisoners. Several were executed on gibbets set up in different parts of the city. A similar outbreak against the French and Dutch, in Sep., 1586, was put down by the vigilance of the authorities. Another occurred June 29, 1595, for participation in which five apprentices were executed as traitors on Tower Hill, July 24. The apprentices also took part in the disputes between Charles I. and the Long Parliament. One of the last tumultuous assemblages occurred April 4, 1668, when they pulled down several disorderly houses. Four of the ringleaders were afterwards executed.

EVORA, or EBORA (Portugal). — This ancient city was taken, B.C. 80, by Quintus Sertorius, who erected a fine aqueduct, still in good preservation, about B.C. 70. Evora was seized by the Moors in 715, but was recaptured in 1166. The cathedral was founded in 1186, and the choir rebuilt in 1721; the archbishopric was created in 1540, and the university was established in 1578. The Spaniards occupied Evora for some weeks in 1663. An insurrection in favour of Don Miguel was suppressed here in 1828. (See AVIS.)

EVORAMONTE (Treaty).—By a convention signed at this place in Portugal, May 29, 1834, Don Miguel renounced all claim to the throne of Portugal (q. v.).

EVREUX (France).—This town of Normandy, the ancient Mediolanum, founded in the 5th century, and taken and plundered by the Northmen under Rollo in 892, was seized by Lothaire in 962, and erected into a county in 989. On the extinction in 1118 of the first line of counts, the succession was disputed by the Duke de Montfort and Henry I. of England, who burned the town in 1119. In 1194 and 1193 it was taken and burned by Philip II. (Augustus). The English were permanently expelled in 1441, and the town was seized by the Duke of Longueville in 1649. In 1793 attempts were vainly made to raise an insurrection here against the National Convention. The shrine of St. Thaurin, first bishop of the diocese, erected in 660, was enlarged into an abbey church by Richard II., Duke of Normandy, in 1026. The cathedral was founded in the 11th century. The château of Navarre, founded by Jeanne of Navarre, in 1330, and rebuilt by the Duke of Bouillon in 1686, was the residence till 1745 of the young Pretender, and afterwards of the Empress Josephine. It was destroyed in 1836. The clock-tower was erected by the English in 1417. The bishop's palace was built in 1484, and the little château in 1749, in honour of a visit of Louis XV. (See COCHEREL, Battle.)

EXALTATION OF THE CROSS. — (See CROSS.)

EXAMINATIONS (MIDDLE CLASS).—(See UNIVERSITY LOCAL EXAMINATIONS.)

EXARCH.—An officer first appointed in 553 by Justinian I. as the representative in peace and war of the Emperor of the Romans. Narses, the first exarch, administered the entire kingdom of Italy, but the jurisdiction of his successors in the office was limited to the province of Ravenna (q. v.).

EXCELLENCE, or EXCELLENCY. — This title was first applied to ambassadors at the congresses which commenced at Münster and Osnaburg in 1643, and resulted in the treaty of Westphalia.

EXCHANGE.—(See BILLS OF EXCHANGE; BURSE; COAL EXCHANGE; CORN EXCHANGE; ROYAL EXCHANGE; &c.)

EXCHEQUER.—This court, sometimes called Curia Regis ad Scaccarium, formed a part of the Curia Regis. Its origin is variously attributed to William I. in 1079, and to Henry I. It took cognizance of matters connected with the revenue, and also exercised jurisdiction over common-plea suits until a separate court was erected for their decision by Magna Charta, in 1215. (See COMMON PLEAS.) The name was derived from the table at which its sittings were held, which is described as "a four-cornered board, about ten feet long and five feet broad, fitted in manner of a table to sit about; on every side whereof is a standing ledge, or border, four fingers broad. Upon this board is laid a cloth bought in Easter Term, which is of black colour, rowed with strokes, distant about a foot or a span." On the squares of this Scaccarium, or chequered cloth, counters were placed, to assist in making the needful computations. Barons of the exchequer were first appointed July 6, 1234, and chief barons about 1307. By 9 Edw. III. st. 1, c. 5 (1335), justices of assize, &c., were ordered to send all their records to this court annually at Michaelmas, and by 31 Edw. III. st. 1, c. 12 (1357), the lord chancellor and lord treasurer were authorized to examine its erroneous judgments. (See EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.) By 5 Vict. c. 5, s. 1 (Oct. 5, 1841), the equity jurisdiction of the exchequer was transferred to the court of Chancery. The office of cursitor baron of the exchequer was abolished by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 86

(July 29, 1856), and the practice and procedure on the revenue side of the court was amended by 22 and 23 Vict. c. 21, s. 9, et seq. (Aug. 13, 1859). By 6 Anne, c. 26 (1707), a court of exchequer was established in Scotland, which was abolished by 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 54 (June 23, 1832). Foss gives the following list:—

EXCHEQUER (Chancellor).—John Mansell, appointed to reside at the receipt of the exchequer in 1234, is supposed to have been the first chancellor of the exchequer. The following is a list of the Chancellors of the Exchequer since the Restoration :—

CHANCELLORS OF THE EXCHEQUER.

EXCHEQUER (Comptroller-General).—The offices of auditor, tellers of the exchequer, and clerk of the pells, were suppressed by 4 Will. IV. c. 15, s. 1 (May 22, 1834), which act ordered the appointment of a comptroller-general, with a regular staff of clerks and assistants.

EXCHEQUER (Tellers of the).—These officers, who existed as early as 1189, when they were ten in number, afterwards reduced to four, were abolished by 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 15, s. 1 (May 22, 1834).

EXCHEQUER BILLS, which first appeared in 1696, have since been issued annually. They were first circulated by the Bank of England in 1706. Doubleday (Financial History of England, p. 77) defines them as "nothing more than promissory notes due at certain dates, and bearing interest, issued by Government when in want of money."

EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.—This court was erected by 31 Edw. III. st. 1, c. 12 (1357), to discuss questions which other courts found doubtful, and to serve as a tribunal of appeal from the court of Exchequer. By 27 Eliz. c. 8 (1585), its jurisdiction was extended over erroneous judgments in the court of King's Bench, and it was confirmed and further regulated by 31 Eliz. c. 1 (1589). The constitution of this court was again altered by 11 Geo. IV. & 1 Will. IV. c. 70, s. 8 (July 23, 1830). In Scotland the court of Exchequer was, until the Union, 6 Anne, c. 11 (March 6, 1707), the King's revenue court. A new court was established by 6 Anne, c. 26 (1707), which was amended by 2 Will. IV. c. 54 (June 23, 1832), and by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 56 (July 21, 1856), which abolished the Scotch court of Exchequer, and transferred its jurisdiction to the court of Session. The court of Exchequer Chamber in Ireland was established by the Irish Act, 40 Geo. III. c. 39 (Aug. 1, 1800).

EXCISE, or a duty levied upon articles of consumption, produced within the state in which the tax is levied, was introduced at Rome by Augustus, after the civil wars, B.C. 28. Gibbon says it seldom exceeded one per cent., that it was temporarily reduced one-half by Tiberius, after the annexation of Cappadocia in 17, and that it was altogether abolished by Caligula (37—41). An attempt, made in 1626, to introduce excise duties into England, proved unsuccessful. The Long Parliament levied the first excise duties in England, May 16, 1643. Wines, ale, beer, cider, perry, and tobacco were the articles taxed. By 12 Charles II. c. 24 (1660), excise duties were levied as part of the revenues of the crown. The malt duty was first levied in 1695. A large number of articles on which excise was formerly levied are now exempted. The old Excise Office was built on the site of Gresham College in 1774. In 1823, the Irish and Scotch Boards of Excise were incorporated with the English establishment. The Board of Excise was incorporated with that of Stamps and Taxes, under the name of Board of Inland Revenue, by 12 Vict. c. 1 (Feb. 27, 1849).

EXCLUSION BILLS.—The first Exclusion bill committed in the House of Commons, May 21, 1679, by 207 against 128, was lost by the dissolution of that Parliament, May 27. A second measure, "for securing the Protestant religion by disabling James, Duke of York, to inherit the imperial crown of this realm," passed the House of Commons Nov. 11, 1680; and was rejected in the House of Lords, on its first reading, Nov. 15. Charles II. sent a message to the Commons, refusing to pass a bill of exclusion, Jan. 7, 1681. In the Parliament summoned to meet at Oxford, March 21, 1681, the Commons ordered, March 28, that the bill for excluding James, Duke of York, was to be read a third time the next day. Charles II. at once dissolved the Parliament, stating, "as we are not likely to have a good end, when the divisions at the beginning are such."

EXCOMMUNICATION, as an ecclesiastical punishment, is of two kinds, the major or greater, and the less. The major excommunication is also called anathema (q. v.). The lesser excommunication consisted in excluding persons from the participation of the Eucharist, and the prayers of the faithful. Excommunication by Bell, Book, and Candle, formerly pronounced every quarter in English churches, was denounced in Westminster Hall against the violators of Magna Charta, in 1253. The following are the most celebrated instances in which excommunication has been pronounced by the popes. When levied against an entire state, it is termed an interdict.

A.D.
535. Baronius asserts that Agapetus I. threatened to put France under an interdict, because of a murder committed by King Clotaire I. This account is rejected as a fable.
998. Gregory V. excommunicates Robert, King of France.
1077. Gregory VII. excommunicates the Emperor Henry IV. (See CANOSSA.)
1115. The Emperor Henry V. is excommunicated at a council at Cologne.
1160. Interdicts are said, by some authorities, to have become frequent from the time of Alexander III.
1208, March 23. Innocent III. places England under an interdict, which is removed Dec. 6, 1213.
1227. Gregory IX. excommunicates the Emperor Frederick II. The excommunication is repeated in 1228, and the ban is removed in 1229.
1239. Gregory IX. again excommunicates the Emperor Frederick II.
1245, July 17. The Emperor Frederick II. is excommunicated at the 13th general council at Lyons.
1510. Julius II. excommunicates Louis XII. of France.
1535, Dec. 17. Paul III. publishes a bull, dated Aug. 31, 1535, excommunicating and deposing Henry VIII. of England.
1559. Paul IV. denies the right of Elizabeth to the English crown.
A.D.
1570, April 25. Pius V. publishes a bull declaring Elizabeth of England an usurper.
1786, May 4. Lord George Gordon is excommunicated at the parish church of St. Marylebone. (See GORDON RIOTS.)
1860, March 29. Pius IX. excommunicates all persons concerned in the rebellion, invasion, and usurpation of the Romagna. This sentence includes Napoleon III. and Victor Emanuel.

EXCURSION TRAINS were first started in England Easter Monday, April 8, 1844.

EXECUTIONS.—In 1039 the executioner is mentioned as a person of exalted rank, and even now the sheriff is nominally the executioner by virtue of his office. Harrison's "Description of Great Britain," printed in 1577, states that 72,000 rogues and thieves suffered death in the reign of Henry VIII., —that is, about 2,000 a year. By 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 4 (June 27, 1828), the time for the execution of a murderer was fixed for the next day but one from that on which he received sentence. This was repealed by 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 30 (July 14, 1836).

EXECUTORS were appointed in Greece and Rome. They are often mentioned in Anglo-Saxon wills. Mention is made in the Rotuli Parl. of the executors of the will of Bishop John of Kyrkeby in 1290.

EXETER (Bishopric).—On the erection of the see of Winchester, in 650, its ecclesiastical jurisdiction extended over all the west of England; but in 705 Devon and Cornwall were formed into the separate diocese of Sherborne. In 909 Edward the Elder created the sees of Wells, Cornwall, and Devonshire, the two latter of which were united in 1040, and in 1046 the see was transferred from Crediton to Exeter. The Scilly Islands were declared within this diocese July 30, 1838.

EXETER (Devonshire).—This city is one of the oldest in England, some authorities ascribing its foundation to Corinæus, nephew of the mythic Brutus, B.C. 1100, while others state that it was built by Vespasian in 49. But as it was anciently called by British names, such as Pancair, the chief city; Caer-Isc, the city of the Isc or Exe; and Caer-Rydh, the city of the red soil, it was most probably settled by the Britons previous to the Roman invasion.

B.C.
54. Rougemont Castle is said to have been founded by Julius Cæsar.

A.D.
633. Penda, King of Mercia, besieges Exeter.
868. Ethelred founds a monastery.

894. Alfred compels the Danes to raise the siege of the city.
918. Edward the Elder holds a witenagemot at Exeter.
932. Athelstan founds a monastery.
1003. Exeter is totally destroyed by Sweyn, King of Denmark.
1050. Edward the Confessor and his queen Edith visit Exeter, and found a cathedral.
1067. The inhabitants rebel against William the Conqueror, who besieges and takes Exeter.
1112. The cathedral is founded by Bishop Warlewast.
1140. Exeter surrenders to King Stephen, after a siege of three months, during which the cathedral is demolished.
1200. It is incorporated.
1239. The priory of St. John the Baptist is founded.
1250. A bridge is built over the Exe.
1280. Bishop Quivil rebuilds the cathedral.
1286. Edward I. and his queen hold their Christmas revels at Exeter.
1354. The first recorder is elected.
1357. The inhabitants entertain the Black Prince and King John of France, after the battle of Poitiers.
1463. Nine aldermen are appointed by Edward IV.
1469. Exeter is besieged by the Yorkists, under Sir Hugh Courtenay.
1497. Perkin Warbeck lays siege to Exeter.
1536, Aug. 3. Exeter is erected into a separate county.
1549, July 2. It is besieged by the Cornish rebels. Aug. 6. They are compelled to withdraw, and the day is still observed as an annual festival.
1555. The first chamberlain of the city is elected.
1588. Elizabeth grants the city "Semper Fidelis" as its motto, for its fidelity during the Spanish invasion.
1593. The Guildhall is erected.

A.D.

1725. The Topsham canal is completed.
1733, Oct. 16. The Duke of Marlborough reviews the troops here.
1770. A new bridge is commenced.
1773. The castle is partially demolished, and the assize hall built.
1775. The new bridge is destroyed by a flood.
1778. Exe bridge is opened.
1789, Aug. George III. visits Exeter.
1790. The gaol is built.
1801. St. Thomas's Lunatic Asylum is founded.
1807. The Bridewell is founded.
1813. The Devon and Exeter Institution is founded.
1817. Exeter is first lighted with gas.
1819. The city prison is erected.
1820. The Royal Subscription-rooms are built.
1821. The public baths are opened.
1825. The Mechanics' Institute is established.
1835. The Western market is built, the Athenæum instituted, and the waterworks are completed.
1838, July. The Eastern market is opened.
1844, May 1. The Bristol and Exeter railway is opened.
1847. The Polytechnic Institution is founded.—April 27. A destructive fire.—May 14. A serious food riot takes place.
1848, May 5. The South Devon railway is opened.
1849. The post-office is erected.
1865. The Albert Memorial Museum is erected.

EXETER CHANGE (London) is mentioned as a recent erection by De Laune in "The Present State of London, &c.;" published in 1681. It was designed for the use of milliners, hosiers, &c., but did not answer; in consequence of which it was afterwards used as a menagerie by Mr. Cross. The elephant "Chunee" was shot here in March, 1826, and the old building was pulled down in 1829. New Exeter Change, otherwise Wellington Arcade, completed in 1845, from the designs of Mr. Sydney Smirke, was taken down in Dec., 1862.

EXETER COLLEGE (Oxford).—This college was founded in 1314, by Walter of Stapledon, Bishop of Exeter, by whom it was called Stapledon Hall. Two new fellowships for the diocese of Salisbury were added in 1404 by Edmund Stafford, Bishop of Exeter, from whom the college received its present name, and in 1565 Sir William Petre added eight fellowships. Charles I. founded a fellowship for the islands of Jersey and Guernsey in 1636, and in 1770 Mrs. Shiers bequeathed certain rents, which were devoted to the purpose of forming two additional fellowships for Hereford and Surrey. These arrangements were amended by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 81 (Aug. 7, 1854).

EXETER HALL (London).—This building was erected in the Strand by Gandy Deering, in 1830–1. It was intended for public meetings on religious and charitable matters; but has since been used as a concert-room for sacred music. A series of Sunday evening services commenced by clergymen of the Church of England, under the sanction of the Bishop of London, May 24, 1857, was discontinued in consequence of the opposition of the incumbent of the parish, Nov. 6. The Dissenters commenced a similar course Nov. 22. A very large meeting of the Sons of the Phœnix, a body of teetotallers, formed into societies called lodges, like those of benefit societies, was held here Nov. 9, 1859.

EXHIBITION.—The idea of collecting objects of industrial manufacture first occurred to the Marquis d'Avèzo, in 1797; but he was unable to carry it out until 1798, when he opened at Paris what is termed in France an "exposition" of French goods. The undertaking proved so successful that the idea was adopted by the French Government, and similar collections were exhibited in 1801, 1802, 1806, 1819, 1823, 1827, 1834, and since then every five years. A similar exhibition was opened at Ghent in 1820, at Berlin in 1834, and at Vienna in 1835. This led to the idea of a general exhibition, in which different nations should be competitors. The first on this extended scale was the Great Exhibition (q. v.), held in London in 1851.

EXILES (Battle).—The Austrians and Sardinians defeated the French and Spaniards at this place, near Mont Cenis, July 19, 1747. The French republican army failed in an attack upon the fort of Exiles in 1794.

EXODUS of the Israelites from Egypt occurred, according to the best authorities, B.C. 1491. Lepsius fixes it B.C. 1314, and Bunsen B.C. 1320.

EXODUS (Book of).—The second of the five books of Moses, containing a full account of the departure of the Israelites from Egypt, is supposed to have been written before B.C. 1451.

EXORCISTS, or persons who professed to possess the art of expelling evil spirits, existed in very ancient times, both among heathen and Christian nations. They were constituted an order in the Church towards the end of the 3rd century, when exorcism was added to baptism.

EXPLOSIONS.—The following are some of the most calamitous explosions of gunpowder on record:—

A.D.
1649, Jan. 4. Twenty-seven barrels of gunpowder explode in a shop in Tower Street, London.
1758, March 11, Aug. 6, and Dec. 29. Three serious explosions, unattended with loss of life, take place at the Hounslow Mills.
1765, Dec. 3. Two mills are blown up at Waltham.
1767, Jan. 1. The royal mills at Faversham are blown up.
1768, May 10. An explosion at Ewell effects destruction to the amount of £8,000.
1770, Sep. 1. A man and a horse are killed at Faversham.—Sep. 27. A man is killed by an explosion at Hounslow.
1771, Sep. 18. Three men are killed by an explosion at Moulsey.
1772, Jan. 6. Three powder mills are blown up at Hounslow.
1774, April 24. Two persons are killed at Hounslow.
1776, Aug. 20. Several persons are killed by an explosion in Picardy.
1777, Aug. 16. The Epsom mills are blown up.
1789, Oct. 3. One man is killed by an explosion at Faversham.
1790, Oct. 12. Six men are killed and great destruction is occasioned by an explosion at Dartford.
1794, Dec. 31. Eleven men are killed at Dartford.
1796, Jan. 14. Three men are killed and much property is destroyed by an explosion at Hounslow.—Aug. 10. Four persons are killed at Dartford.
1798, May 20. An explosion at Battle destroys three lives and much property.
1799, Jan. 14. Two men and a boy are killed at Dartford.—July 13. Four men are killed by the explosion of a mill on Twickenham Common.
1801, March 20. One man is killed at Battle.—April 25. The Waltham mills explode, and destroy nine lives.
1802, Sep. 8. Six men and three horses are killed by an explosion at Faversham.
1805, June 15. Two men are killed at Dartford.—Oct. 1. A mill explodes at Roslin, near Edinburgh, killing two workmen.
1807, Sep. 18. Six men and three horses are killed at Faversham.
1810, Jan. 16. Five men and a boy, and two horses, are killed by an explosion at Faversham.—Sep. 24. Two men are killed at Dartford.
1811, Nov. 27. The powder mills at Waltham are blown up, with a loss of seven men.
1812, July 4. Two men are wounded by an explosion at Hounslow.—July 14. The Roslin mills blown up, killing two men and wounding a third.
1813, Aug. 21. Two explosions, fatal to three workmen, take place at Hounslow.
1814, Sep. Three men are killed at Battle.
1816, April 16. The Toulouse powder mills explode, killing about 16 persons and wounding several more.
1817, Oct. 3. Three men are killed at Faversham.
1818, March 19. The powder mills at Brandy-wine, United States, blow up, killing 30 and wounding 10 persons.
1843, April 13. Seven men are killed and four buildings overthrown by an explosion at Waltham.
1850, March 11. Three explosions, resulting in the death of eight persons, occur at the Hounslow mills.
1859, March 30. The Hounslow mills again blow up, with a loss of seven lives.—Aug. 6. Five persons are killed by an explosion at the Ballincollig mills, near Cork.
1860, Sep. 10. Six men are killed at the Melford powder works, Argyleshire.
1860, Dec. 1. An explosion of gunpowder in a shop at Norwich kills two persons and destroys much property.
1861, Jan. 21. An explosion at the Government manufactory for hand grenades, &c., at Chatham, kills one man and injures several.
1861, May 27. The Waltham mills blow up, killing one man and wounding others.
1862, Sep. 9. Six women are killed by an explosion at the Nauce Kuke powder mills, Cornwall.
1864, Oct. 1. Frightful explosion at Erith (q. v.).—Dec. 9. A powder store explodes at Buenos Ayres, killing 160 soldiers.—Dec. 16. A powder vessel blows up in the Mersey at Liverpool (q. v.).—Dec. 24. A powder vessel explodes without damage at Wilmington, United States.
1865, March 29. Two persons are injured at Faversham.—April 11. Four or five barrels of powder explode in a shop at Southwark.—May 24. About 300 persons are killed by an explosion at Mobile, United States.—Sep. 21. A firework manufactory explodes at Manchester.—Sep. 28. Two men are killed by an explosion at the Ewell powder mills.—Sep. 26. A firework manufactory blows up at Bristol.

EXTRAVAGANTS.—(See CANON LAW.)

EXTREME UNCTION.—This ceremony of anointing persons on the point of death with oil, originated in the 7th century. In the 10th century the clergy contended that if it did not benefit the body it was of great service to the soul, and this doctrine was generally accepted in the 12th century. Eugenius IV., at the Council of Florence (1439—1442), decreed it to be a sacrament. This was confirmed by the Council of Trent (1545—1563).

EYLAU (Battle).—Napoleon I. defeated the Russian army under Benningsen at this Prussian town, Feb. 8, 1807. The action was commenced by Augereau, whose division was defeated with immense slaughter; but Napoleon coming to the rescue, the fortunes of the day were retrieved, and the Russians compelled to retire to Königsberg. The loss of life was unusually great, though from the discrepancy in the reports, it is difficult to arrive at a positive conclusion. Alison (ch. xliv. s. 74) says: "On the side of the Russians 25,000 had fallen, of whom above 7,000 were already no more; on that of the French upwards of 30,000 were killed or wounded, and nearly 10,000 had left their colours, under pretence of attending to the wounded, and did not make their appearance for several days afterwards."

EZEKIEL.—This book, written by the prophet Ezekiel B.C. 595, has been elucidated in the commentaries of Marck, published in 1731, and of Venenia in 1790.

EZRA.—This book was for the most part written by Ezra the scribe, before B.C. 444, though it appears, from internal evidence, that Daniel and Nehemiah contributed some portions.

F.

FABII.—This, one of the most celebrated and ancient patrician families of Rome, did not become prominent in history till after the establishment of the Commonwealth, B.C. 510. Three brothers of the house held seven successive consulships, from B.C. 485 to B.C. 479. The name occurs as late as the 2nd century. (See CREMERA.)

FABLES.—Jotham's parable of the trees (Judges ix. 7–15), delivered about B.C. 1235, is the earliest fable extant. Very ancient examples by Pilpay, the Hindoo fabulist, and by the Arabian, Lokman, a contemporary of King David (B.C. 1055—1015), are preserved; but the first collection of any extent is that of Æsop, who flourished B.C. 570. His fables were turned into Greek verse by Babrius, who is believed to have lived before the reign of Augustus (B.C. 27—A.D. 14). Phædrus, the Roman fabulist, lived in the 1st century; and Stricker, the earliest known German writer of fables, flourished in the 13th century. The best modern fables are those of Jean de la Fontaine (1621—April 13, 1695), and John Gay (1688—Dec. 11, 1732).

FABRIANO, ST. (Battle).—John of Anjou, during his invasion of Naples, defeated Alexander Sforza and the Count of Urbino, the generals of Ferdinand I., in a hotly-contested battle at St. Fabriano, in the province of Macerata, July 27, 1460.

FACTIONS.—(See CIRCUS FACTIONS.)

FACTOR.—The law relating to a factor or broker was regulated by 6 Geo. IV. c. 94 (1825), called the Factors' Act, amended by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 51 (June 21, 1827), and extended by 5 & 6 Vict c. 39 (June 30, 1842).

FACTORY.—The first fire-proof cotton factory was erected at Belper by the Messrs. Strutt in 1797. Some regulations were introduced by 42 Geo. III. c. 73 (1802); and by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 103 (Aug. 29, 1833), called the Factory Act, amended by 4 Will. IV. c. 1 (Feb. 20, 1834), by which persons under 18 years of age, and women, were prohibited from working more than 12 hours a day; and the employment of children under nine years was altogether abolished. This act was amended by 7 Vict. c. 15 (June 6, 1844), which ordered that all machinery should be guarded to prevent accidents; that eight, not nine, years, should be the earliest age at which children could work in factories; that their hours of labour should not exceed six hours and a half a day; and that they should attend school daily. These acts were extended and amended by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 29 (June 30, 1845), 10 Vict. c. 29 (June 8, 1847), by 13 & 14 Vict. c. 54 (Aug. 5, 1850), and by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 38 (June 30, 1856). (See BLEACHING.)

FACULTIES.—The Court of Faculties, empowering the Archbishops of Canterbury and York to grant Faculties, Dispensations, &c., was established by 25 Hen. VIII. c. 21, s. 4 (1534).

FACULTY OF ADVOCATES.—The profession of advocate has existed from time immemorial in Scotland; but its members did not form a faculty or society until the establishment of the College of Justice in 1532. Their number, at first confined to 10, is now unlimited, and has for some years exceeded 400. This body is presided over by a dean.

FAENZA (Italy), the ancient Faventia, was the scene of the defeat of Carbo and Norbanus by Metellus, B.C. 82. It submitted to the Emperor Frederick I. in 1162. Frederick II. captured it, after an obstinate siege, Sunday, April 14, 1241. Rodolph I. confirmed the Pope in its possession in 1275. The Bolognese seized it in 1282, and its walls were restored in 1286. Cæsar Borgia wrested it from the Manfredi in 1501, and it soon after passed into the possession of Venice (1504). The Papal authorities recovered it in 1509, and it submitted to the French in 1512. It was, however, restored to the popes, and was annexed to the kingdom of Sardinia in 1859.

FÆSULÆ (Italy), an Etruscan city, the modern Fiesole, first mentioned during the war with the Gauls, B.C. 225, was devastated during the social war, B.C. 90 and B.C. 89. Belisarius captured it after a long siege in 539, and the Florentines are said to have destroyed it in 1010.

FAHRENHEIT.—(See THERMOMETER.)

FAINÉANTS, or DO-NOTHING KINGS, the name given to some of the Merovingian sovereigns of France, who were the puppets of the Mayors of the Palace (q. v.).

FAIRFAX COURT-HOUSE (Battle).—Lieut. Tompkins, with a small body of Federal cavalry, attacked the Confederates at this village in Virginia, and captured five prisoners, June 1, 1861.

FAIR ISLE (Atlantic Ocean).—At Stromceiler Creek, in this island, south of Shetland, the Duke Medina Sidonia, Admiral of the Spanish Armada, was wrecked in Aug., 1588.

FAIRLOP OAK (Essex).—This celebrated oak, which formerly existed in Hainault Forest, was so old that, according to Mr. Gilpin, "the traditions of the country traced it half-way up the Christian æra." About 1728, Mr. Day, of Wapping, commenced the custom of dining here every year with a party of friends. Other parties joined him in these annual picnics, until at length the company became so numerous that the gathering assumed the character of a regular fair, recurring the first Friday in July. Mr. Day died in 1767, and was buried in a coffin made of wood from his favourite oak. In 1805 the tree was accidentally set on fire. The trunk and most of the principal branches were seriously injured, and in Feb., 1820, it was blown down, and part of the wood was used for the pulpit and reading desk of St. Pancras new church. The trunk of this celebrated oak measured 36 feet in girth, and its branches covered an area of 300 feet in circumference.

FAIR OAKS (Battle).—(See CHICKAHOMINY, Battles.)

FAIRS were established in Italy about 500, and at Aix-la-Chapelle and Troyes about 800. Alfred the Great introduced them into England in 886, and in 960 they were established in Flanders. Fairs for the sale of slaves were common throughout Germany and the north of Europe about 1000; and in 1071 they were encouraged in England by William the Conqueror. By 2 Edw. III. c. 15 (1328), it was enacted that the duration of fairs should always be declared at their commencement; and by 5 Edw. III. c. 5 (1331), any trader carrying on business after the stipulated time was to forfeit double the value of the goods sold. Disputes at fairs were adjusted at the courts of Pié-poudre, or Dusty-Foot, which were regulated by 17 Edw. IV. c. 2 (1477). The time for holding fairs was specified by 27 Hen. VI. c. 5 (1448), which prohibited them on certain feast days, and on all Sundays except the four in harvest time. This exception was repealed by 13 Vict. c. 23 (June 10, 1850). (See BARTHOLOMEW FAIR, &c.)

FAISANS.—This island, in the river Bidassoa, that separates France from Spain, was the scene of conferences for peace between Philip IV. and Louis XIV. in 1659. The result was the peace of the Pyrenees, signed Nov. 7, 1659. From this circumstance the place was also called the Isle of the Conferences.

FAITH.—(See DEFENDER OF THE FAITH.)

FAITH AND CHARITY (Knights).—Established in France, to suppress public robberies, about 1230, were approved by Gregory IX.

FALAISE (France).—William I. (the Conqueror) was born at this town, the ancient seat of the dukes of Normandy, towards the end of 1027, and a statue was erected to his memory Oct. 26, 1851. Prince Arthur was imprisoned at Falaise, whence he was removed to Rouen in 1202. Falaise received its charter from Philip II. (Augustus) in 1207.

FALCONET.—In the 15th century this name was given to small cannon.

FALCONRY, or HAWKING.—This sport, practised in Eastern countries before the Christian æra, is mentioned by Julius Firmicus, who flourished in the 4th century. It was established in Britain before the Heptarchy (q. v.), and was the favourite amusement of Frederick II., Emperor of Germany (1215–1250), who is said to have written a treatise upon it. The sport declined in the 17th century, and though partially revived in the 18th, has fallen into neglect since about 1725, owing to the increased popularity of shooting.

FALCZI, or PRUTH (Treaty).—Peter the Great having invaded Moldavia in 1711, with a force of 38,000 men, was surrounded by a Turkish army of 200,000 men at Falczi, on the Pruth, and was reduced to despair. The Empress Catherine, who was with him, restored his confidence, and negotiations were commenced between the two powers, which resulted in the conclusion of this treaty of peace, July 10, 1711. Its chief conditions were the surrender by the Czar of the fortress of Azof, the dismantling of his newly built castles near the Turkish frontier, and an engagement on his part not to interfere in the affairs of Poland or of the Cossacks.

FALERII (Italy).—The inhabitants of this city of the Falisci joined the Fidenates and Veientines against Rome, B.C. 437. Camillus took the city B.C. 396. They made war against Rome B.C. 356 and B.C. 293. The city was taken and destroyed by the Romans B.C. 241.

FALERNIAN WINE, so called from Falernus Ager, the district in which it was produced. This district was ravaged by the Carthaginians B.C. 217. Some writers suppose that a town named Faleria once existed in this part, though no evidence of the fact has been adduced. In later years the best Falernian wine was that produced at the village of Faustianum.

FALKIÖPING (Battle).—Margaret, Queen of Norway and Denmark, called the Semiramis of the North, defeated Albert of Sweden at this place in 1389.

FALKIRK (Battle).—The Scottish army under Sir William Wallace was surprised by the English, under Edward I., in the forest of Falkirk, in Stirlingshire, July 22, 1298. As Wallace was doubtful of the fidelity of some of his troops, he wished to avoid an action; but finding it impossible, he chose an advantageous position. Just as the two armies joined, his heavy cavalry fled without striking a blow, and he was completely defeated, with the loss of at least 15,000 men.

FALKIRK (Scotland).—In 1057 a church was erected at this town of Selkirkshire, made a burgh of barony by James VI. in 1600, and a burgh of royalty by Charles I. in 1646. In 1715 it passed to the crown. The old church, removed in 1810, has been replaced by a modern edifice. Falkirk was enfranchised by the Reform Act of 1832.

FALKIRK MUIR (Battle).—The Royalist forces, under Gen. Hawley, were defeated at Falkirk Muir by the Scotch, under Prince Charles Edward, Jan. 17, 1746. The English loss amounted to less than 400 in killed and wounded, and that of the Scotch to about 120.

FALKLAND (Scotland).—This town of Fifeshire, anciently a manor of the earls of Fife, from whom it passed to the crown in 1425, was erected into a royal burgh by James II. in 1458. The palace was commenced in 1500, and the town was greatly improved by James V., who died here Dec. 14, 1542. The charter was renewed by James VI. in 1595. The notorious Rob Roy garrisoned the palace and exacted contributions from the inhabitants in 1715.

FALKLAND ISLANDS (South Atlantic Ocean).—It is sometimes asserted that these islands were descried by Amerigo Vespucci, in 1502. They were visited by Hawkins in 1567, and by Davis in 1592. In 1594, Hawkins explored their northern shores, and in 1690 they were visited by Strong, who anchored in Falkland Sound, to which he gave its name. M. de Bougainville arrived Feb. 3, 1764, and planted a French settlement March 17; and Commodore Byron discovered Port Egmont in 1766, and took possession of the country by the name of Falkland's Islands. In 1767 the French ceded their claim to the Spaniards, who expelled the British in 1770, but were compelled to admit their right to the sovereignty of the islands by treaty, Jan. 22, 1771. As no attempts were made to establish an English settlement, the Republic of Buenos Ayres planted a colony at Port Louis in 1820. This was destroyed by the Americans in 1831, and in 1833 was erected into a British station. In 1840 the Government sent out a colony to Port Louis. It was removed to another situation in 1844.

FALLING WATER (Battle).—An indecisive skirmish took place between the Federals and Confederates at this place in Virginia, July 1, 1861.

FALMOUTH (Cornwall) was originally called Smithick. In 1613, Sir John Killigrew formed the project of erecting a town here, which received its charter and present name from Charles II. in 1661. In 1670, Sir Peter Killigrew built a new quay, which greatly added to the commercial importance of the town; and in 1688 its prosperity was increased by the establishment of the post-office packet to Lisbon and the West Indies. The hospital for disabled seamen was founded in 1750, and the gaol in 1831. Queen Victoria visited Falmouth Aug. 28, 1843.

FALSE ACCUSERS.—(See ACCUSERS, FALSE.)

FALSE MONEY.—(See COINING.)

FALSE PRETENCES.—By 33 Hen. VIII. c. 1 (1541), persons convicted of counterfeiting "letters or privy tokens to receive money or goods in other men's names," were made liable to imprisonment, pillory, or such corporal pain, short of death, as the court should award. This Act was amended by 30 Geo. II. c. 24 (1757), which prescribed more definite penalties of whipping, imprisonment, pillory, &c.; and the offence was constituted a misdemeanour by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 53 (June 21, 1827). The laws on the subject were amended and consolidated by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 (Aug. 6, 1861).

FAMAGOSTA, or FAMAGUSTA.—This town, in the island of Cyprus, was taken by the Genoese in 1373, and by the Turks, Aug. 1, 1571.

FAMARS (Battle).—The Allied army attacked the French and drove them from their entrenched camp at Famars, near Valenciennes, May 23, 1793.

FAMIEH.—(See APAMEA.)

FAMILISTS, and FAMILY OF LOVE.—(See AGAPÆMONE.)

FAMILY COMPACT.—The treaty signed at the Escorial between Philip V. of Spain and Louis XV. of France, Nov. 7, 1733, is called by Spanish historians the First Family Compact, and the secret treaty of perpetual alliance between France and Spain, signed at Fontainebleau, Oct. 25, 1743, is termed by them the Second Family Compact. The celebrated treaty between the Bourbons of France and Spain (Louis XV. and Charles III.), known as the Family Compact, was concluded at Paris, Aug. 15, 1761. It was a defensive and offensive alliance between France and Spain. Ferdinand IV., King of Naples, acceded to the alliance.

FAMILY CONVENTION.—(See FLORENCE, Treaties.)

FAMINES.—(See INDEX.)

FAN.—Pharaoh is represented surrounded by his fan-bearers on the walls of the tombs of Thebes. Fans of peacocks' feathers were made in Greece in the 5th century B.C., and are mentioned in one of the tragedies of Euripides. The custom of using fans was introduced into England during the reign of Henry VIII., and in 1523 they were carried in winter as well as in summer. The ladies had prodigious fans, with handles half a yard long, and with these they often administered correction to their daughters. During the 16th and 17th centuries they were used by gentlemen. Sir Edward Coke rode the circuit with one of these large fans. Folding fans were introduced in the beginning of the 17th century. The Fanmakers' Company was incorporated in 1709.

FANJEAUX (France).—The ramparts of this place, the Fanum Jovis of the Romans, were removed in 1229, and the town itself was destroyed by Edward the Black Prince in 1355.

FANO (Battle).—The Alemanni defeated the Romans near this town, the ancient Fanum Fortunæ, in Umbria, in 270.

FARCE.—One of the earliest extant is in German, called the "Apotheosis of Pope Joan," and was written about 1480. The French farce of "Maître Pierre Pathelin" was first printed in 1490.

FARDINGALE, FARTHINGALE, or VERDINGALE.—This hooped petticoat, to which the modern crinoline bears a strong resemblance, is said to have been first worn in England by Catherine, Infanta of Spain, on her arrival in 1501, to marry Prince Arthur. Having become fashionable, it was superseded about 1640 by the hoop, which went out of fashion about 1820.

FARMERS-GENERAL, or FERMIERS GÉNÉRAUX.—This associated body, who farmed certain branches of the revenue in France under the old monarchy, formed in 1728, was abolished in 1789. Dupin read a report against them May 5, 1794, and 31 out of 32 then living were sent to the revolutionary tribunal.

Twenty-eight were executed May 8, and the remaining three May 14.

FARMVILLE (Battle).—Gen. Sheridan defeated the Confederates, under Gen. Lee, near this place, in Virginia, April 6, 1865.

FARNHAM (Surrey).—In 860 this town was bestowed upon the bishops of Winchester by Ethelbald, King of Wessex; and in 894 Alfred defeated the Danes in its neighbourhood. Waverley Abbey was built by Gifford, Bishop of Winchester, in 1128. The castle, which was founded by Henry de Blois, Bishop of Winchester (1129—1171), was taken by Louis the dauphin in 1216, and demolished by Henry III. In Dec., 1642, it was seized by the Parliamentary forces and again destroyed; but Bishop Morley commenced its re-erection in 1662. Farnham is celebrated as the birthplace of William Cobbett, March, 1762. Until about 1790 it was a borough.

FARNOVIANS.—The followers of Stanislaus Farnowski (Farnovius), who separated from the Unitarians in 1568, became extinct on the death of Farnowski in 1615.

FARNWORTH (Lancashire).—Birch House, situated in this parish, near Bolton, was erected in the reign of Charles I. (1625—1649). The public park was opened by Mr. Gladstone, Chancellor of the Exchequer, Oct. 12, 1864.

FAROE, or FERÖE ISLANDS (North Sea).—This group, discovered by the Norwegians between 858 and 868, now belongs to Denmark. They were held by the English from 1807 to 1814.

FARRIERS.—In 1267 farriers worked in shops open to the road as they do at present. Six farriers attended the army assembled to repel the Spanish Armada in 1588. The Farriers' Company was incorporated in 1670.

FARRINGDON, or FARYNDON INN.—(See SERJEANT'S INN.)

FARRINGDON MARKET (London).—The corporation were empowered by act of Parliament, in 1824, to remove the Fleet Market (q. v.) and erect a new one in its place. This was opened Nov. 20, 1829, under the name of Farringdon Market.

FARTHING.—This coin existed among the Anglo-Saxons, though no specimen remains. Farthings were first coined round in 1210, when King John ordered a large number to be struck for use in England and Ireland. In 1279 they were called Lundrenses, and until the reign of Edward VI. were made of silver. The want of a small coinage subsequently led to the manufacture and issue, by private persons, of leaden farthing tokens, which were suppressed by a royal proclamation, May 19, 1613. A few copper farthings were struck in 1665, but they were not issued till 1672. Tin farthings were coined by William III. and Mary in 1690. Half-farthings were first struck in 1843.

FASHION.—(See DRESS.)

FASTI.—Numa Pompilius (B.C. 715—B.C. 673) instituted the custom of marking monthly records of the feasts, games, &c., observed at Rome, on tables of stone. These, preserved by the priests, became the calendar by which the course of public business and of justice was regulated. C. Flavius copied these Fasti, B.C. 300, and exhibited them in the Forum; and they subsequently became a kind of abridged annals, recording the names of public magistrates and the most important political events. A series of marble tables of Fasti, relating chiefly to the holders of the consular dignity, was discovered buried in the Forum in 1547. Additional portions were dug up in 1817 and 1818.

FASTS.—Moses fasted 40 days and 40 nights on Mount Sinai (Exodus xxiv. 18, xxxiv. 28, and Deut. ix. 9), B.C. 1491, and abstinence was one rule for observing the day of atonement (Lev. xxiii. 26—32), B.C. 1490. In consequence of the preaching of Jonah, the King of Nineveh proclaimed a solemn fast for both man and beast (Jonah iii. 5—9), B.C. 787, and Joel ordered a fast, in which even unweaned infants should participate (Joel ii. 15—17), B.C. 787. Our Saviour fasted 40 days and 40 nights (Matt. iv. 2), in 26, and Barnabas and Saul were ordained to the ministry with fasting (Acts xiii. 2 & 3), in 45. Mosheim, writing of the 1st century, says: "Of any solemn public fasts, except only on the anniversary day of Christ's crucifixion, there is no mention in the most ancient times. Gradually, however, stated days of fasting were introduced; first by custom, afterwards by legal sanction. Whether anything of this nature occurred in the 1st century, and what days were devoted to fasting, we have not the means of deciding." The custom of fasting every Wednesday and Friday became general about 111, and the Quadragesimal fast, or Lent (q. v.), was appointed about 136. The custom of holding special fasts was introduced before 173, and the fasting system in general was fully established in 222.

FATHERS, THE.—The principal ancient ecclesiastical writers, collectively styled the Fathers, were:—Pope Clement I. (91—100); Ignatius, Bishop of Antioch, martyred Dec. 20, 115; Polycarp, Bishop of Smyrna (80—169); Irenæus, Bishop of Lyons (130—200); Clement of Alexandria, died in 220; Hippolytus, died in 230; Tertullian of Carthage (160—240); Origen (185—253 or 4); Cyprian (200—Sep. 14, 258); Eusebius, Bishop of Cæsarea (265—338); Athanasius (296—May 2, 373); Cyril of Jerusalem (315—386); Gregory of Nazianzen, Bishop of Constantinople (329—390); Macarius (301—390 or 1); Ambrose, Bishop of Milan (340—April 4, 397); Epiphanius, Bishop of Constantia (310—May 12, 403); John Chrysostom (347—Sep. 14, 407); Orosius, flourished 415; Augustine, Bishop Hippo (354—Aug. 28, 430); Paulinus, Bishop of Nola (353—431); Socrates Scholasticus, died after 439; Cyril, Patriarch of Alexandria, died in 444; Theodoret, Bishop of Cyrus (393—457); Procopius, Bishop of Gaza, flourished 560; Johannes Scholasticus, died Aug. 31, 578; and Evagrius (536—600).

FATIMITES.—Mahadi Obaidallah, an alleged descendant of Fatima, daughter of Mohammed, and of Ismael, grandson of Ali, having overthrown the Aglabites (q. v.) in 908, established his own dynasty in their stead. His descendant El Moez conquered Egypt and founded Cairo in 969, and his successors, after diverging from orthodox Mohammedanism and protecting the heretical Shiites (q.v.), became extinct on the death of Adhid, in 1171.

FAUGHARD, or FOUGHARD TAGHER (Battle).—On this hill, near Dundalk (q. v.), Edward Bruce, the self-styled King of Ireland, was defeated by Sir John Bermingham, Oct. 5, 1318. Early in the battle Bruce was slain by John Maupas (who also fell in the contest), and his remains, divided into four quarters, were exhibited as a public spectacle in Ireland.

FAVERSHAM, or FEVERSHAM (Kent).—King Athelstan held a witenagemot at this ancient town in 930, and Stephen (1135—1154) erected a Cluniac monastery. James II., in his endeavour to escape to France, was taken here Dec. 12, 1688. The grammar-school was founded in 1575. (See EXPLOSIONS.)

FAYAL (Atlantic), one of the Azores, was captured by Sir Walter Raleigh in 1597.

FAYETTE (Battle).—A sharp but indecisive skirmish took place between the Federals, under Major Torneru, and the Confederates, at this town, in Missouri, Jan. 8, 1862.

FAYETTEVILLE (Battle).—The Confederate Gen. Cabell was repulsed by Col. M. La Rue Harrison at this place in Arkansas, after six hours' severe fighting, April 18, 1863.

FAYETTEVILLE (North America).—The arsenal at this town of North Carolina, containing 35,000 stand of arms, besides cannon and ammunition, was surrendered to a force of 800 Confederates, April 22, 1861. Gen. Sherman expelled the Confederates and occupied the town March 11, 1865, and, having destroyed the arsenal, retired March 15.

FEASTS and FESTIVALS.—The principal feasts of the ancient Jews were the Passover, instituted B. C. 1491 (Exod. xii. 43—49); the feast of Weeks or Pentecost, B.C. 1491 (Exod. xxxiv. 22); of Trumpets, B.C. 1490 (Lev. xxiii. 24, 25); of Tabernacles, B.C. 1490 (Lev. xxiii. 39—43); and the Jubilee, B.C. 1490 (Lev. xxv. 10—13.) The love-feasts of the primitive Christians were instituted about 35; and Easter, Ascension, and Whitsuntide are believed to have been observed since 68. Mamertus, Bishop of Vienne, instituted the solemn processions called Rogations in 469; the feast of the Purification was established about 526. Boniface IV. instituted the festival of All Saints in 611, and the Greek Church founded the festival of Orthodoxy in 842. Urban IV. instituted the feast of Corpus Christi, in favour of the doctrine of transubstantiation, in 1264, and Boniface VIII. founded jubilees in 1300. The festival of the Holy Trinity was first observed in 1320, that of the Spear and Nails in 1354, and the feast of the Visitation in 1389. The Council of Basel confirmed the festival of the Immaculate Conception in 1431, and the feast of the Transfiguration was generally observed in 1456, though it was founded much earlier. In 1643 Urban VIII. published a bull to diminish the number of festivals, and in 1745 Benedict XIV. sanctioned the celebration of the feast of the Seven Joys of the Virgin Mary. (See AGAPÆ, MUSICAL FESTIVALS, &c.)

FEATHERS.—Sir H. N. Nicolas is of opinion that the Prince of Wales' feathers, and the mottoes "Ich Dien" and "Houmont," were derived from the house of Hainault, possibly from the comté of Ostrevant, the apanage of the eldest sons of the counts of that province.

FEBRUARY, the second month of the year, was, with January, added to the calendar about B.C. 700, by Numa, who placed January at the beginning, and February at the end of the year. The decemvirs placed February next to January, B.C. 452. Its name is supposed to be derived from the ancient Roman festival Februa.

FÉCAMP (France).—Richard I., Duke of Normandy, founded a Benedictine abbey-church at this town in 988. The church of Notre Dame was built in the 14th century. Fécamp was taken from the leaguers by Marshal de Biron in 1594.

FECIALES.—The heralds of ancient Rome, whose duty it was to declare war and proclaim peace. On the occasion of a dispute with another power, they made three appeals, with an interval of 10 days between each, and if the matter was not then adjusted, they declared war by throwing a bloody javelin into the enemy's territory. They were instituted by Numa Pompilius (B.C. 715—673), and received a code and laws from Ancus Martius (B.C. 640—616).

FEDERALS.—(See CONFEDERATE STATES and UNITED STATES.)

FEEJEE, FIJI, or VITI ISLANDS (S. Pacific Ocean), discovered in 1643 by Tasman, who named them Prince William's Islands, were visited about 1804 by fugitive convicts from New South Wales, who were allowed to remain by the native chiefs. Traders began to resort thither to buy sandal wood, &c., in 1806. The first missionaries landed Oct. 12, 1835, and the group was surveyed by the United States exploring expedition, under Capt. Wilkes, in 1840. In consequence of the murder of two white men by the natives, Capt. Worth, of the Calypso, destroyed the town of Noundavau in June, 1848. Alarmed by incursions of the Friendly or Tongan Islanders, Thakombau, King of Feejee, placed his dominions under British protection in 1858.

FEHRBELLIN (Battle).—The Swedes were defeated by the Germans at this place, in Brandenburg, in 1675.

FELDKIRCH.—The French, under Massena and Oudinot, failed in several attempts to wrest this town, in the Grisons, from the Austrians, in March, 1799. It fell into the hands of the French in 1800.

FELSINA.—(See BOLOGNA.)

FELT.—This material, called by the ancients lana coacta, was used in the time of Xenophon (before B.C. 444—after B.C. 357) as soldiers' cloaks and corslets, and for horse-furniture. The Tartars employed it for clothes and tent-coverings, and even used it in the construction of their idols. The hatters, by whom felt is principally employed, refer its invention to St. Clement, martyred about 100, who, having put carded wool between his feet and his sandals during a pilgrimage, found at its termination that the pressure had converted the material into cloth. The Felt-makers' Company was incorporated in 1604.

FENCIBLE CAVALRY.—The first corps of this force for service in a particular district was raised in Argyleshire, July 21, 1759. Other regiments of a similar character were raised in 1778 and 1779. A similar force, called Fencible Light Dragoons, to serve in any part of Great Britain, was raised in 1794.

FENCING.—In consequence of the disorders perpetrated by proficients in this art in the reign of Edward I., all the fencing-schools in London were ordered to be closed by 13 Edw. I. st. 5 (1285). The old system of cutting in fencing was supplanted by the rapier-thrust in Italy before 1553, and the new method was introduced into England in 1578.

FENIANS.—According to tradition the Fenians, Fenii, or Finians, were a national militia established in Ireland by Fin, Fingal, or Fionn, the son of Cumhal and son-in-law of King Cormac (213—253). Each member of the band swore never to receive a portion with a wife, but to choose her for her good manners and virtues; never to offer violence to any woman; never to refuse to relieve the poor to the utmost of his power; and never to flee before nine champions. Other authorities regard the ancient Fenians as a distinct Celtic race, who migrated at an early period from Germany into northern Scotland and Ireland; and others conjecture that the word is a corruption of "Phœnicians." Sir Walter Scott, quoting a Celtic poem, speaks of the "bare-armed Fenians" (Antiquary, ch. xxx.). The name has been adopted by an Irish faction, formed in the United States for the purpose of subverting the British supremacy in Ireland.

A.D.

1864. Secret meetings of Fenians are held near Clonmel.

1864, Feb. 23. The Fenians expel the National Party from a meeting in the Rotunda, Dublin (q. v.).

1865, Sep. 15. The police seize the office of the Irish People newspaper at Dublin, and make many arrests.—Sep. 16. Several arrests take place at Cork, and shortly afterwards at Clonmel, Killarney, Rathkeale, &c.—Sep. 20. Some Fenians are apprehended at Manchester and Sheffield.—Oct. 16. A congress of the order assembles at Philadelphia.—Nov. 11. James Stephens, "head-centre" of the Irish Fenians, is arrested.—Nov. 24. He escapes from Richmond Bridewell, Dublin.—Nov. 27. The trial of the prisoners commences at Dublin.—Dec. 1. Thomas Clarke Luby, proprietor of the Irish People, is sentenced to 20 years' penal servitude.—Dec. 6. O'Leary, the editor, receives a similar sentence.—Dec. 13. O'Donovan is condemned to penal servitude for life.—Dec. 14. A special commission for the trial of Fenian prisoners is opened at Cork.

1866, Feb. 17. The Habeas Corpus Act is suspended in Ireland.—Feb. 19. A Fenian senate assembles at Nashville, United States.—March 4. A monster demonstration of Fenians against the suspension of the Habeas Corpus takes place at New York.—March 17. An alarm that this day, the feast of St. Patrick, will be signalized by a Fenian raid upon Canada, proves groundless.—May 10. James Stephens arrives in New York.—May 31. A body of Fenians, under Col. O'Neil, cross the Niagara river, near Buffalo, and occupy Fort Erie, in Canada.—June 2. They are defeated, and Col. O'Neil is killed by the Canadian regular and volunteer forces.—June 7. President Johnson issues a proclamation against the Fenian movement.

FEODOSIA.—(See CAFFA.)

FÈRE-CHAMPENOISE (Battle).—The Austrians, under Prince Schwartzenberg, attacked and defeated the French divisions of Marshals Marmont, Mortier, and Arrighi, at this place, in France, March 25, 1814. The French loss amounted to 5,000 killed and 10,000 prisoners, among whom were the generals Pachtod and Arney.

FERENTINUM (Italy).—The Volscians took refuge in this town after their defeat by the Romans, B.C. 413. It was afterwards given to the Hernicians. The Romans captured it B.C. 361, and Hannibal ravaged the territory B.C. 211. The modern town, called Ferentino, was the scene of a meeting between the Emperor Frederick II., Pope Honorius III., and other rulers, in March, 1223, in favour of the fifth crusade.

FERIÆ LATINÆ.—An annual festival held in commemoration of the union of the peoples of Latium, was celebrated in March, May, or June, and consisted of the offering of sacrifices to Jupiter by all the tribes of the alliance. Some authors state that Tarquin the Proud founded this festival (B.C. 534—510); others consider it of earlier origin. At first it lasted one day; on the expulsion of the kings, B.C. 510, a second day was added to commemorate the event; and a third was afterwards added.

FERMO (Italy).—This city of the Papal States, anciently called Firmium Picenum, was built by the Sabines, and colonized B.C. 264 by the Romans. The popes obtained possession in the 8th century, and the university, founded in 850, was restored in 1824. The French, under Gen. Rusca, defeated the Neapolitans here, Nov. 30, 1798.

FERNANDINA.—(See CUBA.)

FERNANDO PO (Bight of Benin) was discovered in 1471, by the Portuguese, who ceded it to Spain in 1778. The Spaniards abandoned it, and the English formed a settlement in 1827. They retired in 1834, and the Spaniards again took possession in 1844, calling the island Puerto de Isabel.

FERNS (Bishopric) was founded about 598 by St. Edan. Its earlier prelates were styled archbishops of Leinster. In 1600 the see of Leighlin was annexed to Ferns. By 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 37 (Aug. 14, 1833), the sees of Ferns and Leighlin were to be added to Ossory on their next avoidance, which took place on the death of Bishop Elrington in 1835.

FEROZESHAH (Battle).—Lord Gough defeated the Sikhs at this village in Lahore, Dec. 21 and 22, 1845. The British force consisted of 16,700 men and 69 guns, and the Sikhs mustered about 50,000 men, with 108 pieces of cannon, which were nearly all captured. The former lost 2,415 in killed and wounded during the two days.

FERRARA (Italy).—This town, founded in the 5th century, and fortified about 585, was made a bishopric in 661, and an archbishopric in 1735. In 1067 it became a free city, joined the Lombard League against the Emperor Frederick I., in 1175, and soon after passed under the sway of the house of Este. Venice seized Ferrara in 1308, and Clement V. claimed it as a fief of the Church in 1309. The Este family regained possession, and Ferrara was made a duchy by Paul. II., April 14, 1471, and was annexed to the Papal dominions in 1597. It surrendered to the French June 19, 1796, was retaken by the allies May 24, 1799, and was once more resigned to France by the treaty of Luneville, Feb. 9, 1801. Restored to the Pope in 1814–15, its inhabitants revolted in 1860, and Ferrara became part of the new Italian kingdom. It was nearly destroyed by an earthquake in Nov., 1570. The cathedral was founded in 1135; the university in 1264, was reorganized in 1402, closed in 1794, and reopened in 1824; and the library in 1740. Treaties of peace were concluded here in 1428 and 1433. A council was held here Jan. 10, 1438. The last sitting took place Jan. 10, 1439.

FERRARS'S ARREST.—Mr. George Ferrars, M.P. for Plymouth, had become security for a man, who failed to pay at the appointed time. The creditor consequently brought an action against Ferrars, who was arrested by the officers of the city of London, and imprisoned in the Compter. The Speaker laid the matter before the House of Commons, and they despatched the sergeant-at-arms into the city to demand the release of the prisoner. A scuffle ensued, in which the sheriffs and city constables took part with the municipal authorities; and the sergeant, after having broken the mace in his efforts to defend himself, was compelled to retreat. The Commons next proceeded in a body to the House of Lords, where the judges declared the arrest illegal, and pronounced it a very great case of contempt. The sergeant was again sent to the prison, this time the officials offering no resistance, and Mr. Ferrars was released from captivity. At eight o'clock the following morning, March 28, 1542, the sheriffs, and other persons concerned, appeared at the bar of the House, and the sheriffs and creditor were committed to the Tower, the clerk of the Compter to a place known as "Little Ease," and the constables who had attacked the sergeant to Newgate. They were, however, released, at the intercession of the mayor, March 30, and in April the king expressed his approbation of the steps the House had taken.

FERROL (Spain).—A British fleet assailed this seaport, without success, Aug. 25, 1800. It was blockaded by a British fleet in 1805; and Sir Robert Calder, with 15 sail of the line, defeated the French and Spanish fleet, consisting of 20 sail of the line, 7 frigates, and 2 brigs, off Ferrol, July 22, 1805. Marshal Soult captured it in 1809.

FERTILE ISLE.—(See CHRISTOPHER'S, ST.)

FESTIVALS.—(See FEASTS and FESTIVALS.)

FÊTE DIEU.—(See CORPUS CHRISTI.)

FETHANLEA, or FRETHERN Battle.—Ceawlin defeated the Britons at this place, near Stroud, in Gloucestershire, in 584.

FEUDAL SYSTEM.—Alexander Severus (222—235) and Probus (276—282) gave grants of land to their soldiers on condition that they and their heirs should do military service for them. The custom was afterwards imitated by the Lombards and other northern nations, by whom it was introduced into civilized Europe. The oldest codes of laws founded on the feudal principle are the Salic law, which was promulgated by the Salians or Franks about 481; the code of the Lombards, commenced about 646; and the Capitularies, published in 827. It is believed some such system was introduced into England by the Saxons, but it was not till after the Norman Conquest, in 1066, that it attained its full operation in this country. It was introduced into Scotland by Malcolm II. in 1008. The "Liber Feudorum" was compiled by the Emperor Frederick I. in 1170, and it is regarded as the chief authority as to the feudal law of the continent. The "Coutumier de Normandie" was composed about 1229. The system was discouraged in France in 1470, limited in England in 1495, and finally abolished by 12 Charles II. c. 24 (1660).

FEUILLANT CLUB (Paris).—During the Revolution, a club, first called the club of 1789, that assembled in the old convent of the Feuillants (1791), was named after them. A ministry composed of their leaders assumed power in June, 1792. The Jacobins conspired against them, and the Feuillant Club was closed in July, 1792.

FEUILLANTINES.—This order of nuns, subject to the rule of the Feuillants (q. v.), was founded in 1590, and possessed a house at Paris, established in 1622 by Anne of Austria.

FEUILLANTS.—This name was given to a religious order founded by Jean de la Barrière, at Feuillant, in Languedoc, in 1577, and sanctioned by Sixtus V. in 1588. In 1587 it established itself in Paris, and in 1630 a separation took place between the Feuillants of France and those of Italy.

FEUILLETON first appeared in the "Journal des Débats," in Paris, in 1800.

FEVER.—Scarlet fever is believed to have originated in Africa, whence it was brought into Europe by the Moors. It is known to have existed in England for the last 200 years. Typhus fever, which has been known for 300 years, caused great mortality in the armies of Napoleon I. and of the allied forces in the Crimea.

FEVERSHAM.—(See FAVERSHAM.)

FEZ, or FAS (Africa), the capital of a kingdom of the same name, was founded by Edris, in 829. His dynasty lasted till 907. Fez became subject to Morocco in 1550.

FEZZAN, or FESSÂN (Africa), the ancient Phazania, the country of the Garamantes, was attacked by the Romans under Cornelius Balbus, B.C. 20. It was long governed by independent princes, who afterwards became subject to Tripoli, and was conquered by the Turks in 1842.

FIDDLE.—(See VIOL, VIOLIN.)

FIDENÆ (Italy), captured B.C. 496 by the Romans, with whom its inhabitants were frequently engaged in war, was taken and plundered B.C. 426, and its inhabitants were sold as slaves. The amphitheatre fell during an exhibition, in 27, when 50,000 persons were killed or wounded. Its site is occupied by Castel Giubileo.

FIEF.—Ducange (iii. p. 433) states that the word fief, as applied to a possession held by a tenant of a superior, was not used until 884, in the reign of Charles the Fat. (See FEUDAL SYSTEM.)

FIELD OF THE CLOTH OF GOLD.—Henry VIII. of England, and Francis I. of France, held interviews between Guisnes and Ardres, near Calais, June 7—24, 1520. Such was the magnificence displayed, that the place of meeting was called the Field of the Cloth of Gold.

FIELD OF MARCH, or FIELD OF MAY.—This name was given to assemblies of the Frankish people which were held in France under the Merovingian kings, every year in the month of March. They have been called Parliaments of the Champ de Mars. The people assembled in arms on these occasions. Pepin the Short, after his accession to the throne in 747, revived this national assembly, changing the time of meeting from March to May. Charlemagne also convoked them. Sheppard (Fall of Rome and Rise of the New Nationalities, sect. ix.) remarks: "Of these assemblies the chroniclers enumerate thirty-five between the years 770 and 813. That convoked in spring, and styled 'the field of May,' alone had the privilege of passing laws, and in it the third estate, or the people, were associated with the clergy and nobles."

FIELD SPORTS. — From the time of Nimrod, the "mighty hunter before the Lord" (Gen. x. 9), hunting has been popular in all countries and in every age. The Egyptians, Assyrians, Babylonians, Medes, and Persians, pursued it with avidity, hunting the lion, tiger, leopard, deer, hare, &c., and employing, to track the game, sporting dogs, and lions, and other beasts of prey trained for the task. The Greeks and Romans, in the early period of their history, hunted the lion, panther, leopard, &c., in Thrace and in Asia Minor, and afterwards the wild boar furnished their favourite sport. Stag and hare hunting, and coursing, were also practised, Xenophon (B.C. 444—B.C. 357), Arrian (90—170), and other authors having left accounts of the manner in which they were conducted. The ancient Britons were enthusiastic sportsmen, and many skeletons of their hunting dogs are found in the barrows (q. v.) which formed their places of sepulture. The Saxons practised hunting, which was a favourite recreation of Alfred the Great (871—901), and it was a favourite pastime in the time of Edward II. (1307—1327). (See ANGLING, FALCONRY, FOX-HUNTING, GAME LAWS, &c., &c.)

FIERY CHAMBER, or CHAMBRE ARDENTE. — The name given to a French tribunal called the Grande Chambre, convoked for the punishment of heresy. Francis I. established a Fiery Chamber in 1535. In 1679 it was employed by Louis XIV. to inquire into the reports of poisoning cases that were circulated on the trial of the Marchioness Brinvilliers, and its operations soon after ceased.

FIESCHI CONSPIRACY. — Joseph Marco Fieschi having conceived a hatred for Louis Philippe in consequence of the suppression, by the prefect of the Seine, of a situation which he held, constructed an infernal machine of about 100 gun-barrels fixed in a frame, which he discharged simultaneously, by means of a train of gunpowder, from a house in the Boulevard-du-Temple, during a review of the National Guard, July 28, 1835. The king escaped unhurt, but Marshal Mortier and 17 people were killed, and many more wounded. Fieschi, with his accomplices, Pepin and Morey, was guillotined, Feb. 16, 1836.

FIESCO CONSPIRACY. — Giovanni Luigi Fiesco, Count of Lavagna, disliking the republican government established at Genoa by the Admiral, Andrew Doria, formed a plot for his assassination, and the establishment of an oligarchy. The insurrection took place Jan. 2, 1547, when Doria was compelled to flee, and his grand-nephew, Giannetino, was put to death; but the leader, Fiesco, at the commencement of the outbreak, slipped while stepping from a galley, and, being overweighted by his armour, sank in the waves and perished.

FIESOLE.—(See FÆSULÆ.)

FIFE. — This instrument, which is represented on Greek sculptures commemorating the Argonautic expedition, was introduced at an early date into the English army by the Switzers, and is mentioned by Shakspeare, who (Othello, act iii. sc. 2) speaks of the "ear-piercing fife." It was discontinued in the reign of James I., but was reintroduced into the Guards by the Duke of Cumberland, in 1745, and was adopted in marching regiments in 1747.

FIFE (Bishopric), founded June 11, 1727, was annexed in 1837 to Dunkeld and Dumblane. (See ANDREWS, ST.)

FIFTH MONARCHY MEN. — A sect of ultra-republicans who appeared in England in 1645, and taught that Christ was about to reappear on earth, and establish a new universal monarchy. In 1653 they held weekly meetings in London, at which they denounced Cromwell as "the man of sin," "the old dragon," and "the dissemblingest perjured villain in the world;" in consequence of which he put a stop to their preaching. They reappeared, however, at the Restoration, and stirred up a riot, in which several lives were lost, Jan. 6, 1661.

FIG-TREE. — The common fig-tree was brought to England before 1548; and the Botany Bay fig-tree from New South Wales in 1789. Cardinal Pole is said to have planted fig-trees at Lambeth, during the reign of Henry VIII.

FIGUERAS (Spain).—The citadel, called St. Ferdinand, was built by Ferdinand VI. (1746—1759). The French captured it Nov. 24, 1794. It was several times assailed, and having fallen into the hands of the French in 1808, was restored by the treaty of Paris in 1814.

FIGURED BASS is said to have been invented by Ludovico Viadana in the 17th century.

FIJI ISLANDS. — (See FEEJEE or FIJI ISLANDS.)

FILBERT.—This fruit, said to have received its name from Philibert, a king of France, originally brought from Pontus into Italy, was introduced into England about 1612.

FILE-CUTTING MACHINES.—Various instruments for the manufacture of files have from time to time been invented, of which Duverger's in 1699, Fardonet's in 1725, Thiout's in 1740. Brachat and Germain's in 1756 and 1778, Raoul's in 1800, Ericsson's in 1836, and Sir J. Robinson's, improved by Johnson, Cammell, and Co., in 1843, are the best known. In Feb., 1860, Mr. Thomas Greenwood, of Leeds, read a paper at the Institution of Civil Engineers, in which he described a machine, invented by M. Bernot, of Paris, which he stated would perform its work at an eighth of the expense of other machines.

FILES are of great antiquity, and were the only means permitted to the Jews by the Philistines for sharpening their agricultural implements, B. C. 1093 (1 Sam. xiii. 19—21). They are mentioned in the Odyssey of Homer (B.C. 907), and were used in the classic period.

FILIBUSTER.—The correct spelling of this word, a corruption of the English term free-booter, is flibustier. It was applied to the bucaneers of the 16th century, and to lawless bands from the United States, who assailed Cuba in 1850 and 1851, and various parts of Central America in 1857 and other years. The filibuster William Walker, who attacked Nicaragua, was shot at Truxillo, Sep. 12, 1860.

FILTER. — The unglazed earthenware for filtering was patented by Mrs. Hempel of Chelsea in 1791. Peacock patented his ascending filter in 1791, and Witt conducted some important experiments at the Chelsea Water-works, which added considerably to the knowledge of the best materials for filtering-beds, &c., in 1856.

FINANCIAL COMPANIES, in large numbers, under the Limited Liability Act, were formed in London in 1863 and 1864.

FINE ARTS.—(See ARCHITECTURE, MUSIC, PAINTING, POETRY, SCULPTURE, &c., &c.)

FINES AND RECOVERIES.—The practice of evading the laws of entail by means of fines and recoveries was introduced in the reign of Edward IV., and sanctioned and regulated by 4 Hen. VII. c. 24 (1487). They were abolished by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 74 (Aug. 28, 1833), which ordered no more to be levied or suffered after Dec. 31, 1833. (See AMERCEMENT.)

FINISTERRE.—(See CAPE FINISTERRE.)

FINLAND (Europe). — Eric IX., King of Sweden, obtained a footing in Finland about 1157, when he compelled the Finns to embrace Christianity. Peter the Great seized it in 1714. It was restored, again taken, and finally ceded to Russia by the peace of Frederickshamm, Sep. 17, 1809.

FIORENZUOLA (Battle).—Berenger was defeated at this place, near Piacenza, by Rodolph II., King of Burgundy, in 923.

FIRE ANNIHILATOR was patented by Phillips in 1849.

FIRE-ARMS, as distinguished from artillery and cannon (q. v.), originated about the year 1364, when 500 hand-cannon were made at Perouse, or Perugia. Hand-guns were used at the siege of Arras in 1414, and of Lucca in 1430. Tubes for firing gunpowder, held in the hand, and termed Scorpions, appeared in England in 1440, and in 1471 300 Flemings, armed with hand-guns, each of which required two men to manage, accompanied Edward IV. when he landed at Ravenspur. A corps of arquebusiers was formed in 1476, and in 1510 the Swiss had a troop of 500 cavalry, armed with fire-arms, engaged in Italy. The wheel-lock pistol was common in Germany in 1512. By the use of light fire-arms at the battle of Pavia, Feb. 24, 1525, the Spaniards defeated Francis I. of France. Muskets were first used by the Duke of Alva against the Flemings in 1567, and were introduced into the French army in 1573. The earliest mention of a flint arm is dated 1588, and the earliest specimen of this kind of weapon is of the year 1614. The firelock came into use about 1669, and the fusil was adopted in the French army in 1671. A brass fire-arm, called the fancy gun, in the shape of a walking-cane, and which might be used either as a gun or pistol, was invented in 1712, but was never generally adopted. The harpoon gun was invented in 1731. The Rev. A. J. Forsyth took out his patent for igniting gunpowder on the percussion principle, April 11, 1807. All fire-arms were ordered to be proved before use by 53 Geo. III. c. 115 (July 10, 1813), which was amended by 55 Geo. III. c. 59 (May 12, 1815). Percussion-cap guns were adopted in the French army in 1830, and the Enfield rifle musket in the English army in 1853.

FIRE-BRIGADE.—Each of the fire insurance companies of London had a separate establishment of fire-engines until 1825, when the Union, the Sun, and the Royal Exchange companies united their fire-engine establishments. Other companies joined from time to time, and in 1833 a new association, including all the principal fire insurance companies, was formed. This, constituting the Fire-brigade, was managed by a committee. By 28 & 29 Vict. c. 90 (July 5, 1865), called an act for the establishment of a Fire-brigade within the metropolis, the Fire-brigades were placed under the control of the Metropolitan Board of Works, whose authority commenced Monday, Jan. 1, 1866. It is called "The Metropolitan Fire-brigade."

FIRE-ENGINE.—Ctesibius, who flourished B.C. 250, is believed to have invented a species of fire-engine. Instruments for extinguishing fires are first mentioned in the accounts for the city of Augsburg in 1518, but no distinct description of a machine of the kind exists till Hautsch of Nuremberg constructed his engine, about 1657. In 1672, Jan Vanderheide introduced the flexible hose, and in 1699 Duperrier received a patent for making fire-engines for France. Newsham's engine was patented about 1700; and Leupold added the air-chamber in 1720. In 1792 Simpson patented an improved form of Newsham's machine; and in 1793 Joseph Bramah took out a patent for an engine on the vibratory principle. A steam fire-engine was invented by Braithwaite in 1830, and in 1832 the insurance companies adopted an engine of the kind. Further improvements in steam fire-engines were effected in America by Capt. Ericson, who gained a prize offered by the United States Government. In 1858 Messrs. Shand and Mason constructed a land steam fire-engine for the Emperor of Russia, and a second in July, 1859, both of which proved perfectly successful.

FIRE-ESCAPE.—Various ingenious contrivances to enable people to escape in cases of conflagration have been from time to time invented. The Academy of Sciences at Paris, in 1761, expressed their approbation of M. Varcourt's invention for this purpose. The fire-escape which served as the basis for those used in London was invented by Mr. John Davis in 1809. After having undergone several improvements, they were in 1836 brought into general use by the Society for the Protection of Life from Fire. There are now above 70 of these useful machines stationed in different parts of the metropolis.

FIRE INSURANCE.—(See INSURANCE.)

FIRE-LOCK came into use, according to Merrick, in 1669.

FIRE RAISING.—(See ARSON.)

FIRES.—(See INDEX.)

FIRE SALVAGE CORPS.—This brigade, formed by the leading fire insurance companies in the metropolis, for the better protection of property from fires, was established towards the close of 1865 in consequence of the transfer of the control of the Fire-brigade (q. v.) to the Metropolitan Board of Works.

FIRE-SHIPS, filled with combustibles, were used amongst ancient nations, and Livy speaks of some employed by the Rhodians B.C. 190. Mention of them is made in the 13th century. Fire-ships were launched against the Spanish Armada in Calais roads, Sunday, July 28, 1588 (O.S.). In the English navy-list for 1710, five of these vessels formed part of the naval defences of the kingdom.

FIREWORKS.—The art of pyrotechny was brought to great perfection by the Chinese and Hindoos long before it was known in Europe. From a passage in Claudian, who wrote in the 4th century, it appears that the Romans celebrated triumphs, &c., by exhibitions of moving fires, though their ignorance of gunpowder rendered their efforts very limited. In 1258 the King of Delhi sent 3,000 carriages of fireworks to the ambassadors of Halaku. They were scarcely known in England till the reign of Elizabeth; but in the time of Charles I. they became common. By 9 & 10 Will. III. c. 7 (1697), the throwing or firing off of squibs, serpents, or other fireworks, was declared a common nuisance, punishable by fine. The chief improvements in the construction of fireworks for ornamental purposes were made by Ruggieri about the year 1743. The following are some of the most remarkable exhibitions of fireworks:—

A.D.
1697, Nov. 16. On the entry of William III. into London, after the peace of Ryswick, £12,000 were expended in fireworks.
1748, Nov. 23. A grand display takes place in London, to celebrate the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle.
1770, May 31. One at Paris, on the occasion of the marriage of Louis XVI. and Marie Antoinette. A panic arose, in consequence of some fire falling amongst the crowd, and 3,000 persons were killed or wounded. 712 bodies were afterwards found.
1814, Aug. 1. In London, to celebrate the general peace.
1831, Sep. 8. In London, at the coronation of William IV.
1856, May 29. In London, on the conclusion of peace with Russia.

FIRST-BORN.—(See CONSECRATION.)

FIRST CONSUL.—(See CONSULATE.)

FIRST COVENANT.—(See CONGREGATION OF THE LORD.)

FIRST-FRUITS.—(See ANNATES.)

FIRST PRAYERS.—A right exercised by Rodolph of Habsburg (1273—1291) and his successors, which empowered the emperor, on his accession to the throne, to nominate a priest to a benefice in every immediate chapter and abbey in Germany.

FISHERIES were established among the Arabians about B.C. 1800, and the practice of salting fish was common in Egypt B.C. 1350. The Scotch carried on thriving fisheries about 1040, and an important herring-fishery was established at Schonen in 1204. By 1482 the English fisheries formed a considerable portion of the national wealth. By 24 Hen. VIII. c. 4 (1532), hemp and flax were ordered to be sown for the manufacture of fishing-nets; and by 25 Hen. VIII. c. 4 (1533), the fishing towns of the east coast were brought under statutory regulation. In 1553 Spain agreed to pay an annual sum of £1,000 for leave to fish on the Irish coasts, and strangers were prohibited from fishing in our seas by a proclamation of Charles I. in 1636. In 1635 the Dutch paid £30,000 for the privilege of using the English fisheries; and in 1656 Sweden obtained liberty to employ 1,000 vessels in British waters. The company of the Royal Fishery of England was established in 1677, but proved a failure. The Free British Fishery Corporation was established in 1750. The Society of Arts devised a machine for conveying fresh fish to London in 1761, and Parliament granted £2,500 to further the scheme in 1764. The British Society of Fisheries was established in 1786, the Northumberland Fishery Society in 1789, and the Irish Fishery Commission in 1819. A convention fixing the limits of oyster and other fisheries on the coasts of Great Britain and France, was signed at Paris, Aug. 2, 1839. (See SALMON FISHERY.)

FISHER'S HILL (Battles).—The retreating Confederates under Gen. Ewell made a stand at this pass in Virginia, and were defeated by Gen. Milroy, June 2, 1862. Gen. Sheridan defeated the Confederates at the same place, Oct. 9, 1864.

FISHGUARD (Wales).—A French force of 1,200 men landed near this town Feb. 22, 1797, and surrendered Feb. 24.

FISHMONGERS.—Mention of the fishmongers of London occurs as early as 1290. They originally formed two companies, the Salt Fishmongers, incorporated in 1433, and the Stock Fishmongers in 1509, united in one company in 1536. Their ancient arms were confirmed in 1575. The company of fishermen was incorporated in 1687. The Fishmongers, before the union of their two companies, possessed six halls. The new Fishmongers' Hall was completed in 1835. The Prince of Wales received the freedom of the Fishmongers' Company, Feb. 12, 1863.

FITZWILLIAM MUSEUM (Cambridge).—Richard Viscount Fitzwilliam, who died Feb. 5, 1816, bequeathed his collection of books, paintings, &c., and the interest of £100,000, for the purpose of establishing a museum at Cambridge. The building was commenced by George Basevi, Nov. 2, 1837, and continued till 1847, when operations were suspended for a time, to allow for the accumulation of sufficient funds to carry out the design.

FIUME (Illyria).—This seaport, in the possession of Austria, was made a free port in 1722, and was taken from Hungary and incorporated with Croatia in 1849.

FIVE FORKS (Battle).—After a fierce contest, Gen. Sheridan, with 30,000 men, drove the Confederates under Gen. Pickett from their entrenchment at this junction of five roads, near Richmond, Virginia, Saturday, April 1, 1865. The Federals lost nearly 3,000 men, and the Confederates as many, besides 4,000 prisoners.

FIVE HUNDRED (Council of the).—The National Convention in 1795 vested the legislative power in two councils, that of the Ancients (q. v.), and that of the Five Hundred. To the latter was entrusted the sole right of originating laws. Its sittings were transferred to St. Cloud (q. v.) Nov. 9, 1799. This council was dissolved by Napoleon Buonaparte, Nov. 10, 1799.

FIVE-MILE ACT.—This act (17 Charles II. c. 2, 1665) prohibited Dissenters who refused to take the oath of non-resistance, from approaching within five miles of any corporation where they had preached since the Act of Oblivion (12 Charles II. c. 11, 1660), under a penalty of £40. Nonconformists who consented to sign the declaration attached to the act for disabling Papists from sitting in either House of Parliament (30 Charles II. st. 2, c. 1, 1677), were relieved from this restriction by 1 Will. & Mary, c. 18 (1688).

FIVES.—This game, under the name of palm-play, or hand-tennis, was known both in France and England as early as the 14th century.

FLADENHEIM (Battle).—Rodolph of Swabia defeated the emperor Henry IV. near this town in Thuringia in 1080.

FLAG.—The earliest flag was suspended from two corners like a square sail. Flags were used by the Greeks as naval ensigns from the earliest period of their history. The present style of flag was introduced into Europe by the Moors when they entered Spain in 711. The embroidery of flags afforded occupation to the ladies of the Middle Ages; thus the celebrated raven standard of the Danes, which was captured by the English in 878, was said to have been worked by the three sisters of Hubba. The renowned carrocium, or car-standard, of the Italians, was invented at Milan about the year 1040. Flags were first attached to lances during the 11th and 12th centuries, and were distinguished by various badges by the Crusaders in 1188. For a long period the dragon was the national badge of the English. It was used by Harold II. at Hastings, by Richard I. in 1191, and by Henry III. in 1264. Edward III. blazoned his banners with the arms of England and France quarterly in 1340. The Dutch yielded the honour of the flag to England in 1673. The flag-officers in the English navy are the admiral, vice-admiral, and rear-admiral, of the white, red, and blue.

FLAG OF TRUCE.—The Russians fired upon a flag of truce at Odessa, April 6, 1854, and at Hango, June 5, 1855.

FLAGELLANTS, or WHIPPERS.—Many persons in Italy, holding no peculiar doctrines, formed themselves into processions, and inflicted chastisement upon themselves as they marched along, about 1260. Milman (Latin Christianity, vol. v. b. xi. ch. 2) says they "seemed to rise almost simultaneously in different parts of Italy. They began in Perugia. The penitential frenzy seized Rome: it spread through every city, Guelph and Ghibelline crossed the Alps, and invaded Germany and France." It was a purely religious movement, which had been preceded in 1251 by that of the Pastoureaux (the Shepherds in Flanders and in France. Clement VII. anathematized the new flagellants who sprang up early in the 14th century. An attempt to revive these practices was made in Thuringia and other parts of Germany in 1414. Conrad, the leader of the sect in Thuringia, with many others, suffered at the stake. Flagellation was much practised amongst the early monks. (See BLACK DEATH.)

FLAGEOLET, said to have been invented by Sieur Juvigny in 1580.

FLAMINIAN ROAD or WAY.—The Flaminia Via at Rome, constructed by Caius Flaminius B.C. 221, terminated at Ariminum. It was continued to Milan, under the name of the Via Æmilia, B.C. 179.

FLAMMOCK'S REBELLION.—In consequence of a tax levied to meet the expense of the Scottish wars of Henry VII., the Cornishmen rose in rebellion under Thomas Flammock, a lawyer, and Michael Joseph, a blacksmith, of Bodmin. They marched towards London, and at Wells were headed by Lord Audley. On arriving at Winchester, they compelled their leaders to conduct them to Kent, expecting to be joined by many natives of that county, and encamped on Blackheath, where Henry VII. resolved to give them battle. An engagement ensued, June 22, 1497, in which the rebels were defeated, and 2,000 of their number slain. Lord Audley was beheaded on Tower-hill, and Flammock and Joseph were drawn, hanged, and quartered at Tyburn, June 28.

FLANDERS is believed to have been covered by the sea in ancient times. In 793 it was erected into a county, and in 802 was colonized by a Saxon tribe. It was annexed to France in 843, passed under the government of counts in 862, and acquired celebrity as a centre of woollen manufacture about 960. In 1100 a terrible inundation forced many families into exile, and thus led to the establishment of a Flemish settlement in Cumberland, and subsequently, in 1112, in Wales. The first commercial treaty between Flanders and England was concluded in 1274; but in 1309 disagreements broke out between the two countries, which, in 1322, led to open war. Peace was restored in 1325, and in 1369 it was annexed to Burgundy by marriage. The insurrection of the "White Hats" broke out in 1378, and Flanders remained in a very unsettled state till the accession of Philip II., the Bold, in 1364. In 1477 Flanders passed into the possession of the house of Austria, in consequence of the marriage of the duchess Mary with the archduke Maximilian, and in 1556 it was annexed to Spain. In 1581 the Flemings asserted their independence, and the country was engaged in wars with Spain till the conclusion of the peace of the Pyrenees, Nov. 7, 1659. In 1668 many of the inhabitants repaired to England, and in 1680 some parts of the country were seized by Louis XIV. of France. By the peace of Radstadt, March 6, 1714, it formed part of Germany, and Dutch Flanders was ceded to France by the treaty signed at the Hague, May 16, 1795. (See BELGIUM AND HOLLAND.)

FLANDRIANS, or FLEMINGS, a branch of the Anabaptists, arose in the 16th century, and rebaptised not only those who had received baptism in other denominations in their childhood or infancy, but also such as had received it when adults.

FLANNEL.—Various kinds were introduced into this country in the reign of Charles II. (See WOOLLEN TRADE, &c.)

FLAX.—The culture and manufacture of flax, carried on in Egypt about B.C. 1706, were introduced thence into Tyre B.C. 588. The manufacture was in operation in England in 1189, and was practised in Scotland in 1210. By 24 Hen. VIII. c. 4 (1533), the culture of flax in England was made imperative, and in 1703 a bounty was paid on flax imported from the American colonies. A duty of 1*d.* per cwt. was imposed upon imported flax by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 47 (July 9, 1842), which was removed by 8 Vict. c. 12 (May 8, 1845). (See LINEN.)

FLEET MARKET (London), for meat and vegetables, was established in the centre of the present Farringdon Street, and exactly over the Fleet ditch, Sep. 30, 1737. It was removed to its present site, and called Farringdon Market, Nov. 20, 1829.

FLEET MARRIAGES.—One of the most glaring abuses of the Fleet prison was the illegal performance of the marriage ceremony by clergymen confined within its precincts for debt. The first notice of a Fleet marriage is in 1613, and the first entry in a register in 1674. They were suppressed by the Marriage Act (26 Geo. II. c. 33, 1753), which took effect March 25, 1754. The register books of the Fleet marriages were purchased by Government in 1821.

FLEET PRISON (London) was built on the east side of Fleet ditch, in the first year of the reign of Richard I., and became a prison for debtors in 1640. It was burned down in the great fire of 1666, and again in Lord George Gordon's riots in 1780. It was rebuilt in 1781–2. By the act for consolidating the King's Bench, Fleet, and Marshalsea prisons (5 Vict. c. 22, May 31, 1842), this prison was abolished, and was pulled down in 1844. In 1845 the site was purchased by the Corporation of London for £25,000, and the outer walls were removed Feb. 20, 1846.

FLEETWOOD (Lancashire).—This port was laid out by Sir Hesketh Fleetwood, Bart., in 1836. It takes its name from its founder, who died April 12, 1866.

FLEIX (Treaty).—Concluded at the castle of Fleix, in Périgord, Nov. 26, 1580, between Henry III. of France and the Protestants, terminated the seventh of the French wars of religion, or the "War of the Lovers."

FLENSBORG (Denmark).—Margaret, Queen of Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, died at this place Oct. 28, 1412. The prosperity of the town was greatly increased by the neutrality of Denmark in the American war, from 1770 to 1783. The Iron Church was opened in 1854. The Danes defeated the German and Sleswig allies April 10, 1848, near the town, which was taken by the Prussians and Hanoverians, April 25, 1848, and was occupied by the Danes July 16, 1850. The Germans entered it Feb. 7, 1864.

FLETCHERS.—The Fletchers' or Arrowmakers' Company was incorporated in 1487, and the Bowyers' in 1620.

FLEUR-DE-LYS.—Tradition states that Clovis I., on his baptism, in 496, received from an angel a lily, which he and his successors on the French throne consequently assumed as a badge, bearing as their arms a blue shield sown with an indefinite number of golden fleurs-de-lys, which were, however, afterwards limited to three. Berry (Encyclopædia Heraldica, i. under Fleur-de-lis) says:—"Authors have much differed as to the origin and nature of the bearing, some supposing that they were intended to represent the top of a sceptre, others the French battle-axe, called francisca, or rather the iron of the angon, or javelin, of the ancient French, which last seems the most probable conjecture." It is said to be an emblem of the Trinity from its three branchings, and lilies, it is said, were the principal ornament in Solomon's crown. It is shaped on Roman medals of a very early period. Charles V. is said to have adopted the fleur-de-lys in 1365, and the French arms were first quartered by Edward III.

FLEURUS (Battles).—Several severe actions have been fought near this town, in Belgium. The first was between the Spanish (Roman) Catholic League under Gonzales de Cordova, and the Germans of the Protestant Union, Aug. 30, 1622.——Marshal Luxemburg defeated the Prince of Waldeck here July 1, 1690.——The Prince of Saxe-Coburg and the Austrians were defeated by the army of the French republic under Marshal Jourdan, who employed a balloon to examine the position of the enemy, June 26, 1794. The engagement commenced early in the morning, and was continued without definite result till the evening, when the French were reinforced by a detachment of artillery, which enabled them to secure the victory. The number of killed in this battle has not been positively ascertained: in the official report to the Convention it was stated at upwards of 10,000. ——Napoleon I. defeated the allies under Blucher here, June 16, 1815. This engagement is also called the battle of Ligny.

FLINT IMPLEMENTS.—Nearly every primitive or savage race, whether of ancient or modern times, appears to have used weapons, tools, &c., of flint. Implements of this description were found in 1715, buried with the remains of an elephant, in Gray's Inn Lane, London; and at Hoxne, in Suffolk, similar deposits were discovered, with the fossil skeleton of some gigantic animal, in 1797. Numerous flint arrow-heads, &c., have been dug up from the drift, at Abbeville, in France, respecting which M. Boucher de Perthes published a work in 1836, and introduced them to the notice of the French Academy in 1840. His discoveries, however, failed to excite general interest till 1859, when Dr. Falconer, vice-president of the Geological Society of London, visited the scene of the excavations, and directed the attention of Sir Charles Lyell, Sir Roderick Murchison, and other eminent geologists to the subject.

FLOATING BATTERIES.—The Chevalier D'Arçon constructed 10 large floating batteries, which were employed by the French at the siege of Gibraltar, in 1782. They were of prodigious strength, and were deemed impregnable; but the red-hot shot of the English proved too formidable, and all of them were destroyed during the siege. The construction of floating batteries as a regular branch of the English navy has been much discussed, and various experiments have been tried to ascertain their efficiency. A commission for examining into the subject assembled Oct. 10, 1859, and published a report containing many suggestions as to the conditions necessary for insuring success. A parliamentary return, ordered to be printed June 14, 1865, gives the following list of the armour-plated floating batteries constructed for the British navy:—

FLODDEN FIELD (Battle).—James IV., King of Scotland, was defeated and slain by the English army, under the command of the Earl of Surrey, at this place, near Coldstream, in Berwickshire, Friday, Sep. 9, 1513. The Scottish force amounted to 50,000 men, while the Earl of Surrey only mustered about 26,000.

FLOGGING, or WHIPPING, has in all ages formed one of the most common punishments. In Greece and Rome it was used for the correction of military offenders and of schoolboys. The Anglo-Saxons scourged prisoners with a whip of three cords, knotted at the ends. During the Middle Ages, English soldiers were flogged with switches, superseded, about 1770, by the cat-o'-nine-tails. The whipping of females in public was abolished by 57 Geo. III. c. 75 (July 7, 1817); in private by 1 Geo. IV. c. 57 (July 15, 1820). Flogging may be inflicted on juvenile offenders, by 10 & 11 Vict. c. 82, s. 1 (July 22, 1847), which was repealed as far as concerned offenders above 14 years old by 13 & 14 Vict. c. 37, s. 1 (July 29, 1850). A regulation introduced into the army and navy in 1860, requires an offender to have been convicted at least once before of the offence for which he receives sentence of flogging, and prohibits, under any circumstances, the infliction of more than 50 lashes. (See GARROTTE.)

FLORAL DIRECTORIES. — Dr. Thomas Forster, a Roman Catholic physician, published in 1828 the "Circle of the Seasons, and Perpetual Key to the Calendar and Almanack, &c.," which gave a flower for each day of the year. Later authors have freely availed themselves of Dr. Forster's labours.

FLORAL HALL (London), adjoining the new Covent Garden Theatre, was opened with a Volunteer ball, March 7, 1860. It was used for the sale of flowers from May 22 to Aug., 1861. The West London Industrial Exhibition was held in this building from May 1 to Aug. 2, 1865.

FLORALES LUDI, or FLORALIA.—This festival, in honour of Flora, was first held at Rome B.C. 238. It lasted from April 28 to May 2. Having been discontinued on account of its immorality, it was restored B.C. 173.

FLORENCE (Italy).—This city, the ancient Florentia, afterwards capital of Tuscany (q. v.), and in 1864 of Italy, originated in a Roman colony established by Sylla about B.C. 80. According to tradition, St. Peter appointed Frontinus Bishop of Florence in 56.

FLORENCE (Treaties).—John Gaston, Grand Duke of Tuscany, by a treaty signed here July 25, 1731, and called the Family Convention, recognized Don Carlos, son of Philip V. of Spain, as his heir.——A treaty of peace between Napoleon Buonaparte and Ferdinand IV. of Naples and of Sicily, was concluded here March 28, 1801.——Tuscany, Parma, Modena, and the Legations signed an alliance Aug. 20, 1859.

FLORÉS (Atlantic).—One of the Azores (q. v.).——An island sometimes called Endé, in the Indian Archipelago, is also known by this name.

FLORIDA (North America) was discovered by Sebastian Cabot, in 1497. Juan Ponce de Leon re-discovered it on Palm Sunday (called in Spanish Pasqua Florida), April 4, 1512; whence its name. The Spaniards failed in an attempt to colonize it in 1521: it was explored in 1539, and the French Calvinists sent an expedition in 1562. The new settlers were assailed and defeated by a Spanish force, Sep. 4, 1565. Florida was ceded to Great Britain in exchange for Havana, in 1763. The Spaniards took it in 1781, and were guaranteed in the possession of the same by the peace of Versailles, Sep. 3, 1783. By a treaty concluded between Spain and the United States, Oct. 24, 1820, Florida passed into the possession of the latter. A constitution was adopted in 1833, and it was made a state March 3, 1845. It joined the Confederate States, Jan. 10, 1861. The tract of country formerly known by the name of Florida was of much greater extent than the present state.

FLORIN.—This coin is said to have been first issued at Florence, whence its name, in 1252, and in the 14th and 15th centuries was current over all Europe. English silver florins, valued at two shillings, coined in 1849, were declared by proclamation, in 1852, to be current and lawful money of the United Kingdom.

FLORINIANI, or FLORINIANS.—The followers of Florinus, the pupil of Polycarp, constituted an obscure Gnostic sect in the 2nd century.

FLOWERS.—"There has been a class of men," says Disraeli, "whose patriotic affection, or whose general benevolence, has been usually defrauded of the gratitude their country owes them: these have been the introducers of new flowers, new plants, and new roots, into Europe."

FLUORTYPE was invented by Robert Hunt in 1844.

FLUSHING, or VLISSINGEN (Holland).—The inhabitants of this fortified town, on the island of Walcheren, threw off the Spanish yoke in 1572. The French took Flushing in 1795. It was ceded to France by the King of Holland, Nov. 11, 1807, and formally annexed by a decree published Jan. 21, 1808. The English having captured it Aug. 16, 1809, destroyed the works and retired in Nov. (See WALCHEREN EXPEDITION.) It again fell into the hands of the French, who surrendered it by the treaty of Paris, May 30, 1814.

FLUTE.—This instrument was in use in very early times, and several kinds are described in the "Harmonie Universelle," by Father Mersenne, published at Paris in 1636.

FLUXIONS.—This department of mathematical science was invented in 1665 by Sir Isaac Newton, who explained it in a letter of Dec. 10, 1672, and published a description in 1704. The first work on the subject was published by John Harris in 1702. Leibnitz published his method of the differential calculus in 1684, and a long controversy resulted as to whether he had borrowed the idea from Newton's former discovery. Recent researches have relieved him from the imputation of plagiarism.

FLYING MACHINE.—(See AERONAUTICS.)

FOGGIA (Italy).—Manfred defeated the Papal troops at this place, supposed to have been built from the ruins of Arpi, in 1254. Its Gothic cathedral was destroyed by an earthquake in 1731.

FOIX (France), though said to derive its name from its foundation by a colony of Phocians, does not appear to have existed before the 2nd century, when it grew up around the ancient abbey of St. Volusien. The castle is first mentioned in the will of Roger I., Count of Carcassonne, in 1002. In the 11th century, Foix became the capital of the county of the same name, the princes of which were often celebrated in French history. It was besieged by the Albigenses in 1210, and by Philip III., the Bold, in 1273. The county of Foix, erected in 1050, became tributary to the kings of France in 1229, and was united to Béarn in 1290. In 1398 it passed by marriage into the family of Grailly, and in 1494 into the house of Albret, from whom it descended to the line of Navarre, and on the accession of Henry IV., in 1589, it was united to the French crown.

FOKSHANI (European Turkey).—A congress for the settlement of peace between Turkey and Russia, assembled at this town in 1772, and broke up in Sep., without effecting the desired object. The Russians gained a victory over the Turks at Fokshani, July 31, 1789.

FOLEMBRAI (Treaty). — Henry IV., of France, by a treaty concluded with the Duke of Mayenne, at this castle in France, in Jan., 1596, put an end to the Roman Catholic League (q. v.).

FOLIGNO (Italy). — An armistice between Napoleon Buonaparte and the King of the Two Sicilies, concluded at Foligno, the ancient Fulginium, Feb. 18, 1801, led to the treaty of Florence (q. v.). Foligno suffered from the effects of an earthquake in 1832.

FOLK-MOTE.—(See COMMON COUNCIL.)

FOLKSTONE (Kent).—This town, founded by the Romans, was of some importance under the Saxons, and was ravaged by the Danes. A fortress was built about 1150, of which no trace remains. Dr. William Harvey, discoverer of the circulation of the blood, was born here April 1, 1578. Sir Elias Hervey, in 1674, endowed a charity for educating 20 poor children, and for supplying nets to poor fishermen. The harbour, constructed in 1809, was much improved in 1842.

FONDI (Italy).—This city of Naples, the ancient Fundi, obtained the privileges of a Roman city B.C. 336. In 1222 it was burned by the adherents of the Emperor Frederick II., and in 1534 it was besieged by the Turks.

FONT, or BAPTISTERY, was, according to Bingham, for many ages, a distinct place from the body of the church. The same author remarks: "The baptistery, properly speaking, was the whole house or building in which the font stood, and where all the ceremonies of baptism were performed; but the font was only the fountain or pool of water, wherein persons were immersed or baptized." Fonts were erected inside the churches in the 6th century.

FONTAINEBLEAU (France).—A royal palace existed here as early as 999, and a chapel in honour of the Virgin was founded by Louis VII. in 1169. Louis IX. established the convent of the Holy Trinity in 1230. In 1518 it was much improved by Francis I., who added the library and great garden in 1530. The celebrated conference between the Roman Catholics and the Huguenots assembled in May, 1600. Henry IV. formed the park in 1607. A treaty of alliance between France and Sweden was signed here Sep. 24, 1661, and peace concluded with Denmark, Sep. 2, 1679. A treaty of union and alliance with Spain was signed Oct. 25, 1743; the preliminaries for a peace between Great Britain, France, and Spain, Nov. 3, 1762; and a definitive treaty of peace between the Emperor of Germany and Holland, Nov. 8, 1785. Napoleon I. concluded a treaty of peace with Spain here, Oct. 27, 1807, and issued the decree of Fontainebleau, which ordered all English merchandise to be burned, Oct. 19, 1810. Pius VII. and Napoleon I. concluded a concordat (q. v.) Jan. 25, 1813, whereby it was agreed that the Pope should continue to exercise pontifical government in France and Italy. Napoleon I. here bade adieu to the Old Guard previous to his retirement to Elba, April 20, 1814. The marriage of the Duke of Orleans with the Princess Helen of Mecklenburg was celebrated here May 30, 1837. Louis Philippe restored the castle 1837—1840.

FONTAINE FRANÇAISE (Battle).—In this battle Henry IV., of France, defeated the Spaniards, June 6, 1595.

FONTAINE-L'ÉVÊQUE (Belgium). — This town, long the subject of contention between the counts of Hainault and the princes of Liége, fell, in 1757, into the hands of the Austrians, by whom it was surrendered to the French in 1794. It was annexed to Holland in 1814, and on the separation of Belgium (q. v.), formed part of the new kingdom.

FONTARABIA, or FUENTE-RABIA (Spain). —A conference was held at this strongly fortified town between Henry IV. of Castile and Louis XI. of France, in 1463. The French captured it in 1794. It was taken by the royal troops during the civil war in Spain, May 18, 1837.

FONTENAI, or FONTENAY (Battle). — Charles II., the Bald, of France, and Louis II., the German, Margrave of Bavaria, defeated their brother, Lothaire I., Emperor of Germany, and their nephew, Pepin II. of Aquitaine, at this village of Burgundy, June 25, 841. The victory produced no definite or permanent results.

FONTENAY-LE-COMTE (France). — This town, which received a charter of commune in 1471, was taken by the Huguenots in 1568 and 1570, and by the Roman Catholics in 1574. Henry IV. seized it in 1590, and it was taken by the Vendéans in 1793. The church of Notre Dame was erected in 1600.

FONTENOY (Battle). — The French, under Marshal Saxe, defeated the allied army, commanded by the Duke of Cumberland, at this village, near Tournay, in Belgium, April 30, (O.S.), May 11 (N.S.), 1745. The French army amounted to 76,000 men, in a position defended by 220 pieces of artillery, whilst the allied forces consisted of 50,000 men, of whom about 28,000 were English and Hanoverians. At the commencement of the battle, the English carried everything before them, but the Dutch took to flight. The victory was in a great measure due to a charge made by the Irish brigade, led by Lord Clare.

FONTEVRAULT.—This order of monks and nuns was founded by Robert d'Arbrissel, who erected a monastery at Fontevrault, in France, in 1099. In 1106 it received the sanction of Pope Pascal II., and in 1113 was rendered independent of episcopal jurisdiction. Some monks of the order established themselves in England by invitation of Henry II. in 1177. It was re-formed in 1507 by the abbess Renée of Bourbon.

FONTHILL ABBEY (Wiltshire).—This magnificent mansion, built from the designs of Mr. James Wyatt, was founded by William Beckford in 1796. Warner says that in it "expense has reached its utmost limits in furniture and ornaments; every room is a gold-mine, and every apartment a picture-gallery." The cost of the building was £240,000, and in 1807 the proprietor fixed his residence here. In 1822 the house was sold, and in 1823 the pictures, statues, &c., were disposed of by an auction which continued for 41 days. The grand tower fell Dec. 21, 1825, and irreparably injured the building, which was consequently sold in lots, and converted into a private villa, a cloth-factory, &c. William Beckford, who wrote "Vathek" and other works, died May 2, 1844.

FOO-CHOW-FOO, FOU-TCHOU-FOO, or FU-CHOO (China).—This city stands on both sides of the river Min, which are here connected by a stone bridge of 33 arches, mentioned by the Jesuits in the 17th century. The town was one of the five ports thrown open to British commerce by the treaty of Nankin (q. v.), Aug. 29, 1842, which was ratified at Hong Kong, June 26, 1843.

FOOL.—(See ABBOT OF FOOLS and JESTER.)

FOOLS (Feast of).—This festival, supposed to be derived from the Saturnalia of the Romans, was celebrated in France on the 1st of Jan., as early as 1230, and it lasted till the Reformation. It reached England in 1240, and was abolished about the end of the 14th century.——The Feast of Asses was celebrated at Beauvais about the same time. An annual fair held in the Broad Gate, Lincoln, Sep. 14, is called Fools' Fair. (See ALL FOOLS' DAY.)

FOOLS Order of.—This association, founded by Adolphus, Count of Clevès, Nov. 12, 1381, and composed of nobles and gentlemen of high rank and honour, who united for charitable purposes, continued in existence till the commencement of the 16th century, and is last mentioned in some verses prefixed to a German translation of Sebastian Brand's "Ship of Fools," published at Strasburg in 1520.

FOOT BALL.—This game, supposed to be identical with the Roman Pila Paganica, is mentioned by Fitz Stephen as an amusement of the English in the reign of Henry II. (1154—1189), and was a fashionable diversion of the aristocracy in the time of James I. (1603—1625).

FOOT MESSENGERS.—(See COURIERS.)

FORBES MACKENZIE'S ACT, 16 & 17 Vict. c. 67 (Aug. 15, 1853), for the better regulation of public-houses in Scotland, amending 9 Geo. IV. c. 58 (1829), permitted grocers to obtain certificates for the sale of beer, spirits, &c., by retail, not to be consumed on the premises. It was introduced by W. Forbes Mackenzie, M.P. for Liverpool, from whom it received its name.

FORCALQUIER (France), the Forum Neronis or Forum Calcarium of the Romans, became the capital of a county erected in 1054, and was united to Provence in 1208.

FORCED LABOUR.—(See CORVÉE.)

FORCHHEIM (Bavaria).—Councils were held at this town in May, 890; in 903; and March 13, 1077, when Rodolph, Duke of Swabia, was elected Emperor of Germany, instead of Henry IV. (See CANOSSA.)

FORCONIO (Italy).—The ancient see of this town was transferred in 1257 to Aquila (q. v.).

FOREIGN CLUBS.—(See CLUBS, Foreign.)

FOREIGN ENLISTMENT ACT.—The enlistment of British subjects to serve in foreign armies was prohibited by 59 Geo. III. c. 69 (July 3, 1819). This act was temporarily suspended by an order in council of June 10, 1835, which permitted the Spanish Government to raise a body of 10,000 mercenaries in Great Britain.

FOREIGN LEGION.—The name given to regiments composed entirely of foreigners, who in various wars have served under the English flag. About 9,000 Hessians arrived at Chatham in May, 1756, to resist an expected invasion by the French, and in June, 1798, soldiers of the same nation were sent to Ireland to subdue the rebels. By 18 Vict. c. 2 (Dec. 23, 1854), permission was granted for the enlistment of foreigners to serve in separate corps during the Russian war, and for one year after the conclusion of peace. A regiment was consequently formed, composed chiefly of Germans and Swiss, who formed a camp at Shorncliffe, near Dover, where they were reviewed by Queen Victoria and Prince Albert, Aug. 9, 1855.

FOREIGN OFFICE (London).—This department was created in 1782. The new building near St. James's Park was commenced in 1864.

FOREIGN ORDERS.—According to regulations issued by the Foreign Office, May 10, 1855, and published in the London Gazette May 11, no British subject may accept a foreign order, or wear the insignia thereof, without having previously obtained the permission from the sovereign, signified by a warrant under sign manual.

FORENZA (Italy).—This city, the ancient Ferentum or Forentum, taken by the Romans B.C. 319, was colonized B.C. 118.

FORESTALLING, ENGROSSING, or REGRATING, is the name given to the offence of buying articles of food on the way to market, or persuading persons not to offer them for sale, or to increase the price. By 25 Edw. III. c. 3 (1350), persons convicted of it were liable to forfeit the things forestalled, or two years' imprisonment. Many subsequent acts were passed for its suppression, the most important being 5 & 6 Edw. VI. c. 14 (1552), all of which were repealed by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 24 (July 4, 1844).

FORESTERS (Ancient Order of).—This association of members of the working classes for rendering assistance in sickness and distress, was formed in 1836.

FORESTS.—"The forests in England," says Coke, "sixty-nine in number, except the New Forest, in Hampshire, erected by William I., and Hampton Court Forest by Henry VIII., and by authority of parliament, are so ancient as no record or history doth make any mention of their history or beginning." The larger number of these forests has now entirely disappeared. Courts for levying amercements for offences against the forest laws have not been held since 1632. The surveyor-general of the land revenues of the crown, and the surveyor-general of woods and forests, &c., were united under a board, called Commissioners of Woods, Forests, and Land Revenues, by 50 Geo. III. c. 65 (June 9, 1810). By 2 Will. IV. c. 1 (Feb. 13, 1832), the surveyor-general of works and buildings was united with the board, then named Commissioners of Woods, Forests, Land Revenues, Works, and Buildings. A Select Committee of the House of Commons on Royal Forests sat in 1863, and another on Open Spaces (Metropolis) in 1865.

FORESTS (Charter).—Magna Charta, which was signed by King John, June 15, 1215, contained several articles relating to forests, which were afterwards thrown into a separate charter, known as the Charta de Foresta, by Henry III., in Sep. or Nov., 1217. It was confirmed by Henry III., Feb. 10, 1225, and by statute 25 Edw. I. c. 1 (1297).

FORFARSHIRE steamer was wrecked on one of the Farne Islands, Sep. 6, 1838, on the voyage from Hull to Dundee. Grace, daughter of William Darling, keeper of the lighthouse, induced her father to assist her in rowing a small boat through the heavy sea to the scene of the disaster, and succeeded in saving nine persons. This was accomplished on the morning of Sep. 7. The fame of this brave action brought numerous visitors to Grace Darling's humble home, and a considerable sum of money was given to her. Consumption proved fatal to her Oct. 20, 1842.

FORGED DECRETALS.—(See DECRETALS.)

FORGERY.—The laws respecting this crime were very indefinite until the passing of 5 Eliz. c. 14 (1562), which rendered forgers liable to pay double costs and damages; to be set in the pillory, and have their ears cut off, and nostrils slit and scared; to forfeit to the crown all their revenues of lands and tenements, and to suffer imprisonment for life. In 1634 it was made a capital offence, and in 1722 to forge letters of attorney for the transfer of stock was made felony, without benefit of clergy, by 8 Geo. I. c. 22. All capital forgeries were collected into one act by 11 Geo. IV. & 1 Will IV. c. 66 (July 23, 1830), which was amended by 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 123 (Aug. 16, 1832), whereby the sentence was commuted into transportation for life, except in the case of forgery of wills and powers of attorney. Capital punishment was abolished in all cases, and transportation substituted, by 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 84 (July 17, 1837). The greatest number of executions for forgery in one year occurred in 1818, when 24 convicts suffered. The first execution for forgery took place June 4, 1732, and the last Dec. 31, 1829. William Roupell, ex-M.P. for Lambeth, was convicted of forgery on his own confession, and sentenced to penal servitude for life, Sep. 24, 1862. Buncher, Burnett, Griffiths, and Williams, who had stolen paper manufactured expressly for the notes of the Bank of England, and had thus been enabled to perpetrate extensive forgeries, were condemned to long terms of imprisonment at the Central Criminal Court, Jan. 9, 1863. (See CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.)

FORK.—The use of the fork was, according to Beckmann, first known in Italy towards the end of the 15th century. In France, forks at court were entirely new towards the end of the 16th century. Thomas Coryat, who saw forks in Italy in 1608, introduced them into England. His tour, entitled "Crudities," &c., was published in 1611. Silver forks were introduced into England about 1814.

FORLI (Italy), the ancient Forum Livii, said to have been founded by Marcus Livius Salinator after the battle of the Metaurus, B.C. 207, suffered greatly during the wars amongst the petty princes of Italy. The citadel was founded in 1361. Forli became the seat of a republic, and was annexed to the States of the Church in 1503. The French took it in 1797; but it was restored to the Pope in 1815, and annexed to the new kingdom of Italy in 1860. It is the seat of a bishop.

FORLIMPOPOLI (Italy).—This town of the Papal States was destroyed by the Lombards in 700, and by Gregory XI. in 1370. Murat defeated the allies here April 21, 1815.

FORMÂ PAUPERIS.—By 11 Hen. VII. c. 12 (1494), any poor person having due cause for action was provided with writs, according to the nature of his case, and with counsel and attorney, gratis. By 2 Geo. II. c. 28, s. 8 (1729), persons arrested on charges relating to the customs were entitled to the benefit of this statute, provided they could swear that their property, exclusive of their wearing apparel, did not amount to £5. Suitors in divorce and matrimonial causes are enabled to sue in formâ pauperis, by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 54 (Aug. 28, 1857).

FORMIGNY (Battle).—The English were defeated at this place, in France, with the loss of 3,000 men, April 15, 1450.

FORMOSA.—This island, off the coast of China, was not known to the Chinese, who call it Tai-wan, till early in the 15th century. The Dutch settlement, founded in 1624, was destroyed by some Chinese rebels, who ruled the island until they were expelled by the Chinese Government, about 1683.

FORMULA OF CONCORD.—This Lutheran confession of faith was published in 1580 by Augustus, Elector of Saxony, who compelled ministers and schoolmasters to subscribe to it.

FORMYLE.—(See CHLOROFORM.)

FORNOVO (Battle). — Charles VIII., of France, defeated the Italians at this town, near Parma, July 6, 1495.

FORRES (Scotland).—This town of Elginshire, the scene of the assassination of King Duffus in 972, was a royal borough in the reign of David I. (1124—1153), though no charter exists earlier than June 23, 1496. The parish church was erected in 1775, the Nelson commemoration tower in 1806, the suspension bridge over the River Findhorn was opened in 1832, and the town-house was completed in 1839.

FORT AUGUSTUS (Scotland) was built near Inverness in 1715, and was taken by the rebels in 1745.

FORT COX.—(See CAFFRE WAR.)

FORT DEARBORN.—(See CHICAGO.)

FORT DETROIT (Upper Canada). — The American Gen. Hull, with 2,500 men and 33 pieces of cannon, capitulated at this fort to a British force consisting of 700 men, including militia, and 600 auxiliary Indians, Aug. 16, 1812. The English withdrew from the fort in 1813.

FORT DU QUESNE.—(See FORT PITT.)

FORT ERIE (North America) was evacuated by the English, July 3, 1814. An English force, 2,000 strong, assailed the American garrison and army, consisting of 3,500 men, Aug.

15, 1814. Owing to some want of punctuality in the arrival of two of the attacking columns, the success achieved by the first could not be maintained. The Americans, having made a sortie, Aug. 20, in which they were repulsed with great slaughter, blew up their works and retired, Nov. 5, 1814. (See FENIANS.)

FORT FISHER (North America).—This citadel of North Carolina, the principal defence of the port of Wilmington (q. v.), was attacked, Dec. 15, 1864, by the Federal iron-clads under Admiral Porter, who was compelled by the weather to defer active measures till Dec. 23. The gun-boat Louisiana, laden with 250 tons of powder, was then towed close under the walls, and exploded, 1.45 A.M., Dec. 24, without weakening the defences. The bombardment, which commenced the same day, was abandoned Dec. 25, when a reconnoitering party under Gen. Weitzel pronounced the works too strong for an assault. Land reinforcements under Gen. Terry having arrived, a second bombardment commenced Jan. 13, 1865, and the fort was invested in the rear by the land forces. A combined attack, made Jan. 15, resulted in the capture of the fort, with 1,971 prisoners. The total Federal loss was 691 killed and wounded; that of the Confederates was 329.

FORT FRANCE, or FORT ROYAL (Martinico).—This town, the capital of the island, founded in 1672, was almost destroyed by an earthquake in 1839.

FORT GEORGE (Scotland).—This citadel of Inverness-shire was erected in 1747, at a cost of £160,000, to prevent a repetition of the Highland rebellion, which had just been suppressed. It is the most important fortress in Scotland.

FORT HARE.—(See CAFFRE WAR.)

FORT MARLBOROUGH.—(See BENCOOLEN.)

FORT PILLOW (North America).—Two forts of this name were the scene of operations in the American civil war. One, situated in Tennessee, on the Mississippi, was attacked by Federal gun-boats, which, anchoring in the neighbourhood, April 13, 1862, opened fire April 17, and compelled the Confederates to evacuate it, June 4.——Fort Pillow, Kentucky, garrisoned chiefly by negroes under Major Booth, was attacked by Confederates under Gen. Forrest, who carried the works, April 12, 1864, and killed a considerable number of the defenders.

FORT PITT (North America).—The French built Fort Du Quesne in 1755. Having been abandoned by them, it fell into the hands of Brigadier Forbes, at the head of a British force, Nov. 24, 1758. The British standard was erected on the fort, the name of which was changed to Fort Pitt, in honour of the minister.

FORT ST. DAVID (Hindostan).—A factory was established at this place, near Cuddalore, by the English, in 1689. Count Lally captured the fort, then the strongest place the English possessed in India, June 1, 1758, when the fortifications were destroyed.

FORT ST. GEORGE (Hindostan).—(See MADRAS.)

FORT SUMTER.—(See CHARLESTON.)

FORT WAGNER.—(See CHARLESTON.)

FORT WILLIAM.—(See CALCUTTA.)

FORTH.—(See CLYDE CANAL.)

FORTIFICATION.—The earliest fortification was probably the wall with which Cain surrounded the city of Enoch (Gen. iv. 17), B.C. 3875. The art was brought to great perfection in Babylon and Nineveh, the former of which cities was defended by a wall 100 feet high and 32 thick. Bastions were introduced by the Italians in the 14th or 15th century, the oldest extant being at Verona, built in 1523, and at Antwerp in 1545. The first writer on fortification was Albert Durer, whose work appeared in 1527. The covered way was first described by Tartaglia in 1554. Errard de Bois-le-Duc published a work on flank fortification in 1594, which was much improved by Antoine de Ville in 1629. Great improvements were introduced in 1645, by the Count de Pagan; and the Marechal de Vauban, who flourished 1633—1707, left numerous works, of which the treatise, "De l'Attaque et de la Défense des Places," was published in 1737. The best work on subterranean fortification was published by M. Monzé in 1804. During the session of 1860 measures were taken and money was voted for strengthening the fortifications at several harbours and arsenals in Great Britain.

FORTROSE, or FORTROSS (Scotland).—This seaport of Ross-shire was formed in 1444, by a charter uniting the towns of Chanoury and Rosemarkie, which was confirmed in 1592 and 1612. The Fortrose and Rosemarkie Friendly Society was established in Jan., 1831.

FORTUNATE ISLANDS.—(See CANARY ISLANDS.)

FORTUNE-TELLERS.—By 17 Geo. II. c. 5, s. 2 (1743), every person professing to tell fortunes by palmistry, or otherwise, was adjudged a rogue and vagabond, and by 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 4 (June 21, 1824), was rendered liable to imprisonment in the house of correction for a period not exceeding three calendar months.

FORTY SHILLING FREEHOLDERS.—(See FRANCHISE and FREEHOLDERS.)

FORUM.—The Romans called by this name the places where markets and courts of justice were held. The principal was the Forum Romanorum, at Rome, which, established after the union of the Romans and Sabines, B.C. 747, was improved and beautified by Tarquinius Priscus (B.C. 616—B.C. 578). It ceased to be used as a market about B.C. 472, when it became the place of assembly of the Comitia Tributa. After the reign of Augustus (B.C. 27—A.D. 14), the Forum lost its ancient importance, and gradually fell into ruins. It was called during the Middle Ages Tria Fata, from a group of statues of the three Fates, and it remained a favourite place for popular assemblies till the sack of Rome by Robert Guiscard in 1081. In 1812 and 1813 the French Government cleared a part of the Forum, and commenced measures of preservation, which have been continued by the pontifical authorities.

FORUM TREBONII (Battle).—Near this small town, called Abrutum, or Forum Trebonii, in Mœsia, the Roman emperor Decius and his son were slain, and their army defeated by the Goths in Nov., 251. Gibbon says the Roman army was irrevocably lost in a morass, and that the body of the emperor could not be found.

FOSSALTA (Battle).—Prince Enzio, natural son of the Emperor Frederick II., at the head of the Ghibelline forces, was defeated and made prisoner at Fossalta, near Bologna, May 26, 1249. He was kept in captivity at Bologna till his death, which occurred in 1272.

FOSSANO (Battle).—The Austrians, under Gens. Melas and Kray, defeated the French, under Gen. Championnet, at this town of Sardinia, Nov. 5, 1799.

FOSS DYKE.—(See CANALS.)

FOSSOMBRONE.—(See METAURUS, Battle.)

FOTHERINGAY CASTLE (Northamptonshire) was founded soon after the Norman Conquest, by Simon St. Liz, second Earl of Northampton, and rebuilt by Edmund of Langley, Duke of York (1345—1400). Richard III. was born here, Oct. 21, 1450, and the castle is famous as the scene of the trial of Mary, Queen of Scots, Oct. 11—14 (after which it was conducted at Westminster), 1586, and of her execution, Feb. 8, 1587. It was dismantled by James I. in 1604.

FOUGERES (France).—This town, important during the Middle Ages as the key to Britanny, was seized by the English in 1173, in 1202, and in 1448. It was taken by the Vendéans in 1794.

FOUGHARD (Battle).—(See FAUGHARD.)

FOUNDERS.—This company was incorporated in London in 1614.

FOUNDLING HOSPITALS, for the reception of children abandoned by their parents, existed under the Roman empire. A foundling hospital existed at Angers, in France, in the 7th, and at Trèves, in Germany, in the 8th century. A similar institution was established at Milan in 787. The Hospital of the Holy Ghost was established at Montpelier in 1180. It was confirmed by Innocent III. in 1198, and settled at Rome in 1201. An hospital of the Holy Ghost existed at Einbeck before 1274, and one at Nuremberg, commenced in 1333, was completed in 1341. A foundling hospital was established at Florence in 1316, and at Venice in 1380. The great foundling hospital at Paris was established in 1620. The first proposal for a foundling hospital in England was made in 1687. Capt. Thomas Coram obtained a charter for the Foundling Hospital of London in 1739. The present building, commenced in 1742, was opened June 2, 1756.

FOUNTAINS, for public uses, existed in many Greek and Roman cities. Hero of Alexandria, who flourished B.C. 150, invented an artificial fountain, the principle of which is still employed in some places to drain mines. Among the most celebrated fountains may be classed the Fontana Paolina, constructed in 1612, and the Fontana di Trevi, in 1735, at Rome; the Fontana dell' Atlante, in 1532, the Fontana Scapellata, in 1541, and the Fontana del Sebeto, in 1590, at Naples; the Fontaine des Innocents, in 1551, the Fontaine des Capuchins, in 1713, the Château d'Eau, in 1811, the Fontaine Louvois, about 1840, and the Fontaine Molière, in 1844, at Paris. The only fountains in London of any note are those in Trafalgar Square, which were erected in 1845. The fountains at the Crystal Palace were first displayed in operation June 18, 1856. (See DRINKING FOUNTAINS.)

FOURIERISTS.—This school of Socialists accept the doctrines of François Marie Charles Fourier, who, born at Besançon, April 7, 1772, died at Paris, Oct. 8, 1837. His system, analogous in some respects with that of the Communists (q. v.), though in others widely differing, is based on the assumption that the earth and mankind are in their infancy, and that association, not community of property, is the principle whereby the highest good may be realized. He, accordingly, planned a division of society into classes, or Phalansteries, each containing 400 families, or 1,800 persons, who should inhabit one vast building in the centre of a highly cultivated plain, and which, being united into larger groups and series, should eventually form one world-wide and harmonious government.

FOUR-IN-HAND CLUB (London) attained its highest prosperity during the reign of George IV. (1820—1830).

FOUR TABLES.—(See COVENANTERS.)

FOUR TOWNS.—(See CONFESSIO TETRAPOLITANA.)

FOWEY, or FOY (Cornwall).—This seaport town, which attained great importance during the wars of Edward I. (1272—1307) and Edward III. (1327—1377), contributed 47 ships and 770 men to the fleet with which the latter monarch besieged Calais in 1347. The town having been burned by the French in 1457, Edward IV. (1461—1483) built some blockhouses, and Henry VIII. (1509—1547) erected the fort of St. Catherine to defend the entrance to the river Fowey, on which it stands. In 1588 the inhabitants opposed the Spanish Armada, and in 1646 the town was taken by Fairfax. Fowey, which returned two members to Parliament, was disfranchised by the Reform Bill of 1832.

FOXGLOVE.—The Canary foxglove was introduced into England from the Canary Isles in 1698, and the Madeira foxglove from Madeira in 1777.

FOX AND GRENVILLE COALITION MINISTRY.—(See ALL THE TALENTS.)

FOX-HUNTING.—The first public mention of this sport is in the reign of Richard II. (1377—1399), who granted a charter to the Abbot of Peterborough, in which he was permitted to hunt the fox. The sport did not become general in England till about 1680.

FOX AND NORTH.—(See COALITION MINISTRY.)

FRAGA (Spain).—Aphonso I., King of Aragon, besieged this city in 1133. A great battle was fought in the neighbourhood between the Christian and the Moorish hosts, July 17, 1134. The Christians were defeated, and the place of the battle was called the Field of Mourning. Alphonso I. is said to have died of grief, July 25.

FRAMEWORK-KNITTERS.—This company was incorporated in 1663.

FRANC.—This coin, current in France, superseded the livre Tournois in 1795.

FRANÇAIS, CAPE.—(See CAPE HAYTIEN.)

FRANCAVILLA (Sicily).—The Spaniards defeated the Austrians at this town, near the river Cantara, in Naples, June 20, 1719. It suffered greatly from the effects of an earthquake in 1734.

FRANCE, which formed part of the ancient Gallia or Gaul, received the name of France from the Franks, a German tribe which first invaded Gaul about 256.

FRANCHE-COMTÉ (France).—This ancient province, conquered by the Franks in 534, formed part of the duchy of Burgundy, and was bestowed on Philip II. of Spain on his marriage with Isabella, daughter of Henry II. of France, in 1559. Louis XIV. conquered it in 1668, and restored it to Spain by the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, May 12, 1668. He conquered it again in 1674, and it was ceded to France by Spain, by the treaty of Nimeguen, Sep. 17, 1678.

FRANCHISE.—A royal privilege, or branch of the king's prerogative, subsisting in the hands of a subject, was of various kinds, and existed from a very early date. Charlemagne made capitulars in 779, securing the franchise of churches. By 8 Hen. VI. c. 7 (1429), the franchise was conferred upon forty-shilling freeholders. (See REFORM BILLS.)

FRANCISCA.—(See BATTLE-AXE.)

FRANCISCANS, called also Grey Friars, Minor Friars, Minorites, and Lesser Brethren, were mendicant friars, founded by Francis D'Assisi, or St. Francis, in 1208. Pope Innocent III. in 1210, the Council of the Lateran in 1215, and Honorius III. in 1223, approved the order. The first general chapter was held at Assisi in 1216. Francis died Oct. 4, 1226, and was canonized in 1228. In 1228, a dispute, which lasted till 1259, arose between the Dominicans and the Franciscans, concerning the dignity and preference of their respective orders. Gregory X. made it one of the four orders to which he reduced the mendicants in 1274. The Franciscans came to England in 1219. The Capuchins (q. v.), the Fraticelli (q. v.), the Observants (q. v.), and the Clares, or Clarisses (q. v.), are branches of the Franciscans.

FRANCIS'S ATTACK ON THE QUEEN.—At six o'clock in the evening, May 30, 1842, John Francis, a young man in his twentieth year, son of a machinist at Covent Garden Theatre, discharged a pistol at the Queen, who, accompanied by Prince Albert, was riding in a barouche and four down Constitution Hill, London. He received sentence of death June 17, but was respited and condemned to transportation for life, July 2.

FRANCONIA (Germany).—This name was originally applied to the country on both sides of the Maine which was colonized by Frankish settlers under Thierry I., eldest son of Clovis I., who succeeded to his father's German possessions in 511. (See FRANCE.) Conrad, Duke or Count of Franconia, was elected King of Germany Nov. 8, 911, and princes of the same house occupied the throne from 1024 till 1250. The Emperor Wenceslaus, in 1387, divided the empire into four circles, of which Franconia and Thuringia constituted one; and Maximilian I., in 1512, erected Franconia into a distinct circle. In 1806 it was divided between Würtemberg, Baden, Hesse-Cassel, the Saxon duchies, and Bavaria, but since 1814 the greater part has belonged to Bavaria, where the districts or circles of Upper, Middle, and Lower Franconia were established in 1837.

FRANEKER (Holland).—The university, founded in this town in 1585, was abolished by Napoleon I. in 1811, and the building was converted into an Athenæum in 1816.

FRANKENHAUSEN (Battle).—Münzer and his followers, who raised an insurrection in Thuringia, were defeated at this town, in Germany, May 15, 1525. The old town was destroyed by fire in 1833.

FRANKENMARKT (Battle).—The French, under Gen. Richepanse, defeated the Austrians at this place in Austria, Dec. 17, 1800.

FRANKENTHAL (Germany), founded by some Flemish Protestants in 1562, has been frequently assailed. The French captured it in 1792, and the Austrians Nov. 12, 1795.

FRANKFORT (N. America), the capital of the state of Kentucky, was founded in 1786, and made the seat of government in 1792.

FRANKFORT-ON-THE-MAINE (Germany) was founded by the Franks in the 5th century. Charlemagne, who had a palace in this city, summoned a council in 794, and it was surrounded with walls by Louis I. in 838. It was the capital of the Eastern Franks from 843 to 889, when Ratisbon was selected. Frederick I. was elected at Frankfort in 1152. From that time it became the place of election for the emperors, and the Golden Bull confirmed it in the possession of the privilege in 1536. Frankfort was made a free city in 1257. The bridge over the Maine was built in 1342. Frederick of Prussia signed a treaty, known as the Union of Frankfort, with the Empire, France, and Sweden, at this city, May 13, 1744. The French captured it Jan. 2, 1759, and again in 1792; but the Prussians wrested it from them Dec. 2, 1792. It was bombarded by the French July 12, and surrendered July 16, 1796. It formed part of the Confederation of the Rhine in 1806. Napoleon I. erected Frankfort and some of the surrounding territory into a duchy in 1810. The Declaration of the Allied Powers was issued at Frankfort Dec. 1, 1813. By the congress of Vienna, in 1815, it was made one of the four free cities of Germany, and the seat of the Germanic diet. It was made a free port in 1831. The Constituent Assembly, elected in 1848, held its sittings at Frankfort. They were transferred to Stuttgardt, May 30, 1849. Francis Joseph II. of Austria summoned a congress of German princes to meet here, Aug. 17, 1863. The congress separated Sep. 1. It was occupied by the Prussians July 16, 1866. Councils were held here in 794, 853, 1001, 1007 (Feb. 2), 1234, and 1409.

FRANKFORT-ON-THE-ODER (Prussia).—Three periodical fairs, instituted at this town in 1253, are much frequented. It was besieged by the Hussites in 1430, by the Poles in 1450, and by the Duke of Sagan in 1477. Its university, founded in 1506, was removed to Breslau (q. v.) in 1811. The Russians and Austrians took Frankfort Aug. 3, 1759; the Prussians, however, regained possession Aug. 12.

FRANKINCENSE.—This vegetable resin, used as a scent, and especially for burning as incense, was employed by Moses in preparing the "perfume, a confection after the art of the apothecary, tempered together, pure and holy" (Exod. xxx. 34, 35), which was reserved, under penalty of death, for the exclusive service of the tabernacle, B.C. 1491. It was used in the ceremonies of the temple throughout the Jewish history, and as one of the most precious of known substances, was, with gold and myrrh, offered to the infant Redeemer by the wise men from the east (Matt. ii. 11) B.C. 4. It is still employed in the services of the Romish and Greek Churches.

FRANKING.—The privilege of receiving and sending letters free of postage was claimed by the House of Commons in 1660. A warrant was soon after issued to the postmaster-general, granting the privilege to the weight of two ounces. This was confirmed by 4 Geo. III. c. 24 (1764). The privilege of franking was regulated by acts passed in 1764, 1765, and 1795, and by 1 Vict. c. 35 (July 12, 1837). By the third clause of 2 & 3 Vict. c. 52 (Aug. 17, 1839), the Treasury had power to suspend the privilege of franking, which ceased altogether on the introduction of the penny postage, Jan. 10, 1840.

FRANKLIN'S EXPEDITIONS.—John Franklin made three expeditions to the Arctic regions previous to that in the Erebus and Terror. As lieutenant in command of the Trent, he, in company with Capt. Buchan of the Dorothea, left England for Spitzbergen April 25, 1818. They arrived at their destination May 26, and returned to England the following Oct. Capt. Franklin sailed from Gravesend for America May 23, 1819, in order to conduct a land expedition in search of the north-west passage. He set out in sledges from the Hudson's Bay Company's station at Cumberland House, Jan. 19, 1820, and arrived at Winter Lake Aug. 20, where he remained during the severe weather ten months. The party embarked on the Polar Sea, July 21, 1821, and commenced their return journey to England Aug. 22. —— Capt. Franklin sailed from Liverpool to undertake a second land expedition, Feb. 16, 1825, and arrived at Fort Chipewyan in July. The party separated into two divisions, July 3, 1826, but reunited Sep. 21, and the expedition returned to England Sep. 26, 1827. He received the honour of knighthood, April 20, 1829. ——Sir John Franklin's last expedition, in the Erebus and Terror, sailed from Sheerness May 26, 1845. The last despatch home was written July 12, and the ships were seen for the last time by the Prince of Wales whaler, July 26. From information afterwards collected by Capt. M'Clintock, of the Fox, an account of whose expedition is appended, it appears that the two ships were beset with ice Sep. 12, 1846. A party of six men, under Lieut. Gore, left the ships May 24, 1847, at which time all was going on well. Sir John Franklin died June 11, 1847, and the ships were abandoned April 22, 1848. The officers and crew, in number 105 men, landed April 25, and they intended to start for Back's Fish River April 26. This is the latest intelligence obtained respecting this ill-fated expedition. No anxiety was felt respecting the vessels until the close of 1847, but numerous expeditions were subsequently despatched, an account of which is given in the following table. The case of Sir John Franklin, and his officers and crew, was officially pronounced hopeless, and their names were removed from the "Navy List," March 13, 1854.

A.D.

1848—55.—1848, Jan. 1. The Plover, Commander Moore, sails from Sheerness, with orders to proceed to Behring's Strait, and meet the Herald, Capt. Kellett. —Aug. 22. She reaches the Sandwich Islands.—1849, July 15. Is joined by the Herald at Chamisso Island.—1850, July 18. The two ships are joined by the Nancy Dawson yacht.—July 25. A boat expedition is sent under Lieut. Pullen. —Aug. 5. They see the Investigator.—1851. The Herald returned to England.—1854. Nov. 9. The Plover, after long arctic service, was sold, at San Francisco, not being seaworthy.—1855, April 8. The crew arrive in England.

1848—52.—1848, March 25. Sir John Richardson and Dr. Rae leave Liverpool to conduct a land expedition.—April 10. They arrive in New York.—Aug. 3. Enter the estuary of the Mackenzie River.—1849, May 1. Dr. Rae is despatched, with a party of eight men, to attempt to reach Wollaston Land, but in consequence of excessive ice, he was unable to accomplish this object.—1849, Nov. 6. Sir John Richardson arrived at Liverpool.—1851, May. Dr. Rae succeeded in exploring the shores of Wollaston.—Aug. 21. He discovered a fragment of a flagstaff, supposed to have belonged to the missing party.—1852. He returned to England.

1845—7.—1845, June 12. Sir James Ross (Enterprise) and Capt. Bird (Investigator) leave England. They fail in an attempt to get to the westward of Leopold Island, and return to England, Nov. 3, 1849.

1849—50.—1849, May 16. The North Star, Mr. Saunders, master, sails with provisions for Barrow's Strait.—Sep. 28, 1850. He returns to England.

1850—55.—1850, Jan. 10. The Enterprise and Investigator, under Capts. Collinson and M'Clure, sail from the Thames.—Jan. 20. They leave Plymouth.—April 19. The two vessels are parted by stress of weather.—July 29. The Investigator crosses the Arctic circle.—Aug. 5. The Investigator is seen by the Plover.—Aug. 29. The Enterprise is compelled by the ice to steer southward and winter at Hong Kong.—Sep. 7. M'Clure takes possession of Baring Island.—Oct. 26. He discovers the north-west passage.—July 10, 1851. The Enterprise leaves Port Clarence for the North.

A.D.

1852—55.—1852, Sep. 26. She reaches Cambridge Bay, Wollaston Land, and winters there.—1853, April 6. Lieut. Pim, of the Resolute, brings assistance to the Investigator.—June 3. She is abandoned, the crew being received on board the Resolute and Intrepid.—1854, April 14. The crew of the Investigator proceed on foot to Beechy Island.—Sep. 6. They reach Disco, on the coast of Greenland.—Sep. 28. They arrive in England.—1855, May 6. The Enterprise returns.

1850—51.—1850, April 13. Capt. Penny, of the Lady Franklin, and Capt. Stewart, of the Sophia, sail from Aberdeen.—1851, Sep. They return.

1850—51.—1850, April 20. Sir John Ross, in the Felix, and Commander Phillips, in the Mary, sail from Loch Regan, the expense of the expedition being defrayed by public subscription. Sep. 25, 1851. They return.

1850—51.—1850, May 4. Capt. Austin's expedition sails from Greenhithe. It consists of the Resolute, Capt. Austin; the Assistance, Capt. Ommaney; the Intrepid, Lieut. Osborn; and the Pioneer, Lieut. Cator.—1851, Sep. The Resolute and Assistance return to England.

1850—51.—1850, May 23. The American expedition, the Advance and the Rescue, under Lieut. De Haven and Dr. Kane, sails from New York. The expense of this undertaking was sustained by Mr. Grinnell, a wealthy American merchant.—Aug. 27. They fell in with some relics of the Erebus and Terror.—1851, Sep. 30. They arrive at Brooklyn.

1850, June 5. The Prince Albert, Capt. Forsyth, sails from Aberdeen, Lady Franklin having equipped the expedition.—Oct. 1. It returns.

1851—52.—1851, May 21. The Prince Albert is again fitted up by Lady Franklin, and sails from Aberdeen, under the command of Mr. Kennedy and Lieut. Bellot, of the French navy.—1852, Oct. 9. They return after wintering in Prince Regent's Inlet.

1851, Sep. 27. Lieut. Pim proposed to conduct an expedition through Siberia to the mouth of the river Kolyma, and to explore the north coasts of Asia; but the idea was abandoned in consequence of the representations of the Russian Government.

1852—55.—1852, April 15. Sir Edward Belcher's expedition, viz., the Assistance, Sir E. Belcher; the Resolute, Capt. Kellett; the North Star, Capt. Pullen; the Intrepid, Capt. M'Clintock; and the Pioneer, Capt. Osborn, sailed from Woolwich, with the double object of searching for the Franklin expedition, and for the Enterprise and Investigator, which had been absent since 1850.—Aug. 18. They arrive at their winter quarters, in Northumberland Sound.—1854, May 14. The Resolute and Intrepid are abandoned.—Aug. 25. They abandon the Assistance and Pioneer, the whole of the officers and crews being transferred to the North Star.—Sep. 28. Sir E. Belcher and Capt. Kellett returned to England in the Phœnix.—1855, Sep. 10. The Resolute was discovered drifting in the ice, by Capt. Buddington, of the U.S. whaler George Henry. The British Government having relinquished all claim to the vessel, it was purchased by Congress for 40,000 dollars, and sent as a present to the Queen. She reached Spithead, under the care of Capt. Hartstein, of the U.S. navy, by whom she was formally presented to her Majesty, Dec. 16, 1856.

1852, July 4. The Isabel, Capt. Inglefield, sails from Woolwich.—Nov. 4. She returns, having explored 600 miles of new coast without success.

1853, April 8. The Isabel again sails for Behring's Strait, under Mr. Kennedy, of the Prince Albert. She reaches Valparaiso, where the officer and crew disagree, and the expedition is abandoned.

1853, May 19. The Phœnix, Capt. Inglefield, with Lieut. Bellot as a volunteer, and the Breadalbane transport, sail from Sheerness.—Aug. 8. They reach Beechey Island.—Aug. 18. Lieut. Bellot meets his death by accident. (See BELLOT STRAIT.)—Oct. 4. The expedition returns with news of Sir Edward Belcher's expedition, and of the missing Investigator.

1853—55. 1853, May 30. The American ship Advance, commanded by Dr. Kane, sails from New York.—1855, Oct. 11. She returns.

A.D.
1854, May 6. The Phœnix, Capt. Inglefield, again sails to Beechey Island.—Sep. 28. She arrives at Cork with Sir Edward Belcher and Capt. Kellett on board.
1855, June 1. The United States despatch the Release and Arctic, under Lieut. Hartstein, in aid of Dr. Kane's expedition.
1857, July 2. Lady Franklin despatches the steam yacht Fox, Capt. M'Clintock, from Aberdeen.—1858, Aug. 11. She reaches Beechey Island.—1859, April 2. The crew divide into two parties, one of which is commanded by Capt. M'Clintock and the other by Lieut. Hobson.—May 6. Mr. Hobson discovered the record of the fate of the Franklin expedition in a cairn at Point Victory.—Aug. 9. The Fox commences her homeward voyage.—Sep. 21. She arrives at Portsmouth.
1860, May 29. Mr. Hall, of Cincinnati, sails from New London, Connecticut, U.S., with the intention of searching to the north of Fury and Hecla Strait for further traces of the Franklin expedition.
1860, July 7. Dr. Hayes starts from America for Smith's Sound.
1861, April. Dr. Hayes, having wintered near Cape Alexander, starts for the north.
1864, Dec. Capt. Hall receives information from the Esquimaux, which induces him to hope that Capt. Crozier and other companions of Sir John Franklin may still survive.
1865, Sep. The Queen of the Isles, chartered by the citizens of Hamburg to explore the polar regions, breaks down a few miles below Cuxhaven, and the expedition is abandoned.

FRANK-PLEDGE.—On the establishment of decennaries by Alfred the Great, about 890, each member was required to pledge his word for the right conduct of all his fellow-members. This pledge was called frank-pledge. The custom is by some authorities said to have existed at an earlier period. Courts for the view of frank-pledge were held annually, and were regulated by the statute for view of frank-pledge, 18 Edw. II. (1325). (See COURT-LEET.)

FRANKS.—This confederation was formed, about 240, by the tribes dwelling on the banks of the Lower Rhine and the Weser, who united under the title of Franks or free men. They invaded Gaul in 256, and for 12 years ravaged that country and Spain, extending their incursions as far as the opposite continent of Africa. Probus drove them back into their native marshes in 277; but their influence gradually increased, and after the death of Constantine I., in 337, they constituted a powerful faction at the imperial court. In 355 they again invaded Gaul, and were defeated by Julian, who permitted them to establish a colony in Brabant, or Taxandria. In 418 they again invaded Gaul, where, under their leader Pharamond, they founded the modern kingdom of France (q. v.).

FRASCATI (Italy).—This town was founded near the ancient Tusculum, destroyed in 1191. The church of San Rocco was built in 1309, and the new cathedral in 1700. The first bishop of the see was consecrated in 260.

FRASERBURGH (Scotland). — This town, called Faithly, was made a burgh of barony in 1546. James VI. changed its name to Fraserburgh in 1592, and made it a free port in 1601. Sir A. Fraser in 1592 obtained a crown charter, ratified by Parliament in 1597, and renewed by the crown in 1601, for a college and university; but the scheme has not been carried out.

FRASER, FRAZER, or TACOUTCHE-TESSE RIVER (British Columbia). — Large deposits of gold were found on its banks in 1857.

FRATICELLI, FRATICELLIANS, or LESSER BRETHREN, a branch of the Franciscans (q. v.) that arose in Italy towards the end of the 13th century. They were, according to Milman, bound to the Cœlestinians by the closest ties. By some authors they have been confounded with the Beghards, to whom the name Fraticelli, or Fratercali, was applied as a term of reproach. They disappeared towards the end of the 15th century.

FRAUDULENT TRUSTEES ACT.—By 20 & 21 Vict. c. 54 (Aug. 17, 1857), trustees or bankers who fraudulently dispose of property, or keep false accounts, or wilfully destroy books or other documents, or publish false statements, are declared guilty of misdemeanour, and rendered liable to penal servitude for three years. The provisions of the act were not extended to Scotland.

FRAUSTADT (Battle). — The Swedes defeated an allied German and Russian army at Fraustadt in Posen, Feb. 12, 1705.

FREDERICIA (Jutland). — This town was founded by Frederick III. of Denmark in 1650. The Danes defeated the Sleswig insurgents near this fortress, May 3, 1849. It was bombarded by the Prussians and Austrians March 20, 1864, and was evacuated by the Danes April 29. The Austrians commenced the demolition of the fortifications May 3.

FREDERICKSBORG (Denmark).—This palace was built by Frederick II., about five Danish miles from Copenhagen, upon three islets, which he acquired in 1560. It was rebuilt and enlarged by Christian IV. between 1602 and 1608, and was destroyed by fire Dec. 17, 1859.

FREDERICKSBORG (Treaty).—By a treaty concluded at this place in Denmark, July 14, 1720, the Kings of Sweden and Denmark agreed not to restore the fortifications of Wismar, and to facilitate postal arrangements between their own states.

FREDERICKSBURG (Battle).—The Federals under Gen. Burnside commenced four pontoon bridges over the Rappahannock, Dec. 11, 1862. The main body crossed the river to Fredericksburg, Virginia, Dec. 12. The attack upon the Confederate position on the heights took place Dec. 13, and after raging with desperate violence through the day, terminated in the defeat of the Federals. Little fighting took place Dec. 14 and Dec. 15, and Burnside was permitted to recross the river without opposition Dec. 16. The Federals lost 1,138 men killed, 9,105 wounded, and 2,078 missing,—in all 12,321 men. (See CHANCELLORSVILLE, Battle.)

FREDERICKSHALL, or FREDERICKSHALD (Norway).—Charles XII. of Sweden was killed whilst besieging the castle of Frederickstein, near this town, Dec. 11, 1718. The death of the king led to the immediate raising of the siege. An obelisk was erected on the spot in 1814.

FREDERICKSHAMM (Finland).—The Russians wrested this fortress from the Swedes in 1742. Gustavus III. of Sweden, who failed in an attempt to capture it in 1788, stormed its defences, and destroyed the docks, timber, and stores in 1790. A treaty of peace between Russia and Sweden was concluded at this town Sep. 17, 1809.

FREDERICKTOWN (Battle).—The Confederate garrison of this town of Missouri was defeated by the Federals Oct. 21, 1861.

FREDERICTON (New Brunswick). — This town, formerly called St. Anne's, the capital of the colony, was erected into a bishopric in 1845.

FREE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.—In consequence of the opposition of a large portion of the Scotch presbyterians to the right of patrons to nominate whom they pleased to vacant livings, a large body seceded from the Kirk, May 18, 1843, and founded the Free Church of Scotland. At first the infant Church endured much privation, in consequence of the general opposition of the landed proprietors to the movement; but a subscription of £366,719 14*s.* 3*d.* was raised, and at the meeting of the General Assembly in May, 1844, the society was declared in a very prosperous condition. In 1845, £100,000 were collected for the erection of manses for the seceding clergy; and in 1846 a college was founded by Dr. Chalmers, who died May 30, 1847. In 1853 there were about 850 Free Church congregations in Scotland.

FREE COMPANIES.—Bands of discharged soldiers, who ravaged France after the conclusion of the peace of Bretigny, May 8, 1360. Bertrand du Guesclin, born in Britanny in 1314, put himself at their head, and led them against Peter the Cruel, King of Castile, whom he dethroned in 1365, placing Henry, Count of Trastamara, on the throne. Edward the Black Prince recalled the free companies, defeated Henry at Najara, April 3, 1367, and restored Peter the Cruel, who was, however, defeated March 14, 1369, and killed by Henry of Trastamara March 23.

FREEHOLDERS were exempted from distrainment on account of their freeholds by 52 Hen. II. c. 22 (1267); and they were protected from the councils of the lords, which had usurped the functions of the law of the land, by 15 Rich. II. c. 12 (1391). By 8 Hen. VI. c. 7 (1429), electors for Parliament were compelled to possess land to the amount of 40 shillings per annum, and 19 Geo. II. c. 28 (1746), rendered a similar qualification necessary in the case of electors of boroughs. Electors in Ireland are obliged to possess a freehold estate of £10 a year, by 10 Geo. IV. c. 8 (April 13, 1829).

FREE LANCES. — (See CONDOTTIERI and FREE COMPANIES.)

FREEMANTLE (Australia).—This town, on Swan River, was founded in 1830.

FREEMASONRY. — Members of this order claim for it the highest antiquity; some asserting that it was introduced into Egypt by Mizraim, grandson of Noah; others that it originated at the building of Solomon's temple, B.C. 1011; and others that it arose from the Eleusinian mysteries (q. v.). The Rev. G. Oliver, in his "Antiquities of Freemasonry," styles St. John the grand patron of the order. England was almost the first country to encourage modern Freemasonry, it having been introduced about 676. The grand lodge at York was formed in 926, and the members of the fraternity are believed to have contributed materially to the erection of the beautiful Gothic cathedrals of the Middle Ages. In 1140 the order appeared in Scotland; and in 1424 it was prohibited in England by 3 Hen. VI. c. 1. It is supposed to have been introduced into France during the 16th century. The grand lodge of England was founded in 1717, and in 1734 a misunderstanding arose between it and the grand lodge of York, which resulted in a division of the order. The first French lodge was formed in 1725. In 1729 the order was introduced into the East Indies, and in 1730 into America. The grand lodge of Ireland was also established in 1730. In 1731 a lodge was erected at the Hague; in 1735 the first German lodge was instituted; in 1736 the grand lodge of Scotland was established, and a lodge founded at the Cape of Good Hope; in 1738 one was planted at Brunswick; and in 1749 the order appeared in Bohemia. The Pope published a bull of excommunication against Freemasons in 1738. The meetings of the order were sanctioned by 39 Geo. III. c. 79, ss. 5—7 (July 12, 1799), and by 57 Geo. III. c. 19, s. 26 (March 31, 1817). The tavern in London was erected in 1786, and the charity for female children established in 1788. The new tavern was commenced in 1865.

FREEMASONS' HALL (London), founded May 1, 1775, was opened May 23, 1776.

FREE SPIRIT.—(See BROTHERS AND SISTERS OF THE FREE SPIRIT.)

FREETHINKERS.—This deistical sect, the apostles of the so-called Natural Religion, based upon reason and free inquiry, arose in England in the 17th century. Lord Herbert of Cherbury (1581—Aug. 20, 1648); John Toland (1669—March 11, 1722); Lord Shaftesbury (1671—Feb. 15, 1713); Anthony Collins (1676—Dec. 13, 1729); Thomas Woolston (1669—Jan. 27, 1733); Matthew Tindal (1657—Aug. 16, 1733); and Viscount Bolingbroke (1678—Dec. 15, 1751), advocated these doctrines. (See DEISTS.)

FREE TRADE, advocated by Adam Smith in his "Wealth of Nations," published in 1776, and to some extent adopted by the French Economists, formed the basis of the Anti-Corn-Law League (q.v.). Richard Cobden died April 2, 1865.

FREE-WILL ISLANDS (Pacific), three in number, were discovered by Carteret in 1767.

FREGOSI.—(See ADORNO.)

FREIBERG (Saxony). — The discovery of silver mines in the neighbourhood during the 12th century, raised this city into importance. It was long the residence of the Saxon princes. The town-house was built in 1410, the cathedral 1484—1512, and the mining academy was opened in 1767. Frederick II. of Prussia defeated the Austrian and Saxon army near this town in 1745. (See HOHENFREIBERG.)

FREIBERG, or FREYBERG (Battle). — Prince Henry of Prussia defeated the Austrians under the Prince of Stolberg, near this place in Saxony, Oct. 29, 1762.

FREIBURG (Baden).—The cathedral, commenced in 1122, was not completed till 1513. The university was founded in 1456.

FREIBURG, FREYBURG, or FRIBURG (Switzerland), the capital of a canton of the same name, was built in 1179. Freiburg became a sovereign canton in 1481. The form of government was remodelled in 1830. The canton joined the Sonderbund in May, 1846, and the town was taken by the confederate troops Nov. 13, 1847. The suspension-bridge was erected in 1834. This town must not be confounded with a place of the same name in Baden.

FREISING (Bavaria), made a bishopric in 738, of which the holders became princes in 1619. It was secularized in 1802. The cathedral dates from the 12th century.

FREJUS (France), the ancient Forum Julii, was made the seat of a Roman colony by Julius Cæsar. A Roman navy was, under the emperors, stationed at this port. An action between a French squadron and some English ships took place near Frejus Bay, July 13, 1795, when three English vessels suffered some damage, and the French 74, the Alcide, took fire. Napoleon Buonaparte disembarked at this port, Oct. 9, 1799, on his return from Egypt. He arrived here April 27, 1814, and embarked the following day for Elba.

FRENCH AMERICA.—The French possess a portion of Guiana, Guadaloupe, Martinico, and some smaller islands in America.

FRENCH FURY.—(See ANTWERP.)

FRENCH LANGUAGE.—The French language is, according to Hallam, one of the principal of "many dialects deviating from each other in the gradual corruption of the Latin, once universally spoken by the subjects of Rome in her western provinces." Latin seems to have been the vulgar tongue as late as about 670; but by the middle of the 8th century, a rustic dialect was established, which was ordered to be used in the explanation of homilies, by the Council of Tours, in 813. The earliest written record of this language is the oath of Louis of Germany and Charles II. (the Bald), in 842. The earliest poem extant in this dialect is a fragment on Boëtius, supposed to have been written about 1000. French became the language of the English court after the Conquest, in 1066, but its use in law pleadings was discontinued in 1362.

FRENCHTOWN (Canada), having been seized by the Americans, Jan. 22, 1813, was recaptured by Gen. Proctor Jan. 24. The Americans, who had lost 300 men, surrendered prisoners of war.

FRESCO, or FRESCO-PAINTING, was practised by the Egyptians and the Greeks at a very early period. The art was revived in Italy during the 14th century, and carried to great perfection. Having fallen into disuse, it was restored by some Germans in 1816.

FRÉTEVAL or FRETTEVAL (Battle). — Richard I. defeated Philip II. of France at this place in France, July 15, 1194. Richard I. captured the records of the kingdom.

FRETHERN (Battle). — Ceawlin's brother Cutha was killed in a battle with the Britons at this place, near Stroud, in Gloucestershire, in 584. Ceawlin gained the victory, and committed great ravages.

FRETVILLE.—A treaty was concluded between Henry II. of England and Louis VII. of France at this town, between Chartres and Tours, July 21, 1170. Becket, who was in the neighbourhood, held a conference with Henry II., with whom he was reconciled July 22, 1170. (See CLARENDON CONSTITUTIONS.)

FREUDENSTADT (Würtemberg).—This town was founded in 1599 by Protestant refugees from Austria, under Duke Frederick, by whom it was called Friedrichstadt, which was changed for its present title in 1609. It was taken by the French in 1799.

FREYR (Treaty).—The earliest commercial treaty between France and Spain was signed at this castle in Belgium, Oct. 25, 1675.

FREYSINGEN (Bavaria).—The cathedral of this city was erected in 718 by St. Corbinian. It was formerly the capital of a sovereign bishopric, which was annexed to Bavaria in 1803. The timber bridge over the Isar was erected in 1808, and the bishopric was transferred to Munich and made archiepiscopal in 1817.

FRIARS HERMITS MINOR. — (See CAPUCHINS.)

FRIARS OBSERVANT.—(See OBSERVANTS.)

FRICKTHAL (Switzerland).—This district, invaded by the Hungarians in 900, was ceded to France by the treaty of Luneville, Feb. 9, 1801. In 1802 it was restored to Switzerland, and by the Act of Mediation, Feb. 20, 1803, it was incorporated with the canton of Aargau.

FRIDAY, the sixth day of the week, is said to be named after Frea, or Friga, the wife of Odin, in Scandinavian mythology.

FRIDAY-STREET CLUB (London). — (See MERMAID CLUB.)

FRIEDBERG (Battle).—Gen. Moreau, having crossed the Danube Aug. 19, forced the passage of the Lech at Augsburg Aug. 24, and defeated Gen. Latour at Friedberg in Bavaria the same day. (See JOHANNISBERG.)

FRIEDLAND (Battle).—The French, commanded by Napoleon I., defeated the Russian and Prussian army in a great battle at this town, on the Alle, in Prussia, June 14, 1807.

FRIEDLINGEN (Battle). — Marshal Villars defeated the cavalry of Prince Louis of Baden at this place on the Upper Rhine, Oct. 12, 1702.

FRIEDRICHSHAFEN (Würtemberg).—This town was formed by King Frederick I. of Würtemberg in 1811 and 1812.

FRIEDWALD (Treaty) was concluded between France and the Protestant princes of Germany, Oct. 5, 1551.

FRIENDLY ISLANDS (Pacific), also called Tongan Islands, consisting of three groups, containing nearly 200 islands, were discovered by Tasman, in Jan., 1643. Capt. Cook gave them the name of the Friendly Islands in 1773, on account of the kind reception which he experienced from the inhabitants. Missionaries were first sent to these islands in 1797. (See AMSTERDAM ISLAND and TONGA.)

FRIENDLY SOCIETIES. — These institutions are of very early origin, and were general among the Anglo-Saxons, though the date at which they originated is not known. One was founded in London in 1715, which was, perhaps, the earliest modern friendly society, and they made such progress that 16,000 societies are said to have existed between June 19, 1829, and Sep. 30, 1852. They were first brought under legislative control by 33 Geo. III. c. 54 (June 21, 1793), which is known as Mr. Rose's Act. Many statutes were subsequently enacted. They were repealed by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63 (July 23, 1855), which consolidated all previous statutes, and was amended by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 101 (Aug. 2, 1858), and 23 & 24 Vict. c. 58 (Aug. 6, 1860), which are the laws now in force respecting friendly societies.

FRIENDS (Society of).—(See QUAKERS.)

FRIENDS OF GOD arose in the 14th century in Germany and Switzerland. Milman (Lat. Christ. b. xiv. ch. 7) describes them thus:—"In all the great cities rose a secret unorganized brotherhood, bound together only by silent unfelt sympathies, the Friends of God. This appellation was a secession, a tacit revolt, an assumption of superiority. God was not to be worshipped in the church alone, with the Clergy alone, with the Monks alone, in the Ritual, even in the Sacraments; he was within, in the heart, in the life. This and kindred brotherhoods embraced all orders,—Priests, Monks, Friars, Nobles, Burghers, Peasants; they had their Prophets and Prophetesses; above all, their Preachers."

FRIENDS OF THE PEOPLE.—An association under this name was formed in London in the spring of 1792. Its object was to obtain a reform in the representation of the people, and it included amongst its members, according to a contemporary authority, some of "the most conspicuous characters, among the merchants and literary men, throughout the kingdom." A debate on the subject followed in the House of Commons, April 30, 1792. A similar society was formed in Edinburgh.

FRIESLAND, or EAST FRIESLAND (Hanover).—This territory, occupied by the ancient Frisians, was divided into East and West Friesland in the 13th century. It became a fief of the empire in 1657. Prussia obtained possession in 1744. It was wrested from her by France, and transferred to Holland in 1807. In 1810 it was made a province of France. The French were expelled by the allied armies in 1813, and East Friesland was restored to Prussia in 1814, and allotted to Hanover in 1815.

FRIESLAND, or VRIESLAND (Holland), called West Friesland, to distinguish it from a province of the same name in Germany, forms part of the country occupied by the ancient Frisians. It was made one of the United Provinces in 1581, and became a province of Holland in 1609.

FRISIANS, or FRISII.—This ancient Teutonic race, inhabiting the north-west of Germany, were made tributary to Rome by Drusus, but revolted in 28. Corbulo, the general of Claudius, reduced them to subjection in 47, and Nero (54—68) expelled them from some lands they had seized on the south shores of the Zuyder Zee. A band of Frisii accompanied the Saxons on their invasion of Britain in the 5th century, and in 689 part of the nation was subdued and compelled to embrace Christianity by Pepin d'Heristal. Charlemagne conquered the eastern Frisians in 785, and despatched Christian missionaries, who prepared the Lex Frisionum for their defence and government in 802. (See FRIESLAND.)

FRITZLAR, or FRIZLAR (Hesse-Cassel).—This town, the seat of the bishopric of Bürberg, erected by St. Boniface in 741, was taken by Conrad, Landgrave of Thuringia, in 1232; and by the Duke of Brunswick in 1761. In 1802 it was annexed to Hesse-Cassel.

FRIULI (Austria).—This province of Venetia, erected by the Lombards into a duchy, which comprised part of Carniola (q. v.), was afterwards conquered by Charlemagne, and given in the 9th century to Eberhard. In the 10th century it belonged to the Patriarch of Aquileia, from whom it was wrested in 1420 by the Venetians, who abandoned part of it to the Emperor Maximilian I. in 1509. In 1797 the remainder was ceded to Austria, who surrendered it to Napoleon I. by the treaty of Presburg, Dec. 26, 1805. It was restored to Austria in 1814. In consequence of revolutionary movements, a state of siege was proclaimed here Nov. 11, 1864.

FROBISHER STRAIT was discovered by Sir Martin Frobisher, Aug. 11, 1576.

FRONDEURS and MAZARINS.—The arbitrary acts of Mazarin provoked opposition in France, and those who supported the minister were called Mazarins, and those who supported the Parliaments who opposed him were called Frondeurs, or Slingers. The name by which they were compared to the scholars, who fought with slings in the ditches of Paris, and took to flight on the approach of the watch, was given to them in derision. The struggle between these parties led to civil strife, called the war of the Fronde, which lasted from 1648 to 1652.

FRONSAC (France).—The castle of this town, erected by Charlemagne in 768, and restored in the 15th century, was destroyed by order of Louis XIII. in 1623. The town, which gave title to a count in 1551, became a marquisate in 1555, and a dukedom in 1608.

FRONTIGNAN (Sea-fight).—Admiral Collingwood compelled the French Admiral, Baudin, to run his fleet aground and burn his vessels at this place at the mouth of the Rhone, Oct. 24, 1809.

FRONT ROYAL (Battle).—The Federals, under Col. Kenley, were defeated and driven from their position at this place in Virginia, by the Confederates under Col. Ashby, May 23, 1862.

FROZEN OCEAN.—This term is applied to the Polar Seas. In 1636 the Russians ascertained that they washed the northern shores of Asia. Wrangel explored the limits of the Frozen Ocean in 1821.

FRUIT.—The following table contains a list of the principal fruits, and the date of their introduction into this country:—

FRUITERERS.—This Company was incorporated in 1605.

FU-CHOW.—(See FOO-CHOW-FOO.)

FUCHSIA.—The fuchsia was first noticed by Fuchs in 1501. The scarlet fuchsia was introduced from Chili in 1788, the slender fuchsia from the same place in 1822, and the tree fuchsia from Mexico in 1823. There are many varieties of this American plant.

FUCINUS.—(See LAKE FUCINUS.)

FUENTE CANTOS (Battle).—The French, under Marshal Mortier, defeated the Spaniards at this town in Spain, Sep. 15, 1810.

FUENTES DE ONORO (Battle).—Several actions took place between the French and English near this town, in Spain, in 1811. Here Wellington, with 32,000 foot and 1,200 horse, defeated Massena at the head of 40,000 foot and 5,000 horse, May 3, 1811. Massena renewed the attack May 5, and after a gallant struggle was compelled to retire.

FUESSEN (Peace), between Maria Theresa, Queen of Hungary, and the Elector of Bavaria, was concluded at the instigation of the English Government, April 22, 1745. The Elector renounced his pretensions to the Austrian succession, and Maria Theresa relinquished her claims to Bavaria.

FUGALIA.—(See REGIFUGIUM.)

FUGGERS.—This family of merchants, residing at Augsburg, amassed great wealth in their trade with India and many parts of Europe, in the 15th and 16th centuries. Charles V. made them counts of the empire in 1530. Some members of the family were distinguished for their encouragement of literature. They established libraries and charitable institutions.

FUGITIVE SLAVE BILL.—By this act, which passed the American Congress Sep. 18, 1850, fugitive slaves who had escaped into another state were to be restored to their owners, their testimony was not to be admissible, and any assistance shown them in their flight, or opposition offered to their arrest, was declared penal.

FÜHNEN, FÜNEN, FIONIE, or FYEN (Denmark).—This island, forming part of the kingdom of Denmark, was occupied by the Danish army which left the whole of Jutland in the occupation of the Prussians and Austrians, April 29, 1864.

FULDA (Hesse-Cassel).—An abbey founded here in 744, by St. Boniface, obtained great privileges, and was made a bishopric in 822. The church of St. Michael was built in 822. Fulda, with its territory, was erected into a principality by the Prince of Nassau-Orange in 1803. Napoleon I. annexed it to the grand-duchy of Frankfort in 1810. It was divided in 1814, and ceded to Hesse-Cassel in 1815.

FULFORD (Battle).—Edwin and Morcar were defeated at this place, near York, by the Norwegians, under Harold Hardrada, King of Norway, and Tostig, Sep. 20, 1066.

FULGURITES were first discovered in 1711 at Maasel, in Silesia.

FULHAM (Middlesex) belonged to the bishopric of London as early as 691. The bishop's palace was erected during the reign of Henry VII., and the gardens began to acquire celebrity in 1650. Sir William Powell's almshouses were founded in 1680, the bridge to Putney was built in 1729, the Starch-green almshouses were erected in 1812, and the new almshouses in 1834.

FULTON (Battle).—Col., afterwards Gen. McNeil, defeated the Confederate, Gen. Harris, at this place in Missouri, July 17, 1861.

FUMAGE.—(See HEARTH MONEY.)

FUNCHA, or FUNCHAL (Madeira).—This town, the capital of the island, was erected into a bishopric, subject to the Patriarch of Lisbon, in 1422. It was much injured by inundations in Oct., 1803; in Oct., 1842; and in Dec., 1855.

FUNDS.—The funding system appears to have originated at Venice, where it was established as early as 1172. In 1600 it was introduced into Holland, in 1672 into France by Louvois, and in 1689 into England. In this country the legal per-centage was at first six per cent; but by 12 Anne, st. 2, c. 16 (1713), it was reduced to five per cent. The legal restriction to five per cent. for interest was abolished by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 90 (1854).

A.D.
1716. The sinking-fund is established.
1726. Bank annuities are created.
1747. Three per cent. reduced annuities are established.
1751. Three per cent. consols are created.
1758. Three-and-a-half per cent. annuities are created.
1761. Long annuities are created.
1762. Four per cent. consols are introduced.
1771. New three-and-a-half per cent. annuities are created.
1796. Five per cent. annuities are created.
1818. Three-and-a-half per cents. are introduced.
1822. The five per cents. are reduced to four per cents.
1843. The "dead weight" annuity, to expire in 1867, is created.
1824. Reduced three-and-a-half per cents. are created.
1830. New five per cent. annuities are created.
1844. New annuities are formed. The three per cents. at par the first time in the century.
1852. The three per cents. above par.
1853. New annuities at two-and-a-half per cent., and new three-and-a-half per cent. annuities.
1860. The long annuities expire.

FUNERAL GAMES. — The Greeks and Romans frequently celebrated the funeral obsequies of persons of distinction by races, processions, dramatic representations, and gladiatorial combats. The practice was of ancient origin, as Homer commemorates the games celebrated by Achilles in honour of Patroclus. The "Adelphi" of Terence was first performed at the funeral of Lucius Æmilius Paulus, B.C. 160.

FUNERALS and FUNERAL RITES.—The first people who celebrated funerals with special ceremonies are supposed to have been the Egyptians, from whom the custom was imported into Greece by Cecrops, about B.C. 1556. The practice of delivering orations over the bodies of eminent persons is one of great antiquity, and is probably alluded to in the lamentation of David over Saul and Jonathan, (2 Sam. i. 17—27), B.C. 1055. The custom was introduced into Greece by Solon, and Pericles delivered a famous harangue in honour of the Athenian victims of the Peloponnesian war, B.C. 431. The first Roman lady honoured with an oration was Popilia. Nero pronounced one over his wife, Poppæa, in 65. The ancient Christians always interred their dead, in opposition to the heathen, who practised incremation, though they also adopted the custom of sepulture before 420. Speaking of funerals among the primitive Christians, Bingham says (xxiii. ii. s. 6, c. 3, 1), "No act of charity was more magnified by the ancients than this of burying the dead; and therefore they many times ventured upon it even with the hazard of their lives." The Romish custom of burying the Eucharist with the dead originated about 814. The custom of burying the dead with a monk's cowl over the head was discontinued in 1530. Funeral feasts were so common, that they were forbidden in 1569, to prevent the increase of plague. The following eminent persons have been honoured with public funerals:—George Monk, Duke of Albemarle, April 30, 1670; the Duke of Rutland, Nov. 17, 1787; Lord Nelson, Jan. 9, 1806; Mr. Pitt, Feb. 22, 1806; Mr. Fox, Oct. 10, 1806; Mr. Sheridan, July 13, 1816; Mr. Canning, Aug. 16, 1827; and the Duke of Wellington, Nov. 18, 1852.

FUNF-KIRCHEN, or FIVE-CHURCHES (Hungary).—This town existed, according to tradition, in the time of the Romans. Its university was established in 1364. It was seized in 1543 by the Turks. In 1664 it was taken and pillaged by the Austrians, and in 1686 was finally surrendered by the Ottomans.

FURNEAUX ISLANDS (Bass's Strait) were discovered by Capt. Furneaux, Friday, March 19, 1773.

FURNES, or VEURNE (Belgium). — This town, having been destroyed by the Vandals and Northmen, was rebuilt about 870, by Baldwin I. (Bras-de-Fer), Count of Flanders. It was taken by the French in 1297 and 1488; by the Spaniards in 1583; by the French in 1646; by the Austrians in 1648; and by the French in 1658, 1667, 1675, 1693, 1744, 1792, 1793, and 1794, and formed, till 1814, part of the department of the Lys.

FURNIVAL'S INN (London).—(See LINCOLN'S INN.)

FURRUCKABAD (Hindostan).—This territory was ceded to the East India Company June 4, 1802. Holkar's army was defeated by Lord Lake, at the fortified town of Furruckabad, at one time called Nellaru, Nov. 17, 1804.

FURS.—Beckmann says that furs are not often mentioned as articles of clothing in the Scriptures. They were known to the Romans in the 2nd century. Honorius forbade the use of furs in Rome in 397. This order was renewed in 399 and 416. A Norwegian ship brought furs to England, as merchandise, in 878. Furs were dyed as early as the 12th century; and about this time the clergy were forbidden to use them by decree of a council. In 1336, Edward III. enacted that no person who did not possess a yearly income of one hundred pounds should be permitted to wear them. The fur trade grew into importance in the beginning of the 17th century. (See HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY.)

FÜRSTEN BUND, or LEAGUE OF THE GERMAN PRINCES. — This league of the princes of Germany, formed at the instigation of Frederick II. of Prussia, to resist the encroachments of the Emperor Joseph, was signed at Berlin July 23, 1785, by Prussia, Saxony, and Hanover; and was joined by the Electors of Mayence and Trèves, the Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel, the Dukes of Brunswick, Mecklenburg, Saxe-Weimar, and Saxe-Gotha; and other minor German princes. It formed the basis of the Germanic Confederation (q. v.).

FURTH (Battle).—Gustavus II. (Adolphus) failed in an attempt to storm Wallenstein's camp, near this town of Bavaria, in 1632.

FURTH (Bavaria). — This town, founded about the 10th century, and the scene in 947 of a council of the German nobles and the Emperor Louis IV., was burned in 1634 by the Austrian Croats, and was again destroyed by fire in 1680. It was annexed to Bavaria by the treaty of Presburg, Dec. 26, 1805, and obtained municipal rights in 1818. The railway to Nuremberg, the first established in Germany, was completed in 1836.

FURY and HECLA STRAIT (N. America).—This channel, dividing Cockburn Island from the peninsula of Melville, was discovered in 1821 by Parry.

FUSILIERS. — These soldiers were originally armed with fusees, which they threw with slings. The 21st regiment, or Royal North British Fusiliers, were raised Sep. 23, 1679; the 7th regiment, or Royal English Fusiliers, June 11, 1685; and the 23rd regiment, or Royal Welsh Fusiliers, March 17, 1688.

FÜSSEN (Treaty). — By this treaty, concluded at Füssen, in Bavaria, April 22, 1745, Maria Theresa, Queen of Hungary, recognized Charles Albert, the deceased Elector of Bavaria, as Emperor of Germany, and his widow as Empress, and restored to his son, the Elector Maximilian Joseph I., all his Bavarian possessions. The Elector, on his part, renounced his claim to the Austrian succession, and guaranteed the Pragmatic Sanction (q. v.).

FUTEHGUNGE (Battles).—The Nabob of Oude having in 1774 gained a victory in the district of Bareilly, by which he acquired a large part of Rohilcund, erected the town of Futehgunge, or Victory Market, to commemorate the success. A second battle, fought in 1796 near the scene of the first, is also distinguished by the erection of a town bearing the same name.

FUTTEGHUR, or FUTTY-GUHR (Hindostan).—The native troops stationed here displayed much insubordination June 3 and 10, 1857. Some of the English took to their boats, and proceeded down the Ganges, June 10. Those that remained defended the fort with great gallantry until July 4, when they also sought refuge in their boats. Both parties were inhumanly massacred by Nana Sahib. Sir Colin Campbell, afterwards Lord Clyde, defeated the mutineers at this place, Jan. 2, 1858.

FYZABAD (Hindostan).—This city became the capital of Oude about 1730. Lucknow obtained this distinction in 1775, and Fyzabad has declined in importance. The native troops stationed at Fyzabad rebelled June 8, 1857.

G.

GABALA (Galilee).—Herod the Great (B.C. 47—4) fortified this city, supposed to be the same as Gamala.

GABELLE. — Though introduced in 1286, Philip VI. is generally supposed to have established this tax, which secured the monopoly in salt throughout France, by an ordinance dated March 20, 1340. The people, both in town and country, opposed the gabelle, and it was repealed by the states-general in 1356. It was restored by Charles V. (1364—1380), and ultimately abolished by the National Assembly, May 10, 1790.

GABINIAN LAW, introducing the ballot in the election of magistrates at Rome, was proposed by Gabinius, B.C. 139.

GADARA (Palestine). — This strong city, captured by Antiochus, was restored by Pompey. Vespasian took it, slaughtered all the adult population, and committed it to the flames in 68.

GADEBUSCH (Battle). — The Swedes defeated a Danish and Saxon army near this town, in Mecklenburg, Nov. 20, 1712.

GADES, or GADIR.—(See CADIZ.)

GAETA (Italy), the ancient Caieta (q. v.), was a port of some importance in early times, and after the destruction of Formiæ by the Saracens in the 9th century, attained great prosperity. For a long period its form of government was republican. It was made a duchy in 572. Alphonso V. of Aragon captured it in 1435, and annexed it to the crown of Naples. It has sustained many sieges. The Spaniards took it Jan. 1, 1504; the Austrians in Sep., 1707; and the Spaniards Aug. 7, 1734. The French seized it Jan. 4, 1799. It was wrested from them by the English, Oct. 31 in the same year. The French recovered possession, after a desperate struggle, July 18, 1806. Pope Pius IX. took refuge here Nov. 24, 1848. A revolution having broken out at Naples, the king, Francis II., fled to Gaeta, Sep. 7, 1860. It was besieged by the Sardinian army Nov. 3, and surrendered to Gen. Cialdini, Feb. 14, 1861.

GAGGING BILL.—This term was applied to the bills for preserving his majesty's person and government against treasonable and seditious practices and attempts, and for the suppression of seditious meetings and assemblies, 36 Geo. III. cc. 7 & 8 (Dec. 18, 1795), and also to the act for more effectually preventing seditious assemblies, 60 Geo. III. c. 6 (Dec. 24, 1819).

GAIANITES.—This branch of the Eutychians received this appellation in 537, from their leader, Gaian, Bishop of Alexandria.

GAILLON (France). — Cardinal George d'Amboise erected a castle at this town in 1515, and Cardinal Charles de Bourbon, who died in 1590, built a Chartreuse or Carthusian monastery, which was burned in 1764.

GAINES'S MILL (Battles).—(See CHICKAHOMINY.)

GAINSBOROUGH (Battle).—Cromwell defeated the Royalist Gen. Cavendish, about a mile and a half from this town in Lincolnshire, Thursday, July 27, 1643.

GAINSBOROUGH, or GAINSBURGH (Lincolnshire). — Founded during the Saxon Heptarchy, and the scene, in 868, of the marriage of Alfred the Great and Elswitha, was ravaged in 1013 by Sweyn, King of Denmark. The church was originally founded by the Templars about 1209. Gainsborough was taken from the Earl of Kingston by the Parliamentary forces of Lord Willoughby in June, 1643. The bridge over the Trent was completed in 1790, and the town was made a port in 1840.

GAIS (Battle). — The Swiss defeated the Austrians at this village of Switzerland in 1405.

GAITO (Battle).—Charles Albert, King of Sardinia, defeated the Austrians under Marshal Radetsky at this place in Northern Italy, May 30, 1848.

GALACZ, or GALATZ (Moldavia), taken by the Russians in 1789, was made a free port in 1834. The Russians assembled 10,000 men, and collected a park of artillery, numbering 120 guns, at this place, in Dec., 1853. They crossed to attack the Turks, Jan. 12, and again in March, 1854.

GALACZ, or GALATZ (Treaty).—Preliminaries of peace, signed by Russia and Turkey at this town in Moldavia, Aug. 11, 1791, were confirmed by the treaty of Jassy (q. v.), Jan. 9, 1792.

GALAPAGOS (Pacific).—This group of islands was discovered by a whaling ship towards the end of the 18th century. The Spaniards formed a settlement on the island of La Floriana in 1832. They were ceded to the United States for three millions of dollars by the republic of Ecuador, Nov. 20, 1854.

GALATA, or PERA.—The Genoese established themselves in this suburb of Constantinople in 1261. They maintained several contests with the Greeks, who were supported by the Venetians; and by a treaty, signed May 6, 1352, the Venetians and Catalans were for ever banished, and a monopoly of the trade was secured to the Genoese.

GALATIA, or GALLO-GRÆCIA (Asia Minor).—This ancient kingdom was founded by the Gauls after their defeat at Delphi, B.C. 279. They crossed the Hellespont B.C. 278, and received a grant of land from Nicomedes I., King of Bithynia, in return for the assistance they rendered him against his brother Zipœtes. They subsequently waged war with Antiochus Soter, King of Syria, who is said to have fallen in a battle fought with them B.C. 261; and they also assisted at the battle of Raphia, B.C. 217. Their rule in Asia was limited to Galatia by Attalus I., King of Pergamus, who reigned from B.C. 241 to B.C. 197, and opposed a successful resistance to their growing power. Prusias I., King of Bithynia, defeated them in a great battle fought B.C. 216. Galatia was invaded by the Romans under Cn. Manlius, B.C. 189, and the inhabitants were treated with great severity, according to some authorities as many as 40,000 of their nation dying in battle. Mithridates VI. murdered all the Galatian tetrarchs, with their women and children, B.C. 86, to prevent them from deserting to Sylla. Mark Antony conferred the kingdom on Amyntas, King of Pisidia, B.C. 36, and it was made a Roman province by Augustus B.C. 25. Galatia was twice visited by the apostle Paul, in 51 or 53 (Acts xvi. 6), and in 56 (Acts xviii. 23).

GALATIANS (Epistle to the) was written by the apostle Paul about 52. Various dates, between 48 and 58, have been assigned for its production, and biblical critics are at variance whether it was written at Ephesus, Corinth, or in Macedonia.

GALENA (United States).—This town, in Illinois, was commenced in 1819.

GALENISTS.—In 1664 the Flemings of Amsterdam separated into two parties,—the Galenists and the Apostoolians, named after two preachers, Galenus Abrahams de Haan, and Samuel Apostool. Mosheim remarks: "The Galenists are equally ready, with the Arminians, to admit all sorts of persons into their church, who call themselves Christians; and they are the only Anabaptists (in Holland) who refuse to be called Mennonites. The Apostoolians admit none to membership who do not profess to believe the doctrines contained in the public formula of their religion."——The followers of Galen (130—200), the great authority in medical science, are called Galenists.

GALICIA (Austria).—This province of Poland, on the first partition in 1772, was divided into two provinces, called East and West, the former being annexed to Austria. The Austrians invaded West Galicia in Oct., 1793, and it was annexed to their empire in 1794. It was made part of the grand-duchy of Warsaw in 1809, and recovered by Austria in 1815. An insurrection, which was speedily suppressed, broke out in Galicia Feb. 19 and 20, 1846.

GALICIA (Spain).—The Vandals made themselves masters of this territory in 411. It became the subject of frequent contests, and was taken by the Moors in 713. Pelayo expelled the Moors in 721, and after undergoing various vicissitudes, Galicia was annexed to Leon in 913. Almansor invaded it in 993. It was made a separate kingdom in 1065, but its king was expelled in 1071, and his territories were annexed to Castile in 1072. It was ruled by its own counts until 1475. It was subdivided into four provinces in 1822.

GALILÆANS.—This ancient Jewish sect, named after Judas the Gaulonite, resisted the Roman tax established by Quirinus, and rebelled at various intervals, till Jerusalem was destroyed by Titus, Sep. 8, 70. Eleazar, the grandson of Judas, after the capture of Jerusalem, retired with 960 followers to a strong fortress, where they were exterminated.

GALILEE (Palestine).—From this, the most northern of the three divisions of Palestine, Christ and his disciples were called Galileans (Matt. xxvi. 69, and Mark xiv. 70), in 30.

GALL, ST. (Switzerland).—This canton was formed in 1798, by the union of the territories of the Abbot of St. Gall with the free town of St. Gall, and other districts. The town of St. Gall grew up around a cell formed by St. Gall, or Gallus, in the beginning of the 7th century. An abbey, erected soon after, was celebrated in the 9th century for its school. The abbey was destroyed by the Magyars in the 10th century. St. Gall became a free town at the Reformation, and the abbey was secularized in 1805. It was soon after made a bishopric, joined to Chur in 1823, and separated in 1847.

GALLE, or POINT DE GALLE (Ceylon).—This town was obtained by the Portuguese in 1517. A colony of Chinese was established in 1801.

GALLEYS.—The Corinthian triremes, or galleys, with three rows of oars, were first constructed B.C. 786, or B.C. 703. The dromones, or light galleys of the Byzantine empire, had two tiers of oars. During the Middle Ages, galleys with one bank of oars were used by the Venetians and Genoese, by whom they were introduced into France, about the reign of Charles VI. (1380—1422). The first document referring to the punishment of the galleys, called in French Bagnes, is an ordinance of the French parliament in 1532; but criminals were most probably condemned to row in them at an earlier period. In 1564, the minimum duration of punishment at the galleys was limited to 10 years. The office of captain of the galleys was abolished by an ordinance of Louis XV., Sep. 27, 1748, when the slaves were removed to work in the docks and arsenals.

GALLIA.— See GAUL.

GALLICAN CHURCH.—The French Church was established at a very early period, bishops of many of the existing dioceses having assisted at the Council of Arles in 314. Articles directed against the encroachments of Rome were, in 1438, embodied in the Pragmatic Sanction (q. v.), which was superseded in 1516 by the concordat of Leo X. with Francis I. A declaration of the French clergy, promulgated March 12, 1682, and regarded as the charter of Gallicanism, declares that the authority of the Pope is limited to spiritual affairs, and that it is in all respects inferior to the decision of a general council. This declaration was condemned by Pope Innocent XI. in April, 1682, by Alexander VIII. in Aug., 1690, by Clement XI. in 1706, and by Pius VI. in 1794.

GALLIPOLI (Italy).—This Neapolitan port, called by the Greeks Callipolis, and founded by Leucippus, a Lacedæmonian, was visited by Christian preachers in 44. It was ravaged by the Vandals in 450, and in 1284 was destroyed with much barbarity by Charles of Anjou.

GALLIPOLI (Turkey), the ancient Callipolis, was seized by the Catalans in 1303, and, fortified by them, resisted the troops of the Greek emperor. The walls were shattered by an earthquake. In 1357 the town fell into the hands of the Turks, who restored the fortifications. Gibbon calls it the key of the Hellespont. The French landed March 30, and the English April 5, 1854; and, by April 21, the allied forces amounted to 27,000 men. An advance to Varna was made in May. There was another Callipolis in Sicily, now called Mascali (q. v.).

GALLO (Peru).—This island was discovered by Ruiz in 1526. Pizarro took refuge here in 1527.

GALLOWAY (Bishopric) was founded by St. Ninian about 450. It was suppressed with the other Scotch sees at the Revolution, but was restored and annexed to Glasgow in 1837.

GALLOWAY (Scotland.)—This ancient province of southern Scotland, comprising the counties of Kirkcudbright and Wigton, with other territories, was overrun by the Northumbrian Anglo-Saxons in the 5th century. "Jacobus, rex Gallwallie," was one of the eight tributary princes who did homage to Edgar, King of England, at Chester, in 973, and it continued under the government of independent sovereigns, paying nominal submission to the kings of Scotland, till 1233, when its last ruler, Alan of Galloway, Constable of Scotland, died without male heirs, and his estates were divided between his three daughters. During the 12th century this district was called by the English the land of the Picts.

GALLOWS, and GIBBET.—Fosbroke says that the Roman furca took the form of our gallows when Constantine I. abolished crucifixion in 325. The ancient gallows in England were provided with hooks. The triangular gallows occurs in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. In the 14th century an Italian lord erected a gallows before the door of his house, and repaired it every year. Gibbets, on which the bodies of criminals were hung in chains, were first erected in the 17th century. All the gibbets in the Edgeware Road were cut down April 3, 1763. The last gibbets in England were erected near South Shields for an execution which took place Aug. 6, 1832; and at Leicester, for an execution, Saturday, Aug. 11, 1832. The former was removed in 1832, and the latter in 1856. A piece of an old gibbet might be seen, in 1856, at the corner of Ditchling Common, Sussex. It was called "Jacob's Post," from the name of a Jew who was hung in chains here Aug. 31, 1734, for a barbarous murder.

GALVANISM.—The earliest notice of this branch of electrical science was made by Sulzer, who mentioned the peculiar sensation arising from a piece of silver and a piece of lead in contact with each other and the tongue, in 1762. In 1791, Galvani published the discovery he had made a short time previous, that the limbs of a dead frog were convulsed when touched by a dissecting-knife, and submitted to an electric spark simultaneously; and in 1793 Volta broached the contact theory of galvanism. Aldini produced powerful galvanic convulsions on the head of a recently killed ox, in 1796; and in 1800 Volta announced the discovery of the voltaic pile, which was successfully applied to the decomposition of water by Messrs. Nicholson and Carlisle, May 2 in the same year. Aldini performed some galvanic experiments on the body of an executed criminal in 1803, by which he produced violent muscular contortions; and in 1805 Behrens constructed a dry pile of 80 pans of zinc, copper, and gilded paper. Sir Humphry Davy decomposed potash, and produced potassium by galvanism, Oct. 6, 1807; and in 1809 Mr. Children constructed a battery of sufficient power to fuse platinum, diamond, and other very hard substances. De Luc's pile of tinned iron and gilded paper was made in 1810; and Zamboni's pile of paper disks, covered on one side with tin and on the other with peroxide of manganese, in 1812. Ritter's secondary pile was constructed the same year, which was also memorable for the first application of galvanism to blasting purposes. Sir Humphry Davy discovered the galvanic arc in 1813; Dr. Wollaston constructed his thimble battery, and used it to fuse platinum wire, in 1815; and Dr. Ure performed some curious experiments on the body of a recently executed criminal in 1818. Ampère exhibited his galvanometer to the Royal Academy, Sep. 18, 1820. Other instruments for measuring galvanism were produced by Schweigger in 1820, by Professor Cumming in 1821, by De la Rive in 1824, by Ritchie in 1830, and by Joule in 1843. Galvanism was applied by Sir Humphry Davy to the protection of the copper sheathing of ships from the effects of water in 1824. Ohm's formulæ, relating to the quantity of the galvanic current, were published in 1827; and, in 1829, Becquerel constructed his double-fluid battery. Sturgeon's cast-iron single-fluid battery was invented about 1830; Daniell's "constant" battery, and Mullin's sustaining battery, in 1836; Grove's battery in 1839; Jacobi's and Smee's in 1840; Bunsen's and Robo's batteries, and Grove's gas battery, in 1842. Faraday proved that the producing power of a battery depends on the size of the plates, in 1834; and Wheatstone invented his chronoscope (q. v.), 1840.

GALVESTON (United States).—This port of Texas, first settled in 1837, was fired upon by the Federal schooner Dart, Capt. Alden, Aug. 3, 1861. The town, taken by Commander Renshaw, Oct. 8, 1862, was held by the Federals till Jan. 1, 1863, when it was captured by the Confederates of Texas, under Gen. Magruder. It again surrendered to the Federals, June 5, 1865.

GALWAY (Ireland), called the "City of the Tribes," was fortified in 1124, and the walls were erected in 1270. Richard II. granted it a charter of incorporation, and it became celebrated for maritime enterprise in the 17th century. Galway surrendered to the Parliamentary forces, July 10, 1651, and Gen. Ginkel captured it July 21, 1691. All traces of the walls had been removed by 1779. The railroad to Dublin was opened Aug. 1, 1851. The church of St. Nicholas was founded in 1320, the west bridge was built in 1442, and the Royal College was founded in 1484. Queen's College was opened in Nov., 1849. Riots, caused by Gavazzi's attempts to preach, occurred March 29, 1859. The Galway line of steamers to America was founded by Mr. J. O. Lever, who despatched the Indian Empire from this port June 19, 1858. A postal contract was made with the Government, Oct. 22, 1858, and one of the mail steamers performed the passage from Cape Race in 4 days 23 hours. Owing to an alleged breach of the contract, the subsidy was withdrawn May 15, 1861. It was restored by a vote of the House of Commons, March 20, 1863, and the first ship, the Hibernia, sailed Aug. 18, 1863. It again lapsed in 1864.

GAMALA (Palestine).—This ancient city, situated in the eastern half of the tribe of Manasseh, first mentioned as a strong fortress captured by King Alexander Jannæus (B.C. 104—B.C. 78), was taken and destroyed by the Romans under Vespasian in 67. It is believed to be identical with Gabala (q. v.).

GAMBIA (Africa).—This name is given to a British colony, settled in 1618, consisting of several trading stations on the river Gambia. It was guaranteed to England by the 10th article of the treaty of Versailles, Sep. 3, 1783.

GAMBIER ISLANDS (Pacific), called also the Mangareva group, discovered by the missionary ship Duff, in 1797, and named after Lord Gambier, were surveyed in 1826.

GAMBLING, or GAMING.—The passion for play has in all ages been common among the wealthy and unemployed, and frequently even among the poorer classes. Tacitus mentions the excess to which it was carried by the ancient Germans, who frequently staked their freedom on the hazard of the die, and suffered themselves to be sold as slaves, to liquidate their gaming debts. Justinian's Code (529) contains several enactments for its suppression. The Romans were much addicted to it in the latter days of the Republic and the Empire. The practice was introduced very early into England. The first statute directed against it (33 Hen. VIII. c. 9, 1541) prohibited the keeping of gaming-houses under a penalty of 40*s.* per day, and the frequenting of such places under forfeiture of 6*s.* 8*d.* By 16 Charles II. c. 7 (1664), any person winning money by fraud, cozenage, or deceit, was to forfeit treble the value of his gains, and by 9 Anne, c. 14 (1710), any one who had lost at one sitting, and paid, the sum of £10, might sue the winner, and recover the same with treble its value, and the costs of the suit. The game of passage, and all other games played with dice, except backgammon, were prohibited by 13 Geo. II. c. 19 (1740), and gaming-house keepers were subjected to imprisonment with hard labour by 3 Geo. IV. c. 114 (Aug. 5, 1822). The police are entitled to enter gaming-houses, and arrest the frequenters, by 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47, s. 48 (Aug. 17, 1839), and most of the former statutes on the subject were consolidated, repealed, or amended by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109 (Aug. 8, 1845), which is now the principal statute respecting gaming. Betting-offices were suppressed by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119 (Aug. 20, 1853), and the opposition of constables in their efforts to enter a house was made proof that the said house is a common gaming-house, by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 38 (July 24, 1854). Before 1838, the French Government restricted the right of keeping gaming-houses in Paris to one company, but the Chamber of Deputies discontinued their licence that year, and it has not been revived. (See BETTING HOUSES.)

GAME-LAWS.—The Theodosian Code, published in 438, imposed severe restriction on the hunting and slaughter of game, which term was then limited to ferocious animals. The game-laws of England originated in the desire of the Norman nobility to preserve a stock of animals of the chase for their exclusive pleasure. The first statute on the subject is 13 Rich. II. st. 1, c. 13 (1389), which restricted the use of hunting dogs or implements to laymen holding land of 40 shillings per annum and upwards, and to priests of not less than £10 a year. Fish were first protected from poachers by 31 Hen. VIII. c. 2 (1539), and the appointment of gamekeepers was authorized by 22 & 23 Charles II. c. 25 (1670). Certificates for the killing of game were first granted, under a duty, by 24 Geo. III. c. 43 (1784), which act was amended by 25 Geo. III. c. 50 (1785). The laws respecting game in England were amended and consolidated by 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 32 (Oct. 5, 1831), and in Scotland the principal statute on the subject is 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 68 (July 7, 1832). The shooting of hares without certificate by occupiers and owners of inclosed lands was legalized by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 29 (July 22, 1848). A reduction in the duties on game certificates and licences was made by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 90 (Aug. 13, 1860). By 25 & 26 Vict. c. 114 (Aug. 7, 1862), police constables were empowered to search any person suspected of unlawfully killing game, and to seize his guns, nets, &c., the offender being liable to a penalty not exceeding £5.

GAMES.—The games of the ancients were mostly of a religious nature, serving as important institutions for the promotion of harmony and social union. The education of the ancient Britons chiefly consisted in proficiency in the following games:—The lifting of great weights, running, leaping, swimming, wrestling, riding, archery, sword-play, two-handed sword exercise, spear exercise, coursing, fishing, fowling, music, and heraldry. (See ACTIAN, ISTHMIAN, OLYMPIC GAMES, &c. &c.)

GAMONAL (Battle).—Marshal Soult defeated the Spanish under the Count de Belvedere and Gen. Blake, at this place, near Burgos, in Spain, Nov. 10, 1808.

GAMUT.—This musical scale was known previous to the 11th century, as the monk Guido d'Arezzo, who flourished in 1022, mentions it as having been in use before his time.

GANDIA (Spain).—The university of this town, founded in 1547, was suppressed in 1772.

GANGES (Hindostan).—The Bengal Government sent an expedition to explore the Ganges in 1808. A canal for irrigating the valley between the Ganges and the Jumna was opened April 8, 1854, and considerable advantages have been already derived from it.

GANGRA (Asia Minor).—This town of Paphlagonia, the residence in the 1st century of Deiotarus III., the last king of the country, became a bishopric at an early period. Hypatius, the first bishop of the diocese of whom any record remains, having assisted at the Council of Nicæa, June 19—Aug. 25, 325. A council was held here some time in the 4th century, which has been referred by various authorities to the period between 324 and 341, and to the years 360, 370, 379, and 380.

GAOL CHAPLAINS existed in some places in the 18th century, and by 4 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 28 (July 10, 1823), the nomination was placed in the hands of the justices assembled in general or quarter sessions, who might appoint one chaplain to two gaols when they were sufficiently near each other. They were obliged to receive the licence of the bishop, previous to assuming their office, to perform divine service on Sunday, Christmas Day, and Good Friday, and to keep a journal of all their transactions with the prisoners for the inspection of the justices.

GAP (France).—This ancient town, the capital of the Tricorii, and the Vapincum of the Romans, erected into a bishopric in the 4th century, was united to Dauphiny in the 12th century. It was taken by Lesdiguières in 1575, and was held by the Huguenots till 1582. A national synod of the Huguenots assembled here in 1603. The town, which was ravaged by the plague in 1630, was shaken by an earthquake in 1644, and was sacked by Victor Amadæus II., Duke of Savoy, in 1692.

GARDENING.—The art was common among the Persians and Babylonians, and was in high estimation with the Jews. The Greeks received it from the Persians, and imparted it to the Romans, who planted gardens of great extent and beauty. Lucullus, who flourished about B.C. 110—57, was particularly famous for the magnificence of his gardens, and Pliny (23—79) also carried the art of gardening to considerable perfection. Gardening was revived by Charlemagne in the 9th century, and is said to have been carried to some perfection in England in the reign of Henry II. (1154—1189). The earliest attempt to elevate gardening into a refined art in this country is believed to have been made in the arrangement of the grounds at Nonsuch, which were planned about 1540. The Gardeners' Company was incorporated in 1616. The Horticultural Society was established in 1804, and the Botanical Society in 1839.

GARGAR.—(See AROER, Battle.)

GARIGLIANO (Battle).—Gonsalvo of Cordova, at the head of a Spanish army, defeated the French near the river Garigliano, the ancient Liris, in Italy, Friday, Dec. 29, 1503. This has been called the rout of the Garigliano.

GARNET.—This gem, mentioned by Theophrastus (B.C. 370—B.C. 287), and Pliny the Elder (23—Aug. 24, 79), was much esteemed during the Middle Ages, when several magical properties were ascribed to it.

GAROTTE, or GARROTTE.—When this punishment is inflicted, the prisoner is placed in a chair with a high back, to which his head is fastened by an iron clasp. This encloses his neck, and is fastened to the back of the chair by a screw, which, being turned several times, strangles the victim and breaks his neck. It was practised in a more primitive mode in Spain and its colonies in the 16th century. The term garotting has of late years been applied in this country to a mode of strangulation adopted by thieves in robbery on the highway. By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 21 (Aug. 6, 1861), garotters were rendered liable to penal servitude for life or for any term not less than three years; or to imprisonment for not more than two years. These measures proving insufficient, it was ordered by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 44 (July 13, 1863), that male garotters should, at the discretion of the judge, be once, twice, or thrice privately whipped.

GARRAWAY'S COFFEE-HOUSE (London).—Thomas Garway, tobacconist and coffee-man, of Change Alley, Cornhill, commenced in 1651 the sale of "tea in leaf and drink, made according to the directions of the most knowing merchants and travellers into those eastern countries," thus attracting "very many noblemen, physicians, merchants, and gentlemen of quality" to his shop "to drink the drink thereof." In 1673 wines were sold here by Inch of Candle (q. v.), and in 1722 Garway's, or, as then spelt, Garraway's, is mentioned as the chief resort of "People of Quality, who have business in the City, and the most considerable and wealthy citizens." It was closed in August, 1866.

GARRICK CLUB (London) was founded in 1831 "for the general patronage of the drama; the formation of a theatrical library, and works, and costume; and for bringing together the patrons of the drama." The new house, commenced in 1862, was opened in 1864.

GARRICK THEATRE (London).—This minor theatre, situated in Goodman's Fields, was opened in 1830.

GARTER (Order of the).—King Edward III.,

wishing to emulate the example of the renowned Arthur, and found an order of chivalry which should become as famous as the Round Table, issued letters, Jan. 1, 1344, in which he invited knights of all nations to take part in a grand tournament, to be celebrated at Windsor, Monday, Jan. 19. According to Selden, the order of the Garter was founded April 23, 1344; but Ashmole considers it to have originated in 1349 or 1350. The companions were not chosen till July, 1346, and Sir Harris Nicolas is of opinion that the order was not definitely established until the latter part of 1347. The earliest delivery of mantles to the knights was in Sep., 1351, and in May, 1418, the office of Garter King-at-Arms was created. The collar and George of the order were granted by Henry VII. about 1497, and new statutes were adopted in 1522. The star was granted by Charles I. in 1626. The order of the Garter was re-constituted Jan. 17, 1805, and made to consist of the sovereign and 25 knight-companions, with such lineal descendants of George III. as may be elected, and the Prince of Wales.

GARTER KING-AT-ARMS. — (See GARTER, Order of the.)

GAS.—A burning spring in the collieries of Wigan, Lancashire, which was noticed by Mr. Shirley in 1659, was doubtless nothing more than ignited gas, although it was not so understood at the time. In 1726 Dr. Hales ascertained by experiment the quantity of inflammable air evolved from coal, and in 1733 Sir James Lowther sent specimens of the air to the Royal Society, who used it for experiments. In 1739 the Rev. J. Clayton published an account of his experiments on the distillation of coal, which had extended over a long period of years; and in 1792 Murdoch, of Redruth, Cornwall, conceived the project of applying gas to purposes of artificial illumination. The first gas-works were erected by him at Boulton and Watt's Soho foundry in 1798, and at the peace rejoicings in 1802 the light was publicly exhibited at that establishment with great success. The first employment of gas in Paris also occurred in 1802. In 1803 the new light was adopted by Mr. Winsor in the Lyceum Theatre, and in 1804 Murdoch erected gas-works on a grand scale at Phillips and Lee's cotton-mill, Manchester. Gas was used to light Pall Mall Jan. 28, 1807. The London and Westminster Gas-light Company was incorporated in 1810, and Westminster Bridge was lighted by gas Dec. 31, 1813; and its use became general throughout London in 1816. The London Gas-light Company was established in 1833. Gas was introduced at Sydney, in Australia, in 1841. In Dec., 1851, a stream of natural gas was discovered at Chat Moss, on the Manchester and Liverpool Railway. Gas was obtained from oil and resin by Taylor in 1815, and an improved method for its production was patented by Laming and Evans, April 23, 1850.——Water-gas is also the subject of several patents, the chief of which are Donovan's, dated 1830; Lowe's, 1832; Manby's, 1839; Val Marino's, 1839; Radley's, 1845; Lowe's, 1846; and White's, 1847. The sale of gas in the metropolis is regulated by 23 & 24 Vict. cc. 125 & 146 (Aug. 28, 1860). Gas was applied to the illumination of railway trains by Allen, of the Scottish Central Railway, in 1862. Mongruel's photogenic gas was invented in 1862.

GASCONY (France).—An ancient province, that nearly corresponded to the Aquitania of Cæsar, received this name from the Vascones, or Gascones, a Spanish people who settled here at an early period, and were subdued by the Franks in 602. Gascony for a time formed part of Aquitaine, and on the union of the latter with the French monarchy, in 867, the duchy of Gascony continued independent. It passed under English rule in 1152, and became the subject of frequent contests between England and France, until finally annexed to the latter in 1453. In the chronicles of the time the terms Gascony and Guienne are used as though they were synonymous. They were, however, distinct provinces. Auch was the chief town of Gascony.

GAS-METER was invented by Clegg in 1815, and improved and patented in 1816. The dry gas-meter was patented by Malam in 1820. Defries' dry meter was patented in 1844.

GASTEIN (Convention).—This convention, signed at Gastein, in the duchy of Salzburg, Aug. 14, 1865, by Herr von Bismark and Count Blome, and subsequently confirmed at Salzburg by the King of Prussia and the Emperor of Austria, transferred the government of Sleswig to Prussia, and that of Holstein to Austria. Lauenburg was ceded to Prussia for 2,500,000 Danish dollars: both powers engaged to propose in the federal diet the establishment of a German fleet having its harbour at Kiel, and it was agreed to unite Sleswig and Holstein to the Zollverein.——A treaty of navigation between Great Britain and Prussia was signed here Aug. 16, 1865.

GATESHEAD (Durham).—A monastery was established at this place some time before 653. In 1068 William I. gained a great victory at Gateshead Fell, in the neighbourhood, over Malcolm II. of Scotland, who had espoused the cause of Edgar Atheling. The church was destroyed by fire May 14, 1080, and in 1164 Bishop Pudsey gave the burgesses the liberty of his forests in the vicinity of the town. St. Edmund's Hospital was founded before 1248, and restored by James I. in 1610; and in 1695 the government of the town was vested in two stewards, who were elected by the borough-holder and freemen. Gateshead, enfranchised by the Reform Bill in 1832, returns one member to Parliament. A fire, which broke out in a worsted manufactory at midnight, Oct. 5, 1854, and afterwards extended to a bond warehouse, where large quantities of gunpowder and other explosive materials were stored, caused the death of about 50 persons, and serious injury to many more. The flames extended over the Tyne to Newcastle, and the total value of the property destroyed was estimated at £1,000,000.

GAUGAMELA.—(See ARBELA, Battle.)

GAUGING was practised in this country as early as 1272. By 27 Edw. III. st. 1, c. 8 (1353), all wines imported into this country were ordered to be gauged by the king's gaugers, under penalty of forfeiture and imprisonment in case of neglect.

GAUL, or GALLIA.—This ancient country was divided by the Romans into Cisalpine and Transalpine Gaul, the former signifying the countries of North Italy, on the Roman side of the Alps, and the latter the territory beyond the Alps, now called France.

B.C.
600. A colony of Phocæans from Asia Minor founds Massilia, or Massalia, the present Marseilles.
506. The Gauls invade North Italy, and drive the Etruscans before them.
391. The Gauls again invade Etruria.
390. Under their leader Brennus they take Rome. (See ALLIA, Battle.)
349. The Gauls attack the Venetians.
299. They again invade Rome.
295. Battle of Sentinum (q. v.).
285. Battle of Arretium.
283. Second battle of the Vadimonian Lake (q. v.).
279. The Gauls invade Greece.
222. The Romans form the province of Cisalpine Gaul.
218. The Gauls assist Hannibal.
191. Scipio Nasica defeats the Boii of Cisalpine Gaul.
186. An army of 12,000 men from Transalpine Gaul penetrates into Venetia, and is compelled to return by the Romans.
154. The Massaliots invite the assistance of the Romans against the Ligurians.
122. The Romans found Aquæ Sextiæ, or Aix, their first settlement north of the Alps.
121. The Romans invade the land of the Allobroges (q. v.).
118. The Romans found Narbo Martius, or Narbonne, which secures them the mastery of the province.
112. The Cimbri from Transalpine Gaul invade Italy.
101. Cisalpine Gaul is invaded by the Cimbri, who are defeated by Marius and Catulus.
58. Julius Cæsar invades Gaul for the first time, and defeats the Germans and the Helvetii.
52. The Gauls rebel from the Roman yoke.
51. Cæsar completes the conquest of Gaul by the capture of Uxellodunum (q. v.), and erects the whole country into a Roman province.
43. Cisalpine Gaul ceases to have separate governors, and is incorporated with Italy.
39. The Ubii are removed into Gaul.
27. Augustus organizes the government of Gaul, and visits the province.

A.D.
21. The Gauls rebel under Julius Florus and Julius Sacrovir.
68. The Gauls rebel against Nero.
120. The Emperor Hadrian visits Gaul.
177. The Christians in Gaul are subjected to cruel persecutions.
213. Caracalla visits Gaul.
234. Severus suppresses a revolt of the Gauls.
250. Seven Christian missionaries are sent into Gaul.
258. Gallienus opposes the Franks in Gaul.
260. Invasion of the Franks.

306. Constantine I. defeats the Franks in Gaul.
330. Gaul gives its name to one of the four prefectures of the empire, and comprises Gaul, Hispania, and Britannia.
341. The Franks again contend against the imperial forces in Gaul.
355. The barbarians again ravage Gaul.
357. Julian marches to the rescue of the province, defeats the Alemanni (see STRASBURG), and winters in Paris.
361. Julian is proclaimed emperor at Paris.
365. The Alemanni resume their inroads.
371. The Franks and the Alemanni are expelled from Gaul and Rhætia by Theodosius I.
377. The Alemanni again ravage Gaul, and are expelled by Richomer.

A.D.
383. Gaul is ceded to Maximus.
405—6. The Vandals, Burgundians, and other barbarian tribes invade Gaul.
412. Jovinus revolts in Gaul.
419. The Goths obtain Toulouse and the south-west parts of Gaul.
451. Attila invades Gaul with 500,000 Huns. (See CHÂLONS-SUR-MARNE.)
455. The Britons plant a colony in Gaul, which afterwards becomes Brittany. (See ARMORICA.)
464. Ægidius, last Roman governor of Gaul, dies.
470. Euric attempts to usurp the supreme authority.
473. Julius Nepos cedes Auvergne to the Visigoths.
476. The Roman empire in the West is overthrown, Gaul having passed under the dominion of the Franks, from whom it is called France (q.v.).

GAULTIERS, or GAUTIERS.—These bands of armed peasants, organized in Lower Normandy in 1586, to oppose the ravages of the regular soldiery, were suppressed by the Duke of Montpensier in 1589.

GAUR, GOUR, LAKNAOUTY, or LUCKNOUTI (Hindostan).—This town, the chief of which became independent in 648, was taken in 1202 by Bakhtiar Kilji, and was made the capital of Bengal in 1212. In 1450 it was surrounded with walls by Nasir Shah, in 1536 it was taken by Sher Shah, and in 1574 it was seized by Monaim Khan, who was, however, speedily compelled by the pestilential climate to abandon it.

GAURUS (Battle).—On this mountain of Campania, Valerius Corvus defeated the Samnites, B.C. 341.

GAUZE.—This light fabric is said to have received its name from Gaza, in Palestine, where it was first made at an early period. The manufacture of silk gauze was introduced at Paisley in 1760. A tax of from 2*d.* to 4*d.* per yard was placed upon it in 1784.

GAVELKIND.—This tenure, limited to the county of Kent, was the common tenure of the Anglo-Saxons. Its chief distinction is the division of the property of an intestate father equally among his sons, or, in default of male issue, among his daughters. It was abolished in Wales by 34 & 35 Hen. VIII. c. 26, s. 91 (1543).

GAVOTTE.—This dance, introduced upon the stage in the 18th century, was adapted by Gardel to private drawing-rooms, in 1794. Its popularity declined early in the 19th century.

GAWELGHUR (Hindostan).—This strong fortress was taken by Sir Arthur Wellesley Dec. 15, 1803.

GAY SCIENCE meant (N. & Q., 3rd s. vol. v. 299) in its largest sense poetry generally, more frequently the poetry of the Troubadours, and in a more special sense still their erotic poetry. (See ROMANCE.)

GAZA (Palestine), the ancient capital of the Philistines, is mentioned Gen. x. 19 (B.C. 2218). It was the scene of Samson's triumph and death (Judges xvi. 30), B.C. 1117, and was taken by Alexander III. (the Great), after a long and arduous siege, B.C. 332. Ptolemy I. defeated Demetrius in its neighbourhood B.C. 312, and Ptolemy (IV.) Philopator used it as a depôt for military stores B.C. 217. It was destroyed by Antiochus B.C. 198, was afterwards rebuilt, and was selected by the Emperor Hadrian as the seat of a fair for the sale of Jewish captives in 119. Gaza was a bishopric of the primitive Church, and, according to some authorities, the first bishop was Philemon, to whom Paul addressed his epistle in 63 or 64. The first of whom any certain date is known was Asclepas, who was deposed at the Council of Antioch in 331. A council was held here in 541. Gaza was taken by the Sultan Saladin in 1170, and was the scene of a victory gained by the Carismians over the united armies of the Christians and Ayoubites, Oct. 18–19, 1244. Napoleon took it during his campaign in Egypt in March, 1799, and it was seized by Ibrahim Pasha in 1831.

GAZETTE.—The publication of the official gazette, which commenced at Oxford in 1665, was afterwards removed to the metropolis, and it was called the London Gazette.

GAZETTEER.—The first work with the title was "The Gazetteer's or Newsman's Interpreter, being a Geographical Index, &c.," by Laurence Echard, published in 1703–4.

GAZNEVIDES.—(See GHIZNEVIDES.)

GEDROSIA.—(See BELOOCHISTAN.)

GEEL, or GHEEL (Belgium). — Dymphna, a Christian lady of British origin, martyred on the site of this town in the 6th century by her heathen father, for refusing to comply with his incestuous proposals, became the tutelary saint of all persons troubled with mental alienation; and her shrine, at a very early period, was celebrated for the cures it effected in such cases. The town, which, in consequence, has been ever since the resort of lunatics, became in 1803 the asylum for incurably insane Dutch and Belgian patients, who reside with the citizens, and are employed in such labours as seem best suited to their capacities.

GEELONG (Australia), the capital of Grant county, Victoria, was formally claimed as a possession of the English crown by John Bateman in 1835, and founded on the harbour of Corio in 1837. Its importance dates from the gold discoveries of 1851. The railroad to Melbourne was completed in 1855.

GELA (Sicily).—This city, on the river Gela or Gelas, was founded by a joint colony of Cretans and Rhodians, B.C. 690. Its inhabitants sent out a colony which founded Agrigentum B.C. 582. Cleander obtained despotic power B.C. 505, and ruled till B.C. 498, when he was succeeded by his brother Hippocrates, who died B.C. 491. His successor Gelon was followed by his brother Hiero, B.C. 478, and from this time Gela rapidly declined. The Carthaginians captured Gela B.C. 405; whereupon the majority of the inhabitants abandoned the city. They returned, and Gela once more became prosperous. Phintias, Despot of Agrigentum, removed the inhabitants to Phintias, and demolished Gela, B.C. 280.

GELALÆAN ÆRA, instituted by Malek Shah, one of whose titles was Gelaleddin, "Glory of the Faith," commenced March 14, 1079.

GELDERN, or GUELDRE (Prussia).—This town, founded in 1097, was, till 1343, the residence of the sovereigns of Guelderland (q. v.). It was given to Prussia in 1713, and surrendered to the French in 1757. Its fortifications were destroyed by Frederick II. in 1764.

GELLHEIM, or GOELHEIM (Battle).—The Emperor Albert I. defeated and slew his rival, Adolphus of Nassau, at this town of Germany, July 2, 1298.

GELNHAUSEN (Hesse-Cassel). — Frederick I. (Barbarossa) erected a castle at this ancient free imperial city in 1144. The town, which suffered severely during the Thirty Years' War, was given to the Elector of Hesse-Cassel by a recess of the deputation of the empire signed Feb. 25, 1803. It was much injured by the military operations of the campaign of 1813.

GEMAUERS (Battle).—The Swedes defeated the Russians at Gemauers, or Gemauershof, July 28, 1705.

GEMS have been held in high estimation from the most remote antiquity. The Hindoo poem of Ramajana, which is said to date from a period of 2,000 years B.C., mentions them; and they were employed in the construction of Aaron's breastplate, B.C. 1491 (Exod. xxviii. 15–29). They were also much prized by the Egyptians, Persians, and Phœnicians, and the historical records of the Mexicans and Peruvians establish the antiquity of gems as ornaments in the Western Hemisphere. The Romans carried the admiration of gems to such an excess, that in 460 it was found necessary to pass a law prohibiting their use in the harness of their horses. On the decline of the Roman empire, the demand for gems abated; but it revived in the 12th century, and reached its height in this country during the reigns of Queen Elizabeth and James I.

GENDARMERIE, a name given to a chosen corps of cavalry in the old French monarchy. It was formed by Charles VII. in 1439, but was not known as the gendarmerie till the 16th century. The gendarmerie of the guard was enrolled by Henry IV. in 1609, and suppressed in 1787. It was, however, restored in 1791, and regulated by ordinances issued April 17, 1797, and Oct. 29, 1820.

GENERAL.—This title, which originated in France, was first conferred upon the commander of the royal army about the middle of the 15th century. The title of captain-general occurs in a list of the English army which served at St. Quentin in 1557. In 1620 and 1639 the commander of our army bore the title of lord general.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY, composed of laity and clergy, is the Convocation of the Church of Scotland. The first was held in 1561. James I. suppressed it, and it was restored at the Revolution. The Free Church, on their separation in 1843, established an independent General Assembly.

GENERAL COUNCILS. — The Anglican Church, in common with the Universal Church, acknowledges only the first six, and the Greek Church the first eight, of the 20 general councils recognized by Rome.

A.D.
325, June 19—Aug. 25. Council of Nicæa, or Nice, in Bithynia, was summoned by Constantine I. against Arius.
381, May—July 30. Council of Constantinople (q. v.).
431, June 22—July 31. Council of Ephesus, against Nestor and Pelagius.

A.D.
451, Oct. 8—Nov. 1. Council of Chalcedon, which justified Flavian and anathematized Dioscorus.
553, May 4—June 2. Council of Constantinople (q. v.).
680, Nov. 7—681, Sep. 16. Constantinople q. v.).
787, Sep. 24—Oct. 23. Council of Nicæa, or Nice, which anathematized the Iconoclasts, and restored image-worship.
869, Oct. 5—870, Feb. 28. Council of Constantinople, which deposed Photius, and restored Ignatius.
1123, March 18—April 5. Council of Lateran.

1215, Nov. 11—30. Council of Lateran, against the Albigenses, &c.
1245, June 28—July 17. Council of Lyons, which deposed Frederick II. of Germany.
1274, May 7—July 17. Council of Lyons, which published ordinances respecting the election of bishops, &c., and reunited the Greek and Latin Churches.
1311, Oct. 16—1312, May 6. Council of Vienne, in Dauphiny, where the Pope published the suppression of the Templars.
1409, March 25—Aug. 7. Council of Pisa.
1414, Nov. 16—1418, April 22. Council of Constance (q. v.).
1431, July 23—1443, May 16. Council of Basel (q. v.).
1439, Feb. 29—1442, April 23. Council of Florence (q. v.).
1545, Dec. 13—1563, Dec. 3. Council of Trent, against the doctrines of Luther, Zuinglius, and Calvin, and for the reformation of manners.*

GENERAL FUND.—(See CONSOLIDATED FUND.)

GENERAL SAFETY (Committee of), composed of 25 members, and established at Paris by the Revolutionary party, Oct. 2, 1792, was superseded by the Committee of Public Welfare (q. v.).

GENERAL WARRANTS, not specifying any particular persons, were declared illegal, Friday, May 6, 1763. John Wilkes had been arrested on a general warrant, Saturday, April 30, 1763. Having obtained an acquittal, he brought the subject forward in the House of Commons, and commenced an action against Robert Wood, under-secretary of state, for having seized his papers. This was tried Dec. 6, 1763, and resulted in a verdict in favour of John Wilkes, with £1,000 damages.

GENERALISSIMO.—Cardinal Richelieu is said to have been the first person to bear this title, which he did on taking the command of a French army in Italy in 1629.

GENESIS, the first book of the Pentateuch (q. v.), was written by Moses, who died B.C. 1451.

GENEVA (Switzerland) is mentioned by Cæsar as a town of the Allobroges, B.C. 58.

A.D.

1865, Feb. 10. The military occupation ceases.

GENEVIEVE, ST. (Missouri), was founded in 1755.

GENEVOIS (Italy).—This province, governed in the Middle Ages by the counts of Geneva, passed to the house of Savoy in 1564, when it was erected into a duchy. In 1659 it was incorporated with Savoy, and in 1792 was annexed to France. It was restored to Sardinia in 1815.

GENNET (Order of).—This, the first order of chivalry established in France, was founded by Charles Martel, in memory of his victory over the Moors between Poitiers and Tours in 732. It was named Gennet, or Wood Marten, because numbers of these animals were found in the camp of the invaders.

GENOA (Italy), the ancient Genua said to have been founded about B.C. 707, was the chief maritime city of the Ligures, and at the beginning of the second Punic war, B.C. 218, was in alliance with Rome. Mago, the Carthaginian, seized it B.C. 205, and reduced it to ruins; but it was rebuilt by Sp. Lucretius, B.C. 203.

1861, June 7 and 8. The theatres, &c., are closed, in consequence of the funeral of Count Cavour.

GENOLA (Battle).—The French, under Championnet, were defeated by the Austrians, under Gen. Melas, at this place, in Northern Italy, Nov. 4, 1799.

GENTILLY (France).—St. Eligius, who died in 659, founded a monastery at this town, which was annexed to the bishopric of Paris by Louis II. (the Stammerer) in 878. A council concerning images was held here in 767.

GENTLEMAN.—This name is derived from the Latin gentilis, which signified such as were of the same family or gens, and is a corruption of the French gentilhomme. It exists in some form in all the Romance languages, and is defined by Selden (Titles of Honour, p. 852) as "one that, either from the blood of his ancestors, or the favour of his sovereign, or of them that have power of sovereignty in them, or from his own virtue, employment, or otherwise according to the laws and customs of honour in the country we speak of, is ennobled, made gentile, or so raised up to an eminency above the multitude, perpetually inherent in his person, that by those laws and customs he be truly nobilis or noble, whether he have any of the precedent titles or not fixed besides on him."

GENTLEMEN-AT-ARMS.—This branch of the royal body-guard, instituted by Henry VIII. in 1509, under the title of the "Band of Gentlemen Pensioners," originally numbered 50 men, reduced to 40 by Charles II. in 1670. It received its present designation from William IV. in 1834.

GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY.—Malte-Brun founded one at Paris in 1821. The Royal Geographical Society of London was founded in 1830. The African Association, established June 9, 1788, was incorporated with it July 23, 1831. The Palestine Association, founded in 1805, joined it March 4, 1834; and the Geographical Society of Bengal, founded in 1831, joined it in June, 1832.

GEOGRAPHY.—Egyptian tradition ascribes the origin of this science to Hermes or Mercury, and the invention of geographical maps to Sesostris, who flourished about B.C. 1618. The first Grecian map was prepared by Anaximander of Miletus, about B.C. 568, and the science, reduced to rule by Eratosthenes, B.C. 240, was afterwards improved by Hipparchus, B.C. 135. Strabo, who flourished B.C. 71 to A.D. 14, is the most eminent of the ancient geographers. Modern geography was revived by the Moors, who introduced it into Spain in 1201. In 1478, Arnold Buckinck published at Rome an edition of Ptolemy's Geography, illustrated with copper-plate engraved maps; and in 1532 Simon Grynæus printed an account of the state of geography in his time, embodying the recent discoveries of the Spaniards and Portuguese. Maritime charts were brought to England by Bartholomew Columbus in 1488. Ramusio's collection of Travels appeared in 1550, and Ferrari's Lexicon Geographicum in 1627. The first volume of Malte-Brun's Geography was published in 1810.

GEOLOGICAL SOCIETY was instituted in London in 1807, and its charter of incorporation is dated April 23, 1826. The Royal Geological Society of Cornwall was founded Feb. 11, 1814. The Geological Society of Dublin was founded in Feb., 1832; that of Edinburgh in 1834; of Manchester in 1838; and of the West Riding of Yorkshire in 1838. The French Geological Society was established in 1830.

GEOLOGY is a science of recent origin, although the knowledge of fossils attained by Frascatorio in 1517, and the deductions Agricola drew from the information of the Saxon miners in 1546, might naturally have led to its cultivation. Kircher's "Mundus Subterraneus," which appeared in 1662, contains all then known on the subject. In 1683, Dr. Lister suggested the preparation of maps exhibiting the various soils of England, and in 1694 Burnet published his "Theory of the Earth." Woodward's theory appeared in the "Philosophical Transactions" for 1695; and Whiston published his work on the same subject in 1696. In 1743, Parke published his Chorographical Chart of East Kent, and in 1749 the "Protogæa" of Leibnitz announced his views on the science. The first volumes of Buffon's "Natural History," which also appeared in 1749, are devoted to his exposition of the theory of the earth, which he was afterwards compelled by the Sorbonne to recant. The regular order of strata was proved by the Swedish philosopher Tylas, in 1750, and enlarged upon by the German Lehmann in 1756. Werner's treatise on minerals appeared in 1774, and was controverted by Hutton in 1795. English geology may be said to have been founded by William Smith, who walked over nearly the whole of England in order to prepare his "Tabular View of British Strata," which he published in 1815.

GEOMETRY.—Herodotus and other ancient writers state that this science was first cultivated in Egypt, whence it was introduced into Greece by Thales (B.C. 636—B.C. 546). Pythagoras, born about B.C. 580, and Hippocrates, B.C. 480, made many important additions to the science, which was enriched by the writings of Euclid, B.C. 285. Archimedes, born B.C. 287, and Ptolemy, who flourished in 125, are also eminent among the ancient geometricians. Geometry, with the other sciences, suffered a temporary decline in consequence of the destruction of the Alexandrian library by Omar I. in 640. It was revived by the Moors in the dark ages, and gradually resumed its rank as an important branch of mental education. Euclid was first translated into Latin about the year 1150, by a monk of Bath, named Adelard, or Athelard; and Thomas Bradwardin, Archbishop of Canterbury, who died in 1349, was eminent for his skill in this science. Lamberti's translation of Euclid appeared in 1505, and the treatise of Regiomontanus on triangles in 1533. In 1552, books of astronomy and geometry were condemned to be burned in England as connected with necromancy; but the science appears to have speedily regained the public good opinion, as the first English translation of Euclid appeared in 1570. The application of algebra to geometry was brought to perfection by Descartes, 1596—1650. Kepler's treatise on the capacity of casks, which appeared in 1615, originated the modern school of geometry, which was brought to fuller perfection by Cavalieri of Bologna in 1626. Among modern geometers, Pascal (1623—1662), Simson, whose Euclid, first published in 1756, still maintains its rank as one of the best, and Legendre (1752—1833), are the most distinguished. (See DEGREES OF GEOMETRY.)

GEORGE.—George florins, coined at Orleans, were made current in England in Feb., 1340. George nobles of gold were first coined by Henry VIII. in 1533. Their value was six shillings and eightpence.

GEORGES CONSPIRACY.—This plot against the life of Napoleon I. takes its name from its originator, Georges Cadoudal, a Chouan chief. He associated with him in the scheme Gens. Moreau and Pichegru, and others; but the affair becoming known Feb. 16, 1804, the leaders were arrested, and the plot was abandoned. Pichegru was found strangled in prison, April 6; Moreau was sentenced to two years' exile June 10; and Cadoudal was executed June 25.

GEORGE'S CLUB (London), which met on St. George's Day (April 23), at the sign of the George, and the members of which were used to swear "before George," is mentioned as "still fresh in every one's memory" in the Spectator, No. 9, March 10, 1710–11.

GEORGE, ST., or George of Cappadocia, was born in Cilicia, according to some authorities, and in Cappadocia according to others, in the 4th century. The English crusaders found St. George elevated to the rank of a warrior saint, bearing the title Victorious, in 1096. The Council of Oxford (June 11, 1222) commanded his feast to be kept a holiday of the lesser rank. Edward III. made him patron of the order of the Garter, and from that time he has been the tutelary saint of England. St. George was the ancient English war-cry. His day is April 23.

GEORGE, ST.—This town, on the island of St. George's, one of the Bermudas, was founded in 1613. The general assembly was instituted to meet at this town Aug. 1, 1620. The government house was built in 1847.

GEORGE, ST. (Knights of).—There have been several orders of St. George. Frederick III., Emperor of Germany, founded one in 1470, as a defence against the Turks.——The military Russian order of St. George was founded by Catherine II., Nov. 26, 1769. It was afterwards neglected, but was restored to its original dignity by Alexander I., Dec. 12, 1801.——The order of St. George of the Réunion was founded by Joseph Buonaparte as the order of the Two Sicilies, Feb. 24, 1808, remodelled in 1815 by Ferdinand I., and received its present name from King Ferdinand II., Jan. 1, 1819.——The order of St. George of Lucca was established by the Duke Charles Louis, June 1, 1833.——The Hanoverian order of St. George was founded April 23, 1839. (See ANGELIC KNIGHTS OF ST. GEORGE.)

GEORGE, ST. (Religious Order).—The order of St. George in Algha, founded at Venice by Antony Corrario and Gabriel Gondelmaire in 1404, was suppressed by Clement IX. in 1668.

GEORGE'S (ST.) HOSPITAL, near Hyde Park Corner, London, was founded in 1733. The present edifice was erected in 1830.

GEORGE'S (ST.) ISLAND, one of the Azores, was colonized by some Flemings and Portuguese in 1450.——Another island of the same name, one of the Bermudas, was colonized by the English in 1612.

GEORGE THE FIRST, son of Ernest, the Elector, and Sophia, Electress of Hanover, was born at Osnaburg, May 28, 1660. He married Sophia Dorothea, daughter of the Duke of Zell, in 1682. She died a prisoner at Ahlen, Nov. 2, 1726. They had one son (see GEORGE II.) and a daughter, named Sophia Dorothea, born March 16, 1687, and married to Frederick William I. of Prussia in 1706. George I. succeeded to the electorate of Hanover in 1698, and, in accordance with the terms of the Act of Settlement, became king on the death of Queen Anne, Aug. 1, 1714. He arrived at Greenwich Sep. 18, entered London Sep. 20, and was crowned Oct. 20, 1714. He died at Osnaburg, on a journey to Hanover, June 11, 1727.

GEORGE THE SECOND, the only son of George I. and Sophia Dorothea, was born at Hanover Oct. 30, 1683. He married Wilhelmina Caroline, daughter of John Frederick, Margrave of Brandenburg-Anspach, Aug. 22, 1705. They had three sons and five daughters: Frederick Louis, born Jan. 20, 1707, made Duke of Gloucester Jan. 10, 1718, died March 20, 1751; Anne, born in 1709, died Jan. 12, 1759; Amelia, born in 1711; Caroline, in 1713; George William, born Nov. 3, 1713, died in 1714; William Augustus, born in April, 1721, created Duke of Cumberland in 1726, and died in 1765; Mary, born in 1723, married in 1740 to Frederick, Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel; and Louisa, born in 1724, married in 1743 to Frederick V. of Denmark. George II. succeeded his father June 11, 1727. He died suddenly at Kensington, Oct. 25, 1760.

GEORGE THE THIRD, the eldest son of Frederick Louis, Prince of Wales, and Augusta of Saxe-Gotha, married April 25, 1736, was born in Norfolk House, St. James's Square, May 24, 1738 (O.S.). He succeeded his grandfather, George II., Oct. 25, 1760. He married Charlotte Sophia of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, Sep. 8, 1761. His queen died at Kew, Nov. 17, 1818. They had nine sons and six daughters. George Augustus Frederick, afterwards George IV. (q.v.); Frederick, born Aug. 16, 1763, made Duke of York Nov. 27, 1784, and died Jan. 3, 1827; William Henry, afterwards William IV. (q.v.); Charlotte Augusta Matilda, born Sep. 29, 1766; Edward, born Nov. 2, 1767, made Duke of Kent in April, 1799, died Jan. 23, 1820; Augusta Sophia, born Nov. 8, 1768, died in 1840; Elizabeth, born May 22, 1770; Ernest Augustus, born June 5, 1771, made Duke of Cumberland in April, 1799, died Nov. 18, 1851; Augustus Frederick, born Jan. 27, 1773, made Duke of Sussex in April, 1779, died April 21, 1843; Adolphus Frederick, born Feb. 24, 1774, made Duke of Cambridge in April, 1799, died July 8, 1850; Mary, born April 25, 1776, became Duchess of Gloucester July 22, 1816, died April 30, 1857; Sophia, born Nov. 5, 1777, died May 27, 1848; Amelia, born Aug. 8, 1783, died Nov. 2, 1810; and Charlotte Caroline Augusta, born Jan. 7, 1796, and died Nov. 6, 1817. George III. died at Windsor, Saturday, Jan. 29, 1820, in the 60th year of his reign.

GEORGE THE FOURTH, the eldest son of George III., was born Aug. 12, 1762. He married Caroline Amelia Elizabeth, second daughter of the Duke of Brunswick, April 8, 1795. They had one daughter, Charlotte Augusta, born Jan. 7, 1796, and married to Prince Leopold, afterwards King of the Belgians, May 2, 1816. She died Nov. 6, 1817. George IV. separated from his wife in 1796. She was accused of having given birth to a son in 1802, and a commission of inquiry was instituted in 1806. The evidence was published in a volume, entitled "The Book," in 1813. He ascended the throne Jan. 29, 1820; and Queen Caroline, who had retired to the continent in 1816, returned to London June 6, 1820. She was refused admittance to Westminster Abbey at the coronation, July 19, 1821; and, falling ill, died at Hammersmith Aug. 7, 1821. George IV. died at Windsor, June 26, 1830.

GEORGE THE FOURTH'S CORONATION GULF (Arctic Sea) was discovered and named by Franklin in July, 1821.

GEORGE TOWN (United States).—A Roman Catholic College was erected at this town in Maryland in 1789, which received authority from Congress to confer degrees in 1815. There is also the Convent of Visitation, which was founded in 1796.——George Town, formerly called Stabrock, in British Guiana, was nearly destroyed by fire Dec. 29, 1828.

GEORGE TOWN, or PORT DALRYMPLE (Tasmania).—This town was founded by the English in 1809.

GEORGIA (Asia).—This country, lying between the Caspian and the Black seas, corresponds to the ancient Iberia (q.v.). The present name is derived from Gurj, Gurj-i-stan, or Gurg-i-stan, "the land of wolves," the designation given it by the Arabs and Persians in the 11th and 12th centuries. Alp Arsan conquered the country 1065–8. The Tartars invaded it in 1235, and Timour conquered it in 1388, retiring in 1404. The Turks obtained possession of a large portion of Georgia in 1589, and it fell under the Persian yoke in 1618. The Russians obtained great influence in the country early in the 18th century. Peter the Great obtained some provinces by treaty in 1723 and 1724, and though they were subsequently restored, Georgia was declared a Russian province in 1800. George XIII., its last king, bequeathed his dominions to the Czar of Russia, by will, dated Oct. 28, 1800, and Alexander I. published a manifesto accepting the responsibility, Sep. 12, 1801. Other parts of the country were acquired by the Russians in 1813, 1828, and 1829.

GEORGIA (United States) was founded and named after George II., by an English company, in 1732. The Spaniards invaded Georgia in 1742. It became crown property in 1752, and the provincial legislature was established in 1755. Georgia joined the Confederacy in 1776, was occupied by the English from 1778 to 1786, and was one of the original states of the Union. Its constitution, framed in 1785, was remodelled in 1798; and it seceded Jan. 19, 1861.

GEORGIAN, or TAHITIAN ISLANDS (Pacific), were discovered by Wallis in 1767. (See OTAHEITE.)

GEORGIEVSK (Russia), founded in 1771, was from 1793 to 1825 the capital of the Caucasus.

GEORGINIA.—(See DAHLIA.)

GEORGIUM SIDUS.—William Herschel discovered this planet March 13, 1781, and named it in honour of George III. It has been called Herschel, and more generally Uranus. Two satellites were discovered in 1787, two in 1790, and two in 1794.

GEPIDÆ.—This Germanic tribe, originally inhabiting the shores of the Baltic, expelled the Burgundians from Northern Germany in the middle of the 3rd century, and invaded the Roman territory in 269. Having been conquered by the Huns late in the 4th century, they regained their independence on the death of Attila in 453, but are not mentioned after 566 or 567.

GERBEROI (Battle).—William I. was wounded in a battle fought at this place in 1078. Having engaged in a personal encounter with his son Robert, who had joined Philip I., King of France, his horse was killed, and his own life placed in great peril.

GERBEROI (France).—Henry II. of England seized this town in Oct., 1160, and in 1418 it was taken by the Burgundians and English, from whom it was wrested in 1432 by the Count of Clermont, who reduced it to ruins. The English, who failed in an attempt in 1435, seized it in 1449, and were expelled by Louis de Soyécourt de Mony. It was pillaged by the Burgundians in 1472, delivered from the Leaguers in June, 1591, and was retaken by them in 1593 and 1594.

GERBI, JERBA, or ZERBI (Mediterranean).—This island, the ancient Meninx, situated near the coasts of Tunis, the refuge of Marius when expelled from Africa, B.C. 87, was taken in the 16th century by the Spaniards, who were driven out by the Turks in 1560.

GERGOVIA (France).—Vercingetorix defeated Cæsar in an attempt to capture this city, belonging to the Averni, B.C. 52. The modern Gergoie, near Clermont, occupies its site.

GERIZIM (Palestine).—On this mountain of Samaria, Darius Nothus (B.C. 424—405) erected a temple designed to supersede that of Jerusalem. It was destroyed by John Hyrcanus about B.C. 127, and its site was transferred to the Christians by the Emperor Zeno in 474.

GERMAIN-EN-LAYE, ST. (France).—King Robert II. built the monastery of St. Germanus in the 11th century. Louis VI. resided here in 1124. The English burned the town in 1346, in 1419, and in 1438. A palace was built by Charles V. in 1370. Francis I. rebuilt it in 1547, and it was improved by various sovereigns. James II. of England held a mock court here from 1689 till his death, Sep. 6, 1701. Napoleon I. established a military school in 1809, and English troops were quartered here in 1815.

GERMAIN-EN-LAYE, ST., or ST. GERMAIN (Treaties).—Several treaties have been concluded at this place. The first, signed by Charles IX. and Admiral Coligny Aug. 8, 1570, accorded liberty of worship to the French Huguenots, with amnesty for their past opposition to government and permission to reside in any part of the kingdom.——By another, concluded March 17, 1632, Canada and other portions of N. America, captured by the English during the war, were restored to France.——Another, signed Oct. 26, 1635, established an alliance between Louis XIII. of France and the Duke of Weimar, who received the landgraviate of Alsace and a large sum of money in return for supplying 18,000 men to the French army.——Great Britain, Sweden, and the States-General signed, April 25, 1668, a preliminary treaty, confirmed at Aix-la-Chapelle (q. v.), May 12, 1668.——Peace was restored between Frederick William, Duke of Prussia, and the Kings of France and Sweden, by another treaty signed here June 29, 1679.

GERMAN BAPTISTS.—(See DUNKERS.)

GERMAN KNIGHTS.—The knights of Germany formed during the Middle Ages a feudal order acknowledging no authority. The Emperor Rodolph I. (of Habsburg) dismantled many of their castles in Thuringia in 1289. Götz von Berlichingen and Hans Selbig von Frauenstein, two of the most notorious German knights, attacked a caravan between Forcheim and Neuss in May, 1512, capturing 31 persons and a considerable booty. In 1522 the knights under Hans Thomas von Absberg infested all the roads in the neighbourhood of Nuremberg, and cut off the right hands of their prisoners. Sickingen, the most powerful of the Rhenish knights, also headed a league of his fellow nobles formed at Landau in the spring of 1522 and, under the pretence of assisting the Reformation, declared war against the Archbishop of Trèves, Aug. 27. He was put under the ban of the empire Oct. 8, and in April, 1523, was besieged in his castle of Landstuhl, which capitulated to Philip of Hesse, the Elector of Trèves, and the Elector Palatine, May 7, when he died of his wounds. (See BARONS OF GERMANY.)

GERMAN LEGAL PROTECTION SOCIETY. —This association of German residents in London defended Franz Müller, charged with having murdered Mr. Thomas Briggs in a carriage of the North London Railway, July 9, 1864. The prisoner, who had escaped to New York, was arrested there by Inspector Tanner, of the London detective police force, Aug. 24, and arrived in custody at Liverpool Sep. 17. His trial, which commenced Oct. 27, terminated in a conviction Oct. 29; and in spite of vigorous efforts to procure a mitigation of his sentence, he was executed at Newgate, having previously confessed his guilt, Nov. 14.

GERMAN, SAN (Porto Rico), was founded in 1511.

GERMANIC CONFEDERATION. — This union of the states of Germany, formed by an act of the Congress of Vienna, June 8, 1815, to supersede the Confederation of the Rhine (q. v.), comprised the empire of Austria: the kingdoms of Bavaria, Hanover, Prussia, Saxony, and Würtemberg; the grand-duchies of Baden, Hesse, Oldenburg, and Saxe-Weimar; the duchies of Brunswick and Saxe-Coburg-Gotha; the free cities of Bremen, Frankfort-on-the Maine, Hamburg, and Lubeck; and some minor states. The 50th anniversary of its foundation was celebrated June 8, 1865. In consequence of the Prussian invasion of Saxony (q. v.), Anhalt and Waldeck seceded from the Confederation June 25, 1866. (See PRUSSIA.)

GERMANO, SAN (Italy). — An agreement between the Emperor Frederick II. and Pope Honorius, deferring the crusade till Aug., 1227, was concluded at this Neapolitan town, in July, 1225. Frederick II. concluded a humiliating treaty of peace with Pope Gregory IX. June 14, 1230. The town was taken by the Spaniards in 1730; and the Austrians defeated Murat here March 16, 1815.

GERMANS, ST. (Cornwall). — The seat of the bishopric of Cornwall (q. v.), founded in 909.

GERMANTOWN (Battle). — The English defeated the Americans at this town (included within the limits of Philadelphia since 1854), in Pennsylvania, Oct. 4, 1777.

GERMANY. — The Romans applied the term Germania to a much more extensive tract of country than that at present known under the name of Germany. It was occupied by various warlike tribes, the name itself meaning "man of war."

GERONA, or GIRONA (Spain), is of very early origin, and was taken from the Moors by Charlemagne in 785. The bishopric was established in 786, and in 795 the city was recovered by the Moors. In 1285 it was seized by Philip III. of France, who was compelled to surrender it to Peter of Aragon. The cathedral was rebuilt in 1316. Gerona was taken by the French in 1694, but restored to Spain by the peace of Ryswick, Sep. 20, 1697. In the war of the Spanish succession it was taken by the Duke de Noailles for King Philip V., Jan. 25, 1711. In June, 1808, it was besieged by 6,000 French under Duhesme, who was compelled to retire by the Ulster regiment of 300 men, commanded by O'Daly. In May, 1809, a French army of 35,000 men, under Verdier, Augereau, and St. Cyr, laid siege to the city, which maintained a brave resistance until famine compelled the defenders to capitulate, Dec. 12, 1809. Councils were held at Gerona in 517 and 1068.

GERSAU, or GERSOVIA (Switzerland). — This town, which from 1315 till 1798 constituted an independent state, was united to the canton of Schwyz in 1814.

GERTRUYDENBERG (Holland). — Conferences for the conclusion of a general peace, which were opened at this village March 11, 1710, led to no definite result, and were broken off July 20. Dumouriez captured Gertruydenberg in March, 1793, but was soon after compelled to retire. The French seized it in 1795.

GETTYSBURG (Battle).—The Confederates, under Gen. Lee, attacked the army of the Potomac, commanded by Gen. Meade, at this place in Pennsylvania, Wednesday, July 1, 1863, and compelled them to take up a strong position on Cemetery Hill to the south of the town, where, after a succession of desperate onslaughts, the assailants were repulsed, July 2. The battle, recommenced July 3, resulted in the failure of a gallant attack by Gen. Pickett upon the Federal position, and the consequent defeat of the Confederates.

GEX (France). — This town, at the foot of Mount Jura, conquered by Savoy in 1353, was annexed to France in 1601.

GHAZEEPORE (Hindostan). — This town and the adjoining territory were ceded to the East India Company in 1775.

GHENT (Treaty). — Peace between Great Britain and the United States was signed at Ghent, Dec. 24, 1814.

GHERIAH (Hindostan). — The Mahrattas seized this fortress in the 17th century, and the pirate Angria made it his stronghold in 1705. Angria and his fleet were destroyed by Watson and Clive, Feb. 11, 1756. The English exchanged it by treaty for other places, and it came into the possession of the East India Company in 1818.

GHIARA D'ADDA.—(See AGNADEL, Battle.)

GHIBELLINES and GUELPHS.—On the death of Lothaire II., Emperor of Germany, Dec. 4, 1137, Conrad, Duke of Franconia, son of Frederick of Hohenstaufen, Duke of Swabia and Lord of Wiblingen, which by corruption became Ghibelline, was elected his successor. His right to the imperial throne was, however, disputed by Henry the Proud, Duke of Saxony and Bavaria, and nephew of Guelph II., Duke of Bavaria, who was in consequence declared an outlaw, and shortly after died. His adherents transferred their allegiance to his son Henry the Lion, at that time a boy of 10 years old, and the whole empire was divided into the partisans of Conrad, who assumed the name of Ghibellines, and those of Henry, or the Guelphs. These titles were first used at the battle of Weinsberg in 1140. The strife between the two parties subsided in Germany, but continued in Italy, resulting in war in 1159. The supporters of the popes were termed Guelphs, and those of the emperors Ghibellines. Charles of Anjou expelled the Ghibellines from Italy in 1268; but the contest between the two factions continued until the French invasion in 1495 united them against a common enemy.

GHIZEH (Egypt).—The pyramids of this place were erected by the eight Memphite kings of the Fourth Dynasty, which reigned in Egypt from about B.C. 2440 to about B.C. 2200.

GHIZNEVIDES, or GAZNEVIDES.—This Turtar dynasty, named from Ghizni (q. v.), where it was founded by Alp-Tekin in 961, was defeated by the Turcomans, or Seljukian Turks, at the battle of Zendecan (q. v.) in 1038. Ala-Eddyn, of the dynasty of the Gourides (q. v.), expelled them from Ghizni in 1158, and the last of the race was put to death at Lahore in 1189.

GHIZNI, or GHUZNEE (Afghanistan), in 957, was the capital of a powerful empire. In 1171 it was burned to the ground by Saheb ud Deen Mohammed Ghori, and it never regained its former prosperity. Ghizni surrendered to a British force under Sir John Keane, July 23, 1839. The English were compelled to restore it to the Afghans, March 1, 1842, but it was retaken by Gen. Nott, Sep. 9.

GHRENNAH.—(See CYRENE.)

GHURI.—(See GOURIDES.)

GIANTS, mentioned (Gen. vi. 4) under the term Nephilim, as existing before the flood, B.C. 3468. Chedorlaomer and other kings defeated the Rephaim, another race of giants (Gen. xiv. 5), B.C. 1913. Og, King of Bashan, one of the last of the Rephaim, was slain by the Israelites under Moses (Deut. i. 4, and iii. 1–13), B.C. 1451. His bed measured 9 cubits in length. The Anakim, descendants of Arba (Josh. xv. 13, were defeated by Joshua (xi. 21–22), B.C. 1445. Goliah, slain by David, B.C. 1063 (1 Sam. xvii. 49), was 10½ feet in height. Many fabulous stories are told respecting the height of giants, but there is no certain evidence that above 9 feet has been attained.

GIANTS (Battle of the).—(See MARIGNANO, Battle.)

GIBBON'S TENNIS COURT THEATRE (London), situated in Clare Market, was opened by the king's company under Killigrew, Nov. 8, 1660. Pepys states that he first saw women on the stage at this house, Jan. 3, 1661. The company removed to Drury Lane Theatre (q. v.), April 8, 1663, and the building, after undergoing various transformations, was destroyed by fire, Sep. 17, 1809.

GIBEON.—(See AIJALON and BETH-HORON.)

GIBRALTAR (Spain).—This rock was known to the Phœnicians by the name Alube, which the Greeks altered to Calpe.

A.D.
711, April 30 (Thursday). Gebal Tarik, the Moor, lands at Gibraltar, and commences the subjugation of Spain.
1309. Gibraltar is taken from the Moors by Guzman el Bueno.
1333. The Moors recapture it.
1462. Gibraltar is finally taken by the Spaniards.
1502. Gibraltar is incorporated with Spain.
1552. Charles V. strengthens the fortifications.
1704, July 21. The combined English and Dutch fleets arrive at Gibraltar.—July 23. They open fire on the citadel. — July 24. It surrenders. — Oct. 11. The Spaniards, under the Marquis de Villadarias, lay siege to the garrison.
1705, March 10. Admiral Sir John Leake compels the Spaniards to raise the siege. The Spanish loss during this attempt was about 10,000 men, while the garrison lost only 400.
1713, April 11. It is ceded to Great Britain. (See UTRECHT, Treaty.)
1720. The Spaniards make an abortive effort to recapture it.
1727, Jan. 20. The Spaniards blockade it without success. — Feb. 22. They open fire on the garrison.—June 12. They retire.
1773. The king's bastion is erected.
1779, July 16. The grand siege is commenced by the Spaniards blocking up the port.
1782, May 14. The Spaniards commence their floating batteries.—Sep. 13. The grand attack is made by the combined French and Spanish fleets and 10 floating batteries, which are destroyed by fire, and completely repulsed.
1783, Feb. 5. The blockade is discontinued.
1793. The library is founded.
1801, July 7. The Hannibal, 74 guns, surrenders to the French.—July 12. Sir J. Saumarez, with a fleet of five men-of-war and a frigate, attacks the French and Spanish fleets off Gibraltar, blowing up two Spanish ships of 112 guns each, and capturing one of 74 guns.
1804, Sep. The town is ravaged by pestilence.
1813, Sep. 5. The pestilence reappears.
1828, Sep 1. The pestilence again rages.
1842. Gibraltar is made a bishopric.

GIEN (League).—The chiefs of the Armagnacs (q. v.) concluded a league against John the Fearless, Duke of Burgundy, at this place in France, in 1410.

GIESSEN (Germany).—A university was founded at this town in Hesse in 1607. An indecisive action was fought near Giessen between the allies and the French, Sep. 13, 1796. Blucher fixed his head-quarters here in Nov., 1813.

GILBERTINES, or ORDER OF SEMPRINGHAM.—This order of monks and nuns was founded in 1131, by St. Gilbert, priest of Sempringham, in Lincolnshire, who died in 1189. The order possessed 22 monasteries in England.

GILBOA.—(See ENDOR and MOUNT GILBOA.)

GILDING.—The art of covering wood or stone with plates of gold is of great antiquity, and was employed by Moses in the construction of the tabernacle (Exod. xxv. 11), B.C. 1491. The art of gilding with gold-leaf was known to the Egyptians, who employed it in the decoration of their idols and mummy-cases; and was also practised in Greece, whence it was conveyed to Rome about the year B.C. 183. Gilding with gold-leaf on vol-armoniac was invented in Italy by Margaritone in 1273; and gold varnish was discovered by Antonino Cento, of Palermo, in 1680. See ELECTROTYPE.)

GILES'S (ST.) HOSPITAL (London).—Matilda, Queen of Henry I., founded this hospital for lepers in 1101.

GILTSPUR STREET COMPTER (London).—This debtors' prison was erected in 1791.

GIN ACT. — By 9 Geo. II. c. 23 (1736), every retailer of spirituous liquor in less quantity than two gallons was obliged to pay £50 a year for a licence, and a duty of 20*s.* on every gallon sold.

GINGEE (Hindostan).—This fortress, in the Carnatic, founded in 1442, passed, in 1669, into the hands of the Mohammedans of Bejapour, who retained it till 1677, when it was seized by the Mahrattas. In 1698 it was captured by the imperial general Zulficar Khan, and in 1715 by Saadet Oolla Khan. The French, under Bussy, took it in 1750; and it surrendered to the British April 5, 1761.

GINGER was formerly collected in Egypt, and sold by weight to Europeans. By 12 Charles II. c. 18 (1660), the exportation of ginger from British colonies to any foreign country was prohibited; but, in 1765, large quantities were allowed to be exported to Holland. By 5 & 6 Vict. c. 47 (July 9, 1842), the duty on ginger was fixed at 10*s.* per cwt. if imported from a foreign country, and 5*s.* per cwt. if from a British colony.

GINGERBREAD, sold in Paris in the 14th century, was introduced into England during the reign of Henry IV. (1399—1413).

GIRAFFE, or CAMELOPARD.—This animal, found in Africa, was known to the ancient Egyptians, and was first exhibited in Italy by Julius Cæsar. A giraffe was sent as a present to Frederick II. of Germany (1215—1246), and another, belonging to Lorenzo de Medici, was a great favourite with the inhabitants of Florence towards the end of the 15th century. No living giraffe was seen in Europe for more than three centuries. The first brought to England alive, in Aug., 1827, died in 1829. Four were exhibited in the Zoological Society's Gardens in 1836.

GIRDLERS.—The company of girdlers, or girdlemakers, was incorporated by Henry VI. in 1449, and confirmed by Queen Elizabeth in 1568, when pinners and wire-drawers were admitted.

GIRGENTI (Sicily), the ancient Agrigentum (q. v.), was seized in 825 by the Saracens, from whom it was wrested by Roger Guiscard in 1086. The harbour was formed in 1752.

GIRONDISTS.—A political party during the great French Revolution, so named because its leading members were deputies for the department of the Gironde, was composed of the more moderate republicans, such as Vergniaud, Brissot, Ducot, Condorcet, Pétion, and many others, who played a conspicuous part in the history of the times. They were called Brissotins, from Brissot. The Girondists at first were the dominant party in the assembly; but, owing to their disgust at the massacres of Aug. and Sep., 1792, they rendered themselves obnoxious to the Montagnards, who procured the arrest of 21 of their chief members, June 2, 1793. These prisoners were confined in the Conciergerie, and executed Oct. 31.

GISORS (Battles).—An indecisive battle was fought at this town, in Normandy, between the French and English, Oct. 28, 1197.—— Richard I. defeated a French force near Gisors, Sep. 20, or Oct. 10, 1198. The English watch-word on the occasion was "Dieu et mon droit," which Richard I. assumed as his motto, in honour of the victory, and which remains the motto of the English sovereigns. William II. erected a fortress at Gisors in 1097.

GITSCHIN, or JICIN (Battle).—The Austrians were defeated by the Prussians under Prince Frederick Charles at this place in Bohemia, June 29, 1866.

GIURGEVO (Wallachia) was taken by the Russians in 1771, and attacked by the Austrians in 1790. Its fortifications were demolished in 1829. The Russians were defeated by the Turks, assisted by some English officers, in a battle fought here, July 7, 1854. The Turks, who occupied Giurgevo, July 8, repelled an attack by the Russians, July 23.

GLADIATORS.—Gladiatorial combats are believed to have originated in the ancient custom of sacrificing prisoners of war at the funerals of celebrated warriors. Homer and Virgil both allude to this practice. The first gladiators exhibited at Rome fought at a funeral B.C. 264, when only three pairs of combatants were engaged. The revolt of the gladiators under Spartacus broke out B.C. 76, and lasted for three years, when it was suppressed by M. Crassus. The largest number of gladiators ever sacrificed at one show is supposed to have been on the occasion of Trajan's triumph over the Dacian chief Decebalus, in 103, when no less than 5,000 pairs of combatants were matched against each other. Constantine I., in 325, passed a law prohibiting gladiators in the Eastern empire; but at Rome they continued until they were suppressed by Honorius in 404.

GLADSMORE HEATH.—(See BARNET, Battle.)

GLAMORGAN (Wales).—This county was reduced under the Roman sway by Julius Frontinus, who was governor of Britain in 75. In 440 the Romans abandoned it to the native princes; and at the Conquest, in 1066, it was conferred by William I. on his relation Fitzhamon. In 1107 the district passed into the possession of the Duke of Gloucester. It was erected into a county in the reign of Henry VIII.

GLANDELAGH, GLENDALOCH, GLENDALOGH, or GLENDALOUGH (Bishopric).—This Irish see was founded by St. Keivin, who resigned it in 612, after a very long occupation. In 1192 King John ordered the see to be united to Dublin on its next avoidance, and the union consequently took place in 1214.

GLARIS, or GLARUS (Switzerland).—Christianity was first preached here by an Irish monk, named Fridolin, in 490. Originally the town and canton of Glaris belonged to the convent of Seckingen, but in 1299 they were seized by the house of Habsburg. In 1352 the inhabitants joined the Helvetic confederation, and in 1388 they gained their independence by defeating the Austrians at Näfels. Glaris received its constitution in 1836. A fire that took place in May, 1861, destroyed 500 houses.

GLASGOW (Bishopric), said to have been founded by Kentigern, or St. Mungo, in 560, subsequently fell into neglect, having been destroyed, as is supposed, by the Danes, and was refounded by David, Prince of Cumberland, in 1115. In 1488 it was erected into an archbishopric, which was suppressed on the abolition of episcopacy in Scotland, July 22, 1689. Glasgow became a post-revolution bishopric in 1724.

GLASGOW (Lanarkshire).—The period at which this city was founded is unknown.

1866, March 31. The exhibition is closed.

GLASITES, GLASSITES, or SANDEMANIANS.—This sect was founded by John Glas, minister of Tealing, near Dundee. In 1728 he was deposed for heterodoxy, by the Synod of Angus, and consequently founded a distinct sect about 1730. In 1755 his opinions were embraced by Robert Sandeman, who removed to London in 1760, and, after founding a congregation, sailed for America in 1764. Members of this sect receive the Holy Supper weekly, retain the ancient feasts of charity, or Agapæ, abstain from things strangled, and from blood, and wash each other's feet. In 1851 it numbered six congregations in England.

GLASS.—The probable inventors of glass were the Phœnicians, who are said by Pliny to have discovered its manufacture from the accidental fusion of sand and nitre in a fire lighted by some sailors on the seashore. It was brought to great perfection by the Sidonians. That most esteemed in ancient times was made by the Hindoos. Considerable skill in its preparation was shown by the Egyptians, who practised the art of staining glass as early as B.C. 1150. Vessels of glass have been discovered in the buried city of Herculaneum, which was overwhelmed by an eruption of Vesuvius in 79. The celebrated Portland vase, another specimen of Roman glass ware, was discovered in the tomb of Alexander Severus, who died in 235. There is no certain evidence that glass was employed in windows before the 3rd or 4th century. Jerome refers to their use in 422. They were first introduced into England by the Abbot Benedict Biscop, who brought a number of French glass manufacturers to aid in the decoration of Wearmouth church and monastery, in 674. At first the use of the article was entirely confined to religious edifices, and it was not till the 14th century that it was in sufficient demand to create a distinct business for its sale. The first notice of a glazier occurs in a contract respecting York cathedral, of the year 1338. Window glass of an inferior kind was made in England before 1439. The finer sorts were not manufactured till 1557, when a glass-house was established at Crutched Friars, London. Plate glass was first made in England at Lambeth, by some Venetian workmen in the employ of the Duke of Buckingham. The first glass manufactory in America was established in New Hampshire in 1790. British sheet glass was first manufactured by Chances, of West Bromwich, and Hartley, of Sunderland, in 1832.——An excise duty on glass was first imposed by 6 & 7 Will. & Mary, c. 18 (1695). This was repealed by 9 & 10 Will. 3, c. 45 (1698), and 10 & 11 Will. III. c. 18 (1699). It was re-established by 19 Geo. II. c. 12 (1745), and after successive augmentations was finally abolished by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 6 (April 24, 1845). (See CRYSTAL GLASS.)

GLASS-COACH.—(See COACH.)

GLASS-PAINTING, or GLASS-STAINING.—The art of colouring glass was known to the Egyptians, the Phœnicians, and the Babylonians, from whom it passed to the Greeks and Romans, who carried it to a high degree of excellence. It is mentioned as existing in the 8th century, and is said to have been introduced into this country during the reign of King John (1199—1216), the earliest specimens being found in Canterbury cathedral. The art of painting on glass with enamel was introduced in the 16th century, and, together with the mosaic process previously practised, declined in the 17th century. Attempts to revive it were made with partial success in the 18th century, and it has since been carried to a high state of excellence.

GLASTONBURY (Somersetshire).—According to monkish tradition, the earliest Christian church in Britain was founded here by St. Joseph of Arimathea, about 63. On the death of its founder it is reported to have fallen into decay, until Pope Eleutherius, in 186, despatched Phaganus and Diruvianus, who converted King Lucius to Christianity, and afterwards established themselves in the long-neglected foundation of St. Joseph. Ina, King of Wessex, erected a church at Glastonbury about 719, and Edwy expelled the ambitious Dunstan from the abbacy, which he had enjoyed for 22 years, in 956. In 1081 there was a serious quarrel between the Abbot Turstin and the monks, which resulted in the death of several of the latter. The chapel of St. Joseph of Arimathea, of which the ruins still exist, was built by the Abbot Herlewin, who governed the abbey from 1101 to 1120. In 1184 the town and abbey were consumed by fire, and in Sep., 1275, the chapel of St. Michael was overthrown by an earthquake. Edward III. and his queen, Philippa, were magnificently entertained by the monks in 1331. Richard Whiting, the last abbot, was hanged on the Tor Hill, for opposing the Reformation, Nov. 15, 1539. The monastery was suppressed in 1540, and has since fallen into decay.

GLATZ (Prussia) was besieged and occupied, in 1040, by Henry III. of Germany. In 1114 it was seized by the Poles, in 1421 by the Hussites, and in 1462 it was erected into a county by Frederick III. In 1561 it was annexed to Bohemia; the Austrians besieged it in 1622; and in 1742 it was taken by the Prussians and incorporated with their territories. Alum works were erected in 1563. The Austrians took Glatz in 1759, and the Bavarians and Würtembergers in 1807.

GLAUCHA.—(See CHARITY SCHOOLS.)

GLAZIERS and GLASS-SELLERS.—In 1309 glass-makers themselves exposed their wares for sale. The Glaziers' Company was incorporated in 1637, and the Glass-sellers' in 1664.

GLEE CLUB.—(See CONCERT.)

GLENCOE (Argyleshire) was the scene of the massacre of a tribe of the Macdonalds by the regiment of Campbell of Glenlyon. The Jacobite Highlanders having shown great reluctance to submit to the rule of William III. and Mary, a proclamation was issued, promising pardon to all who should tender their submission before Jan. 1, 1692. Many of the chiefs acceded to the demands made upon them. Macdonald, or Maclan, of Glencoe, repaired to Fort William, Dec. 31, 1691, and offered submission; but the governor was not authorized to receive it. He furnished the chief with a letter to the sheriff of Inverary, who accepted his oath of allegiance Jan. 6, 1692. The Macdonalds had, however, rendered themselves offensive, and William III. issued a warrant for the extirpation of the tribe. A troop of 120 men, led by Capt. Campbell, accordingly entered the valley Feb. 1, and on the pretext that they merely required quarters, were hospitably received by the inhabitants. They lived together in friendly intercourse till five o'clock on Saturday morning, Feb. 13, when the massacre was perpetrated under circumstances of shocking and infamous treachery. Owing to the boisterous weather and the defective arrangements of the assassins, about three-fourths of the tribe escaped. No judicial inquiry into this crime was made till May 23, 1695, when a commission was nominated. The commissioners made some statement June 10, when Bredalbane was arrested on a charge of treason. The report was declared to be finished June 20, and was laid before the House June 24. Bredalbane was set at liberty without trial, and William III. paid no attention whatever to the recommendations of the commission.

GLENDALOCH.—(See GLANDELAGH.)

GLENLIVET (Battle).—The Roman Catholics in Scotland, assisted by France and Spain, defeated the adherents of James VI., afterwards James I. of England, at this place, in 1594.

GLOBE THEATRE (London), situated in Bankside, Southwark, the property of Shakspeare and his fellow actors, was built in 1594, the exterior plan being hexagonal, and the interior circular, while the roof was open. It was destroyed by a fire, occasioned by the accidental ignition of the thatch by some ordnance, discharged during a performance of Henry VIII., June 29, 1613. Having been rebuilt, at the expense of King James and the nobility, it was pulled down Monday, April 15, 1644.

GLOGAU, or GROSS-GLOGAU (Prussia).—The cathedral was erected in 1160. The town, formerly held by the Polish sovereigns of the Piast dynasty, passed in 1476 to Bohemia, and was taken from the Austrians in 1741 by the Prussians, who acquired it by treaty in 1742. The French invested it in Oct., 1806, and it surrendered early in Dec. The allies blockaded it Aug. 17, 1813, and it capitulated April 10, 1814.

GLORIOUS VIRGIN, or ST. MARY THE GLORIOUS.—This order of knighthood, founded in Venice by Bartholomew of Vincenza, was approved by Pope Urban IV. in 1262. A similar order existed in Rome in the 17th century.

GLORY.—See NIMBUS.

GLOUCESTER (Bishopric of) was separated from the diocese of Worcester by a charter of Henry VIII., dated Sep. 3, 1541. The see of Bristol was united with it by an order in council, Oct. 5, 1836, and styled the diocese of Gloucester and Bristol.

GLOUCESTER (Gloucestershire).—This city, called by the Romans Clevum or Glevum, is of great antiquity, though the precise period of its foundation is unknown. It submitted to the Romans about 45, and on their departure became the principal city of the Britons, who surrendered it to the West Saxons in 577. In 679 it was enlarged and beautified by a son of King Penda. St. Peter's Abbey, the present cathedral, was commenced by Wulfhere, King of Mercia, about 671, and restored by Aldred, Bishop of Worcester, in 1058. In 1087, and June 17, 1264, the city suffered severely from fire, a calamity to which its wooden houses frequently exposed it. Gloucester was incorporated by Henry III. The statutes of Gloucester were passed Oct. 4, 1278. The siege of the city by the Royalists under Charles I. and the Earl of Brentford commenced Aug. 10, 1643, and lasted till Sep. 5, when the Earl of Essex brought relief. The walls were demolished in 1662, and in 1673 the city received its chief charter from Charles II. The infirmary was founded in 1755, the market-house in 1780, and the gaol in 1791. The Gloucester and Berkeley canal, commenced in 1794, was not completed till 1826. The town hall was erected in 1814.

GLOVES.—In the classical æra gloves were worn by archers, husbandmen, and others, as a protection from accidents, to which their pursuits rendered them liable. They were first distinguished by pairs about 814, and were introduced into this country in the 10th or 11th century. Stevens, in his "Notes on Shakspeare," remarks, it was "the custom to wear gloves in the hat on three distinct occasions; viz. as the favour of a mistress, the memorial of a friend, and as a mark to be challenged by an enemy," and instances of their use for these purposes are common in the writers of the 15th and 16th centuries. White wedding-gloves are mentioned by Dekker in 1599, and at a wedding in 1604 the gloves given to the guests cost nearly £1,000. The Glovers' Company was incorporated Sep. 10, 1639. The importation of gloves was prohibited by 3 Edw. IV. c. 4 (1463), and 6 Geo. III. c. 19 (1766). The restriction was removed by 6 Geo. IV. c. 105, s. 110 (July 5, 1825).

GLUCINA, or GLYCINA, was discovered in the emerald by Vauquelin in 1797.

GLUCINUM, or GLYCINUM, a metal first obtained from glucina by Wöhler in 1828.

GLÜCKSTADT, the capital of Holstein, was founded in 1619, and fortified in 1620 by Christian IV. In 1628 it successfully resisted a siege by Tilly, and in 1643 Torstenson failed in an attempt to take it. A supreme court of justice for Holstein and Sleswig was established in 1752. The fortifications were demolished in 1814, and it was declared a free port in 1830.

GLYCERINE.—This substance was discovered by Scheele in 1779, and termed by him the "sweet principle of oils." It is obtained in the manufacture of soap and palm candles, and is employed as a material for soap and in medicine.

GNESNA (Posen).—Otho III. made it the seat of an archbishopric in 1000, and it was taken by the Prussians in 1793.

GNIDOS.—(See CNIDUS.)

GNOSTICS.—This sect of heretics is said by some to have been founded by Simon Magus, whom St. Peter rebuked in Samaria, in 33 (Acts viii. 20—24). Gnostic doctrines became general about 81. In 122, Basilides and Saturninus founded new sects in Syria, and in 140 one was founded at Rome by Valentinus. The heresy reached its height about 150, after which it gradually declined, though some scattered sects continued to exist as late as 390.

GNOSUS.—(See CNOSUS.)

GOA (Hindostan).—This city of Bejapore was wrested from the Hindoo rajah by the Mohammedan sovereign of the Deccan about 1469. In 1510 it was taken by Albuquerque, who made it the capital of the Portuguese possessions in the East. Revolutions, unattended with bloodshed, were effected in 1821 and 1822.

GOAT RIVER.—(See EGOSPOTAMI.)

GOBAIN, ST. (France).—The celebrated looking-glass manufactory of this town was established in 1691.

GOBELIN TAPESTRY is manufactured at the establishment founded by Colbert at Paris, in 1662, and named in honour of the celebrated tapestry-makers, the brothers Gobelin. The manufactory was under the management of the painter Lebrun from 1662 to 1690, and of late years Chevreul has introduced several improvements in design and colour.

GOD SAVE THE KING, or QUEEN.—(See NATIONAL ANTHEM.)

GODDESS OF REASON.—(See REASON.)

GODERICH ADMINISTRATION.—On the death of Mr. Canning, Aug. 8, 1827, Lord Goderich became prime minister, with the under-mentioned associates in the cabinet:—

Treasury	Lord Goderich.
Lord Chancellor	Lord Lyndhurst.
President of the Council	Duke of Portland.
Privy Seal	Earl of Carlisle.
Chancellor of Exchequer	Mr. Herries.
Home Secretary	Marquis of Lansdowne.
Foreign Secretary	Lord Dudley and Ward.
Colonial Secretary	Mr. Huskisson.
Board of Control	Mr. C. W. Wynn.
Secretary at War	Lord Palmerston.
Board of Trade	Mr. C. Grant.
Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster	Lord Bexley.
Master of the Mint	Mr. Tierney.
Woods and Forests	Mr. S. Bourne.

Mr. Huskisson resigned the colonial secretaryship Jan. 7, 1828, and dissensions having broken out in the cabinet, Lord Goderich himself resigned Jan. 8, 1828. (See WELLINGTON ADMINISTRATION.)

GODFATHERS AND GODMOTHERS.—Tradition refers the origin of godfathers and godmothers to Bishop Hyginus, about 154, though some authors endeavour to derive the office from the Jewish rites or the Roman civil codes. Parents were prohibited from acting as sponsors for their children by the Council of Mentz in 813. The number of sponsors was limited to one or two, at the most, by the Council of Trent in 1545, but the Church of England permits three.

GODIVA PROCESSION.—(See COVENTRY.)

GÖDÖLLÖ (Battle).—The Hungarians defeated the Austrians at this place, near Pesth, April 6, 1849. The Austrians lost 3,200 prisoners, 26 pieces of cannon, seven standards, and ammunition.

GODOLPHIN ADMINISTRATION was formed soon after the accession of Queen Anne, Lord Godolphin, afterwards Earl Godolphin and Viscount Rialton, having been made lord high treasurer, May 8, 1702.

Treasury	Lord Godolphin.
Lord Keeper	Sir Nathan Wright.
President of the Council	Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery (July 14, 1702).
Privy Seal	Marquis of Normanby, afterwards Duke of Buckingham.
Chancellor of Exchequer	Mr. Boyle, afterwards Lord Carleton.
Principal Secretaries of State	Earl of Nottingham. Sir Charles Hedges.
Lord High Admiral	Prince George of Denmark (May 21, 1702).

The Duke of Marlborough received the garter and the command of the army. A modification of the cabinet took place in 1704, when the Earl of Nottingham retired. Harley, afterwards Earl of Oxford and Lord Mortimer, became secretary of state May 18, 1704, and Henry St. John (created Viscount Bolingbroke in 1712) became secretary at war April 20, 1704. The Duke of Newcastle became privy seal March 31, 1705. William, afterwards Lord Cowper, was made lord keeper Oct. 4, 1705, and lord chancellor May 4, 1707. Harley, in consequence of the indiscretion of Gregg, a clerk in his office, was dismissed Feb. 11, 1708, and St. John immediately resigned. Mr. Boyle, afterwards Lord Carleton, replaced Harley, and Mr., afterwards Sir Robert, Walpole, and Earl of Orford, succeeded St. John. Mr. Smith replaced Mr. Boyle at the exchequer Feb. 11, 1708. Lord Somers was made president of the council Nov. 25, 1708. The Godolphin Administration was dissolved Aug. 8, 1710. (See HARLEY ADMINISTRATION.)

GOD'S GIFT COLLEGE.—(See DULWICH COLLEGE.)

GOD'S HOUSE.—(See CHRIST'S COLLEGE.)

GOD'S TRUCE.—(See TRUCE, or PEACE OF GOD.)

GOES, or TERGOES (Holland).—This fortified town, delivered by Spain from the attacks of the Dutch confederates in 1572, surrendered to the Prince of Orange in 1577.

GOG AND MAGOG.—These names occur frequently in the Bible. In a description of the procession made by Elizabeth, Jan. 13, 1558, mention is made of "the two ymages of Gotmagog the Albione, and Corineus the Britain, two gyantes bigge in stature, furnished accordingly." Douce believes that some figures of the kind decorated the Guildhall long before this date. Richard Saunders carved the present figures, set up in 1708, the old ones having been destroyed in the great fire.

GOHUD (Hindostan).—This town, fortified about the middle of the 18th century, was taken by Scindia in 1784. The East India Company concluded a treaty guaranteeing the Rana of Gohud in his possessions, Jan. 17, 1804. It was not, however, carried out, and Gohud was transferred to the East India Company, in exchange for Dholpore.

GOITO (Battles).—This town in Lombardy was captured by the Imperialists in 1630. It was frequently assailed during the war of the Spanish succession. The French seized it in 1796, and were expelled the same year by the Austrians. The Sardinians took it April 8, 1848; and Charles Albert, King of Sardinia, defeated the Austrians here, May 30, 1848.

GOKOND.—See COCHIN CHINA.)

GOLCONDA (Hindostan).—This town, celebrated in olden times for its diamond-mines, was the capital of a Hindoo principality, incorporated with Delhi by Aurungzebe, in 1687.

GOLD.—The earliest mention of this precious metal occurs in Gen. ii. 11, where gold is said to exist in the land of Havilah, compassed by the Pison, one of the four heads of the river that went out of Eden. In Gen. xiii. 2, Abraham is described as a man rich in silver and gold (B.C. 1897). Solomon employed this metal in every part of the temple and of his own palace, silver being "nothing accounted of" in his reign, 1 Kings x. 21 (B.C. 992). It was also in high estimation amongst the Egyptians, Babylonians, Assyrians, Persians, Greeks, and Romans, and was manufactured with skill by British goldsmiths as early as 628. The standard of gold is regulated by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 96 (Aug. 10, 1854). Wedding-rings are exempted from this by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 60 (July 23, 1855).

GOLD COAST (Africa).—A district on the west coast of Africa, discovered by Santarem and Escobar in 1471, and named in consequence of the wealth thence derived. It was visited by an English expedition in 1591, and became an English colony in 1618. (See GUINEA.)

GOLD COINAGE.—The earliest gold coins known are supposed to be those of Miletus, in Asia Minor, which were probably struck about B.C. 800. The gold darics of the Persian monarchs originated about B.C. 538, and the Sicilians established a gold coinage at least as early as B.C. 400. The Romans first used gold coins B.C. 206. The modern gold coinage of Europe was commenced by the Florentines in 1252, that of Venice was established in 1276, and gold was a general circulating medium in 1320. The principal facts connected with the English gold coinage will be found in the following table:—

B.C.
19. Cunobelin begins to reign, and strikes the earliest known British gold coins.

A.D.
1247. Henry III. commences the English gold coinage by making a number of gold pennies, each worth 20 ordinary pieces.
1344. Edward III. orders florins, nobles, half-nobles, and quarter nobles, to be struck.
1362. The Commons petition for smaller gold coins.
1465. Edward IV. coins gold ryals and angels.
1489. Sovereigns, or double ryals, are first coined by Henry VII.
1526. Henry VIII. increases the value of the gold coins.
1527. Henry VIII. coins gold crowns.
1603. James I. coins gold unites, or broad pieces.
1617. James I. orders a new coinage.
1663. Guineas are first coined.
1670. Gold coins of 10, 40, and 100 shillings are ordered.
1695. In consequence of the large number of clipped coins in circulation, the window-tax is levied to defray the expense of a recoinage.
1701. William III. coins gold pistoles and half pistoles for Scotland.
1732. The broad pieces of James I., Charles I., and Charles II., are recalled, and coined into guineas 1797. George III. coins gold seven-shilling pieces.
1842. June. The light gold coinage is called in.

GOLD DISCOVERIES.—The most important gold discoveries of modern times have been made in California, Australia, and British Columbia. The metal was discovered in California by Marshal and Capt. Suter in Sep., 1847, and attracted adventurers from all parts of the world, insomuch that the immigration was estimated at 50,000 persons at the end of 1848. The gold excitement in Australia did not commence till 1851, though the metal was discovered in small quantities in 1829. In 1841 it was detected in the neighbourhood of the Macquarie River, and in May, 1845, Sir Roderick Murchison announced the probability of large gold discoveries in Australia to the Geographical Society. In 1850 Stutchbury was appointed geologist to the colony of Sydney and Hargraves announced his establishment of miners at the Ophir diggings, near Bathurst, May 8, 1851. The local government claimed the right of search for gold on behalf of the crown, May 17, and before May 19 the diggers at Ophir had increased to between 500 and 600. Dr. Kerr discovered a hundredweight of the precious metal in one day (July 14), and at the end of 1857 the total amount derived from Australia had amounted to £66,135,484. The discovery of gold in British Columbia was officially reported to the governor of the colony, March 1, 1856, and during 1858 occasioned similar immigration and excitement to that previously experienced in respect to California and Australia, although in this case it was chiefly confined to the American continent. Important discoveries of gold were made at Otago, New Zealand, in 1861.

GOLD DUST.—The trade in gold dust commenced in Africa in 1442.

GOLD FISH, introduced into England from China, towards the end of the 17th century.

GOLD-LEAF.—According to Pliny (1st century), the Romans were able to beat gold so thin that an ounce, forming a plate four fingers square, was multiplied into 600 leaves of the same area. The use of gold-leaf in the decoration of houses, furniture, or dress, was prohibited by a proclamation of James I. in 1619. The art of gold-beating is carried to such perfection that a single ounce of gold is made to cover an area of a hundred square feet, the average thickness of common gold-leaf being $\frac{1}{282000}$ of an inch.

GOLD-MINES.—The precious metals were first found in the eastern parts of Egypt and Asia. The Egyptians obtained gold from the copper-mines of Nubia, which were discovered by the kings of the most ancient race, and the metal was also derived from some mines of Southern Africa, of which the situation is now unknown. Job (xxii. 24) speaks of the gold of Ophir, the locality of which is much disputed, B.C. 2130. The first gold-mine in Europe was opened by Cadmus (who is said to have flourished about B.C. 1550) in Mount Pangæus, in Thrace. The sources whence Solomon (B.C. 1015—975) appears to have derived his gold were chiefly Ophir (1 Kings x. 11) and Tarshish, which is supposed to be an ancient name for the south of Spain (2 Chron. ix. 21). The gold-mines of Hungary were discovered about 745, those of Saxony in the 10th century, of Hanover in 972, of Schellgadin in 1378. Gold was obtained from Chili in 1539. In 1543 it was discovered in Brazil, where the Indians used it for fish-hooks; but it was not obtained there by Europeans till 1693. Peter the Great, of Russia, reopened some long-neglected gold-mines in his kingdom in 1699; and in 1781 the metal was discovered in France. Gold was found in the county of Wicklow, Ireland, in 1796, and in the Ural Mountains in 1820. (See GOLD DISCOVERIES.)

GOLDSMITHS' COMPANY was incorporated by letters patent of Edward III., in 1327, and confirmed by Richard II. in 1392 or 1394. Edward IV. increased its privileges and powers in 1462, and the crest and supporters were granted in 1571. The fine hall of the company was built from the designs of Philip Hardwick, R.A., and opened July 15, 1835.

GOLD AND SILVER WIRE DRAWERS.—The ancients used gold and silver wire in weaving embroidery, and it was employed by surgeons in fastening teeth. The manufacture, originally practised in France and Italy, was introduced into Germany in 1592. The company of the Gold and Silver Wire Drawers was incorporated by James I. in 1623.

GOLDAU (Switzerland).—This village was entirely destroyed by the fall of the Knippenouhl rock, which formed the summit of Mont Rossberg, Sep. 2, 1806. Four other villages were destroyed at the same time, and upwards of 1,000 persons fell victims to this calamity.

GOLDEN BULL.—The name given to several charters and documents of the Middle Ages, which were sealed with a golden seal. The golden bull of Hungary was promulgated in 1222, that of Bohemia in 1348, of Brabant in 1349, and of Milan in 1549. The golden bull par excellence is the celebrated bull of Charles IV. of Germany, which was made the basis of the German constitution at the diets of Nuremberg in 1355 and of Metz in 1356, and remained in force until the dissolution of the German empire in 1806. It was published in Latin, at Nuremberg, in 1474, and in German, at Ulm, in 1484; and at Strasburg in 1485.

GOLDEN CANDLESTICK.—See CANDLESTICK.)

GOLDEN EAGLE.—(See EAGLE.)

GOLDEN FLEECE.—(See ARGONAUTIC EXPEDITION.)

GOLDEN FLEECE (Order of).—This order was instituted at Bruges by Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy, Jan. 10, 1429, and received its name and the badge of a golden fleece in consequence of the important woollen manufactures of the country. The grandmastership was inalienably attached to the house of Burgundy, with the proviso that in the event of that family having no male representatives, it should descend to the husband of the daughter and heiress of the last sovereign. It consequently passed into the house of Austria in 1477, and continued in that family until the death of Charles II. of Spain, Nov. 1, 1700, when it was contested by Charles III. and Philip V., who agreed, at the peace of Vienna, April 30, 1725, that each should retain the title during life, but that their heirs should only take the title of the country they governed. The order was consequently divided into the Golden Fleece of Austria, and of Spain.

GOLDEN HORDE.—This tribe of Mongolians, under their leader Batou, grandson of Zenghis Khan, established themselves on the plains of Kipsale in 1235. They rendered Russia tributary in 1243, and made Alexander Newski grand duke in 1252. Timour attacked them in 1392, and Ivan III. discontinued the payment of tribute to them in 1477. Their influence was finally destroyed by the Nogay Tartars and Ivan III. at the battle of Bielawesch, in 1481.

GOLDEN HORN.—Gibbon (ch. xvii.) remarks:—"The harbour of Constantinople, which may be considered as an arm of the Bosphorus, obtained, in a very remote period, the denomination of the Golden Horn. The curve which it describes might be compared to the horn of a stag, or, as it should seem with more propriety, to that of an ox."

GOLDEN LAND.—See EL DORADO.)

GOLDEN LEGEND.—This work, named because, "like as passeth gold in value all other metals, so this Legend exceedeth all other books," was written in Latin about 1260, by Jacobi de Voragine, or, as he is frequently called, James de Varagine, Voragine, or Vragine, who, born about 1230, became principal of the Dominicans in Lombardy in 1267, Archbishop of Genoa in 1292, and died in June, 1298. The book, which relates, in 177 sections, "the high and great fates of our Lord, the fates of our blessed Lady, the lives, passions, and miracles of many other Saints, and other histories and acts," was first published at Cologne in 1470. Caxton printed an English translation in 1483, and it has passed through numerous editions, and has been translated into almost every European language.

GOLDEN NUMBER, or CYCLE OF THE MOON.—This cycle of 19 years, at the end of which the phases of the moon correspond within an hour to their appearance 19 years before, was invented by Meton, the Athenian, and adopted July 16, B.C. 433. It is called the Golden Number, because in old almanacks it was marked in letters of gold.

GOLDEN ROSE.—A mysterious gift, representing by its gold, its odour, and its balm, the godhead, the body, and soul of the Redeemer, was only bestowed by popes on sovereigns who were the most loyal servants of the Church. The custom existed as early as the 10th century. John XXII. or XXIII., during the struggle for the papacy, presented one to the Emperor Sigismund, March 9, 1416. Julius II. sent a golden rose to Henry VIII. in 1510.

GOLDEN SPURS, or GOLDEN MILITIA (Order).—This knightly order claims superiority to all others in point of antiquity, Constantine I., the Great (323—337), being regarded as its founder, and Pope Sylvester I. (314—335) as the confirmer of its constitution. It is, however, more probable that it was founded by Pius IV. in 1559. It was suppressed in 1841 by Gregory XVI., who founded the order of St. Sylvester.

GOLDSBOROUGH (United States).—This town of North Carolina was captured by the Federals under Gen. Foster, who destroyed the railway works and burned several bridges, &c., Dec. 17, 1862. Gen. Sherman, after a succession of difficulties opposed to him by the Confederate Gen. Johnstone (see BENTONVILLE), effected a junction with Gen. Schofield at this town, March 22, 1865.

GOLF, or GOFF.—A game of club and ball, supposed to have been known in Scotland at a very early period. It was prohibited, lest it should interfere with the practice of archery, by numerous statutes, beginning in 1457.

GOLOVTCHIV (Battle).—Charles XII. of Sweden defeated the Russians in this encounter, which took place July 4, 1708.

GOMARISTS, or CONTRA-REMONSTRANTS.—The Calvinists of Leyden, who supported the views of Francis Gomarus, the opponent of James Arminius, the Lutheran, in the great controversy which commenced early in the 17th century, received this name. A council of the whole Church met at Dort, Nov. 13, 1618. It separated May 9, 1619, having condemned the Arminians (q. v.).

GOMBETTE CODE.—This system of laws was published by Gombaud or Gondebaud, King of Burgundy, in 502. A continuation was issued by his son Sigismund in 519.

GOMBROON BENDER, or BUNDER ABBAS (Persia).—An English factory was established at this ancient seaport in 1613. The Dutch formed an establishment in 1620. The English factory was destroyed by the French in Oct., 1760.

GOMERA (Atlantic).—Christopher Columbus remained a short time on this island, one of the Canaries, in 1492. Pizarro visited it in 1530.

GOMPHI (Thessaly).—This town, important as commanding the pass to the Ambracian Gulf, was taken by the Roman consul Flamininus B.C. 198. Philip V., in suppressing the revolt of Amynander, B.C. 189, vainly endeavoured to force a passage through the pass, which was traversed by the consul Q. Marcius Philippus in his march from Ambracia into Thessaly B.C. 169. Gomphi was taken by Cæsar, after an assault of a few hours, B.C. 48. Its modern name is Episkopé, the town having been converted into a bishop's see.

GONFALONIER, or THE STANDARD-BEARER OF JUSTICE, was introduced at Florence in 1292. The Gonfaloniers, originally servants of the republic, assumed in the 15th century almost absolute power, and the title was suppressed April 27, 1532.

GONVILLE HALL.—(See CAIUS COLLEGE.)

GOOD FRIDAY.—The Friday preceding Easter Sunday is observed under this name as the anniversary of the Lord's crucifixion, April 5, 30. Though it has always been the custom of the Christian Church to solemnize this event, the name Good Friday is comparatively of recent origin. The Saxons called the day Long Friday, from the length of the church services then performed. The practice of using cross-buns on this day is of great antiquity.

GOODMAN'S FIELDS THEATRE (London) was opened as a playhouse by Thomas Odell, Oct. 31, 1729. Owing to the objections urged against it by the clergyman of St. Botolph, Aldgate, it was removed in 1735 to Lincoln's Inn Fields, and was again established in Goodman's Fields Oct. 19, 1741, when David Garrick made his first appearance on the London stage as Richard III. This theatre was pulled down in 1746, and another was speedily erected, which was destroyed by fire in June, 1802.

GOOD MEN.—(See BON-HOMMES.)

GOOD WILL.—(See BRETHREN OF SOCIAL LIFE.)

GOODWIN SANDS.—The sand-banks off the coast of Kent, said to have originally formed part of that county, and to have taken their name from Earl Godwin, were submerged by the sea in 1097. The lighthouse on the North Foreland, erected in 1683, is for the purpose of warning mariners of the dangerous vicinity of these quicksands. Thirteen men-of-war were wrecked on these shoals Nov. 26, 1703, and nearly everybody on board perished. Since 1841 a lighthouse and two beacons, erected on the sands, have been destroyed.

GOODWOOD RACES, held at Goodwood Park, in Sussex, were instituted in April, 1802.

GOOJERAT, GUJERAT, or GUZERAT (Hindostan).—This province was invaded and seized by Sultan Mahmoud of Ghizni about 1025. In 1298 it is mentioned by Marco Polo, in 1572 became subject to Akbar, in 1707 it was devastated by the Mahrattas, and in 1724 became independent of the Mongol authority. Severe famines and pestilences occurred in 1813 and 1814. The battle of Goojerat was gained by a British army of 25,000 men, under Lord Gough, over a Sikh force of 60,000 men, Feb. 21, 1849.

GOOLE (Yorkshire).—A mere village in 1826, was erected into a port in 1829.

GOOSETREE'S CLUB (London), founded by Almack in 1764, and afterwards known as Goosetree's, was frequented by Pitt and Wilberforce in 1780.

GORCUM, GORKUM, or GORINCHEM (Holland).—This town, founded in 1230, was taken by the Protestants in 1572, and by the Prussians in 1787. The French captured it Jan. 12, 1795, and fortified it in 1813. It was retaken by the Prussians in 1814.

GORCUM, GORKUM, or GORINCHEM (Treaty).—The Emperor Charles V., by a treaty concluded at this town in Holland in 1528, compelled the robber prince, Charles d'Egmont, to appoint him heir to Guelderland and Zutphen. This arrangement was, however, set aside by D'Egmont, who formally bequeathed his territory to Francis I. of France in 1534.

GORDIAN KNOT.—"A story is told," says a writer in the Encyclopædia Metropolitana, "of the Macedonian hero during his residence at Gordium, which the gravest historians have not disdained to preserve in their pages. Plutarch tells us that, upon taking this town, which is said to have been the seat of the ancient Midas, he found the famed chariot fastened with cords made of the cornel-tree; and was informed of a tradition, firmly believed among the barbarians, that 'the fates had decreed the empire of the world to him who should untie the knot.' This, as most historians state, was twisted so many private ways, and the ends of it were so artfully concealed, that Alexander, finding he could not untie it, cut it asunder with his sword, and made many ends instead of two. But Aristobulus affirms that he easily undid it, by taking out the pin which fastened the yoke to the beam, and then drawing out the yoke itself." This is supposed to have occurred in the acropolis of Gordium, a town of Bithynia, B.C. 333. To Gordius I. of Phrygia the invention of the knot is ascribed, B.C. 1449.

GORDON, or NO-POPERY RIOTS (London).—These anti-popery riots were named from their leader, Lord George Gordon, who was elected president of the Protestant Association in 1779. He presented a petition, Jan. 4, 1780, praying for the repeal of an act passed in 1778, in favour of Roman Catholics, from that society to Lord North, and summoned a meeting at Coachmakers' Hall, May 29, at which it was resolved that the entire association should assemble in St. George's Fields on the following Friday, June 2, and accompany him with the petition to the House of Commons. Accordingly, on the day appointed, a crowd of the supporters of the movement, variously computed at from 50,000 to 100,000 men, assembled and marched in several divisions to Palace Yard, where they mobbed the members of Parliament as they arrived in their carriages. Lord George presented his petition, which was signed by nearly 120,000 persons, and moved for its immediate consideration; but on a division, only 6 votes appeared for his proposition, while 192 were recorded against it. The mob retired from the Houses, and, having burned the Roman Catholic chapels in Duke Street and Warwick Street, dispersed for the night. The following evening the disturbances were less violent, but on Sunday the rioters assembled in large bodies in Moorfields, and burned the chapels and houses of the Roman Catholics. On Monday, June 5, they burned the chapels in Virginia Lane, Wapping, and Nightingale Lane, Smithfield, and also the house of Sir George Sackville, who was peculiarly unpopular as the proposer of the obnoxious act. On Tuesday, June 6, the houses of Lord Mansfield, Justice Hyde, and Justice Cox, were burned by the rioters, who also set fire to Newgate and the new prison in Clerkenwell, releasing the prisoners. On Wednesday, June 7, King's Bench and Fleet prisons, and the new Bridewell, with many private houses, were destroyed, as many as 36 conflagrations being visible at once from the same spot. The Bank was also threatened, but being strongly guarded by soldiers, escaped pillage. On Thursday the disturbances began to subside, and on Friday Lord George was arrested and committed to the Tower. The official return of casualties during the riots comprised 210 killed by the soldiers, and 248 wounded; but a great number are supposed to have perished from intoxication, and in the flames of the burning houses. The trial of the rioters commenced at the Old Bailey Wednesday, June 28, and many were convicted and executed. Lord George Gordon was tried for high treason in Westminster Hall, Feb. 5, 1781, and acquitted. He died in Newgate, where he had been confined for libel, Nov. 1, 1793.

GOREE (Atlantic).—This island, on the west coast of Africa, belonging to the French, was discovered about 1446. Commodore Keppell took it Dec. 29, 1758. The settlement was destroyed by fire March 14, 1761. The island was restored to France by the treaty of Paris, Feb. 10, 1763. Fort Elizabeth blew up, Oct. 15, 1763. It suffered from an earthquake in 1777. The French abandoned Goree early in 1779, and an English squadron soon after took possession. It was restored to France by the 9th article of the treaty of Versailles, Sep. 3, 1783. Sir Charles Hamilton captured it April 4, 1800. The French took it Jan. 18, 1804. English squadron regained possession March 9, 1804.

GOREY (Battle) was fought between the Irish rebels and a force under Col. Walpole, near this town in Wexford, June 4, 1798. The latter were completely defeated, as Col. Walpole fell almost immediately after the action commenced.

GORGADES.—(See CAPE VERDE.)

GORHAM CONTROVERSY.—The Rev. George Cornelius Gorham, having in Dec., 1847, obtained from Lord Chancellor Cottenham a presentation to the vicarage of Brampford Speke, Devonshire, to which he was refused admission by Dr. Phillpott, Bishop of Exeter, on the ground of his denial of the doctrine of baptismal regeneration, carried the case to the Court of Arches, where judgment was given against him by Sir Herbert Jenner Fust, Aug. 2, 1849. He accordingly appealed to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which reversed the decision of the Ecclesiastical Court, March 8, 1850.

GORILLA.—This ape, supposed by naturalists to be of the same class as the chimpanzee, is believed to have been discovered by Hanno, the Carthaginian, during his exploration of tropical western Africa, about B.C. 350. (See LIBYA.) In 1847, Dr. Wilson, an American missionary on the Gaboon River, sent a skull to Dr. Savage, of Boston; and numerous skins and skeletons have been subsequently procured. Du Chaillu's "Explorations and Adventures in Equatorial Africa," published in London in 1861, contains an account, the correctness of which is doubted by some scientific men, of this ferocious creature.

GORKUM.—(See GORCUM.)

GÖRLITZ CASE.—The body of the Countess of Görlitz, in Silesia, was found in her sitting-room nearly consumed by fire, June 13, 1847, under circumstances which appeared to indicate that death had ensued from spontaneous combustion. In Nov., however, suspicion was directed towards her servant, Johann Stauff, by the discovery, in his possession, of several jewels, identified as the property of his late mistress. The body was exhumed Aug. 11, 1848, and after a prolonged controversy, in which Dr. Sieboldt maintained the spontaneous combustion theory in opposition to the eminent chemists Liebig and Bischoff, Stauff was brought to trial, March 11, 1850. On conviction, he confessed that, having been detected by the countess in the act of stealing the articles which had led to his discovery, he had strangled her, and had burned the corpse to conceal the evidence of his crime.

GORZYCA (Confederation).—The army of the King of Poland formed a confederation at this place, in the autumn of 1715, for the expulsion of the Saxons from the country.

GOSHEN (Egypt).—Jacob and his family settled in this part of Egypt, called also "the land of Rameses" (Gen. xlvii. 11), B.C. 1706 (Gen. xlvi. 28, and xlvii. 4–6). Their descendants possessed the land above four centuries.

GOSLAR (Hanover), founded in 922, was afterwards the residence of the emperor, and a free imperial city. Mines were opened in 986. The cathedral was built in 1150, and the church in 1521. It was annexed to Hanover in 1803, made part of Westphalia in 1807, and restored to Hanover in 1813.

GOSPELLERS.—This term, applied during the Middle Ages to persons who were given to the reading of the Scriptures and the circulation of the Gospels, was used especially for the Wycliffites (q. v.). It was also given to the English reformers of the time of Henry VIII., whose widow, the queen dowager, Catherine Parr, in a discourse written by her shortly before her death in Sep., 1548, "lamented the great scandal given by many Gospellers."

GOSPELS, or "good tidings," of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John (see CANON OF SCRIPTURE), were admitted as authentic at a very early period of the Church. Justin Martyr (103—167) frequently refers to them, and Irenæus (130—200) states that in his time they were so generally accepted that heretics were obliged to attempt to confirm their dogmas by their teachings. Tertullian mentioned them in 208, and Origen (185—253 or 254) described them as "the elements of the Church's faith, of which the whole world, reconciled to God in Christ, is composed." They were included in the canon of Scripture by the Council of Laodicea in 366, and by the Council of Carthage in 397.

GOSPORT (Hampshire).—This town, supposed to have been named God's Port by King Stephen (1135–1154) on landing after a tempest, was, in the time of Leland (1506—April 18, 1552), a mere fishing village. Edward Lacky's almshouses were founded in 1693, and a market-house was erected in 1811. Haslar Royal Hospital, an asylum for sick and wounded seamen, was commenced in 1746, and finished in 1762, one of the wings being appropriated in 1818 to the reception of seamen and marines afflicted with lunacy. The suburb of Anglesea-ville has risen into importance as a fashionable watering-place since 1825.

GOSSELIES (Battle).—The French defeated the Austrians at this town in Belgium June 26, 1794.

GOTHA (Saxony), formerly the capital of the duchy of Saxe-Gotha, passed, on the extinction of the direct line, in 1825, to the Duke of Saxe-Coburg. The gymnasium was founded in 1524, and the ducal palace in 1643. The Almanach de Gotha was first published here in 1764.

GOTHARD, ST.—(See ALPS and GOTTHARD, ST.

GOTHENBURG or GOTTENBORG (Sweden).—This city, second in importance to Stockholm, was founded in 1607 by Charles IX., but having been destroyed by the Danes in 1612, it was restored in 1618 by Gustavus II. (Adolphus). The academy was incorporated in 1775, and the Göta Canal, connecting the German Ocean with the Baltic, was completed in 1832. It suffered from a fire in 1803.

GOTHIC ARCHITECTURE.—The first divergence from the classical orders of architecture occurs about the 4th century, and the introduction of the pointed arch, the great feature of the Gothic style, took place about the 12th. The branches of this order are differently classed by various authors. Dallaway enumerates five; viz. the Mixed, or Semi-Norman, from 1170—1220; Lancet-arched Gothic, 1220—1300; Pure Gothic, 1300—1400; Ornamented Gothic, 1400—1460; and Florid Gothic, 1460 to the middle of the 16th century, when the order was extinguished. Rickman reckons only three orders: viz. Early English, 1189—1307; Decorated English, 1307—1377; and Perpendicular English, 1377 to the extinction of the style.

GOTHLAND, or GOTTLAND (Baltic Sea).—This island was taken from the Swedes by Valdemar III., King of Denmark, in 1361. By the treaty of Brömsebro, Aug. 14, 1645, it was restored to Sweden, and in 1807 was surprised by a Russian force, which was, however, soon compelled to retire.

GOTHS.—This barbarian nation of antiquity deduced its origin from the Scandinavian peninsula, but it is uncertain whether this statement is correct. It was divided into two great bodies,—the Ostrogoths, who traced their origin from the eastern part of Scandinavia, and the Visigoths, who claimed its western portion as the cradle of their tribe. At the beginning of the Christian æra they occupied a territory towards the mouth of the Vistula, but they did not become conspicuous in history till 250, when the Emperor Decius encountered them on the banks of the Danube, and sustained a severe defeat. In 253 they were defeated by Æmilianus, in 262 they ravaged Greece, and in 269 invaded the Roman empire with a force of 320,000 men, which was defeated by the Emperor Claudius at the battle of Naissus. In 272 they obtained possession of Dacia. They invaded Mœsia in 332, but were repulsed by Constantine I., and, in 366, assisted in the revolt and shared the humiliation of Procopius. In 375 they came into collision with the Huns, by whom they were defeated on the banks of the Dniester; and in 376 they implored the protection of Valens, who assigned them a territory in Thrace, where they soon introduced the horrors of war. In 378 the Gothic youth in Asia were all massacred by order of the Roman governor. The Visigoths tendered their submission to the Romans, Oct. 3, 382, but the Ostrogoths continued their attacks, and again invaded the empire in 386. They subsequently accepted settlements in Thrace and Phrygia, and were admitted as soldiers of the Roman army under the name of Foederati. They became converts to Christianity in the middle of the 4th century. (See OSTROGOTHS and VISIGOTHS.)

GOTTENBORG.—(See GOTHENBURG.)

GOTTHARD, ST. (Battle.)—An allied army of French, Germans, and Italians, under Montecuculi, defeated the Turks, led by the Grand Vizier Ahmed Koeprilii, at this Cistercian convent, on the borders of Styria and Hungary, Aug. 1, 1664. The watchword was "Death or victory," and the Christians fought with such spirit that 10,000 Turks were slain or drowned in the Raab.

GÖTTINGEN (Hanover) is first noticed in a record of the time of Otho I. (936—973), and became a member of the Hanseatic league in 1360. The university, founded by George II. of England, in 1734, and opened Sep. 17, 1737, was called the "Georgia Augusta." The botanical gardens were laid out in 1739. The French seized Göttingen in 1760. The allied army, having blockaded it from Nov. 22 until Dec. 12, 1760, were compelled to retire. The French blew up the fortifications and withdrew, July 16, 1762. The three youngest sons of George III. entered as members of the university of Göttingen, July 6, 1786. An insurrection which broke out Jan. 8, 1831, was suppressed Jan. 16. Seven professors were expelled from the university in 1837.

GOULBOURN (N. South Wales).—The river was discovered in 1823, and Goulbourn was made a bishopric in 1863.

GOURIDES, or GHURI.—This Persian dynasty was founded by Hussein Gouri in 1155. He rendered himself independent of the Ghiznevides (q. v.), who were expelled from Persia by his successor Ala-Eddyn in 1158. His race was overthrown by the Carismians in 1213.

GOUT.—This disease was known to the ancients, whose treatment of it varied in few respects from that employed by modern practitioners. Demetrius Pepagomenos, in a work published in 1558, ascribes it to gluttonous and other excesses, which charge the body with morbid humour unable to find a vent, and hence the source of acute suffering. Sydenham (1624—Dec. 29, 1689), Boerhaave (1668—Sep. 23, 1738), Mead (1673—Feb. 16, 1754), Morgagni (1682—Dec. 5, 1771), and other old physicians, dissuaded from the use of active remedies during attacks of gout, maintaining that the disease wrought its own cure. Rheumatic gout was first described, but not named, by Dr. Heberden (1710—May 17, 1801).

GOWRIE CONSPIRACIES.—The Raid of Ruthven (q. v.) is sometimes called the first Gowrie conspiracy. The second Gowrie conspiracy took place as follows:—As James VI. of Scotland was preparing to hunt the deer with his suite in Falkland Park, Tuesday, Aug. 5, 1600, Alexander, Master of Ruthven, and younger brother of the Earl of Gowrie, whose father had been executed for treason, requested him to proceed immediately to examine a prisoner apprehended the previous evening with a large pot of foreign gold coins on his person, and suspected of some treacherous design. The king accordingly accompanied him to Gowrie House, Perth, and was conducted into a small round chamber, where, instead of the expected captive, he found Andrew Henderson, the earl's chamberlain, clad in armour. Here Ruthven, drawing a dagger, and pointing to a portrait of his father, the former Earl of Gowrie, who had suffered death as a traitor, declared that James was his prisoner; but being unaided by the man in armour, who had been inveigled into the room without previously learning the work required of him, he was unable to prevent the king calling for help to his suite, assembled in the court below. Sir John Ramsay, Sir Thomas Erskine, and Sir Hugh Herries, rushing into the chamber, despatched Ruthven with their swords; and the Earl of Gowrie, the author of the plot, hastening to his rescue, was also put to death.

GOZO, or GOZZO (Mediterranean).—This island, the ancient Gaulos, was first colonized by the Phœnicians, from whom it was wrested by the Carthaginians. The Romans captured it B.C. 241. It was given to the Knights Hospitallers in 1530. The French captured it June 10, 1708, and it was wrested from them by the English Oct. 28, 1798.

GRACE.—"Dei gratiâ" (q. v.) first appears on English coins in the reign of Edward III. (1327—1377). The title "His Grace" is of Lancastrian origin, and was first assumed by Henry IV. (1399—1413).

GRACE AT MEALS.—Fosbroke (Antiq., 608) remarks: "Similar ceremonies, both before and after dinner, existed among the Jews and classical ancients. The latter used to offer the first-fruits of the viands to the gods." The Anglo-Saxons signed the dish with the cross. The form of grace said by the priest at table is given in the poems of Alcuin (725—April 18, 804). On Sundays and festivals during the 14th century, the psalter was sung over. In this country, grace was said in metre in the time of Shakspeare.

GRACIOS-A-DIOS (Honduras).—This town, founded by Jean de Chaves in 1536, was, till 1544, the seat of government of Guatemala and Nicaragua.

GRADISCA, or BERBIR (Bosnia), fortified by French engineers in 1774, surrendered June 20, 1789, to the Austrians, who failed in an attempt to capture it in 1788. The French took it in March, 1797.

GRADO, or NEW AQUILEIA (Illyria).—This town, situated on an island of the same name, in the Adriatic Sea, was first inhabited by the Italian fugitives who were expelled from their own cities by Attila, in 452. It became the seat of the patriarchate of Aquileia in 583, and in 877 was unsuccessfully attacked by the Saracens. The town was taken and burned by the Genoese in 1379, and in 1451 the patriarchate was transferred to Venice. A council was held at Grado in 579.

GRAFENBERG (Austria). — Priestnitz formed an establishment for his system of water cure at this town in Silesia in 1825.

GRAFTON (Battle).—The Confederates sustained a slight check in a contest with the Federals at this place in Virginia, Aug. 13, 1861.

GRAFTON ADMINISTRATION.—Lord Chatham having been incapacitated by illness from taking any active part in public affairs, the direction devolved upon the Duke of Grafton in Dec., 1767, Lord Chatham himself resigning the privy seal Oct. 14, 1768. (See CHATHAM (SECOND) ADMINISTRATION.) The Grafton administration was thus constituted:

Treasury	Duke of Grafton.
Lord Chancellor	Lord Camden.
President of the Council	Earl Gower.
Privy Seal	Earl of Chatham.
Chancellor of Exchequer	Lord North.
Principal Secretaries of State	Earls of Hillsborough and Shelburne.
	Viscount Weymouth.
Admiralty	Sir Edward Hawke.
Ordnance	Marquis of Granby.

The Earl of Bristol became Privy Seal, in place of the Earl of Chatham, Nov. 2, 1768. Lord Camden resigned the chancellorship Jan. 17, 1770; and Mr. Charles Yorke, his successor, created Lord Morden, died three days after his acceptance of office. The Marquis of Granby retired Jan. 17, 1770; and the Duke of Grafton resigned his office as Chief Lord of the Treasury, Jan. 28, 1770, when his administration came to an end. (See NORTH ADMINISTRATION.)

GRAFTON AND ARMIDALE.—(See COLONIAL BISHOPRICS.)

GRAFTON CLUB (London) was established in May, 1863. It is also called the Gridiron.

GRAHAME'S, or HOTHAM'S ISLAND (Mediterranean).—Thrown up, near Sciacca, by a submarine volcano, in July, 1831, but soon disappeared.

GRAHAM'S DYKE.—(See AGRICOLA'S WALL.)

GRAHAM'S LAND (Antarctic Ocean), discovered by Biscoe, who landed Feb. 21, 1832, was claimed by him as British territory.

GRAHAM'S TOWN (Cape of Good Hope), founded about 1820, by Scotch emigrants, has greatly increased since the opening, in Jan., 1848, of the Montagu Pass, by which it communicates with Cape Town. The bishopric was founded in 1853, and the first parliament was opened here April 27, 1864.

GRAMMAR.—Professor Max Müller regards Plato (B.C. 428—B.C. 347), who first marked the distinction between substantive and verb, or subject and predicate, as the founder of grammatical science. The first systematic Greek grammar was produced at Rome by Dionysius Thrac, about B.C. 80. The first grammar printed in England was published by John Holt, of Magdalen College, Oxford, in 1497; and the first Greek grammar printed in Germany appeared in 1501. An Æthiopic grammar was published in 1513; in 1525 and 1527, Sebastian Munster produced his Hebrew and Chaldee grammars. Clenardus' Greek grammar, on which the Eton grammar is founded, and Palsgrave's French grammar, in English, appeared in 1530; William Postel's Arabic grammar, in 1538, and Angelo Canini's Syriac, Chaldee, and Rabbinical grammar in 1554. The first edition of Lindley Murray's English grammar was published at York in 1795.

GRAMMAR SCHOOLS.—The first grammar school in London was established in 1447. Their number was much increased after the Reformation, 21 having been founded by Edward VI. (1547—1553). The Act for Improving the Condition and Extending the Benefits of Grammar Schools (3 & 4 Vict. c. 77) was passed Aug. 7, 1840.

GRAMPIANS.—(See ARDOCH, Battle.)

GRAMPOUND, or GRANDPONT (Cornwall).—This town, named from a bridge over the river Fal, received a charter in 1290 from Edmund Plantagenet, Earl of Cornwall, which was confirmed by John of Eltham, Earl of Cornwall, Oct. 26, 1332. In the reign of Edward VI. (1547—1553) it had the right of sending two members to Parliament, but was disfranchised for corruption by 1 & 2 Geo. IV., c. 47 (June 8, 1821), which transferred its two representatives to the county of York.

GRAN (Battle), between the Austrians and Magyars, in which the latter were successful, was fought Feb. 27, 1849.

GRAN (Hungary).—This town, seized by the Turks in 1540, was recovered in 1683 by the united forces of John Sobieski, King of Poland, and Charles of Lorraine. It was partly destroyed by fire, April 13, 1818; and in 1821 a cathedral was commenced.

GRANADA (Nicaragua). — This town, founded in 1523, was sacked by buccaneers in 1680; was besieged from May, 1854, to Feb., 1855, and burned by Gen. Walker, the American filibuster, in 1856.

GRANADA (Spain). — A province which formed a portion of the Roman Bœtica, was erected into a separate state by the Moors in 1238, and united to Castile in 1492. The city of Granada, founded by the Moors in the 8th century, was made the capital of Granada in 1238. The Spaniards besieged it April 26, 1491, and, after a gallant resistance, it capitulated Nov. 25, 1491, and was surrendered to the Spaniards Jan. 2, 1492. The Moors were expelled in 1610. Granada suffered from earthquakes May 15 and Dec. 14, 1826.

GRANARIES, erected by Joseph in Egypt B.C. 1715 Gen. xli. 48), were also used by the Greeks and Romans. In 1419 Sir Simon Eyre erected a public granary in London as a preservative against famine. This, with other similar buildings, was placed under the control of regular surveyors during the reign of Henry VIII. By 11 Geo. II. c. 22 (1738), persons guilty of robbing or destroying granaries were rendered liable to seven years' transportation.

GRAND, or GREAT ALLIANCE. — This treaty, of which the objects were "to procure satisfaction to his Imperial Majesty in regard to the Spanish succession, obtain security to the English and Dutch for their dominions and commerce, prevent the union of the monarchies of France and Spain, and hinder the French from possessing the Spanish dominions in America," was signed at Vienna by the plenipotentiaries of the Emperor and the States-General, May 12, 1689. William III. acceded to it, as King of England, Dec. 30, 1689; and the King of Spain and the Duke of Savoy joined it June 6, 1690. It was renewed and accepted by other powers, and was not dissolved till the conclusion of peace by the treaty of Utrecht (q. v.).

GRAND, or GREAT PRIVILEGE.—Mary of Burgundy granted this charter to the Hollanders and Zealanders in 1477, at the States assembled at Ghent. It was the Magna Charta of Holland, and transferred all the actual rights of sovereignty to the States.

GRAND, or GREAT REMONSTRANCE.—(See REMONSTRANCE.)

GRAND CAIRO.—(See CAIRO.)

GRAND-DUKE.—(See DUKE.)

GRAND GULF (United States).—The forts at this place on the Mississippi were taken by the Federals under Admiral Porter, after a severe cannonade, May 3, 1863.

GRAND JUNCTION CANAL.—This canal, from the Thames at Rotherhithe, through Uxbridge, Tring, Fenny Stratford, &c., to Braunston, in Northamptonshire, where it joins other canals, affording water communication between London, Liverpool, Hull, and Bristol, was commenced May 1, 1793, and opened Feb. 28, 1805.

GRAND JURY, consisting of not less than 12 or more than 23 persons, is summoned by the sheriffs of a county to decide whether sufficient grounds of accusation exist to justify the putting of prisoners upon their trial. Its number and constitution were defined in the laws of King Ethelred I. (866—871). In the time of Richard I. (1189—1199) it was composed of four knights taken from the county, who chose two more out of every hundred, which two associated with themselves 10 other principal freemen. This process, gradually modified, was abandoned by 6 Geo. IV., c. 50 (June 22, 1825), which also fixed the qualification of grand jurors at sessions as the same as that of the petit jury. By 19 & 20 Vict. c. 54 (July 14, 1856), the foreman of a grand jury was empowered to administer the oath to witnesses, who need not be sworn in open court.

GRAND JUSTICIARY.—(See JUSTICIARY, CHIEF.)

GRAND PENSIONARY.—The title of an officer of the Dutch Government, whose functions were to propose to the council the subject for deliberation, to collect the votes, to receive the diplomatic communications of foreign powers, and to supervise the administration of finances. He held office for five years, at the end of which period he was eligible for re-election. Previous to the time of Barneveldt, who was executed May 13, 1619, this functionary bore the title of advocate-general. The office, abolished at the revolution of 1795, was restored by Napoleon I. in 1805. (See HOLLAND.)

GRANDMONTINES, or GRANDIMONTINES (Monks).—This order was founded by Stephen, a native of Auvergne, at Grandmontin Limosin, in France, about 1076. The Grandmontines passed into England during the reign of Henry I., and established themselves at Abberbury, in Shropshire; Cressewell, in Herefordshire; and Grosmont, or Eskdale, in Yorkshire. The rule of the order was a modification of that of St. Benedict.

GRANGER SOCIETY (London), instituted in 1842, by Granger, for the purpose of publishing ancient English portraits and family pictures, was in existence about three years.

GRANICUS (Battles).—Alexander III. (the Great) defeated the Persian army near this river, in Asia Minor, May 22, 334 B.C. It was also the scene of a victory gained by Lucullus over Mithridates, B.C. 74.

GRANITE.—The two principal granite quarries are at Aberdeen and Dartmoor, the former of which was not worked till 1730, and the latter till 1820. The first large building erected of this material was Gordon's Hospital, Aberdeen, built in 1739.

GRANSON (Battle).—Charles the Bold, Duke of Burgundy, having destroyed the garrison at Granson, near Neuchâtel, was defeated by the Swiss, with great slaughter, March 2 or 3, 1476.

GRANTHAM (Battle).—Oliver Cromwell defeated 24 troops of Royalist cavalry at this town in Lincolnshire, May 13, 1643.

GRANTHAM (Lincoln).—Tradition ascribes its foundation to Gorbonnannus, King of Britain, who flourished B.C. 303; but its origin may more probably be referred to the Saxons. The church was endowed by Hugh, Bishop of Lincoln, in 1100, and a Franciscan priory was established in 1290. It was incorporated by Edward IV. in 1463, and the free grammar school was founded in 1528. Grantham was taken by the Royalists under Col. Charles Cavendish, March 22, 1642. The church steeple, blown down in 1651, was rebuilt by subscription; the guildhall was erected in 1787, and the canal, by which communication is opened with the river Trent, was commenced in 1793. The exchange and other valuable property were destroyed by fire, Nov. 19, 1862.

GRANVILLE (France), the ancient Grannonum, was bombarded and set on fire by the English, July 8, 1695. Admiral Dilkes captured or destroyed about 24 French ships near Granville, July 16, 1703. The Vendeans committed great havoc, Oct. 15 and 16, 1793. Sir James Saumarez bombarded Granville, Sep. 15, 1803.

GRAPES.—(See VINE and VINE DISEASE.)

GRAPHIC SOCIETY.—(See ART UNIONS.)

GRAPHOTYPE.—This method of producing, from drawings, blocks for surface printing, without the aid of the engraver, was invented in 1860, by D. C. Hitchcock, of New York.

GRASSE (France).—This town, said to have been founded in 583, by a colony of converted Jews from Sardinia, was referred to by Pope Adrian IV. in 1155. The bishopric of Antibes was transferred hither in 1252.

GRÄTZ (Austria), the capital of Styria, is of ancient origin. The cathedral was erected by the Emperor Frederick III., in 1456, and the university was founded in 1586. Napoleon Buonaparte entered Grätz in April, 1797. The French took it and destroyed the citadel in 1809.

GRAUDENZ (Prussia), founded in the 13th century, was fortified by a citadel, completed in 1776. The French besieged it without success in 1807.

GRAVE (Holland) was captured by the Duke of Parma in 1586, by Prince Maurice in 1603, and was besieged by Louis XIV. in 1674. The French took it, after a siege of two months, Dec. 29, 1794.

GRAVELINES (France). — This town was founded by Henry, Count of Flanders, in 1160. The Spaniards defeated the French under its walls in 1558. The Spanish Armada sustained a defeat off Gravelines, Aug. 8, 1588. It was taken by the French in 1658, and finally ceded to France by the treaty of the Pyrenees, Nov. 7, 1659.

GRAVESEND (Kent) is mentioned in the Domesday Survey as Gravesham. In 1337 the fleet of Edward III. anchored here, previous to sailing against the Flemings; and in 1380 the town was attacked by a French fleet and burned. The first charter of incorporation was granted by Queen Elizabeth, July 22, 1562; and in 1588 the town was fortified, in anticipation of the attack of the Spanish Armada. In July, 1606, James I. received a visit from Christian IV. of Denmark at this town, which was the scene of a conflict between the Irish adherents of James II. and the supporters of the Prince of Orange, Dec. 12, 1688. A great fire occurred at Gravesend, Aug. 24, 1727, which is said to have destroyed 120 dwelling-houses, with other buildings, the whole damage being estimated at more than £200,000. The first steamboat between London and Gravesend was the Margery, which performed her first voyage Monday, Jan. 23, 1815. The town-hall was erected in 1836.

GRAVITATION.—Pythagoras, who flourished B.C. 540—510, and Anaxagoras, born about B.C. 499, make allusions to this principle, which was referred to by Copernicus in 1543, and by Kepler in 1609. Hooke published a theory on the subject in 1674. Sir Isaac Newton's attention is said to have been directed to this subject in 1666 by the fall of an apple from a tree, but the fact is disputed. In 1687 he published the Principia, in which he established the principle of universal gravitation.

GRAY (France).—This town, founded in the 7th century, and burned in 1360 and 1384, was taken by Louis XI. in 1474, and was recaptured by the Germans under Vaudrey, in 1477. Louis XIV. seized it in 1668, and dismantled its fortifications.

GRAY'S INN (London).—This Inn of Court, named from the Lords Gray of Wilton, who were owners of the manor, is stated by Stow to have been erected after the reign of Edward III. (1327—1377). The hall was erected in 1560, the gateway in 1592, and the gardens were first planted about 1600.

GRAZERS.—(See Boscol.)

GREAT BEDWYN.—(See Beaden-head.)

GREAT BETHEL, or BIG BETHEL (Battle). —Two Federal divisions, despatched by Gen. Butler to surprise the Confederate camp at this place in Virginia, June 9, 1861, meeting in the darkness, commenced a fight, in which several were killed before the error was discovered. They attacked the Confederates June 10, and were defeated with a loss of 16 killed, 34 wounded, and 5 missing.

GREAT BRITAIN.—The island itself consists of England, Scotland, and Wales. The term was first applied to England, Wales, and Scotland, at the union of the two crowns, Oct. 24, 1604, when James I. was proclaimed King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland. A national flag for Great Britain was announced by royal proclamation, April 12, 1606. The legal application commenced at the legislative union agreed upon by the commissioners July 22, 1706, when it was provided that the two states should form one "United Kingdom of Great Britain." An act (6 Anne c. 11) to carry out the union received the royal assent March 6, 1707. It took effect from May 1, 1707, and a proclamation, July 28, appointed the national flag. It was the same as the one agreed upon in 1606, which had fallen into disuse. (See England, Scotland, and Wales, and Union of Great Britain and Ireland.)

GREAT EXHIBITION.—Industrial exhibitions originated in the French expositions. In June, 1845, the Society of Arts attempted to introduce them into England, and the council opened an exhibition on a small scale in 1847. The experiment was renewed, with increased success, in 1848 and in 1849. Prince Albert, the president of the society, at a meeting held at Buckingham Palace, June 30, 1849, stated his opinion that the proposed exhibition should include raw materials, machinery, manufactures, sculpture, and plastic art in general. A royal commission was appointed at the commencement of 1850, and the necessary arrangements were made. When completed, the building measured 1,851 feet in length, by 408 in width. The transept was 72 feet wide and 108 high. The entire area was 772,784 square feet, or about 19 acres, and the quantity of iron employed in the building was about 4,000 tons. The glass amounted to 17 acres for roofing, and 1,500 vertical glazed sashes; and the woodwork was estimated at 600,000 cubic feet.

GREAT GRIMSBY (Lincolnshire).—Said, by Camden, to have been founded by one Gryme, a merchant. He brought up a foundling named Haveloc, who, after acting as scullion in the king's kitchen, proved to be of the Danish royal family, and married the king's daughter. It is mentioned as a frontier town in 827. In 1346 it contributed 11 ships and 170 seamen to the expedition of Edward III. against Calais. The grammar-school was founded by Edward VI. in 1547; and a wet and dry dock was opened in Dec., 1800. New and extensive docks, the first stone of which was laid by Prince Albert April 18, 1849, were completed March 18, 1852, and were inspected by Queen Victoria Oct. 13, 1854.

GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY.—This company was incorporated by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 71 (June 26, 1846). The London terminus at King's Cross was opened in Oct., 1852. The station of the Great Northern Cemetery Company was erected in 1861. By 23 & 24 Vict. c. 168 (July 23, 1860), the Great Northern was authorized to effect a communication with the Metropolitan Railway, which was opened in June, 1863.

GREAT ST. BERNARD.—(See ALPS.)

GREAT SALT LAKE (United States).—This remarkable inland sea, which in the saltness of its waters and the barren character of the surrounding scenery bears a strong resemblance to the Dead Sea, was first mentioned in 1689 by Baron La Hontan, who had received an account of it from the Indians. It was first explored in 1843 by Col. Fremont, and was surveyed in 1849–50 by Capt. Stansbury, of the United States army, who published a report in 1850. (See SALT LAKE CITY.)

GREAT SEAL.—The earliest English monarch who is known to have made grants under seal is Edgar (958—975), but the institution of the great seal is usually attributed to Edward the Confessor (1042—1066). The custody of the great seal is the prerogative of the lord chancellor, but as there is sometimes an interval between the death of that officer and the appointment of his successor, a keeper of the great seal was appointed to act in such cases. His dignity was declared equal to the lord chancellor's by 5 Eliz. c. 18, 1562. Commissioners of the great seal were appointed in 1689, and authorized by 1 Will. & Mary, c. 21 (1688). The great seal stolen by housebreakers from the residence of Lord Thurlow, in Great Ormond Street, March 24, 1784, was never recovered.

GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY.—This broad-gauge line, opened as far as Maidenhead June 4, 1838, was extended to Twyford July 1, 1839, and completed as far as Bristol June 30, 1841.

GRECIANS.—(See HELLENISTS.)

GRECIAN THEATRE (London), in connection with the Eagle Tavern, City Road, was opened as the Grecian Saloon about 1826. It was remodelled and named the Grecian Theatre in 1858.

GREECE, originally called Hellas, consisted of a number of states. (See ATTICA, &c.) The name Grecia first occurs in the works of Aristotle (B.C. 384—322). The modern kingdom of Greece, erected in 1827, comprehends a portion only of the territories of ancient Greece.

GREEK CHURCH.—The bishops of Constantinople claimed equality with the Pope from the foundation of their city. In 1734 they condemned image-worship, in opposition to the Romish Church, and in 767 accused their western brethren of heresy respecting the doctrine of the procession of the Holy Ghost. The result was, that the two churches separated, and in spite of the attempts of the Council of Florence in 1439 to procure a union, and of the Act of Union, concluded in 1596, they have never reunited. The principal confessions of faith of the Greek Church are Cyril Lucar's, which appeared in 1621; and the Orthodox Confession of 1643. The Greek Church, called the "Holy Orthodox Catholic and Apostolic Church," comprises three branches—1, the Church in the Ottoman empire, subject to the Patriarch of Constantinople; 2, the Church in the new kingdom of Greece; 3, the Russian Greek Church, the established religion in Russia.

GREEK EMPIRE.—(See EASTERN EMPIRE.)

GREEK FIRE.—This combustible composition is said to have been invented by Callinicus in 672, though it was probably an earlier discovery of the Arabian chemists. It was blown through copper tubes upon the object to be ignited, and was much employed in the crusades for burning ships. This fire burned freely in water, and was, indeed, almost inextinguishable. It was supplanted by gunpowder.

GREEK LANGUAGE.—Theodore, Archbishop of Canterbury in 668, who was sent by Vitalian, brought a collection of Greek documents with him, and imparted a knowledge of the language to several of the natives. Charlemagne was able to read it, and about 1000 it was employed by a congregation of Greek refugees in Toul, in the celebration of their religious worship. It continued a living language at Constantinople until the city was captured by Mohammed II., in 1453. It was taught at Paris in 1458, and was printed at Milan in 1481. Cornelius Vitellius taught it at Oxford in 1488, and William Grocyn, the first eminent English professor of the language, commenced his efforts to diffuse a knowledge of Greek at the same place in 1491. The first Greek lecture was established at Oxford in 1517. The language was first taught in Scotland, at Montrose, in 1534. During the 17th century it was much neglected; but Kuster and Fabricius restored the study at the end of the century. The most eminent Greek scholars of this country are Richard Bentley, 1662—July 14, 1742; Samuel Parr, 1747—March 6, 1825; Charles Burney, 1757—Dec. 28, 1817; and Richard Porson, 1759—Sep. 25, 1808.

GREENBACKS.—In 1862 the Federal Government of North America issued a large amount of paper money in notes of small value, which almost superseded the circulation of coin, and caused gold to rise to a high premium. These small notes were commonly known as "greenbacks," from their colour, or "shinplasters."

GREEN-BAG INQUIRY.—The name given to an investigation into the nature of the contents of a green bag full of papers, alleged to be of seditious import, which was laid before Parliament by the Prince Regent Feb. 3, 1817. Both houses appointed secret committees Feb. 4, and they presented their reports Feb. 18 and 19. Bills for the suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act, and for the prevention of seditious meetings, were moved Feb. 24, and the Habeas Corpus Suspension Act was passed March 3. The bill for restraining seditious meetings was passed March 25.

GREEN CLOTH.—(See MARSHALSEA COURT.)

GREEN-COAT HOSPITAL (London).—This school for the relief of the fatherless children of St. Margaret's, Westminster, founded by Charles I. Nov. 15, 1633, was rebuilt in 1700.

GREEN FACTION.—(See CIRCUS FACTIONS.)

GREEN PARK (London) was first enclosed in the reign of Charles II. by Le Notre. In 1767 it was reduced in size by George III., who wished to enlarge the gardens of Old Buckingham House.

GREEN RIBBON CLUB.—(See KING'S HEAD CLUB.)

GREENBRIAR (Battle).—An indecisive engagement between the Confederates and the Federals, under Gen. Reynolds, took place on the banks of this river in Virginia, Oct. 2, 1861.

GREENE CURTAIN.—(See CURTAIN THEATRE.)

GREENLAND (N. America).—This country was probably discovered and inhabited by settlers from Norway before 830, as Gregory IV. published a bull in 835, in which especial mention is made of the Greenlanders. The Iceland Chronicle, and other authorities, however, fix its discovery in 982. In 1256 the inhabitants attempted to throw off the yoke of the Norwegians. In 1576 part of the coast was explored by Martin Frobisher, and in 1605 and succeeding years the Danes sent expeditions to colonize the country. They all failed, until the Norwegian missionary Hans Egede arrived in 1721, and founded Godthaab. In 1733 the Moravians established a mission, and the small-pox carried off 3,000 of the natives. The country was explored by Capt. Scoresby in 1822, and by Capt. Graah between 1829 and 1831.

GREENOCK (Renfrewshire).—In 1635 Charles I. granted a charter to John Shaw, erecting the lands of Wester-Greenock, and the town and village of Greenock, into a burgh of barony, and in 1670 Sir John Shaw, son of the above-named, obtained another charter incorporating the lands of Finnart with the barony of Wester-Greenock, under the title of the burgh of Greenock. The first harbour at Greenock was built between 1707 and 1710. James Watt was born here Jan. 19, 1736. By a charter granted Sep. 2, 1751, the election of the magistrates was intrusted to the inhabitants. The town-hall was erected in 1766, from Watt's designs, and the gaol in 1810. The new east harbour was commenced in 1806 and finished in 1811, and the west quay was rebuilt and enlarged between 1807 and 1811. The Chamber of Commerce and Manufactures was incorporated by royal charter in 1813. The dry, or graving dock, was commenced in Aug., 1813, and completed in Sep., 1825. Sir Francis Chantrey's statue of Watt was erected in 1832. Victoria Harbour was commenced in 1846, and opened in Oct., 1850.

GREENWICH Kent.—The ancient manor of Grenawic was bestowed by Elthruda, niece of King Alfred the Great (871—901), upon the abbey of St. Peter at Ghent, to which it was confirmed by King Edgar, at the instance of Archbishop Dunstan, in 964. The Danes subsequently established a camp here, where they murdered Archbishop Elphege on the vigil of Easter, 1012. A royal palace or plaizance appears to have been established as early as the reign of Edward I. (1272—1307), from which Henry IV. dated his will, Jan. 22, 1408; but in the reign of Henry V. it was still a mere fishing village. The park, commenced by Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester, in 1433, was, with the palace, bestowed by Edward IV. upon his queen, Elizabeth Woodville, in 1465. Henry VII. (1485—1509) enlarged the palace and founded a convent. Henry VIII. was born here June 28, 1491, and married to Catherine of Aragon June 11, 1509. Queen Mary was born here Feb. 18, 1516, and Queen Elizabeth Sep. 7, 1533. It was the scene of Henry the Eighth's marriage with Anne of Cleves, Jan. 6, 1540; and of the death of Edward VI., July 6, 1553. Queen Elizabeth's College, a number of almshouses for the poor, was founded by William Lambard in 1558; and Trinity Hospital or Norfolk College was established by Henry Howard, Earl of Northampton, in 1613. John Roan founded the Grey-coat School in 1643. In 1654 the palace became the residence of the Lord Protector, but it reverted to the crown in 1660, and was enlarged by Charles II. (1660—1685), who did not, however, live to carry out his plans in relation to the building. Its site is now occupied by Greenwich Hospital (q. v.). The Green coat School was founded by Sir William Boreman in 1672, the ancient church of St. Elphege was rebuilt in 1710, the Blue-coat School was established in 1770, and the Jubilee Almshouses were erected in 1809. The stone pier fell May 16, 1843.

GREENWICH HOSPITAL.—The patent for the erection of this hospital, which occupies the site of the former royal palace at Greenwich, was granted by William III. and Mary, Oct. 25, 1694, and commissioners for superintending the works having been appointed March 12, 1695, the foundation-stone of the new buildings was laid by John Evelyn, June 30, 1696. In Dec., 1704, the hospital was sufficiently advanced to receive 42 seamen as inmates. Among the sources whence the funds for this noble institution were derived, may be mentioned a duty of sixpence per month from every seaman, first levied in 1696; the forfeited property of the pirate Kidd, in 1705; and the estates of the last Earl of Derwentwater, in 1735. The infirmary was erected in 1763. The commissioners became a body corporate by a charter dated Dec. 6, 1775. The chapel, dining-hall, and other portions of the hospital, were destroyed by fire Jan. 2, 1779. The chapel was rebuilt, and opened Sep. 20, 1789. A portion of the infirmary was also burned down in 1811. The Painted Hall was established in 1823. The accommodation at the hospital is for 2,710 pensioners; but in 1859 there were only 1,600 inmates. The annual revenue then amounted to between £150,000 and £160,000. By 26 & 27 Vict. c. 67 (July 21, 1863) the commissioners were empowered to appropriate an annual sum not exceeding £5,000 for the maintenance of the widows of seamen and marines killed or drowned in the service of the crown. By 28 & 29 Vict. c. 89 July 5, 1865) inmates of the hospital willing to reside elsewhere were permitted to do so, suitable pensions being granted them, not, however, exceeding the allowances they had received as inmates. The office of the commissioners was abolished, and it was enacted that on the death of the governor and lieutenant-governor the control of the hospital and school should be vested in the Admiralty, who should appoint an officer of rank not lower than a vice-admiral to act as visitor, and a comptroller of the Greenwich Hospital estates to exercise a general superintendence over the lands and other property. The act took effect from Sep. 30, 1865, when many of the pensioners removed from the hospital to reside with their friends or relations.

GREENWICH OBSERVATORY.—This institution, on the site of a tower built by Duke Humphrey, was founded Aug. 10, 1675, in consequence of the need for more correct tables of the moon and fixed stars than were afforded by the observations of Tycho Brahe. Flamsteed was the first astronomer royal, and the observatory was for some time known as Flamsteed House. In 1725 a mural quadrant was erected; a zenith sector was added in 1727; and in 1750 the institution was enriched by many valuable instruments. Since Nov. 30, 1767, the observations made here have been published annually. Troughton's mural circle was erected in 1812, and his transit instrument in 1816. The magnetic observatory was erected in 1837 and 1838, and the new south dome for the altitude and azimuth instrument in 1844. The electric time-ball in the Strand was erected, and made to act simultaneously with that at Greenwich observatory, in Aug., 1852. A splendid equatorial, designed by Airy, was completed in the spring of 1860.

GREGORIAN CALENDAR.—(See CALENDAR, NEW STYLE and OLD STYLE.)

GREGORIAN CHANT.—Gregory I. (in 600) added four additional tones to the Ambrosian chant, and the whole was accordingly named after him the Gregorian chant.

GREGORIANS (London). — This club or order, a branch of the Freemasons, existed during the 18th century, and is referred to by Pope in the Dunciad, published in 1728. They had numerous provincial lodges or chapters, and are known to have existed in 1736 and 1745. (See BRETHREN OF SOCIAL LIFE.)

GREIFSWALDE (Prussia). — This town of Pomerania, founded in 1233, joined the Hanseatic League in 1270. The university was founded in 1456. By the treaty of Westphalia, Oct. 24, 1648, it was given to Sweden; in 1678 it was taken by the Elector of Brandenburg, and in 1720 it was acquired by Prussia.

GRENADA, or GRANADA (Antilles).—This island was discovered by Christopher Columbus in his third voyage of discovery, in 1498. The French under Du Parquet formed a settlement in 1650, when the Caribs, the aboriginal inhabitants, were exterminated. Grenada capitulated to an English force, April 5, 1762, and was ceded to England by the ninth article of the treaty of Paris, Feb. 10, 1763. The French having assailed it with a very superior force in July, 1779, succeeded in wresting it from the English, to whom it was restored by the eighth article of the treaty of Versailles, Sep. 3, 1783. The French planters rebelled against the English in 1795, and the revolt was suppressed June 10, 1796.

GRENADE, or HAND-GRENADE, a kind of shell, first used in 1594.

GRENADIER.—In 1667 a few men were appointed in the French army to throw the grenades during a siege. Cavalry, called horse grenadiers, were appointed in France in 1676. Grenadiers formed a portion of the English army in 1684. They were armed with firelocks, slings, swords, daggers, and pouches with grenades, in 1686.

GRENADINES (Atlantic). — A cluster of small islands between St. Vincent and Grenada, two of the Antilles, are called Grenadines. They were ceded to England by the ninth article of the treaty of Paris, Feb. 10, 1763. The crown lands were sold by auction, March 26, 1764. The French and the Caribs rebelled in 1795.

GRENELLE (France).—This village, near Paris, was much injured by an explosion of gunpowder in 1794. The celebrated artesian well, 1,800 feet deep, commenced by Mulot in 1834, was completed in 1841.

GRENOBLE (France) occupies the site of the ancient Cularo, which (379) was called Gratianopolis, in honour of the Emperor Gratian, who enlarged it. Mention of a bishop occurs in 381. (See CHARTREUSE.) Riots took place in 1788. Pius VII. was brought a prisoner to Grenoble in July, 1809; thence he was transferred to Savona, and afterwards to Fontainebleau. Grenoble was the first place that received Napoleon I. on his return from Elba, in March, 1814, and here he issued three decrees. An attempt at insurrection was suppressed May 4, 1816, and disturbances occurred Dec. 18, 1831.

GRENVILLE ADMINISTRATION was formed soon after the dissolution of the Bute administration, April 8, 1763, George Grenville becoming First Lord of the Treasury and Chancellor of the Exchequer, April 16, 1763. The cabinet was thus constituted:—

Treasury and Chancellorship of the Exchequer	Mr. Grenville.
Lord Chancellor	Lord Henley, created Earl of Northington May 19, 1764.
President of the Council	Earl Granville.
Privy Seal	Duke of Marlborough.
Principal Secretaries of State	Earls of Sandwich and Halifax.
Admiralty	Earl of Egmont.
Secretary at War	Mr. Ellis.
Ordnance	Marquis of Granby.

Negotiations were carried on with Mr. Pitt, who had an interview with George III., Aug. 27, 1763. They were broken off Aug. 29. The Duke of Bedford took Earl Granville's place as President of the Council, Sep. 2, 1763, and it is sometimes called the Bedford administration. This ministry was dissolved in July, 1765. (See ROCKINGHAM (First) ADMINISTRATION.)

GRENVILLE AND FOX COALITION MINISTRY.— See ALL THE TALENTS.

GRESHAM CLUB (London), designed for the use of merchants and professional men, was erected in 1844, and named in honour of Sir Thomas Gresham, founder of the Royal Exchange.

GRESHAM COLLEGE (London).—This institution was founded by Sir Thomas Gresham, who gave the Royal Exchange to the corporation of London and the Mercers' Company, on condition that they instituted a series of lectures on divinity, civil law, astronomy, music, geometry, rhetoric, and physic, May 24, 1575. He died Nov. 21, 1579, and the lectures were commenced in his house, which he bequeathed for the purpose, in June, 1597. The first Gresham College was pulled down in 1768, and the site used for the Excise Office. The lectures were delivered in a room over the Royal Exchange, until the present college was opened, Nov. 2, 1843. The Royal Society held its meetings at this institution from 1662 to 1710.

GRETNA GREEN (Scotland).—This village, in Dumfriesshire, at a short distance from the English frontier, was long notorious for irregular marriages. The Fleet marriages having been declared illegal in 1754, runaway lovers repaired to Scotland, and a celebrated Fleet parson advertised his removal to Gretna. He was succeeded by an old soldier named Gordon, who in his turn was followed by Joseph Paisley, called "the blacksmith," originally a weaver, and at one time a tobacconist. He died in 1814. By 19 & 20 Vict. c. 96 (July 29, 1856), Gretna Green and Border marriages were abolished. It provided that, after Dec. 31, 1856, "no irregular marriage contracted in Scotland, by declaration, acknowledgment, or ceremony, will be valid, unless one of the parties has his or her residence in Scotland, or had lived therein for 21 days next preceding such marriage; any law, custom, or usage to the contrary notwithstanding."

GREY ADMINISTRATION was formed soon after the resignation of the Wellington administration, Nov. 16, 1830. The cabinet consisted of—

Russians seized it in 1732, and erected it into the chief town of Lithuania in 1795. It has since been made the chief town of a province of the same name.

GROG.—Admiral Edward Vernon, after the reduction of Porto Bello, Nov. 21, 1739, introduced the use of rum-and-water amongst his crew. "In bad weather," according to Mr. Vaux (Notes and Queries, i. p. 52), "he was in the habit of walking the deck in a rough grogram cloak, and thence had obtained the nickname of Old Grog in the service. This is, I believe, the origin of the name grog, applied originally to rum-and-water."

GROLL (Battle).—The Duke of Luxemburg encountered the forces of the Bishop of Münster at this place in 1672.

GRONINGEN (Holland). — This town was founded towards the latter part of the 6th century, and possessed some commercial influence in the 9th century, when it was seized and destroyed by the Northmen. In 1110 it was rebuilt, and afterwards formed part of the Spanish dominions. In 1576 it was incorporated with the United Provinces, but it again fell into the possession of the Spaniards, from whom it was finally wrested by Prince Maurice in 1594. The citadel was erected in 1607, and the university founded in 1614. In 1678 Groningen repelled a siege by the Elector of Cologne and the Bishop of Münster. The institution for the deaf and dumb was founded in 1790, and the town-hall in 1793. In 1795 it was seized by the French, under Gen. Macdonald. The hôtel de ville was built in 1810.

GROSS-BEEREN (Battle). — Bernadotte, commanding an allied army, defeated Napoleon I. and the Saxons at this place, near Berlin, Aug. 23, 1813.

GROSS-GLOGAU.—(See GLOGAU.)

GROSS-GÖRSCHEN, or GROSZGÖRSCHEN. —(See LÜTZEN, Battle.)

GROSS-JÄGERNDORF (Battle). — The Russians, under Marshal Apraxin, defeated the Prussians, under Lehwald, at this place in Prussia, Aug. 30, 1757.

GROSSWARDEIN (Hungary).—This town, taken and pillaged by the Turks in 1660, was captured by the Austrians in 1692.

GROTESQUE.—This term was first applied to a style of classical ornament, in the 13th century.

GROUSE.—This bird, which does not appear to have been held in much estimation during the 14th century, is first mentioned as game by Capt. Burt in 1730.

GROVETON.—(See MANASSAS, Battles.)

GROYNE.—(See CORUNNA.)

GRUB STREET (London) was inhabited, before the discovery of printing, by text-writers, who prepared all sorts of books then in use. John Fox (1517—April 18, 1587), the martyrologist, John Speed (1555—July 28, 1629), the historian, and other authors, resided in Grub Street. Memoirs of the Society of Grub Street appeared in 1737. Its name was changed to Milton Street in 1830.

GUADALAJARA (Spain).— A corruption of Guidalhichara, or Guadalaruaca, the name given to this town of Castile by the Moors, who captured it in 714.

GUADALETE (Battle). — The Moors were defeated by the Christians at this place in Spain in 711.

GUADALOUPE, or GUADELOUPE (West Indies). — This island, one of the Lesser Antilles, was discovered by Columbus in 1493. In 1635 it was seized by the French, and was taken, Jan. 29, 1759, by the English, who restored it in 1763. It was again seized by them in 1794 and Feb. 5, 1810, when it was proposed to cede it to Sweden; but at the peace of 1814 it was restored to France. The English again captured it Aug. 10, 1815, and it was finally restored to France July 23, 1816. Guadaloupe suffered severely from an earthquake in 1843. Slavery was abolished in 1848.

GUAD-EL-RAS, GUALDRAS, or GUALTERAS (Battle).—The Spaniards defeated the forces of the Emperor of Morocco, at this place, near Tetuan, March 23, 1860.

GUADINA.—(See DURANGO.)

GUADIX (Spain) is said to have been the seat of the first bishopric erected in Spain. Ferdinand of Castile captured it in Dec., 1489.

GUALIOR, or GWALIOR (Hindostan), the capital of a state of the same name, was under the government of rajahs as early as 1008. In 1197 it was taken by the Mohammedans, and in 1235 submitted to Altumsh, King of Delhi. In 1519 it was taken by Ibrahim Lodi, the last Patan Emperor of Delhi, and in 1543 it was surrendered to Shere Khan, the Affghan. Gualior was taken by the British, under Major Popham, Aug. 3, 1780. In 1784 it was seized by Madhajee Scindia, and in 1803 a treaty was concluded, by which it was to be surrendered to the British. As this treaty was not observed, the town was again invested by the British, under Sir Henry White, who effected its capture Feb. 5, 1804. In 1805 it was again ceded to Scindia; but it was recaptured by the British under Sir Hugh Gough, Dec. 29, 1843. Seized by the Indian mutineers June 1, 1858, it was recovered by Sir Hugh Rose, June 19.

GUAM, or GUAHON.—One of the Ladrones, discovered by the Portuguese Fernando Magellan in 1521.

GUANHANI.—(See SALVADOR, ST.)

GUANO.— Prescott maintains that the Peruvians made great use of this valuable manure before Peru was visited by the Spaniards. Herrera refers to it in a work published in 1601, and in another published in 1609. It was described by Ulloa in 1748, and first brought to Europe by Humboldt in 1804. It is chiefly obtained from the Chincha q.v. and Lobos islands, situated off the coast of Peru. In 1839 the sole right to ship guano for nine years was sold to a private firm by the Peruvian and Bolivian governments; but the contract was cancelled by the government of Peru in 1841. The monopoly was, however, revived. Guano was discovered on the island of Ichaboe, on the coast of Africa, in 1843, and in one year the whole stock was exhausted. Large deposits of this manure were discovered in Van Diemen's Land in April, 1861.

GUARDS.—The celebrated Scotch guards of the kings of France were enrolled by Charles

VII. in 1453. The English yeomen of the guard were instituted by Henry VII. in 1485. The four troops of horse guards were enrolled in 1660, 1661, 1693, and 1702; the foot guards in 1660,—the second regiment is the Coldstream Guards (q.v.); the horse grenadier guards in 1693 and in 1702. The French National Guard was instituted in 1789, the Imperial Guard in 1804, and the Garde Mobile in 1848.

GUARDS' CLUB (London). — This club, restricted to officers of the household troops, was founded in 1810. The house was designed by Harrison, and commenced in 1848.

GUASTALLA (Italy). — This Italian duchy passed into the hands of the dukes of Mantua in 1677, and fell under the dominion of Austria in 1746. It was ceded to the Duke of Parma by the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, Oct. 18, 1748, and was incorporated with the Cispadane Republic by Napoleon Buonaparte in 1796. It formed a portion of the appanage of the Empress Maria Louisa in 1815, and was ceded to the Duke of Modena in 1796. The battle of Guastalla was fought near the chief town of the duchy, between the French and Sardinian forces under Charles Emanuel III., and the Austrians, Sep. 19, 1734, when the latter were defeated.

GUATEMALA (Central America). — This country was discovered by the Spaniards in 1502. The bishopric of Guatemala was established in 1533. The colony revolted from Spain in 1821, and became a federal republic in 1823. Its limits were diminished in 1839 by the secession of Honduras, and in 1846 each of the states forming the confederation adopted an independent government. Guatemala is governed according to the constitution of Oct. 19, 1851, by a president and legislative chamber. War was declared against the republic of St. Salvador, Jan. 23, 1863. (See SALVADOR, ST.) Raphael Carrera, the president, died April 14, 1865, and was succeeded by Vincent Cerna, elected May 3. (See OLD GUATEMALA, and NEW GUATEMALA.)

GUBBIO (Italy), the ancient Iguvium, is the chief town of a district of the same name. The municipal palace was discovered in 1332, and the Eugubine tables (q. v.) in 1444.

GUEBRES, PARSEES, or FIRE-WORSHIPPERS.—The Guebres of Persia, and the Parsees of Bombay, are descended from the fire-worshippers of antiquity, a sect which arose about B.C. 2120, and was suppressed by the Greeks about B.C. 330. It was restored by Ardeschir Badekhan in 225, and again proscribed by the Mohammedans in 652, when Yezdijud III. was deposed and slain. A large number of his subjects emigrated to Goojerat, where they were known as Parsees, or Persians. The modern Guebres are chiefly confined to the city of Yezd, in Persia.

GUELDERLAND, or GELDERLAND (Holland).—This duchy was sold to Charles I., Duke of Burgundy, in 1472, and reverted to the empire as an escheated fief in 1503. In 1528 it was held by its duke as a fief of Brabant and Holland, and in 1538 the succession was settled on the Duke of Cleves. In 1579 it took part in the Union of Utrecht, and in 1672 submitted to the French, who withdrew the following year. It was readmitted to the Union in 1674, and received an amended constitution in 1748.

GUELPH (House of).—This ancient family, which traces its descent from the 9th century, migrated in the 11th century from Italy to Germany, where, in 1070, its members acquired possession of Bavaria (q.v.). Their descendants subsequently obtained sovereignty in Brunswick (q. v.) and Hanover, and thus became the ancestors of the present royal family of England.

GUELPHIC ORDER.—This Hanoverian order of knighthood was founded by the Prince Regent (afterwards George IV.), Aug. 12, 1815. The statutes were amended May 20, 1841.

GUELPHS.—(See GHIBELLINES.)

GUENEZ (Battle).—Marshal Lefebvre defeated the Spanish, under Blake and La Romana, at this place, in Spain, Nov. 7, 1808.

GUERANDE, or GUERRANDE (France).—This town, founded in the 6th century, was surrounded with walls in 1431. After the celebrated battle of Auray, fought Sep. 29, 1364, between the forces of the two claimants for the duchy of Britanny, John of Montfort and Charles of Blois, in which the latter was slain, a treaty was concluded at Guerande, by the intervention of Charles V., April 13, 1365. It left Montfort in possession of the duchy, which was to revert to the widow of Charles of Blois, in case Montfort died without heirs. Guerande was captured in 1342, and by Du Guesclin in 1373. It was besieged in 1379 and 1489.

GUERNSEY (English Channel).—This island was called Holy Island in the 10th century, owing to the numerous monks who inhabited it. In 1035 it was shared between Nigellius, or Néel, Viscount of St. Sauveur, and Earl Robert of Normandy. Cornet Castle was founded about 1204, and St. Peter's church consecrated in 1312. Queen Elizabeth founded Elizabeth's College in 1563, and Fort George was commenced in 1775. The French have made numerous efforts to take Guernsey, the last of which occurred in 1780.

GUERRILLAS.—These armed bands of peasants and shepherds were regularly organized in Spain against the French from 1808 to 1814, during which period they rendered signal service.

GUEUX, or BEGGARS, was the name contemptuously applied by the Count of Barlaimont to the confederate nobles of the Low Countries, who presented a remonstrance called the Compromise (q. v.) against the Inquisition to the Regent Margaret, April 5, 1566, and was adopted by them as the name of their party the same evening. They defeated the Spaniards at Heiligerlee, or Heyligerlee, May 23, 1568, but later in the year were themselves compelled, by the Duke of Alva, to disband their forces. In 1570 they petitioned the diet of Spires against the cruelties of the Spaniards, and, in 1571, were refused asylum in Denmark, Sweden, and England. In 1572 they again proved victorious, and seized Briel and Flushing. Rammekens, Middleburg, and Arnemuyden also surrendered to them in 1573-4. The celebrated William, Prince of Orange, was a member of this party. There were also the Wild Gueux, or Gueux Sauvages, a band of Dutch Protestants driven into outlawry and plunder by Alva, in 1568; and the Water Gueux, or Beggars of the Sea, a party of privateers, who commenced their ravages in 1569.

GUIANA, or GUYANA (S. America).—This country was discovered by Columbus in Aug., 1498, and visited by Vincent Pinzon in 1500. The first town, St. Thomas, of Guiana, was founded by Diego de Ordas in 1531, and the Dutch established their settlement of New Zealand in 1580. Sir Walter Raleigh visited Guiana in 1595, and commenced his exploration of the country in the hope of discovering rich gold-mines in 1617. Slave labour was introduced in 1621. The three colonies of Demerara, Essequibo, and Berbice (q. v.), are called British Guiana (q. v.). The first French settlements in Guiana were formed in 1633. In 1809 their colony was seized by the English and Portuguese, who restored it to France in 1815. (See SURINAM, or DUTCH GUIANA; and CAYENNE, or FRENCH GUIANA.)

GUIDES, or messengers, introduced into the French army in 1774, were formed into a guard by Napoleon I.

GUIENNE, or GUYENNE (France).—This province, situated to the north of Gascony, with which it is often confounded, comprised part of Aquitania, according to some authorities corrupted into Guienne. Bordeaux was its capital. What was termed the duchy of Guienne passed into the possession of the English in 1152. The French seized it in 1294, and it was frequently contested until it came into the possession of France in 1453.

GUIGNES.—(See GUINES.)

GUILDFORD (Surrey) is first mentioned in the will of Alfred the Great, who bequeathed it to his neighbour Athelwald. In 1036 it was the scene of the murder of the Norman friends of the Saxon atheling Alfred, by order of Godwin, Earl of Kent; and, in 1216, the castle was taken by the French dauphin Louis. The town received its charter of incorporation from Edward III., in 1337. Its first charitable institution was founded in 1078, the Royal Grammar School in 1509, Archbishop Abbot's Hospital in 1619, the market-house in 1758, the prison was finished in 1822, and the Guildford Institution was founded in 1844.

GUILDHALL (London) was founded in 1411, and the kitchen was erected in 1501. It suffered much from the great fire of 1666, and was rebuilt in 1669, though the King Street front was not restored till 1789. The statues of Gog and Magog were set up in the hall in 1708. The allied sovereigns were entertained at a civic banquet, June 18, 1814; and the Emperor and Empress of the French received a similar compliment, April 19, 1855. The new roof was commenced June 22, 1864.

GUILD OF LITERATURE AND ART.—This institution, for the relief of indigent men of letters and artists, originated in 1851, when Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton's comedy, "Not so Bad as we Seem," was performed, in London and the provinces, by a distinguished party of amateurs, who devoted the proceeds to its establishment. The first representation took place at Devonshire House, in the presence of Queen Victoria, May 16, 1851, and the receipts of this and subsequent performances having been allowed to accumulate, three houses were erected near Stevenage, in Hertfordshire, on ground presented by Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton, which were inaugurated Saturday, July 29, 1865.

GUILDS.—English guilds were originally political in their nature, arising from the Anglo-Saxon custom of frank-pledges; one of the earliest of the trade guilds (see COMPANIES) being the Gilda Theutonicorum, or Steelyard Merchants, who were established in England before 967. The Knigten guild existed in the reign of Edgar (957—975), and received a charter from Edward the Confessor (1042—1066). These are the most important of the ancient guilds, though there were many others. The substitution of the term livery company for that of guild was made in the reign of Edward III. (1327—1377).

GUILLOTINE.—This instrument of decapitation, at first called the Louison, was invented, in 1785, by Joseph Ignace Guillotin, a celebrated French physician. It was first employed April 25, 1792. The inventor was himself condemned to suffer by this machine, but was delivered by the counter revolution of 9 Thermidor (July 27), 1794, and he died at Paris, May 26, 1814.

GUIMARAENS (Portugal), founded B.C. 500, was made the capital of Portugal in 1107. The cathedral was founded in 1385.

GUINEA (Africa).—This name is applied to the whole west coast of Africa, between Cape Verga on the north and Cape Negro on the south. It was first discovered by the Portuguese in 1446, but the coast was not explored till 1484. The English first traded with Guinea in 1530. Some adventurers, who renewed their attempts in 1553, died from the unhealthy climate, without effecting any negotiations. A second expedition was equipped in 1554, which met with better success, and in 1588 a company was chartered by Queen Elizabeth for the sole object of trading to this country.

GUINEAS.—So called because they were originally made of gold brought from the coast of Guinea. Guineas and half-guineas were first struck in 1663, the device being an elephant, to signify the country whence the gold was brought. Quarter-guineas were first coined in 1718. The last coinage of guineas took place in 1813. The value of this coin varied considerably at different periods. When first struck it was worth 20*s.*; but in 1695 it had increased to 30*s.* It was reduced to 25*s.* March 25, 1696, and to 22*s.* April 10, 1697. Its value was fixed at 21*s.* by a proclamation of Dec. 22, 1717. The guinea was gradually withdrawn after the introduction of sovereigns in 1817.

GUINEGATE (Battle).—This name is given to two battles. The first, in which the Flemings defeated the French, was fought at Guinegate, near Courtrai, July 11, 1302. In the second, Henry VIII., at the head of an English army, defeated the French, Aug. 16, 1513. Both are also called the Battle of the Spurs.

GUINES, GUIGNES, or GUISNES (France).—It was near this town, in Picardy, that Henry VIII. and Francis I. met in 1520, at the celebrated Field of the Cloth of Gold (q.v.).

GUISBOROUGH, or GUILSBOROUGH (Yorkshire).—This ancient town, supposed to be the Urbs Caluvium of the Romans, was the seat of a priory of Austin canons founded by Robert de Brus in 1129, and destroyed by fire in 1289. The first alum works established in England were erected here by Sir Thomas Chaloner. (See ALUM.) The town-hall was built in 1821, and the mineral springs were discovered in 1822.

GUITAR.—This, the national musical instrument of the Spaniards, who regard it as of equal antiquity to the harp, was exceedingly popular in France during the reign of Louis XIV. (1643—1715). A guitar with 12 strings was invented by Vanhek, a member of the Royal Academy of Music, at Paris, in 1773.

GUJERAT.—(See GOOJERAT.)

GULISTAN.—This peace between Persia and Russia was concluded Oct. 12, 1813. Persia ceded to Russia a number of governments in the Caspian Sea, and the whole of Daghistan, at the same time renouncing all claims to Georgia, Mingrelia, and other provinces.

GULOWLIE.—(See CALPEE.)

GUMBINNEN (Prussia). — Frederick William I. erected this small village into a town in 1732.

GUN.—The Gunmakers' Company was incorporated in 1638. The Armstrong gun, invented by Sir William Armstrong, was adopted by the British artillery service, Feb. 26, 1859. (See ARTILLERY, BREECH-LOADING GUNS, CANNON, &c.)

GUN-COTTON. — In 1846 Schönbein exhibited specimens of this material to the British Association at Southampton; but the method of its preparation was not published till the enrolment of the patent in April, 1847. It was found inapplicable to military and mining purposes, owing to its liability to spontaneous combustion, but has proved of great service in photography. (See COLLODION.)

GUNDAMUCK (Battle).—The remnant of the Cabul army, consisting of 20 officers and 45 European soldiers, under Major Griffiths, were attacked at this village in Affghanistan, by a force of Affghans numbering about a hundred to one, Jan. 13, 1842, and, with the exception of Dr. Brydon, all massacred.

GUNMAKERS were incorporated in 1638.

GUNPOWDER.—This substance, known to the Chinese at a very early period, appears to have been employed against Alexander III. (the Great), by some Hindoo tribes, B.C. 355, and to have been applied to military purposes in China in 85. It is described in an Arabic MS. of the year 1249, and also in the works of Roger Bacon (1214—June 11, 1292), who is regarded by some as the author of the invention, though other authorities ascribe it to the German monk Barthold Schwartz, in 1320. Its exportation from England was prohibited by Henry V. in 1414, and in 1625 its manufacture was monopolized by Charles I. Restrictions as to the quantity manufactured at a time, or stored in one place, were imposed by 12 Geo. III. c. 61 (1772), which prohibited dealers from keeping a stock of more than 200lb. By 16 and 17 Vict. c. 107, s. 45 (Aug 20, 1853), the exportation of gunpowder may at any time be prohibited by an order in council. Experiments, with a view to rendering gunpowder non-explosive, were made by Piobert, in France, in 1835, and by Fadéieff, Professor of Chemistry, at St. Petersburgh, between 1840 and 1844. Gale completed, at Westminster, a series of public demonstrations of his process for securing the same result by mixing the gunpowder with finely powdered glass, from which it is sifted before use, Wednesday, Aug. 2, 1865. (See EXPLOSIONS.)

GUNPOWDER PLOT.—This conspiracy of the Papists, to destroy the king, lords, and commons, while assembled in Parliament, by means of gunpowder, was contrived by Robert Catesby, in the spring of 1604. He was joined by Thomas Winter, who, April 22, secured the co-operation of Guy Fawkes, a native of Yorkshire, and a soldier of fortune. In furtherance of his scheme, Catesby hired a house close to the old palace of Westminster, under which he began to mine Dec. 11. They were, however, compelled to relinquish their mining; but hearing that a cellar under the house was to let, Catesby hired it, March 25, 1605. Thirty barrels and two hogsheads of gunpowder were concealed here under sticks and fagots. Everything was prepared for the execution of the plot, which was arranged for Nov. 5, on which day Parliament was to be reopened, when an anonymous letter, sent to Lord Monteagle, Oct. 26, to warn him, led to the disclosure of the whole affair. This letter was laid before James I., Nov. 1, and he at once inferred that the threatened danger was from gunpowder, and ordered that the cellars beneath the Parliament house should be searched. This was done on the evening of Nov. 4, when Fawkes was discovered in charge of the vault, with dark lantern and matches, ready to fire the mine. The other conspirators fled to Holbeach House, in Worcestershire, where they were attacked Nov. 8. Catesby, Percy, and the two Wrights fell sword in hand, and the others were made prisoners. Their trial commenced Jan. 27, 1606, and Digby, Robert Winter, Grant, and Bates were executed in St. Paul's Churchyard, Jan. 30. Thomas Winter, Rookwood, Keys, and Guy Fawkes suffered in Old Palace Yard, Westminster, Jan 31. Henry Garnet, the Jesuit, was tried March 28, and executed at St. Paul's as an accessory, May 3.

GÜNS (Hungary). — Soliman I. (the Magnificent), at the head of a large Turkish army, laid siege to this town Aug. 1, 1532. The defenders, who only numbered about 700 men, of whom about 30 were regular troops, kept him in check for more than three weeks, repelling 11 assaults, and ultimately forcing the enemy to retire.

GUTTA PERCHA.—The properties of this Malayan tree were known to the natives of Malacca and the neighbouring countries, long before they were discovered by Europeans. The tree was first described by Dr. Montgomerie, of Bengal, in 1842, and in 1843 Dr. D'Almeida exhibited a specimen of its inspissated juice to the Royal Society of Arts.

GUY'S HOSPITAL (London).—This institution, founded in 1722 by Thomas Guy, bookseller, who devoted £18,793 16*s.* 1*d.* to the erection of the building, and £219,499 0s. 4d. to its endowment, received the first patient Jan. 6, 1725, its founder having died Dec. 17, 1724. His statue was erected in the court Feb. 11, 1734. The front of the building was new-faced in 1778, and in 1829 its funds were increased by a legacy of £196,115, bequeathed by Hunt, of Petersham.

GUZERAT.—(See GOOJERAT.)

GWALIOR.—(See GUALIOR.)

GYMNASIUM.—According to Plato, the Lacedæmonians established the first gymnasium, and during the classical æra every important town possessed a similar institution, where the young practised racing, leaping, wrestling, boxing, &c. Solon compiled a code of laws especially for the regulation of gymnasia, about B.C. 594. The first French gymnasium, for the instruction of the army in physical exercises, was founded at Paris in 1818.

GYMNASTICS, practised in ancient times, were revived in Prussia in 1806, and by a decree of the French minister of public instruction, of March 13, 1854, they form a regular branch of instruction in all the royal colleges of the empire.

GYMNOSOPHITÆ, GYMNOSOPHISTS, or NAKED SAGES.—The name given by the Greeks to a sect of Hindoo philosophers who were remarkable for the asceticism of their manners and doctrines. They wore no clothing, believed in the transmigration of the soul, and exhibited the most surprising contempt of death. Calanus burned himself to death, in the presence of Alexander the Great, about B.C. 325.

GYPSIES, for a long period supposed to be of Egyptian origin, their very name being a corruption of the word Egyptians, are by some supposed to be the descendants of Hindoo Parialis who were exiled from their country by Tamerlane at the commencement of the 15th century. Other authorities say they left Asia for Europe before the 12th century. They are noticed as Ishmaelites in a paraphrase of the book of Genesis, written by an Austrian monk in 1122. They first appeared in the Danubian provinces in 1417, in Switzerland in 1418, in Italy in 1422, in France in 1427, in Spain in 1447, in England about 1512, and in Sweden in 1514. By 22 Hen. VIII. c. 10 (1530), they were ordered to quit the country, and severe ordinances were also issued against them by 1 & 2 Phil. & Mary c. 4 (1554), and by 5 Eliz. c. 20 (1562), which made their continuance in England for more than a month a capital felony. In 1560 they were expelled from France, and in 1591 from Spain; but, in spite of legislative enactments, they still exist in all the countries of Europe. The oppressive statutes against them in this country were repealed by 23 Geo. III. c. 51 (1783), by 1 Geo. IV. c. 116 (July 25, 1820), and by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 64 (July 21, 1856). Borrow commenced the translation of the Bible into the Rommany dialect the language of the gypsies) in 1836.

GYROSCOPE.—This instrument, for exhibiting the peculiarities of rotatory motion, was invented by Fessel, of Cologne, and described by Foucault to the Academy of Paris in Sep., 1852. The principle of its action was discovered by Frisi as early as 1750. It has been applied to the illustration of the diurnal rotation of the earth on its axis, and has been improved by Professors Plucker and Wheatstone.

H.

HAARLEM, or HAERLEM (Holland).—This town existed in the time of Theodore I., Count of Holland, who began to reign in 913. The church of St. Bavon was erected by Albert of Bavaria in 1372. Haarlem was besieged by the Spaniards, under the Duke of Alva, from Dec., 1572, to July 12, 1573, when it surrendered. The great organ was built by Christian Müller, of Amsterdam, in 1738. An industrial exhibition was opened July 4, 1825. The lake of Haarlem was drained between 1839 and 1851.

HABAKKUK.—This prophecy, stated by a legend to have been the production of the son of the Shunammite woman restored to life by Elisha (2 Kings iv. 34), B.C. 895, usually ascribed to a period ranging from B.C. 650 to B.C. 627, is referred by Delitzsch to B.C. 630 or 629. Other authorities suppose that Habakkuk attended Daniel during his residence at Babylon, carrying food to him while a prisoner in the lions' den, and that he subsequently returned to Judæa and died at his own farm, B.C. 538.

HABEAS CORPUS.—A writ at common law, issued for various purposes connected with the detention of prisoners. By 2 Hen. V. s. 1, c. 2 (1414), there was no liberation under such a writ when the prisoner was confined on judgment at another's suit. Felons and murderers were allowed to be tried in the counties where their offences were committed, by 6 Hen. VIII. c. 6 (1514). By 16 Charles I. c. 10, s. 8 (1640), it was enacted that a person committed by the king, or by his privy council, should be entitled to a writ of habeas corpus. The celebrated Habeas Corpus Act, 31 Charles II. c. 2 (May 27, 1679), specifies the modes of obtaining this writ, and renders the detention of an English subject for any considerable time illegal, unless the law has pronounced the detention just. This act cannot be suspended, except by authority of Parliament. (See ENGLAND and IRELAND.) The mode of procedure was simplified and improved by 56 Geo. III. c. 100 (July, 1816). The issue of writs of habeas corpus out of England is regulated by 25 Vict. c. 20 (May 16, 1862).

HABERDASHERS' COMPANY (London) was incorporated in 1447, and received their coat of arms Nov. 8, 1570. The original hall and laws of the association were destroyed by the Great Fire of 1666, in consequence of which another hall was erected in 1667. It was destroyed by fire Sep. 19, 1864. New rules were adopted in 1675. They were also called hosiers and milliners.

HABSBURG, or HAPSBURG (Switzerland).—This castle in Aargau, the seat of the ancestors of the house of Austria, founded in 1020, was destroyed in 1415. The ruins were visited by the Emperor Francis II. in 1815.

HACKNEY COACHES.—The first vehicle of this kind plied in London in 1625. Capt. Baily placed four hackney coaches, to ply for hire, at the Maypole, in the Strand, in 1634. Their number was subsequently increased, and all restrictions on this point were removed by 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 22, s. 9 (Sep. 22, 1831). The regulations respecting hackney coaches are embodied in 16 & 17 Vict. c. 33 (June 28, 1853), and 16 & 17 Vict. c. 127 (Aug. 20, 1853). ——The Lost-and-Found Office, for recovery of goods left in hackney coaches, was established by 55 Geo. III. c. 159, s. 9 (July 11, 1815).

HADDINGTON (Scotland), created a burgh by David I. (1124—1153), was destroyed by John, King of England, in Jan., 1216, and, having been rebuilt, was again burned in 1244. Edward III. burned it in 1355. The English took possession of Haddington in 1544, and again in 1548, and were compelled to retire in Oct., 1549.

HADFIELD'S ATTEMPT.—James Hadfield, a working silversmith, at one time a private of the 15th Light Dragoons, fired a pistol from the pit of Drury Lane Theatre at George III., who was occupying the royal box, May 15, 1800. He disavowed any intention of hurting the king, declaring that he had committed the crime as the readiest means of escaping from life. He was tried for high treason, June 26, and acquitted on the ground of insanity.

HADRIANOPLE (Battles).—The most celebrated was fought July 3, 323, between Constantine and Licinius, during the civil wars that followed the abdication of Diocletian, in which the latter was defeated. It was in this action that Constantine is said to have thrown himself into the river Hebrus with only 12 horsemen, and to have vanquished an army of 150,000 men.——Near this city Valens was defeated by the Goths, with immense slaughter, Aug. 9, 378. Gibbon says this battle, in which the Emperor Valens perished, "equalled in actual loss, and far surpassed in the fatal consequences, the misfortune which Rome had formerly sustained in the fields of Cannæ."

HADRIANOPLE (European Turkey).—This city is referred to by ancient authors under the name of Uscudama. It received its present title from the Emperor Hadrian, by whom it was restored and raised to considerable splendour. Hadrianople was erected into a bishopric by Constantine I. Its first bishop died in 340. It withstood a siege by the Goths in 378, and surrendered to the Bulgarians in 813. Frederick I., Emperor of Germany, stormed it in 1190, and it was taken by the Turks, under Amurath I., in 1360. In 1366 it became the capital of the Ottoman empire, which rank it retained until the capture of Constantinople by the Mohammedans in 1453. The Russians effected an entry Aug. 20, 1829, and retained possession till Sep. 14. The city suffered severely from the plague in 1836 and 1837. The Turks call it Edrench, and it is generally known under the name of Adrianople.

HADRIANOPLE (Treaty), signed Sep. 2, (O. S.) 14, N. S.) 1829, restored the Danubian Principalities to the Porte and confirmed all privileges granted by former treaties. Russia obtained the right of commerce throughout the Turkish empire, with liberty to pass the Dardanelles; and Turkey agreed to pay 1,500,000 Dutch ducats as indemnity for the expenses of the war, and 10,000,000 ducats as compensation for losses sustained by Russian merchants.

HADRIAN'S WALL.—This Roman fortification, of which some remains still exist, extended from the Solway Frith to the mouth of the Tyne, and consisted of a stone wall and parallel earthen rampart, about 60 feet apart. Spartianus declares that Hadrian built a wall 80 miles long, dividing the Romans from the barbarians, and that Severus constructed a wall across the island. The generally received opinion, therefore, is, that Hadrian built the earthen rampart (121), and that Severus, to strengthen it, constructed the stone wall (208–210). Bruce, in his work on the Roman wall, contends that both the earthen rampart and the stone wall were constructed by Hadrian, and that though Severus may have repaired this fortification, he built no wall himself. This is also called the Picts' wall.

HAGERSTOWN (United States).—This town of Maryland was occupied by the Confederates under Gen. Lee, Sep. 10, 1862, and July 5, 1864.

HAGGAI.—This prophecy was delivered by Haggai, B.C. 520, being the second year of Darius I. (Hystaspes). The author, according to tradition, was born in Babylon, of Jewish parents.

HAGIOGRAPHA.—(See APOCHRYPHA.)

HAGUE (Holland).—The Binnenhof, or Court of Holland, was founded in 1249. The town originated in the erection of a hunting-lodge of the counts of Holland in 1250. In 1528 it was pillaged by Maerten van Rossum, and in 1580 was the scene of the abjuration of Spanish supremacy by the States-General, and was made the residence of the stadtholder, and the centre of government. The cannon-foundry was established in 1668. The brothers Cornelius and John de Witt were literally torn to pieces by the enraged populace, July 24, 1672. The city was seized by the French, and the stadtholder compelled to take refuge in England, Jan. 19, 1795. In 1806, Napoleon I. transferred the title of capital to Amsterdam; but the government was restored to the Hague on its evacuation by the French in 1813.

HAGUE (Treaties).—The first convention of the Hague, between England, France, and Holland, to enforce the peace of Roskild, was signed May 21, 1659; the second convention, to which France was not a party, in July, 1659; and the third, of which the conditions were the same as the first, Aug. 14, 1659.——The alliance between Great Britain and the States, signed at the Hague, Jan. 23, 1668, received the name of the Triple Alliance on the accession of Sweden, April 25, 1668.——A treaty between Portugal and Holland was signed here, May 7, 1669.——An alliance between the emperor, Holland, and Spain, against France, was signed July 25, 1672.——A 20 years' truce was signed here, June 29, 1684.——A congress of sovereigns assembled here in 1690 and in 1691, to resist French encroachments. William III. left England, Jan. 16, to attend, returning April 13.——The Grand Alliance (q. v.) was renewed here in 1696.——The Second Triple Alliance (q. v.) was concluded here, Jan. 4, 1717.——The alliance of Hanover (q. v.) was signed at the Hague, Aug. 9, 1726.——Great Britain, Austria, the States-General, and Sardinia concluded a convention here for the prosecution of the war against France and Spain, Jan. 26, 1748.——The French concluded a treaty with the Dutch here, May 16, 1795.

HAGUENAU (France), in Alsace, was founded by Frederick I. in 1164. Having withstood many sieges, it was taken by the Swedes in 1632, and its fortifications were destroyed in 1675. The Imperialists captured it in 1705, and the French regained possession in 1706. The Austrians were repulsed in severe battles around Haguenau, Oct. 17 and Dec. 22, 1793.

HAGULSTAD.—(See HEXHAM.)

HAILEYBURY COLLEGE (Hertfordshire) was founded by the East India Company for the education of cadets. The first stone was laid May 12, 1806, and the building was completed in April, 1809. The college was closed in 1859.

HAINAULT, or HAINAUT (Belgium), was governed by a regular succession of counts from the time of Regnier I., who began to reign about 860. In 1436 it passed into the hands of Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy, and by the treaties of the Pyrenees, Nov. 7, 1659, and of Nimeguen, Sep. 17, 1678, part was ceded to France, and forms the province of French Hainault. In 1793 the rest of the territory was surrendered to France, and formed into the department of Jemmapes. In 1814 it was allotted to the Low Countries, and in 1830 was incorporated with Belgium.

HAINAULT FOREST (Essex), which owed its chief celebrity to the Fairlop oak (q.v.), was disafforested by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 43 (Aug. 1, 1851).

HAIR.—The Egyptians shaved the head, but the Greeks and Romans esteemed the hair of such honour that they offered it to the gods in gratitude for escape from shipwreck. Curling with irons was practised by females among the Greeks and Romans, and by both sexes among the Phrygians. The early Greek Christians offered the hair to God. Long hair was esteemed by the Goths; but the English of the 9th and 10th centuries wore it short. The Danes and Normans wore it long; but in the 14th, 15th, and 16th centuries, it was cut short. Wigs became common in the 17th century. Strange fashions of dressing ladies' hair in the 18th century began about 1760, moderated towards 1790, and had nearly declined before 1800.

HAIR-POWDER.—Gold-dust was occasionally used by the ancients for this purpose, but the usual expedient was to dye the hair. According to Josephus, King Solomon was preceded by 40 pages, whose hair was powdered with gold-dust. Powder is said to have been introduced by Mary de Medicis. It is mentioned by L'Etoile in 1593. The hair-powder tax, proposed by Pitt, was imposed by 35 Geo. III. c. 49 (April 30, 1795).

HAIRUMBO.—(See CACHAR.)

HAKODADI, or HOKODATE (Japan).—This town was ceded to the Tycoon by the Prince of Matsumai, in 1854. By a convention signed at Nagasaki, Oct. 14, 1854, and ratified Oct. 9, 1855, it was opened to British vessels requiring water, repairs, &c., and in 1858 became the seat of a Russian consulate. By the treaty of Jeddo (q.v.), signed Aug. 26, 1858, it was opened to foreign commerce from July 1, 1859. A British consulate was established Oct. 15, 1859.

HAKLUYT'S ISLAND (Polar Seas) was discovered by Baffin in 1616.

HAKLUYT SOCIETY, named after Richard Hakluyt (1553—1616), celebrated for his labours in collecting the materials for a history of British voyages and discoveries, was instituted Dec. 15, 1846.

HALBERTSTADT (Saxony) was the seat of a bishop in 814. The cathedral, commenced in 1235, was completed in 1491. The diet of Halbertstadt elected Otho IV. emperor in 1208. It was annexed to Brandenburg by the treaty of Münster, in 1648. The French captured Halbertstadt in Jan., 1758. It was ceded to France in 1807, and was restored to Prussia at the peace of 1814-15.

HALEB.—(See ALEPPO and CHALEB.)

HALF-BOWL.—(See BOWLS.)

HALF-CROWN.—(See COIN and CROWN.)

HALIARTUS (Battle), fought between a confederacy of Grecian states and Lacedæmon, B.C. 395, in which Lysander was slain.

HALICARNASSUS (Asia Minor).—This town of Caria, originally called Zephyria, was of Dorian origin, and is famous as the birthplace of Herodotus, B.C. 484. The celebrated tomb of Mausolus was erected B.C. 353, and the city was taken by Alexander III. (the Great) B.C. 334. It was a bishopric in the primitive Church, and sent a bishop to the Council of Chalcedon in 451. The site of the ancient town was discovered in 1839 by Lieut. Brock, and many interesting sculptures have been disinterred, and deposited in the British Museum.

HALIDON, or HALIDOWN HILL (Battle).—Edward III. defeated the Scottish forces at this place, near Berwick, July 19, 1333, and the town surrendered July 20. The Regent Douglas was killed.

HALIFAX (Nova Scotia) was settled in 1749 by adventurers from England, who named it after the Earl of Halifax, First Commissioner of Trade and Plantations. The seat of government was transferred hither from Annapolis in 1750. It was declared a free port in 1817. The college was founded in 1820.

HALIFAX (Yorkshire) is first named in a grant of the 12th century, and was a seat of the woollen manufacture as early as 1414. In 1443 the town numbered only 13 houses, which had increased in 1540 to 520. The free grammar-school was founded by Queen Elizabeth in 1583. Archbishop Tillotson was born here in 1630. Halifax was anciently remarkable for possessing the right of executing any thief who stole property of the value of thirteen pence halfpenny within its limits. The instrument used in the execution resembled the guillotine, and the town possessed and exercised this right from about 1280 to 1650; after which there is no record of its use. This was called the Halifax Gibbet Law. The Piece Hall was erected in 1779, Trinity Church in 1795, the gaol in 1828, the infirmary in 1836, and the general cemetery was established in 1837. The People's Park was presented to the town by F. Crossley, and opened in Aug., 1857. The new town-hall, erected at a cost of £32,000, was formally opened by the Prince of Wales, Aug. 4, 1863. A bronze equestrian statue of Prince Albert was inaugurated Sep. 17, 1864.

HALIFAX ADMINISTRATION.—Immediately after the accession of George I. the Treasury was placed in commission, with Lord, afterwards the Earl of Halifax, at the head (Oct. 5, 1714). The office of Lord High Treasurer has not been revived. The ministry was thus constituted:—

Treasury	Lord Halifax.
Lord Chancellor	Lord, afterwards Earl Cowper.
President of the Council	Earl of Nottingham.
Privy Seal	Earl, afterwards Marquis of Wharton.
Chancellor of Exchequer	Sir R. Onslow, Bart.
Principal Secretaries of State	Mr., afterwards Earl Stanhope, and Lord Townshend.
Admiralty	Earl of Oxford.
Secretary at War	Mr. Pulteney.
Ordnance	Duke of Marlborough.
Paymaster-General	Mr., afterwards Sir R. Walpole.

Hallam states that Lord Townshend was the actual prime minister. The Marquis of Wharton died April 12, and the Earl of Halifax May 19, 1715. (See CARLISLE ADMINISTRATION.)

HALIFAX GIBBET.—(See MAIDEN.)

HALLE (Saxony).—On the Saale, was founded in the 9th century, and was erected into a city by Otho II. in 981. St. Ulrich's church was built in 1339, and the cathedral founded in 1520. The university was established in 1694, and the orphan-house in 1698. A battle was fought here between the French and Prussians, Oct. 17, 1806. The latter were defeated, and Halle was seized by the French, who retained it till 1814, when it was restored to Prussia. In 1815 the university was united to that of Wittenberg, and the building for the incorporated institution was erected in the suburbs of Halle in 1834.

HALLE (Treaty).—Between the Protestant princes of the German empire, was concluded at Halle in 1610.

HALLELUJAH VICTORY.—This name was given to a victory gained by some newly-baptized Britons over their enemies in 420, because they commenced the struggle with loud cries of "Hallelujah!" Germanus, Bishop of Auxerre, was their leader on this occasion.

HALLEY'S COMET.—Halley observed the comet in 1682, and compared its orbit with those of the comets of 1531 and 1607, which he found identical. He consequently inferred that these were only three appearances of the same body, and announced this opinion in 1705. Having convinced himself of the truth of his theory by laborious calculations, he predicted that it would again appear in 1759, which proved to be the case.

HALOSCOPE.—This optical instrument, for the exhibition of the phenomena of halos, parhelia, &c., was invented by Auguste Bravais (Aug. 23, 1811—March 31, 1863), who published his "Mémoires sur les halos et les phénomènes qui les accompagnent" in 1847.

HALYS (Battle), between the Medes and Lydians, on the banks of this river, in Asia Minor, was interrupted by the eclipse of Thales. Various years between B.C. 625 and B.C. 583 are assigned as the date of this eclipse. Airy believes it to have occurred May 28, B.C. 584, and Ideler Sep. 30, B.C. 610.

HAM (France).—Coins were struck in this place, on the Somme, in the reign of Charles I. (the Bald) (840—877). The lordship was erected into a duchy in 1407, and the castle was built by the Count of St. Pol in 1470. It was the prison of the unpopular ministers of Charles X. in 1830, and of Louis Napoleon in 1840, after his attempt upon Boulogne. He effected his escape, May 25, 1846.

HAMADAN (Persia), occupying the site of the ancient Ecbatana (q. v.), was taken by Timour in the 14th century, and by Ahmed Pasha of Bagdad in 1724.

HAMADANITES.—Arabian princes of the tribe of Hamadan, who ruled over Mesopotamia from 892 to 1001.

HAMAH, or HAMATH (Syria).—This city, which at the time of the Exodus, B.C. 1491, was the chief place in Upper Syria, waged war, under its king Toi, with Hadadezer, King of Zobah, B.C. 1040 (2 Sam. viii. 10). It subsequently owed allegiance to Solomon, who erected "stone cities" here (2 Chron. viii. 4), B.C. 992; but on his death, B.C. 975, it regained independence, and was a separate power in alliance with the Syrians, Hittites, and Phœnicians, B.C. 900. It was subsequently seized by Jeroboam II. (2 Kings xiv. 28), about B.C. 825, was taken by the Assyrians under Sargon (2 Kings xviii. 34), B.C. 721—704, and never recovered its former importance. Hamah, which occupies the site of the ancient city, was visited by Burckhardt in 1812.

HAMBATO (Ecuador) suffered severely from an eruption of Cotopaxi in 1698, and from an earthquake in 1796.

HAMBURG (Germany) was founded by Charlemagne in 809, and speedily attained great influence on account of its commerce. In 1241 it concluded a treaty with Lübeck, which subsequently became the basis of the Hanseatic League; and in 1269 it received the right to frame its own laws and enforce their execution. A provincial council of ecclesiastics met here in 1406. The town extended its borders to the right bank of the Alster in 1500. A conference between the Reformers and the Roman Catholics was held here in Oct., 1526, and the people adopted the Reformation in 1535. In 1618 it was released from its former subjection to the dukes of Holstein. The bank was founded in 1619, and the church of St. Michael in 1751. In 1768 the city was finally released from all subjection to the house of Holstein, and in 1770 the emperor confirmed its right to the rank of a free city. In 1799 the Irish rebel Napper Tandy was surrendered to the British Government by the Ham-burghers, and in 1801 the city was occupied by the Danes. In 1802 all the Hanoverian property in Hamburg was surrendered to the city, which suffered severely, in consequence of the blockade of the Elbe, in 1803. French troops occupied Hamburg from 1806 to 1809, and in 1811 it was annexed to France as capital of the department of Bouches-d'Elbe. The French relinquished Hamburg in 1813; it regained its old constitution May 26, 1814, and joined the Germanic Confederation June 8, 1815. The gymnasium was founded in 1840. A fire, which broke out May 5, 1842, destroyed 2,000 houses and property to the amount of £7,000,000. A new constitution was adopted in 1848, and in 1851 the city was occupied by an Austrian force. An inundation of the Elbe laid the greater part of the city under water, Jan. 1, 1855. A commercial panic occurred in 1857. The Assembly adopted a constitution based on the Parliamentary system, with representative government, the members of which are elected by popular suffrage, Aug. 11, 1859.

HAMILTON (Canada West), situated on Burlington Bay, near Lake Ontario, founded in 1813, was incorporated in 1833. The Great Western Railway of Canada, connecting it with Toronto, was opened Dec. 15, 1853.

HAMILTONIAN SYSTEM of teaching languages, first employed by James Hamilton, at New York, in 1815, was introduced into England in 1823.

HAMMERSMITH (Middlesex).—This village is first noticed in the early part of the reign of Henry VII. The church was founded in 1631. In 1656, Hammersmith was the scene of Miles Syndercomb's conspiracy against Cromwell. The suspension-bridge was founded by the Duke of Sussex, May 7, 1825, and opened to the public Oct. 6, 1827. The parish of Hammersmith was separated from Fulham in 1834.

HAMPDEN CLUBS were formed throughout the country in 1816, their professed object being Parliamentary reform. A report of a committee of both houses, presented Feb. 9, 1817, declared these clubs to be revolutionary.

HAMPDEN MEMORIAL.—(See CHALGROVE.)

HAMPTON COURT (Middlesex) was built by Cardinal Wolsey, and presented by him to Henry VIII. in 1526. Edward VI. was born here, Oct. 12, 1537; and his mother, Jane Seymour, died here Oct. 24. Charles I. was detained a prisoner from Aug. 24 to Nov. 12, 1647. The grand front of the palace was commenced by Sir Christopher Wren in 1690, and completed in 1694. George I. fitted up the hall as a theatre in 1718. The celebrated vine was planted in 1769, and the public were permitted to visit the place in Nov., 1838.

HAMPTON COURT CONFERENCE, between the Episcopalian and the Presbyterian clergy, assembled at Hampton Court Jan. 14, 1604. James I. gave judgment Jan. 18, 1604.

HAMPTON and HAMPTON ROADS (United States).—This town of Virginia, settled in 1705, is situated on the estuary of the James River, here called Hampton Roads. President Lincoln and Mr. Seward had an interview with Mr. Stephens, Vice-President of the Confederate States, Judge Campbell, and Mr. Senator Hunter, on board the Federal steamer River Queen, in this channel, Feb. 3, 1865.

HANAPER OFFICE.—An obsolete department of the Chancery Court, which derived its name from the practice of keeping writs in a hamper or basket, "in Hanaperio." The emoluments of this office were granted by Charles II. to Lord George Fitzroy and his male descendants, or, failing such issue, to the Earl of Southampton and his male descendants, or to the Earl of Euston, afterwards the Duke of Grafton, these noblemen being the king's sons by the Duchess of Cleveland. The Hanaper Office was abolished by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 103 Aug. 10, 1842.

HANAU (Germany), in Hesse-Cassel, was erected into a town in 1303, and the territory of which it is the capital was made a county in 1429. It was fortified in 1528, and received a large addition to its population in 1593, in consequence of the numerous Flemish Protestant refugees. The new town was founded about 1600. Hanau was besieged for nine months by the Imperialists, under Gen. Lamboi, who was compelled to retire June 13, 1636. Numerous French Protestants settled in 1685. In 1736 the county was divided between Hesse-Cassel and Hesse-Darmstadt, but soon passed under the exclusive power of the former. It was erected into a principality in 1803, seized by the French in 1806, united to the duchy of Frankfort in 1809, and ultimately restored to Hesse in 1813. The battle of Hanau, between Napoleon I., with about 70,000 men, and the Austrian and Bavarian army, under Gen. Wrede, was gained by the former, Oct. 30, 1813. The loss was very severe on both sides.

HANBALITES, a branch of the Sonnites (q. v.), founded by Ahmed Ibn Hanbal in the 8th century.

HAND-CULVERIN.—(See CULVERIN.)

HANDEL COMMEMORATIONS or FESTIVALS.—The first musical festival in memory of this composer commenced in Westminster Abbey May 26, 1784. It lasted five days. The second day's performance was held at the Pantheon, and the receipts amounted to 11,842 guineas. Similar festivals were held on various occasions; and another on a large scale took place in Westminster Abbey, June 24, 26, 28, and July 1, 1834. A commemorative festival rehearsals having been held June 15, 17, and 19 took place at the Crystal Palace June 20, 22, and 24, 1859. The chorus and band numbered 3,158 performers, the audience 81,260 persons, and the receipts amounted to about £30,000. The second Handel Festival at the Crystal Palace was held June 23, 25, and 27, 1862, and the third at the same place, June 26, 28, and 30, 1865. The rehearsal took place June 23.

HANDKERCHIEFS, not known to the Greeks, were used by the Anglo-Saxons, and during the Middle Ages. Laced handkerchiefs came into fashion in the reign of Queen Elizabeth.

HANEFITES, a branch of the Sonnites (q. v.), founded by Abu Hanifa in the 8th century.

HANGING.—This punishment is mentioned as the sentence of thieves, in a charter of the reign of Edgar 959—975). The pirate William Marsh, executed in 1241, was the first person who was hanged, drawn, and quartered. The term "drawn" meant that the criminal was drawn on a hurdle to the place of execution. The old custom of hanging the bodies of criminals in chains was abolished by 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 26 (July 25, 1834).

HANGO (Finland).—Peter the Great gained his first naval victory over the Swedes off this village, in Finland, July 27, 1714. Here the Russians fired on an English flag of truce, killing six men, and wounding several more, June 5, 1855.

HANG-TCHEOU-FOU, or HANG-CHOW-FOO (China).—This city, described as the most splendid, literary, and religious in the Celestial empire, was, during the visit of Marco Polo (about 1278—1295), the capital of the Mongol or Yuen dynasty. It was evacuated by the Tae-pings after a short occupancy, March 31, 1864.

HANOVER (Alliances).—A union, promoted by George I., Elector of Hanover and King of England, and signed at Herrenhausen, in Hanover, Sep. 3, 1725, by England, France, and Prussia, was known as the Alliance of Hanover. Holland acceded to it by a treaty signed at the Hague, Aug. 9, 1726; Sweden, by the treaty of Stockholm, March 26, 1727; and Denmark by the treaty of Copenhagen, April 18, 1727. Prussia secretly seceded and united herself with the opposite alliance of Vienna, in 1727.——A second treaty, bearing the same name, was concluded between George II. and Maria Theresa, June 24, 1741.

HANOVER (Germany) was given to Hermann Billing by Otho I. (the Great), 970, and passed into the possession of Henry the Black, Duke of Bavaria, in 1107.

1820. George Augustus Frederick (George IV.).
1830. William Henry (William IV.).
1837. Ernest Augustus (Duke of Cumberland).
1851. George V.

HANOVER COURT HOUSE, or PEAK'S STATION (Battle).—The Federals under Gen. Porter defeated the Confederates at this place in Virginia, May 27, 1862.

HANOVERIAN SUCCESSION.—Elizabeth, daughter of James I. of England, married Frederick V., Elector Palatine, Feb. 14, 1613. Her daughter Sophia was born in 1630, and married Ernest Augustus, afterwards Elector of Hanover, in 1658. By the Act of Settlement, 12 & 13 Will. III. c. 2 (1701), she was declared the next heir to the English throne after the descendants of William III. and of Queen Anne. Sophia died May 28 (O.S.), 1714, and on the death of Anne without issue, Aug. 1, 1714, her son, George Louis, Elector of Hanover, succeeded to the English throne as George I.

HANSEATIC LEAGUE, HANSE TOWNS, or the HANSA.—This union of German seaport towns was instituted about 1140, for the protection of their commercial interests, although the actual signing of the league did not take place till 1247. The first diet met at Lübeck in 1260. Henry III. of England conferred several immunities on this association in 1266, and in 1348 it possessed sufficient power to carry on a successful war with Denmark respecting the Sound dues. The League attained its greatest power about 1370, when it numbered 64 confederate and 44 allied cities. In 1448 they were at war with England, but had their privileges in that country restored in 1474. They were, however, finally abolished by Queen Elizabeth in 1578. In 1601 the Dutch supplanted them in the Mediterranean, and in 1630 their commerce was seriously injured by the invasion of Germany by the Swedes under Gustavus II. (Adolphus). The maritime law of this league was not published in a complete form till 1614, when its power had already begun to decline. In 1624 it originated maritime insurance companies, and in 1723 opened its ports to foreign commerce. The only towns still retaining the title of Hanse towns, are Bremen, Hamburg, and Lübeck. The merchants of the Hanse towns were called Hansards. They had four foreign factories—one at London, established in 1250; at Bruges, in 1252; at Novogorod, in 1272; and at Bergen, in 1278.

HARAN, HARRAN, or CHARRAN (Mesopotamia).—Terah, the father of Abram, died at this place in Padan-Aram B.C. 1921 (Gen. xi. 31, 32), and the Father of the Faithful, in obedience to a divine command, migrated thence with Lot, B.C. 1920 (Gen. xii. 1—5). Here Eliezer of Damascus met Rebekah, B.C. 1856 (Gen. xxiv. 10—28), at which time it was called the city of Nahor. At the commencement of the Christian æra it formed part of the kingdom of Edessa, and during the reigns of Caracalla (211—217) and Julian (361—363) it ranked as a Roman city. It is now a small village inhabited by Arabs.

HARBOURS.—The improvement of harbours, docks, and piers, is regulated by 10 Vict. c. 27 (May 11, 1847), and 24 & 25 Vict. c. 47 (Aug. 1, 1861).

HARFLEUR, or HAREFLEOT (France).—Henry V. of England laid siege to this place in Aug., 1415, and captured it Sep. 22. The steeple of the church of Harfleur was built by him in 1416, in memory of the battle of Agincourt. The Earl of Huntingdon captured a Genoese fleet off Harfleur July 25, 1417. It was retaken by the French in 1431, was stormed by the English in 1440, and was recaptured by the French in 1450. Louis XI. placed Harfleur at the disposal of the Earl of Warwick in May, 1470, and English vessels sailing thence assailed the merchant shipping of the Netherlands. The Earl of Richmond, afterwards Henry VII., sailed from Harfleur Aug. 1, 1485, for the purpose of wresting the English crown from Richard III.

HARLAW (Battle).—Donald, Lord of the Isles, obtained some aid from Henry IV. of England, and endeavoured to make himself independent of the Scottish crown. He was defeated in a severe battle at this place, near Aberdeen, July 24, 1411, and afterwards made submission.

HARLEIAN LIBRARY.—This collection of MSS. and pamphlets was formed by Mr. Harley, afterwards Earl of Oxford, who died May 21, 1724. It was purchased from his trustees for £10,000, by the government, who received authority from 26 Geo. II. c. 22 (1753), and it is now in the British Museum. The "Harleian Miscellany," a collection of the most interesting documents and tracts in the Harleian Library, first appeared in 1744. Another edition was issued in 1808.

HARLEQUIN.—The account given by Ménage, that this term is derived from a celebrated Italian actor, who appeared at Paris in the reign of Henry III. (1574—1589), and received the name of Harlequino, or Little Harlay, from his constant attendance at the house of M. de Harlay, is incorrect, as the word was in use before that period. Dr. Clarke, who traces its origin to classical times, says that Harlequin is Mercury.

HARLEY (LORD OXFORD'S) ADMINISTRATION.—Godolphin was dismissed Aug. 8, 1710, the treasury being put in commission, with Lord Powlett at its head; and Harley, afterwards Earl of Oxford, was made Chancellor of the Exchequer, Aug. 10, 1710, and Lord High Treasurer May 29, 1711. Lord Cowper resigned the great seal Sep. 25, 1710, and it was placed in commission until Oct. 19, when Sir Simon, afterwards Lord Harcourt, was made Lord Keeper, becoming Lord Chancellor April 7, 1713. Harley's associates were Lord, afterwards Earl Dartmouth, and Mr. St. John, afterwards Viscount St. John and Bolingbroke, Secretaries of State. Earl Dartmouth, on accepting the privy seal in 1713, was replaced by Mr. Bromley. The Hon. G. Granville (afterwards Lord Lansdowne) became Secretary at War Sep. 28, 1710; he was succeeded, June 28, 1712, by Sir William Wyndham, Bart., who was followed by Mr. Francis Gwyn, Aug. 21, 1713. Sir William became Chancellor of the Exchequer Nov. 1, 1713. Dr. Robinson, Bishop of Bristol, and afterwards of London, became Lord Privy Seal April 23, 1711. The chancellorship of the Exchequer was given to Hon. Mr. Benson, afterwards Lord Bingley, June 14, 1711. Oxford and Bolingbroke quarrelled, and the former was dismissed July 27, 1714. (See SHREWSBURY ADMINISTRATION.)

HARMONICA.—Musical glasses are mentioned in a work published at Nuremberg in 1651. The instrument was improved by Franklin in 1760. It first became known at Paris in 1765. John Stein invented a stringed harmonica in 1788.

HARMONISTS.—This religious sect was formed by the brothers George and Frederick Rapp, who emigrated from Würtemberg to the United States in 1803, when they founded the town of Harmony, in Pennsylvania. In 1815 they built New Harmony, in Indiana, which was purchased by Robert Owen in 1824. The Harmonists removed to a new settlement, which they named Economy, in 1825. Community of property and the absence of marriage are the distinguishing features of this sect.

HARMONIUM.—The principle of the free reed, or the musical vibration of tongues of metal, though known from an early period in China, was invented in Paris by Grenié in 1810, and was described by Biot in 1817. Three free reed stops were introduced in the organ of Beauvais cathedral in 1827, and the same construction was employed by Erard in an organ erected at the Tuileries in 1829. Alexandre of Paris, who commenced business in 1829, invented a harmonium which bears his name; and a similar instrument was patented by Debain of Paris in Aug., 1840. The improvements of Evans of Cheltenham, introduced in 1841, were brought into prominent notice in 1859.

HARMONY HALL.—(See COMMUNISTS.)

HARNESS.—The invention of harness has been ascribed to Erichthonius, King of Athens, B.C. 1487. In the Middle Ages white harness was much used. The Coach and Harness Makers' Company was established in 1677.

HARP.—Jubal is said to have been "the father of all such as handle the harp and organ," Gen. iv. 21 (B.C. 3204). The harp was common in Egypt as early as B.C. 1500, and the instrument was introduced into Ireland at an early date. The Saxons and other northern barbarians possessed it when they first came into contact with the civilized inhabitants of Europe in the 5th century, and the Welsh are said to have used a harp of 26 notes in the 6th century. The pedals were invented about 1720. Erard's pedal harp was patented in 1794, and his double-action harp in 1808.

HARPER'S FERRY (Virginia).—This village, the seat of a large state armoury, established in 1798, was destroyed by the Federal commissioners to prevent it from falling into the hands of the Confederate States, April 18, 1861. The town was occupied by the Confederates May 20. It was the scene of the negro insurrection under Capt. John Brown, Oct. 17, 1859.

HARPONULLY (Hindostan).—The Rajah of Harponully became tributary to Hyder Ali in 1774, and to Tippoo in 1786. On the fall of Seringapatam, May 4, 1799, Harponully passed into the hands of the Nizam, by whom it was assigned to the East India Company in 1800.

HARPSICHORD, supposed to have been invented in the 15th century, was introduced into England in the 17th.

HARRISBURG (Pennsylvania).—The capital, founded in 1733, was incorporated in 1808, and made the chief town of Pennsylvania in 1812. During the Confederate invasion of Pennsylvania, the inhabitants abandoned the town, June 16, 1863. Gen. Lee, who advanced within four miles, June 27, changed his plans and marched to Gettysburg (q. v.).

HARRISONBURG (Battle).—The Federals under Gen. Fremont were defeated by the Confederates under Gen. "Stonewall" Jackson, at this place in Virginia, Friday, June 6, 1862. (See CROSS-KEYS, Battle.)

HARROGATE, or HARROWGATE (Yorkshire).—The "Old Spa," a chalybeate spring, in High Harrogate, discovered in 1571 by Capt. Slingsby, was surrounded by a terrace in 1656. The waters from the "sulphur wells" of Low Harrogate were used both internally and externally before 1700. The "Crescent water" was discovered in 1783, and the Cheltenham water in 1819. The first inn was built at Harrogate in 1687.

HARROW-ON-THE-HILL (Middlesex).—Wulfred, Archbishop of Canterbury, purchased Harrow, called Herges in Domesday Book, and other lands, in 822, for the purpose of restoring them to the church of Canterbury. The town, given in 1543 by Archbishop Cranmer to Henry VIII., in exchange for other lands, was granted by him to Sir Edward, afterwards Lord North, in 1546, and it continued in his family until 1630. John Lyon procured a charter from Elizabeth for a grammar-school, in 1571, but the house was not built till 1585. The original statutes were made in 1591. The assistant masters first took boys into their houses in 1771. The modern building was erected in 1819, and the separate chapel in 1839. A great part of the building was destroyed by fire Oct. 22, 1838. The foundation stone of the library was laid by Lord Palmerston July 4, 1861.

HARTFORD (Connecticut). — This town, originally established by the Dutch in 1633, received its name from a colony of English who settled in 1635. It was incorporated as a city in 1784.

HARTFORD CONVENTION, the name applied to a meeting of delegates from the New England States, assembled at Hartford, in Connecticut, Dec. 15, 1814. Their object was to protest against the war waged against Great Britain. The convention sat 20 days, with closed doors, and proposed amendments in the constitution of the United States.

HARTLEPOOL (Durham).—St. Hieu, or, as her name is sometimes spelt, St. Bega, founded a monastery here about 640, which, with the town, was burned by the Danes in 800. Egfrid, Bishop of Lindisfarne, rebuilt them between 830 and 845. In 1171, Hugh, Earl of Bar, anchored in the bay with an armed force intended to aid William (the Lion), King of Scotland, in an invasion of England. The town, annexed in 1189 to the see of Durham, received a charter from King John in 1201, and another from Richard le Poer in 1230. A monastery of grey friars was erected before 1275. In 1346 Hartlepool furnished five ships and 145 men for the armament with which Edward III. invaded France, and in 1593 it obtained a new charter from Queen Elizabeth. The Scotch, under the Earl of Calender, seized it on behalf of the Parliament in 1644, and occupied it till 1647, when it was transferred to the revolutionary army. In 1680 the custom house was removed to Stockton, and the commerce of the town commenced to decline. The free school was erected in 1742, and the Guildhall in 1750. (See WEST HARTLEPOOL.)

HARTLEY COLLIERY.—In consequence of an accident to the pumping machinery at the New Hartley Colliery, near Newcastle, 204 men and boys perished by suffocation, Jan. 16, 1862.

HARTWELL (Buckinghamshire).—The principal manor was bestowed by William I. on his natural son, William Peverell. Henry II. seized the estate in 1155. Louis XVIII. of France resided in the manor-house of Hartwell from 1809 until the restoration in 1814.

HARUSPICES, or BIRD-SEERS.—Priests in ancient Rome, instituted by Romulus about B.C. 750. They pretended to foretell future events by inspecting the entrails of animals. When abolished by Constantine I., in 336, their number amounted to 70. They must not be confounded with the Augurs. (See AUGURY.)

HARVARD COLLEGE.—The determination to found an institution of the kind, at Cambridge, Massachusetts, was first formed in 1636, and in 1639 it was named after the Rev. John Harvard, a clergyman, from England, who, at his death, in 1638, left half of his property and his library to the institution. Bishop Berkeley, in 1747, recommended the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts to send books to this college; and the library having been destroyed by fire in 1764, further supplies of books were sent from England.

HARVEY ARCHIPELAGO. — (See COOK ISLANDS.)

HARWICH (Essex).—The Danes were defeated by the Anglo-Saxons in a naval battle off Harwich, in 885. The town received a charter from Edward II. in 1318; this, after having been confirmed by several sovereigns, was extended in 1604. Isabel, queen of Edward II., landed here in 1326, with her son, Prince Edward. Edward III. sailed from Harwich in 1340, and gained an important victory over the French fleet off Sluys. The Duke of York defeated the Dutch fleet near Harwich, June 3, 1665. The Dutch lost 24 ships, and 3,000 men were made prisoners. A battery was erected in 1820.

HASTENBECK (Battle).—The French defeated an allied army of British, Dutch, and Hanoverians, at Hastenbeck, July 25, 1757.

HASTINGS (Battle).—William, Duke of Normandy, sailed from St. Valery Sep. 26, 1066, and arrived at Pevensey Sep. 28. His army, amounting to 60,000 men, landed and formed a camp at Hastings. Harold II., having marched to the north to encounter the Norwegians, whom he defeated at Stamford Bridge, Sep. 25, hastened to the south, and arrived in sight of the invader Oct. 13. The battle was fought at a place then called Senlac, now Battle, near Hastings, Saturday, Oct. 14, and, after an obstinate struggle, which lasted from sunrise to sunset, Harold II. was slain, and the Normans remained masters of the field. In 1067 William I. founded an abbey near the place where the victory was gained. It was dedicated to St. Martin, and is known as Battle Abbey.

HASTINGS (Sussex), one of the Cinque Ports (q. v.), was known by this name at least as early as 780. Athelstan established a mint in 925. It was burned by the French in Aug., 1377, and in 1380. The town-hall, built in 1700, was rebuilt in 1823. An Industrial Exhibition was opened in Sep., 1865. The new town is called St. Leonards-on-Sea.

HASTINGS, WARREN (Impeachment of).—(See INDIA.)

HASUNFIORD (Sea-fight).—Harold Harfager, of Norway, defeated the Vikingri, in 875.

HAT, as an article of man's attire, invented at Paris, by a Swiss, in 1404, was fashionable in France in the latter part of the reign of Charles VI., who died Oct. 21, 1422. Charles VII. is reported to have worn a white felt hat at his entry into Rouen in 1449. Hats and plumes were worn at the court of Edward III. at the institution of the Garter. The Pope of Rome was in the habit of sending "blessed hats" to princes and commanders of armies who deserved the gratitude of the Roman Catholic Church. These hats were of violet silk, lined with ermine, and embroidered with gold and jewels. They were blessed by the Pope, in solemn conclave, on Christmas-eve. The last hat of this description was given to Gen. Daun, after the capture of Hochkirchen, in 1758. The crowns of the hats worn at the commencement of the 18th century were round. The Jews of Spain were formerly compelled to wear yellow hats. In many towns of Germany, bankrupts had to wear green and yellow hats. Hats were first manufactured in London by Spaniards in 1510; and came into fashion and were taxed in 1785. The company of the hat-band makers was formed in 1664. The tax was repealed in 1811. Silk hats were introduced in 1810.

HATCHER'S RUN (Battle).—Gen. Lee defeated the Federals, under Gen. Grant, near this creek, in Virginia, Oct. 27, 1864.

HATELEY FIELD (Battle).—Fought on a plain, that has since been called Battlefield, about two miles from Shrewsbury, Saturday, July 21, 1403. It occurred during the Percy insurrection against Henry IV. Henry Percy (Hotspur) fell, and Henry V. (then Prince of Wales) distinguished himself. In this action Falstaff is represented by Shakspeare as having led his ragamuffins where they were well peppered, only three out of his 150 having been left alive. Falstaff himself was found by the Prince of Wales lying on the ground, and he declared that with a formidable adversary he had "fought a long hour by Shrewsbury clock." It was also called the battle of Shrewsbury, and sometimes of Battlefield.

HATFIELD (Hertford).—A council was held here Sep. 17, 680, against the Monothelites, at which Theodore, Archbishop of Canterbury, presided. Hatfield, in the 10th century, was granted by Edgar to the abbey of Ely, and when the latter was made a bishop's see, in the reign of Henry I., the manor-house became one of the residences of the bishop, and was on that account called Bishop's Hatfield. Elizabeth, who afterwards purchased the palace, was kept prisoner at Hatfield from 1555 till her accession in 1558. The left wing of the old palace was burned to the ground Nov. 27, 1835, when the Dowager Marchioness of Salisbury perished in the flames.

HATRAS (Hindostan).—Ceded to the East India Company by Dowlet Rowe Scindia, in 1803, was besieged and taken by the British, March 1, 1817.

HATS.—(See CAPS AND HATS.)

HATTEMISTS.—The followers of Pontian van Hattem, an enthusiast, who disseminated his peculiar doctrines in Zealand, towards the end of the 17th century.

HATTERAS INLET (United States).—The Confederate forts on this creek of North Carolina, attacked, Wednesday, Aug. 28, 1861, by a Federal naval expedition under Commodore Stringham, and the land forces of Gen. Butler, surrendered Aug. 29.

HAUTBOIS, or OBOE, a musical instrument, invented at an early date, was much used in military bands in the 17th century.

HAVANA (Cuba).—This city, founded in 1511, by Diego Velasquez, and taken by a French pirate in 1536, was afterwards repeatedly seized by the Buccaneers. The university was founded in 1728. The English took Havana Aug. 14, 1762, and restored it to Spain the following year. Havana was probably erected into a bishopric soon after its foundation, as its second bishop died in 1528. In 1795 the remains of Columbus were removed from the cathedral of St. Domingo, where they had been deposited in 1536, to the cathedral at Havana. Three hundred and fifty houses were destroyed by a fire Feb. 10, 1828.

HAVRE DE GRACE (France).—Founded on the site of a fishing village by Louis XII. in 1509. Francis I. (1515-47) fortified it, commenced the port, and gave it the name of Franciscopolis. It was placed in the hands of Queen Elizabeth by the Huguenots in 1562; was besieged by the Constable de Montmorency, who captured it July 3, 1563; and was bombarded by the English in 1678, in July, 1694, in 1759, 1794, and 1795. Capt. Oliver, of the Melpomene, made fruitless attempts to destroy the French fleet off this town, July 23 and Aug. 1, 1804. In 1852 statues of Bernardin de St. Pierre and Casimir Delavigne, natives of the place, were erected; and in Aug., 1854, Havre was made the capital of the new department of Seine-Maritime. The old ramparts were removed in 1856, and since 1858 two large forts have been erected on the heights above the town. A Protestant church was opened Dec. 25, 1862.

HAWAIIAN ARCHIPELAGO, or SANDWICH ISLANDS (Pacific Ocean).—This group, comprising the islands of Hawaii, Kahoolaui, Kauai, Lanai, Maui, Molokai, Niihau, and Oahu, was discovered in 1542 by Gaetano, and was represented under a Spanish name, in the map of the world published with "Anson's Voyages," in 1748.

A.D.
1778, Jan. 19. The group is discovered by Capt. Cook, who names it the Sandwich Islands in honour of his patron, Lord Sandwich.
1779, Feb. 14, Sunday. Capt. Cook is killed by the inhabitants of Hawaii (q. v.).
1794. Discovery of Honolulu (q. v.).
1795. Kaméhaméha I. (the Great), King of Hawaii, unites all the islands, afterwards called Hawaii-Nei or United Hawaii, under one sceptre.

KINGS OF THE HAWAIIAN ARCHIPELAGO.

A.D.
1795. Kaméhaméha I. (the Great).
1819. Kaméhaméha II. (Liholiho).
1825. Kaméhaméha III. (Kauikeaouli).
1854. Kaméhaméha IV. (Alexander Liholiho).
1863. Kamehaméha V. (Lot or Lota Kamehaméha).

HAWAII, or OWHYHEE (Hawaiian Archipelago).—This, the principal island of the group, was, according to native traditions, first formed into a monarchy by King Akea. Capt. Cook, who arrived off its shores Dec. 2, 1778, and anchored at Kealakeakua Bay, on its west coast, Jan. 17, 1779, was at first regarded by the natives and their king Kalaniopuu as a god, and was consequently treated with divine honours. The death of one of his crew, however, dispelled the illusion, and aggressions and reprisals produced a state of ill feeling. Capt. Cook was killed by the natives, Sunday, Feb. 14. His colleague, Capt. King, having destroyed the neighbouring village, set sail Feb. 21. On the death of King Kalaniopuu, in 1782, the island, after some contests, passed into possession of his nephew Kaméhaméha I. (the Great). It was visited in 1786 by Capts. Portlock and Dixon; in 1787 by Capts. Meares and Douglass; in 1789 by Capt. Metcalf, of the American ship Eleanor; and in 1792, 1793, and 1794 by Capt. Vancouver. Kaméhaméha I. ceded it to England Feb. 25, 1794; and in 1795 he invaded and conquered the neighbouring islands of Lanai, Maui, Molokai, and Oahu, and reduced the King of Kauai to nominal submission. In 1801 this sovereign became entirely dependent, thus commencing the kingdom of Hawaii-Nei, or United Hawaii. (See HAWAIIAN ARCHIPELAGO.)

HAWKERS AND PEDLARS.—These itinerant merchants first appeared in England about 1330. They are classed with rogues and vagabonds by 39 Eliz. c. 4 (1597), and were first compelled to obtain a licence by 9 & 10 Will. III. c. 27 (1698). The annual duty, fixed at £4 by 50 Geo. III. c. 41 (June 2, 1810), was made payable to the commissioners of stamps by 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 22, s. 75 (Sep. 22, 1831). By 24 Vict. c. 21 (June 28, 1861) the duties were reduced.

HAWKING.—(See FALCONRY.)

HAWKSNEST (Battle). — Gen. Rosecrans defeated the Confederates under Gen. Floyd at this place in Western Virginia, Sep. 10, 1861.

HAYMARKET THEATRE (London), first erected in 1702, on the site of the King's Head inn, was rebuilt and made a theatre royal in 1767. Fifteen persons were killed, Feb. 3, 1794, by a crowd rushing into the pit. The tailors of London created a riot here in 1805, on account of a farce, supposed to be insulting to that trade. The existing edifice, commenced in 1820, was opened July 4, 1821. (See BOTTLE CONJUROR.)

HAYTI, or HAITI (West Indies).—This island, which forms one of the Leeward group, was discovered by Columbus in Dec., 1492, and named by him Hispaniola. It was afterwards called St. Domingo, which was changed to its native title, Hayti, in 1803.

A.D.
1495. Hayti is conquered by the Spaniards.
1497. St. Domingo is founded.
1585. The island is attacked by Drake.
1630. The western coast is seized by the French.
1665. The French appoint a governor.
1697, Sep. 20. The island is guaranteed to the French by the treaty of Ryswick.
1722. The negroes rebel.
1791. The negroes again revolt.
1793. The French abolish slavery.—Sep. 19. An English force arrives to protect the whites.
1795, July 22. Spain, by the treaty of Basel, surrenders her possessions in Hayti to the French.
1798. The British and French troops evacuate the island.
1801, July 1. The negroes declare themselves independent.
1802, Jan. The French invade Hayti, which they reduce to subjection.—May 3. They compel the negro general, Toussaint L'Ouverture, to surrender.
1803. The negroes expel the French, and declare the island independent.
1804. The negro Dessalines is proclaimed emperor as James I.
1806, Oct. 17. James I. is assassinated by his subjects, who place his lieutenant, Christophe, at the head of affairs.
A.D.
1811, June 2. Christophe and his wife are crowned king and queen, Petion retaining the presidentship of half the island.
1818, March 29. Death of Petion, who is succeeded by Boyer.
1820, Oct. 6. The troops revolt.—Oct. 8. King Christophe commits suicide.
1822. Boyer becomes president of the whole island.
1825, April 17. France recognizes the independence of Hayti.
1839, Dec. 23. The republic accedes to the conventions of Nov. 30, 1831, and of March 22, 1833, between Great Britain and France, for the suppression of the slave trade.
1843. Boyer is overthrown, and the Dominican republic (q. v.) is founded.
1849, Aug. 24. President Soulouque proclaims Hayti an empire, and assumes the title of Faustin I.
1852, April 18. Faustin I. is crowned at Port-au-Prince.
1855, Dec. 10. Faustin I. is repulsed by the troops of St. Domingo, and threatened with revolution by his own subjects.
1858, Dec. 22. Faustin I. is deposed. — Dec. 23. A republic is proclaimed under the presidency of Geffrard.
1859, Jan. 10. Faustin I. retires to Port-au-Prince.—Sep. 3. A plot against Geffrard results in the death of his daughter.
1860, Oct. 27. Three persons are shot for conspiracy.
1861, March 18. Hayti is declared united to Spain.
1862, May. An insurrection is suppressed. — June 10. Fourteen persons are executed for complicity therein.
1863, June. Many persons are executed for conspiracy.—Aug. 18. An insurrection breaks out against the Spanish Government.—Aug. 20. The insurgents defeat the Spanish governor.—Sep. 1. They seize the capital, St. Domingo, put the Spanish governor to flight, and proclaim a republic under Col. Palenco.—Oct. 4. Porto Plata surrenders to the insurgents.
1864, May 17. The Spaniards, victorious in several engagements, occupy Monte-Christi.
1865, April 1. A bill for the abandonment of St. Domingo passes the Spanish chamber of deputies.—May 7. A military insurrection breaks out against President Geffrard.—May 9. Gen. Salnave, the insurgent chief, seizes Cape Haytien.—Sep. 2. Gen. Geffrard resigns the presidency.—Oct. 23. H.M.S. Bulldog attacks Cape Haytien (q. v.).

HEAD MONEY, first paid at Rome, B.C. 121, when the consul L. Opimius gave the weight in gold to those who brought him the heads of Caius and Fulvius Gracchius.

HEALTH.—(See BOARD OF HEALTH.)

HEARTH-MONEY (Tax). — Fumage, or fuage, vulgarly called smoke-farthings, were, according to Domesday Book, paid for every chimney in the house. Edward the Black Prince, after his French victories, imposed a tax of one florin on every hearth in his French dominions. (See CHIMNEY TAX.)

HEAT, or CALORIC.—Little was known as to the phenomena of heat, till Dr. Black delivered his chemical lectures at Glasgow in 1757. He discovered the doctrine of latent heat, which he publicly announced April 23, 1762. Dr. (afterwards Sir William) Herschel announced the substantiality of heat May 15 and Nov. 6, 1800; and in 1802 his experiments were repeated and confirmed by Sir Henry Englefield. The next important discoveries were made by Mr. (afterwards Sir John) Leslie, who published his theory of the radiation of heat in 1804, which was brought to greater perfection in 1813, by Delaroche, of Geneva.

HEAVENLY ANNUNCIATION. — Victoria Fornari, having obtained permission from the Archbishop of Genoa, in 1602, to found this order of nuns, assumed the veil, with four companions, Sep. 7, 1605. The monastery was completed June 28, 1608. A branch of this order was established in Paris in 1622.

HEAVEN-WORSHIPPERS. — (See CELICOLÆ.)

HEBREWS (Epistle to the) was written by St. Paul, according to the best biblical critics, in 62 or 63. Some writers refer it to 58. The letter was probably intended for the Church at Alexandria, for in the Roman catalogues, from the end of the 2nd century, it is described under the title of "Epistola ad Alexandrinos."

HEBRIDES, or WESTERN ISLES (Scotland). —These islands, the Ebudæ of Ptolemy and the Hebudes of Pliny, long subject to the kings of Norway, became independent in 1089. In 1153, Somerled, lord of these isles, invaded the mainland, and attempted to dethrone Malcolm IV. Having been defeated, he was killed in a second attempt made in 1163. They were ceded to Scotland in 1266. Magnus, their last independent chief, died in 1265, and they were held by chieftains in vassalage to the King of Scotland until 1346, when their ruler, John of Isle or Islay, assumed the title of "Lord of the Isles." James V. brought them under the dominion of Scotland in 1540. In 1748, the abolition of all heritable jurisdictions put an end to the power of the chieftains of the Isles. Dr. Johnson visited these islands in 1773. (See NEW HEBRIDES.)

HEBRON (Palestine).—This city of Judah, built, according to Scripture, "seven years before Zoan in Egypt" (Num. xiii. 22), and called originally Kirjath-arba (Judges i. 10), was a well-known town when Abram "came and dwelt in the plain of Mamre, which is in Hebron," B.C. 1917 (Gen. xiii. 18). It was the scene of the death of Sarah, B.C. 1859 (Gen. xxiii. 2), and of her sepulchre in the cave of Machpelah, purchased by Abraham, of Ephron, the Hittite, for 400 shekels of silver (Gen. xxiii. 3–20). Hebron was taken by Joshua, who "destroyed it utterly, and all the souls that were therein," B.C. 1450 (Josh. x. 36–37), and bestowed its fields and neighbouring villages upon Caleb, "because that he wholly followed the Lord God of Israel," B.C. 1444 (Josh. xiv. 13–15), but gave the town to the Levites for a city of refuge, B.C. 1443 (Josh. xxi. 13). David established his government here B.C. 1047, and ruled here "seven years and six months" (2 Sam. v. 5). Hebron, rebuilt after the captivity, B.C. 530, was seized by the Edomites, from whom it was wrested by Judas Maccabæus, B.C. 163—160. It was burned by an officer of Vespasian soon after the capture of Jerusalem, Sep. 8, 70, and was taken, early in the 12th century, by the crusaders, from whom it reverted to the Moslems in 1187.

HECATOMB, or the Sacrifice of One Hundred Oxen, is supposed to have originated in each of the hundred cities of Lycaonia sending a bullock for the general sacrifice, or in each of the hundred cities of Peloponnesus making a similar contribution towards a sacrifice to avert the plague. Pythagoras (B.C. 540—510) is said to have offered a hecatomb on discovering the 47th proposition of the first book of Euclid.

HECLA (Iceland).—Forty-three eruptions of this volcano since 900 are on record. Of these five were simultaneous, or nearly so, with eruptions of Vesuvius, four with eruptions of Ætna, and one with an eruption both of Ætna and Vesuvius. An eruption that commenced in June, 1784, lasted till May, 1785. Sir Joseph Banks visited Hecla in 1772, and Sir George Mackenzie in 1810.

HEDGECOTE FIELD. — (See EDGECOTE, Battle.)

HEDGLEY MOOR (Battle). — Lord Montacute, brother of the Earl of Warwick, at the head of a Yorkist army, defeated the Lancastrians at this place, near Wooler, April 25, 1464.

HEDUI.—(See ÆDUI.)

HEGIRA.—This æra dates from the emigration called the flight of Mohammed from Mecca to Medina, Thursday, July 15, 622. The æra commences July 16.

HEIDELBERG (Baden), a village in 1225, was enlarged by Robert, Count Palatine, in 1362, and was plundered by the Bavarians in 1622. The Swedes captured it in 1633, and they retained possession till the peace of Westphalia, in 1648. It was sacked by Turenne in 1674, and ravaged by the French in 1689 and in 1693. The electors removed their residence to Manheim in 1719. The castle, formerly the residence of the Electors Palatine, was destroyed by lightning in 1764. Heidelberg was ceded to the Grand Duchy of Baden in 1802. Its university, the most ancient in Germany except that of Prague, was founded in 1386. The famous Heidelberg tun was constructed in 1751. It is the largest wine cask in existence, measuring 36 feet long and 24 feet high, with a capacity of 800 hogsheads, or 283,200 bottles. It has remained empty since 1769.

HEIDELBERG LEAGUE, of the Protestant princes of Germany, was concluded in 1591.

HEIDELBERG, or PALATINATE CATECHISM, first published at Heidelberg in 1563, was accepted by the synod of Dort (q. v.).

HEILBRONN (Würtemberg) was founded by Charlemagne in 805, and came under the dominion of the see of Würzburg in 1225. It was raised to the rank of a free imperial city in 1360, and was taken by storm in the War of the Peasants, 1528. The Protestant League of Germany was formed here in 1504, and a treaty between Sweden and the Protestant states of Germany, called the Union of Heilbronn, was concluded April 9, 1633. It was made over to the King of Würtemberg in 1803.

HEILIGER or HEYLIGER LEE (Battle). — The Spaniards were defeated by Louis of Nassau and the Dutch patriots, called the Gueux, or Beggars, near the monastery of Heiliger Lee, or the "Holy Lion," May 23, 1568.

HELDER (Holland).—The Dutch Admiral Van Tromp was killed off the Helder Point, Aug. 9, 1653. The English, having captured the Dutch fleet, Aug. 30, 1799, took possession of Helder. They retired in Oct. of the same year.

HELENA, ST. (Atlantic).—Discovered on St. Helena's Day, May 21, 1502, by Juan de Nova Castella, a Portuguese, was occupied by the Dutch some time after 1610. They removed their colony to the Cape of Good Hope in 1650. St. Helena fell into the possession of the English in 1651. The Dutch captured it in 1665 and in 1673, and on both occasions were speedily expelled. Charles II. granted it to the English East India Company in 1673. In 1815 it was made the residence of Napoleon I., who landed on the island Oct. 16, 1815, and resided there until his death, May 5, 1821. His remains were removed to France in 1840. A chaplain was appointed in 1675, and it was made a bishopric in 1859.

HELENSBURG (Scotland), near Greenock, was founded by Sir J. Colquhoun in 1777, and named after his wife Helen. The railroad to Glasgow was opened in 1858.

HELGA (Battle).—The Swedes and Norwegians defeated Canute near this river, in Denmark, in 1025.

HELGYN.—(See ELGIN.)

HELIACAL YEAR.—(See CANICULAR YEAR.)

HELICE (Greece).—Considered the most ancient city of Achaia (q. v.), was the capital of the Achæan League, when destroyed by an earthquake, B.C. 373. A similar catastrophe occurred on the same spot Aug. 23, 1817.

HELIER'S, ST. (Jersey), was founded by the Normans in 837. The parish church was built in 1341. Fort Regent was commenced in 1550, and completed in 1806. Elizabeth Castle, erected in 1586, received great additions in 1636. The court-house was built in 1647. St. Helier's was surprised by the French, Jan. 6, 1781. The harbour pier was completed in 1819. Queen Victoria visited St. Helier's, Aug. 28, 1846, and again Aug. 13, 1859.

HELIGOLAND (North Sea).—This island was a dependency of the duchy of Holstein, until captured by the English, Sep. 5, 1807. It was definitively assigned to England by the treaty of Kiel, Jan. 14, 1814, and ceased to be occupied as a military post in 1821.

HELIGOLAND (Sea-fight) took place off this island between a Danish squadron and the allied Austrian and Prussian fleet, May 9, 1864. A fire having broken out on board one of the Austrian frigates, the allies were compelled to cease the combat, and to retire to their anchorage near the island.

HELIOMETER was described by Savary in 1743. Bouguer constructed one in 1748. It was improved by Dollond in 1753, and by Ramsden in 1777.

HELIOPOLIS.—(See BAALBEC.)

HELLENISTS.—Jewish colonists who settled in Egypt, after the destruction of the kingdom of Judah, about B.C. 606. Their number was increased by the Jewish colonies planted by Alexander III., B.C. 336. The term was applied to certain Jews (Acts vi. 1., and ix. 29) in the early Church, who are also called Grecians.

HELLESPONT.—(See DARDANELLES.)

HELL-FIRE CLUBS.—Three secret associations under this name, to which about 40 persons, of both sexes, belonged, existed in London in 1721. Their tendencies and mummeries were believed to be similar to those of the Mohocks, forbidden, under high penalties, in 1711. They were suppressed by a royal proclamation, April 28, 1721.

HELMETS were worn by the ancient Egyptians and Assyrians, and by the Greeks, Romans, and Etruscans. The Britons did not use them before the Roman invasion, and they were rare among the Franks and Germans. The Anglo-Saxons wore four-cornered pyramidal helmets of leather, and the Danes conical protections of metal, which also formed part of the armour of the Saxon nobles at Hastings. The nasal-piece was added in the 10th century, and cylindrical flat-topped helmets were introduced in the 12th, the earliest specimen being one worn by Charles the Good of Flanders, in 1122. Fan crests became general in the 13th century; the round-topped helm came into fashion about 1270; and the sugar-loaf-shaped helmet about 1280. Bell-shaped and broad-brimmed helmets were sometimes worn in the 14th century, though they never became general. In the 15th century helmets of cuir bouilli and wicker-work were worn by archers; and in the 16th century the close helmet, or burgonet, was introduced, and mask-visors of grotesque design were in vogue. An attempt was made during the reign of Charles II. to invent a head-covering answering the double purpose of a helmet and a hat.

HELMSTADT (Brunswick).—The university, founded in 1576, was suppressed by Jerome Buonaparte in 1809.

HELOTS.—The inhabitants of the town of Helos, in Laconia, captured by the Spartans B.C. 700, were employed either as domestic slaves, cultivators of the land, or in the public works; and, being cruelly treated, often rose in rebellion. This was the case during the great earthquake, B.C. 464, and in the Peloponnesian war, B.C. 420. The term was afterwards applied to all captives condemned to servitude.

HELSINGBORG (Battle).—The Swedes defeated the Danes at this town, in Sweden, March 10, 1709. A convention between Great Britain and Sweden was concluded here Aug. 31, 1805.

HELSINGFORS (Russia).—The position of this town, built by Gustavus I. in the 16th century, was changed in 1639. The Russians burned it in 1728 and in 1741. It was ceded to Russia in 1809, and they made it the capital of Finland in 1819.

HELVETIAN or HELVETIC REPUBLIC.—The title of the government established in Switzerland (q. v.) by its French conquerors in April, 1798.

HELVETII.—This Celtic tribe inhabited the country now called Switzerland, and under their leader Divico defeated L. Cassius Longinus, and compelled his army to pass under the yoke, B.C. 107. Orgetorix led them into Gaul B.C. 61, and they were totally defeated and cruelly massacred by Julius Cæsar on the banks of the Saône, B.C. 58.

HELVOETSLUYS (Holland).—William, Prince of Orange, sailed from this port for England, Oct. 19, 1688. It was taken by the French in Jan., 1795, and was evacuated by them Dec. 5, 1813.

HEMP.—This plant has been grown in Bengal from the earliest ages, and was woven into cloth by the ancient inhabitants of Thrace. It was introduced into England about 1139. Its cultivation was ordered by 24 Hen. VIII. c. 4 (1532). Its growth in the North American colonies was encouraged by 3 & 4 Anne, c. 10 (1703).

HEMS.—(See EMESA.)

HENERY ISLE, about 10 miles from Bombay, was seized by Sevajee in 1679. It was a rendezvous for pirates about 1790.

HENGSTONE HILL, or HENGESTDOWN (Battle).—Egbert defeated the Danes at this place, in Cornwall, in 835.

HENNEBON (France).—The succession to Britanny having, in 1341, been disputed by Charles de Blois, nephew of Philip VI., King of France, and John de Montfort, the former besieged De Montfort's wife, Jane, in the town of Hennebon, in 1342. This heroic woman, said to have had "the courage of a man and the heart of a lion," was on the point of surrendering the town, when the English fleet, conveying reinforcements under Sir Walter Manny, entered the harbour.

HENOTICON, or EDICT OF UNION, was published by the Greek Emperor Zeno, in 482, for the purpose of reconciling the rival Churches of Alexandria and Constantinople. Felix III. condemned it in 483, and it was revoked by Justin I. in 518. (See ACACIANS.)

HENRI.—(See CAPE HAYTIEN.)

HENRICANS.—The followers of Henry, a monk and hermit, who attempted to effect a reform among the clergy in the 12th century. He quitted Switzerland, travelled through Bordeaux and Poitou, and arrived at Toulouse in 1147. Eugenius III. condemned his views at the Council of Rheims, March 21, 1148, and committed Henry to prison, where he died.

HENRY SPRINGS (Battle). — Maj.-Gen. Blunt defeated the Confederates, under Gen. Cooper, at this place, in Arkansas, July 16, 1863.

HENRY THE FIRST, the youngest son of William I., born at Selby, in Yorkshire, in 1068, was chosen king at Winchester, Aug. 3, and was crowned at Westminster, Sunday, Aug. 5, 1100. He married Maud, daughter of Malcolm III., King of Scotland, Nov. 11, 1100. She bore him a son and a daughter—William, Duke of Normandy, who perished by shipwreck, Nov. 25, 1120, and Maud, married to Henry V., Emperor of Germany, Jan. 7, 1111, and, after his death (May 22, 1125), to Geoffrey of Anjou, Aug. 26, 1127. She received homage as future queen of England, Dec. 25, 1126, and contested the crown with Stephen. Henry the First's queen, Maud, died at Westminster, May 1, 1118; and, Feb. 2, 1121, he married Adelais of Louvain, who survived him, leaving no issue. Henry I., who died at Rouen, Sunday, Dec. 1, 1135, was surnamed Beauclerc, or the Scholar.

HENRY THE SECOND, the eldest son of Geoffrey of Anjou, and Maud, daughter of Henry I., born at Mans, in Maine, March, 1133, was crowned at Westminster, Dec. 19, 1154. He married Eleanor, the divorced wife of Louis VII., Whitsunday, May 18, 1152. They had five sons and three daughters—William, born in 1152, and died in 1156; Henry, born Feb. 28, 1155, died June 11, 1183; Matilda, born in 1156, married to Henry the Lion, of Saxony, in 1168, and died June 28, 1189; Richard (see RICHARD I.); Geoffrey, born Sep. 23, 1158, killed at a tournament Aug. 19, 1186; Eleanor, born in 1162, married to Alphonso III., of Castile, in 1170, and died Oct. 31, 1214; Joanna, born in Oct., 1165, and died in Sep., 1199; and John (q. v.), afterwards king. Henry II., who died at Chinon, July 6, 1189, was surnamed Fitz-Empress.

HENRY THE THIRD, eldest son of King John and Isabella, born at Winchester, Oct. 1, 1207, was crowned at Gloucester, Friday, Oct. 28, 1216. He married Eleanor of Provence, Jan. 14, 1236, by whom he had six sons and three daughters. Of these, five, namely, Robert, John, William, Henry, and Catherine, died young. Edward (see EDWARD I.) was born June 18, 1239; Margaret was born in 1241, married to Alexander III. of Scotland, Dec. 26, 1251, and died in 1275; Beatrice was born in 1242, and died in 1275; and Edmund was born in 1245, created Earl of Lancaster, and died in 1296. Henry III. died at Westminster, Wednesday, Nov. 16, 1272, and was buried in the abbey, Nov. 20. In 1286 his widow Eleanor became a nun at Amesbury, where she died June 24, 1291. Henry III. was surnamed Winchester from the place of his birth.

HENRY THE FOURTH, the only son of John of Gaunt, born at Bolingbroke in 1366, was acknowledged king Tuesday, Sep. 30, 1399. In 1380 he married Mary de Bohun, by whom he had four sons and two daughters; namely, Henry V. (q. v.); Thomas, born in 1389, created Duke of Clarence in 1412, and was killed at Baugé, March 22, 1421; John, born in 1390, created Duke of Bedford in 1415, and died Sep. 14, 1435; Humphrey, born in 1391, created Duke of Gloucester in 1414, and died in Feb., 1447; Blanche, born in 1392, and died May 22, 1409; and Philippa, born in 1393, married to Eric XIII. of Denmark, and died Jan. 5, 1430. Henry's first wife, Mary, having died in 1394, he married Joan of Navarre, widow of John IV. or V. of Britanny, April 3, 1402. The marriage was celebrated at Winchester, Feb. 26, 1403. She had no children, and survived the king, dying in 1437. Henry IV. died at Westminster, Monday, March 20, 1413. He was surnamed Bolingbroke.

HENRY THE FIFTH, the eldest son of Henry IV. and his wife Mary, was born at Monmouth, Aug. 9, 1388; ascended the throne March 21. He was crowned at Westminster, April 9, 1413, and married Catherine of France, June 2, 1420. She bore him one child, Henry VI. (q. v.), and survived her husband, who died at Bois Vincennes, Aug. 31, 1422. He was surnamed Monmouth.

HENRY THE SIXTH, the only son of Henry V. and Catherine of France, was born at Windsor, Dec. 6, 1421, proclaimed king Sep. 1, 1422, and crowned at Paris Dec. 17, 1431. He married Margaret of Anjou, April 22, 1445. They had one son, Edward, born Oct. 13, 1453, and killed at Tewkesbury, Saturday, May 4, 1471. Henry was deposed March 4, 1461; restored Oct. 9, 1470; and again deposed April 14, 1471. From that time he was kept in the Tower, where he was probably put to death in June of the same year. His queen, Margaret, survived him, and died in penury at Dampierre, Aug. 25, 1481. Henry was surnamed Windsor.

HENRY THE SEVENTH, son of Edmund Tudor, Earl of Richmond, and Margaret, daughter of John Beaufort, Duke of Somerset, was born at Pembroke Castle, Jan. 21, 1456. He was proclaimed king after the victory of Bosworth Field, Aug. 22, 1485, and was crowned Oct. 30. He married Elizabeth of York, Jan. 18, 1486, thereby uniting the houses of York and Lancaster, that had long contested the right to the crown. They had three sons and four daughters, of whom Edmund, Elizabeth, and Catherine died in infancy. Their other children were Arthur, born at Winchester, Sep. 20, 1486, married Catherine of Aragon Nov. 14, 1501, and died April 2, 1502; Margaret, born Nov. 29, 1489, married to James IV. of Scotland, and died in 1541; Henry, who became king (see HENRY VIII.); and Mary, born in 1498, married to Louis XII. of France Oct. 9, 1514, and died June 25, 1533. Elizabeth died Feb. 11, 1503. Henry VII. died at Richmond, April 21, 1509, and was buried in the chapel at Westminster, which bears his name, May 10.

HENRY THE EIGHTH, the second son of Henry VII. and Elizabeth of York, was born at Greenwich, June 28, 1491; succeeded to the throne April 22, 1509; and was crowned at Westminster, June 24 in the same year. He married Catherine of Aragon, his brother Arthur's widow, June 7, 1509. The marriage was pronounced null and void May 23, 1533. Henry had married Anne Boleyn in Jan., 1533, and this union was declared lawful May 28, 1533. Anne's marriage was set aside May 17, and she was executed May 19, the king marrying Jane Seymour May 20, 1536. Jane Seymour died Oct. 24, 1537, and Henry married Anne of Clèves Jan. 6, 1540. This marriage was pronounced invalid July 10; abrogated by Parliament July 24; and Henry married Catherine Howard July 28, 1540. She was executed Feb. 12, 1542; and Henry married Catherine Parr, a widow, July 10, 1543. She survived him, dying in Sep., 1548. In addition to children who died in infancy, Henry had, by Catherine of Aragon, Mary (q. v.); by Anne Boleyn, Elizabeth (q. v.); and by Jane Seymour, Edward (see EDWARD VI.). Henry died at Westminster, Friday, Jan. 28, 1547.

HENRY THE SIXTH'S COLLEGE. — (See CHRIST'S COLLEGE, Cambridge.)

HEPTARCHY.—This word, which signifies the government of seven rulers, is applied to the divisions of England under the Saxons. The first Saxon monarchy in England was that of Kent, founded in 455. The erection of Sussex into a kingdom in 491 established the Duarchy, which became a Triarchy on the foundation of Wessex in 519. The commencement of the states of Essex and East Angles, in 527, made it a Pentarchy, which became a Hexarchy when Ida founded Bernicia or Northumbria in 547, and a Heptarchy on the establishment of the British kingdom of Deira, in 559. An eighth state, Mercia, founded in 586, constituted the Octarchy, which continued till 670, when the union of Deira and Bernicia into the single kingdom of Northumbria restored the Heptarchy. The seven kingdoms were gradually united into one by Egbert and his successors. (See BRITANNIA and ENGLAND.)

HERACLEA (Magna Græcia) was founded B.C. 432. The Romans were defeated near this city by Pyrrhus, B.C. 280.

HERACLEA, or MINOA (Sicily).—Little is known concerning the early history of this town, which was repeopled by the Dorians B.C. 510. It was an important place during the first and second Punic wars. (See ECNOMUS, Sea-fight.)

HERACLEA PONTICA (Asia Minor) was founded by the Megarians, B.C. 986. The inhabitants supplied the 10,000 Greeks under Xenophon with vessels to carry them back to Cyzicus, B.C. 401. The republican government of the city was overthrown by Clearchus B.C. 380. Heraclea furnished succour to Ptolemy I., against Antigonus, B.C. 307. The Roman consul Aurelius Cotta sacked and plundered the city B.C. 74.

HERACLEONITES. — A Gnostic sect, the followers of Heracleon, a pupil of Valentinus, that arose in the 2nd century.

HERACLIDÆ, the descendants of Hercules, who, after his death, B.C. 1209, were expelled from the Peloponnesus, and took refuge in Attica. The return of the Heraclidæ, or the Dorian Migration, B.C. 1104, forms a celebrated epoch in ancient chronology, as marking the transition from the heroic or fabulous ages to the period of authentic history.

HERALDRY.—Its origin has been claimed for the Egyptians, Greeks, and other ancient nations, but it is of much later date, and probably arose from the devices painted on German banners. Blazonry was introduced by the French, whether in the time of the Merovingians, who became extinct in 752, or in the 9th or 10th century, is uncertain. Family bearings were established among the kings of the Heptarchy. Heraldry, as a science, was not introduced into England till 1147; crests were borne before 1286. Heralds, as now established, were instituted by Richard III. in 1483, and were incorporated March 2, 1484.

HERALDS' COLLEGE, or COLLEGE OF ARMS (London).—This institution was incorporated by letters patent of Richard III., dated March 2, 1484. Queen Mary gave Derby House for the purposes of the college, July 18, 1554. It was destroyed in the great fire of 1666, and the edifice in Doctors' Commons was erected by Sir Christopher Wren in 1683. The college consists of the three kings-at-arms, viz., Garter, Clarencieux, and Norroy; of six heralds,—Lancaster, Somerset, Richmond, Windsor, York, and Chester; and of four pursuivants,—Rouge Croix, Blue Mantle, Portcullis, and Rouge Dragon.

HERAT (Affghanistan) in the time of Alexander III. was the capital of an extensive province. From 1150 to 1220 it was the residence of the Gourides, and was taken from the Persians by the Affghans in 1715. It was retaken by Nadir Shah in 1731, and recovered by the Affghans in 1749. The Persians attacked it in 1833 and in 1838, without success. It was surrendered to the Persian general Sultan Murad Mirza by Issa Khan, after a long siege, Oct. 26, 1856. The Persian troops evacuated it July 27, 1857. It was seized by Dost Mohammed, Shah of Affghanistan, May 26, 1863.

HERCULANEUM (Italy).—The foundation of this ancient city of Campania was ascribed to Hercules. It suffered severely from an earthquake, 63, and was entirely overwhelmed by an eruption of Mount Vesuvius, Aug. 24, 79. A second settlement, formed near the site of the buried city, met with a similar fate in 472. Even the situation of Herculaneum was forgotten. In 1709 some fragments of statues, &c., were discovered in sinking a well, and in 1738 the theatre was discovered and explored by Col. Alcubier. A description of the city was published by the Academy of Naples, at the expense of the government, under the title of "Antichità di Ercolano" (1757—92).

HERDBY, or HERDEBY (Nottinghamshire).—Eleanor, wife of Edward I., died at this place, near Grantham, Nov. 28, 1290.

HEREDITARY GRAND ALMONER.—This office, before the time of Richard II., was vested in the Beauchamp family. The Earl of Exeter claimed, and, in spite of other competitors, received it at the coronation of James I., in 1603, in right of descent from Lord Latimer, on whom the lands of the Beauchamp family had devolved.

HEREFORD (Bishopric) was founded in 676.

HEREFORD (Herefordshire).—A cathedral, built here in 825, and rebuilt in 1030, was destroyed by Griffith, when he assailed the city, in 1055. The present edifice was commenced in 1079. Hereford was pillaged by the Welsh, under Griffith, Oct. 24, 1055, and was taken by King Stephen in 1141. The Parliamentary troops captured it in 1643. It was incorporated Oct. 9, 1189, and its last charter is dated June 14, 1697. The cathedral, the west tower of which fell April 17, 1786, was reopened after restoration, June 30, 1863. The statue of Sir George Cornewall Lewis was inaugurated by Lord Palmerston Sep. 8, 1864.

HERETICS.—St. Augustine defines heretics as those "who, when they are reproved for their unsound opinions, contumaciously resist, and, instead of correcting their pernicious and damnable doctrines, persist in the defence of them, and leave the Church and become her enemies." In the primitive Church they were not regarded as Christians: marriages between them and the orthodox were prohibited in 366 by the Council of Laodicea; and the Theodosian Code (438) deprived them of the benefit of sanctuary. The principal heretical sects will be found under their respective titles. By 25 Hen. VIII. c. 14 (1533), offences against the see of Rome do not constitute heresy. All former statutes on the subject were repealed by 1 Eliz. c. 1 (1558), which rendered it an ecclesiastical offence, only to be judged in ecclesiastical courts. The burning of heretics was abolished by 29 Charles II. c. 9, s. 1 (1676). Persons relapsing from Christianity into a belief in more than one God, or a denial of the sacred Scriptures, were rendered liable to sundry civil disabilities, and, on persistence in the offence, to imprisonment for three years, by 9 & 10 Will. III. c. 32 (1698). (See FIERY CHAMBER.)

HERITABLE JURISDICTIONS.—A peculiar class of jurisdictions in Scotland, abolished at a cost of £152,037 12*s.* 2*d.*, by 20 Geo. II. c. 43 (1748).

HERMANDAD.—(See HOLY BROTHERHOOD.)

HERMANNSTADT (Transylvania), founded by the Saxons in 1160, was the scene of an Austrian defeat by the Hungarians, Jan. 21, 1849. The Russians occupied it July 21, 1849, were driven out Aug. 5, and regained possession, having defeated the Hungarians with much slaughter, Aug. 6.

HERODIANS, mentioned by Matthew (xxii. 16) and Mark (iii. 6, xii. 13), are believed to have been the adherents of Herod the Great, appointed governor of Galilee by Antipater B.C. 47. After he had obtained the throne, B.C. 40, he gained numerous partisans among the Jews, and they were probably formed into a sect at his death, B.C. 4 (March 13). Dr. Martin Luther translated the word Ἡρῳδιανοι into "Diener des Herodes," servants of Herod. They were a political party rather than a religious sect.

HERRENHAUSEN (Treaty).—(See HANOVER, Alliances.)

HERRERA (Battle).—The Carlists defeated Queen Isabella's troops near this place, in Aragon, Aug. 24, 1837.

HERRING FISHERY.—The Scotch were extensively engaged in this fishery in the 9th century, and the Dutch first practised it in 1164. By the Statute of Herrings, Edw. III. st. 2 (1357), the sale of the fish at sea was prohibited, and the trade was placed under the control of the chancellor and treasurer. This statute mentions Yarmouth as the great seat of the herring fishery. The method of curing the fish with salt was invented by Beukels, a Dutchman, who died in 1397. The Society of the Free British Fishery was incorporated in 1749 for the regulation of the herring fisheries, and a similar company was formed in 1786; but neither met with much success, in spite of the extravagant bounties granted for their encouragement. By 48 Geo. III. c. 110 (June 25, 1808), commissioners were appointed, whose business was to superintend the cleansing, packing, &c., of the herrings, and in 1830 the bounties were discontinued. The laws relating to the Scotch herring fishery were amended by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 92 (Aug. 13, 1860), and 28 Vict. c. 22 (May 9, 1865).

HERRINGS (Battle of), fought at Rouvroy, near Orleans, Feb. 12, 1429, between the English and the French, the latter being defeated. The French endeavoured to cut off a convoy of provisions for the army besieging Orleans, and for this reason the action was called the battle of Herrings.

HERRNHUT (Saxony), founded by the Moravian Brethren (q. v.), sometimes called Herrnhutters, in 1722.

HERTFORD (Hertfordshire).—A castle was built here in the reign of King Alfred. A council was held at Hertford, Sep. 24, 673. Edward the Elder erected another castle in 909, which was granted by Edward III. to John of Gaunt in 1345. Its earliest authenticated charter was granted by Elizabeth, in 1588; and that by which it is governed in 1680. (See CHRIST'S HOSPITAL.)

HERTFORD COLLEGE (Oxford).—Hertford Hall was in existence in the reign of Edward I., and in 1312 was conveyed to Walter Stapleton, Bishop of Exeter. It became a dependency of Exeter College; was re-established in 1710, and was raised into a perpetual college by royal charter, Aug. 27, 1740. It was dissolved in 1818.

HERULI.—This Teutonic tribe, from the coast of the Baltic, descended the Danube to the Black Sea, sailed through the Hellespont in 262, when, with other Gothic tribes, they assailed the cities of Greece, burning, among others, the famous temple of the goddess Diana at Ephesus. They were met near Athens by Dexippus, who routed them in 267. They again wandered northward, invaded Italy, and overthrew the Western empire in 476. The Longobardi almost destroyed them in 512, and their name is mentioned for the last time in history at the defeat and death of Teias by Narses, in March, 553.

HERZEGOVINA, or HERTSEK (European Turkey).—This province, at one time constituting the dukedom of St. Saba, and at another the county of Chulm, which originally formed part of Croatia, was incorporated with Bosnia in 1326. It was seized by the Turks in 1463, was formally ceded to the Porte by Austria at the peace of Carlowitz, Jan. 26, 1699, and was overrun by a band of Montenegrins in Oct., 1855. Omar Pasha was despatched to this province to suppress an insurrection under Luca Vukalovitch, Sep. 1, 1861. After a year's conflict this chief surrendered to the Ottoman forces of Churchid-Pasha, Sep. 23, 1862, and the rebellion terminated.

HERZOGENBUSCH.—The German name of Bois-le-Duc (q. v.).

HESDIN (France), taken by the English, under the Earl of Surrey, after a siege of six weeks, in 1522, was destroyed by Emanuel Philibert, Duke of Savoy, general of the forces of Charles V., in 1553, and rebuilt by the emperor in 1554. The new town, seized by Louis XIII. in 1639, was annexed to France by the treaty of the Pyrenees, Nov. 7, 1659.

HESDIN (Truce).—Louis XI. of France having, by his assistance of Henry VI. of England, provoked the resentment of Edward IV., concluded a truce with the latter monarch at this town of France, Oct. 27, 1463.

HESPERIDES.—(See CANARY ISLANDS.)

HESSE (Germany).—This country was originally peopled by the Catti (q. v.). In the time of Clovis I. it formed part of Thuringia, but in 902 was under the government of a count of Hesse. It afterwards passed by marriage into the possession of Louis I. of Thuringia (1130—1140), and on the extinction of his male descendants in 1247, was erected into a distinct landgraviate under Henry the Infant, whose claims were finally established in 1264. In 1292 it became a principality of the empire, and in 1458 was divided into Upper and Lower Hesse, the whole country again becoming united under the Landgrave of Lower Hesse in 1500. On the death of Philip I., in 1567, Hesse was divided between his four sons, who founded the houses of Cassel, Marburg, Rheinfels, and Darmstadt. The first house of Rheinfels becoming extinct in 1583, and that of Marburg in 1604, the country fell to the families of Hesse-Cassel and Hesse-Darmstadt (q. v.).

HESSE-CASSEL (Germany).—This state was erected on the death of Philip I. (the Magnanimous) of Hesse, in 1567. In 1627 the house of Hesse-Rottenburg and the second house of Rheinfels (q. v.) were founded by the brothers of William V. of Hesse-Cassel, and in 1663 Philip, third son of William VI., founded the line of Hesse-Philipsthal. Hesse-Cassel was made an electorate in 1803; it was occupied by the French in 1806, and was incorporated with the kingdom of Westphalia in 1807. It was re-elected into an electorate in 1813. Popular insurrections in 1830 and 1848 led to concessions from the elector, who joined the Prussian union in 1849, and seceded from it in 1850. The constitution was again modified in 1852, and again in 1860, the alterations taking effect from July 1.

HESSE-DARMSTADT (Germany). — This state was separated from Hesse on the death of Philip I. (the Magnanimous), in 1567. In 1801 Louis X. was compelled to cede several districts on the left bank of the Rhine, for which he received in exchange the duchy of Westphalia, &c. In 1806 Hesse-Darmstadt became a grand-duchy. The grand-duke joined the alliance against France in 1813, and ceded Westphalia and other territories to Prussia in 1815. Important political reforms were introduced in 1820 and 1848, most of which were withdrawn in 1850. Hesse-Darmstadt joined the Austrian league which assembled at Frankfort in 1850, under the name of the Ancient German Diet.

HESSE-HOMBURG (Germany).—This state was founded in 1596 by Frederick, son of George I. of Hesse-Darmstadt. In 1806 it was put in subjection to Hesse-Darmstadt, but it regained its independence in 1815, and received the lordship of Meissenberg. It joined the Zollverein in 1835. The Landgrave of Hesse-Homburg was the only minor prince of Germany who refused to adopt the constitution of the empire in 1849. He died March 24, 1866, and the state was incorporated with Hesse-Darmstadt.

HESYCHASTS, HESYCHISTÆ, or QUIETISTS OF THE EAST. — This mystic sect, which revived the doctrines and practices of the Euchites (q. v.), originated among the monks of Mount Athos, in the early part of the 14th century, taught that all perfection consisted in contemplation, and professed to enjoy glimpses of the same divine light which shone around the Saviour and the three chosen disciples at the transfiguration (q. v.). Opposed by the Barlaamites (q. v.), they were defended by Gregory Palamas, Archbishop of Thessalonica, who obtained a decision of the Council of Constantinople in their favour June 11, 1341. Another council in 1351 supported them, and they were patronized by the Emperor John V.

(Cantacuzenus), on whose retirement into a monastery, in 1355, they declined.

HETHELAND.—(See BATTLE ABBEY.)

HEVEONE.—This viscous vegetable oil, obtained by M. Mathieu from pure caoutchouc by the action of high temperature, was made known by him in 1861.

HEXHAM, or HAGULSTADT (Northumberland), was erected into a bishopric in 675, which was extinct in 810. In the 9th century this town suffered much from the Danes, and was taken and pillaged by the Scotch in 1296 and 1346. A battle was fought here between the Yorkists and the Lancastrians, in which the latter were totally defeated, May 8, 1464. Elizabeth founded a free grammar-school in 1598.

HEYLIGERLEE. — (See HEILIGER LEE, Battle.)

HIBERNIA.—(See IRELAND.)

HIERACIANS, or HIERACITES.—The followers of Hierax, an Egyptian bishop of Leontopolis, who taught towards the close of the 3rd century. He was an ascetic.

HIERAPOLIS, or HIEROPOLIS, or "THE SACRED CITY," also called Bambyce, attained importance as an emporium of Syrian commerce during the supremacy of the Seleucidæ (q. v.), B.C. 323—B.C. 65. It was injured by an earthquake in 127. Constantine I. (323—337) made it the capital of the province of Euphratensis, and Julian (361—363) appointed it as the rendezvous of the Roman troops during his Persian campaign. The city was again injured by an earthquake in 494, and having declined on the introduction of Christianity in 540, was taken by the Emperor Romanus IV. in 1068.

HIEROGLYPHICS, literally "sacred engravings or sculpture," are believed to be the oldest mode of writing known to mankind. The invention is usually attributed to Athotes, B.C. 2122. The simplest form of hieroglyphics, the phonetic, continued in general use in Egypt till the time of the 22nd dynasty, or about B.C. 1000, when the hieratic character was introduced. This was employed till the commencement of the 28th dynasty, about B.C. 800, when a new form, the demotic, came into use. It was employed till the Christian æra, when it was finally superseded by the modern Coptic. Hieroglyphics had passed into the condition of a dead language in the 2nd century. The last notice of them is by Horus Apollo, of Phenebetis, in 500. Subsequently all knowledge of hieroglyphics disappeared, till the discovery by Boussard, in 1799, of the Rosetta stone, a tablet bearing a decree in honour of Ptolemy (V.) Epiphanes, issued B.C. 196, gave a clue to their interpretation. The Rosetta inscriptions were partly deciphered by Silvestre de Sacy in 1801, by Akerblad in 1802, by Champollion le Jeune in 1814, and principally by Young in 1817–18. Champollion published his Grammar of Hieroglyphics in 1836, and his Dictionary in 1841.

HIERONYMITES, or GERONYMITES.—This order of hermits, a branch of the Franciscans, confirmed by Pope Gregory XI. in 1374, was founded in Italy by St. Thomas of Sienna, a Franciscan, who died in 1377. Monks of this order occupied the Escorial. (See BRETHREN OF SOCIAL LIFE.)

HIGH COMMISSION COURT.—This tribunal was established by 1 Eliz. c. 1, s. 18 (1559), to exercise jurisdiction in matters of an ecclesiastical nature. It sat for the last time at St. Paul's, Oct. 22, 1640, and was abolished by 16 Charles I. c. 11, s. 3 (1641). James II. attempted to revive it.

HIGH CONSTABLE.—(See LORD HIGH CONSTABLE.)

HIGH COURT OF ADMIRALTY was erected, according to Stow, in the reign of Edward III., though Lord Coke and Prynne assert that it existed long before that time. Richard II. limited its jurisdiction: it was divided into the Instance and the Prize courts, and was at first held in Southwark, but afterwards removed to Doctors' Commons. In early times, the judge of this court was merely the deputy of the lord high admiral, to whom the regulation of all naval matters was entrusted. The criminal jurisdiction of the Admiralty Court was, by 7 Vict c. 2 (March 5, 1844), transferred to the Court of Assize and the Central Criminal Court. By 20 and 21 Vict. c. 77 (Aug. 25, 1857), it was provided that on the next vacancy of the office of judge of the High Court of Admiralty, the queen might appoint the judge of the Court of Probate to that office, or, if the vacancy should first occur in the Court of Probate, the judge of the Admiralty Court might be appointed.

HIGH AND LOW CHURCH. — The terms were first applied to parties who struggled for supremacy in the Church, from the reign of William III. to the suspension of Convocation in 1717.

HIGHNESS.—This title, borne by Henry VII. and Henry VIII., was relinquished towards the end of the latter's reign for the style of "your majesty." It was conferred on the Prince of Orange by Louis XIV. in 1644. The Prince of Condé was the first to assume the title of Serene Highness.

HIGH TREASON.—The highest offence known in this country, is defined and regulated by 25 Edw. III. st. 5, c. 2 (1350). By 7 & 8 Will. III. c. 3 (1695), persons accused thereof were to be prosecuted within three years of the alleged offence, unless it was a plot to assassinate the sovereign. Trials for this crime were conducted in the same form as trials for murder by 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 93 (July 28, 1800). The punishment for high treason, according to 54 Geo. III. c. 146 (July 27, 1814), is drawing on a hurdle, hanging, and quartering, which may be commuted to simple decapitation if the sovereign pleases. The term high is not now used, the offence simply being styled treason.

HILDESHEIM (Hanover). — A bishopric, founded at Else, in 812, was removed to Hildesheim in 822. The cathedral was founded in 818. It was secularized, and taken possession of by the King of Prussia in 1802, was incorporated with the kingdom of Westphalia in 1807, and annexed to the kingdom of Hanover in 1813, the annexation having been confirmed by the Congress of Vienna in 1814–15.

HIMERA (Sicily) was founded by a colony from Zancle, B.C. 648. A great battle was fought near the city, between the Carthaginians and the Sicilians, the latter being victorious, B.C. 480. Some new colonists, of Doric extraction, arrived here B.C. 476. It was razed to the ground by the Carthaginians, B.C. 408. Many of the inhabitants returned, and founded a new city near the site of Himera, B.C. 405. Agathocles was defeated at Himera, B.C. 310.

HINDOSTAN, or HINDUSTAN, signifying, in the Persian language, the country of the Hindoos, has been applied by geographers to that part of India (q. v.) called the Peninsula within the Ganges, extending from Cape Comorin to the Himalaya mountains.

HIPPODROME.—(See CIRCUS.)

HIPPO REGIUS (Africa).—This maritime city of Numidia, founded by the Tyrians, afterwards became an important Roman colony, and one of the most flourishing cities of Northern Africa. Councils were held here Oct. 8, 393; in 395, when St. Augustine was appointed bishop of the diocese; in 422; and Sep. 26, 426. Augustine died Aug. 28, 430, during the siege of the city by the Vandals, by whom it was taken and destroyed. Its site is occupied by the modern Bona (q. v.).

HIRA (Chaldea).—This ancient city, now known as Medschid Ali, founded by the Arabs in 190, was destroyed by Saad Ben Abi Vacas in 639, and has never regained its former importance. Gibbon (ch. li.) says that "Hira was the seat of a race of kings who had embraced the Christian religion, and reigned above 600 years under the shadow of the throne of Persia."

HISPANIA.—(See SPAIN.)

HISPANIOLA.—(See HAYTI.)

HISTOLOGY.—This science, which treats of the structural and morphological elements of organized bodies, was founded by Malpighi (1628—1694), who discovered the blood corpuscules, and by Leuwenhoek (1632—1723), whose microscopic researches greatly aided the science of minute anatomy.

HISTORIOGRAPHER ROYAL.—In 1485 Bernard Andreas was historiographer to Henry VII. This office was revived by Charles II. in 1660, in favour of James Howell.

HISTORY.—Bacon divides human learning into history, poetry, and philosophy. Oral tradition was the mode in which historical facts were at first transmitted from one generation to another. The Old Testament is the earliest historical work in existence. Herodotus, born B.C. 484, and called the "father of history," is the earliest classical historian. With reference to the period at which Ancient history terminates and Modern history commences, a writer in "Blackwood" (vol. xxxii. p. 790, note) remarks,—"It has repeatedly been made a question at what æra we are to date the transition from ancient to modern history. This question merits a separate dissertation. Meantime, it is sufficient to say in this place that Justinian in the 6th century will unanimously be referred to the ancient division; Charlemagne in the 8th to the modern. These, then, are two limits fixed in each direction; and somewhere between them must lie the frontier line. Now, the æra of Mohammed in the 7th century is evidently the exact and perfect line of demarcation; not only as pretty nearly bisecting the debateable ground, but also because the rise of the Mohammedan power, as operating so powerfully upon the Christian kingdoms of the south, and through them upon the whole of Christendom, at that time beginning to mould themselves and to unite, marks in the most eminent sense the beginning of a new æra."

HIT (Chaldea).—This city, which became celebrated at a very early period for its abundant supplies of bitumen (q. v.), carried into Egypt, B.C. 1400, is still an important mart for the same commodity.

HITTITES.—This nation was descended from Cheth, or Heth, the second son of Canaan, B.C. 3200. "Uriah the Hittite" was one of the 30 composing David's body-guard, B.C. 1048. The Egyptian annals refer to a very powerful confederacy of Hittites in the valley of the Orontes, with whom Sethor I. waged war, B.C. 1340, and whose capital, Ketesh, near Emesa, he conquered. Solomon compelled them to pay tribute about B.C. 1000 (1 Kings ix. 20).

HOBART-TOWN (Australia), the capital of Tasmania, or Van Diemen's Land, founded in 1804, was thrown open to free settlers in 1819.

HOBKIRK'S HILL (Battle).—(See CAMDEN.)

HOCHKIRCHEN (Battles).—The Austrians defeated Frederick II. of Prussia, at this place, in Saxony, Oct. 14, 1758.——Napoleon I. gained a victory here over an allied Russian and Prussian force, May 22, 1813. (See BAUTZEN.)

HÖCHST (Battles).—The Imperialists defeated Christian I. of Brunswick at this place, near Mayence, June 20, 1622.——The Austrians defeated the French at the same place, Oct. 11, 1795.

HOCHSTÄDT (Battles).—The Emperor Henry IV. was defeated in the plains of Hochstädt in 1081.——The French and Bavarians defeated the Imperialists here Sep. 18, 1703. (See BLENHEIM.)

HOEKS, or HOOKS.—(See KABBELJAUWEN.)

HOGENHINE.—(See AGENHINE.)

HOHENBURG (Battle).—The Emperor Henry IV. of Germany defeated the rebellious Saxons in this battle, fought June 9, 1075.

HOHENFREIBURG (Battle).—Frederick II. of Prussia defeated the Austrians, under Prince Charles, at this village of Silesia, June 4, 1745.

HOHENLINDEN (Battle).—The French and Bavarians defeated an Austrian army at this village, in Bavaria, Dec. 3, 1800. The former lost 9,000, and the latter 18,000 men in the battle. The French and Bavarians took 97 pieces of cannon and 7,000 prisoners.

HOHENLINDEN CONVENTION was concluded Sep. 28, 1800, between Austria and France. The fortresses of Philipsburg, Ulm, and Ingoldstadt were given as securities to Napoleon Buonaparte, and a suspension of arms for 45 days, commencing Sep. 21, was agreed upon.

HOHENSTAUFEN.—The founder of this house was Frederick von Büren, who lived about 1040. His son fought valiantly under the Emperor Henry IV. in the battle of Merseburg, in 1080, and received the hand of the emperor's daughter Agnes, together with the dukedom of Swabia, in 1081. Conrad, his grandson, was elected Emperor of Germany, Feb. 22, 1138. Conrad III. was succeeded as emperor by his nephew, Frederick I., surnamed Barbarossa, 1152–90; and the imperial throne was occupied by his son and grandson till 1254. The sole and last survivor of the Hohenstaufen race, Conradin, tried to regain the family heritage; but having been defeated in the battles of Benevento, Feb. 26, 1266, and of Tagliacozzo, Aug. 23, 1268, he was made prisoner and beheaded at Naples, Oct. 29, 1268.

HOHENZOLLERN.—This, the royal house of Prussia, was founded by Count Thassilo, who built the castle of Zollern, afterwards called Hohenzollern (High-Zollern), in 800. The castle was greatly enlarged by Frederick, the first Count of Zollern, in 980. Frederick III. gained the title of prince and the government of Nuremberg in 1273. In the 16th century the house separated into two branches, the younger of which subsequently became kings of Prussia, while the elder remained princes of Hohenzollern. Frederick VI., of the younger line, received the province of Brandenburg from the emperor in 1411; his successor acquired the territory of Prussia in 1560. Another Frederick made himself King of Prussia, Jan. 18, 1701. The principalities of Hohenzollern-Hechingen and Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen, for many centuries in the possession of the elder line, were united with Prussia by treaty, March 20, 1850.

HOLINESS.—This title, introduced in the early ages of the Church, was applied by Pope Hilary to a bishop in 465, and to a patriarch in 590. It has been used almost exclusively by the popes since the 14th century.

HOLLABRÜNN (Battles).—Prince Bagration, attacked at this place in Austria by 30,000 French, under Marshal Lannes, Nov. 16, 1805, succeeded in saving part of his small corps of 6,000 Russians, with whom he joined the main body under Prince Kutusoff, Nov. 19. ——The French, under Marshal Massena, defeated the rear-guard of the Austrian army of the Archduke Charles at the same place, July 10, 1809.

HOLLAND, or KINGDOM OF THE NETHERLANDS.—This country was, in the time of the Romans, inhabited by a warlike tribe, called the Batavi.

HOLLY SPRINGS (Battle).—The Federal garrison at this place, in Mississippi, under Col. Murphy, were defeated and made prisoners by the Confederate Gen. Van Dorn, Dec. 20, 1862.

HOLM (Battle).—The Danes were defeated at Holm, in Kent, in 902. By some authorities the date of the action is referred to 904.

HOLMBY HOUSE (Northamptonshire).—The Scottish army having delivered Charles I. to the English commissioners, Jan. 30, 1647, he was conducted under a guard to Holmby House. From this place the king was removed, June 4, 1647, and conveyed to Childersley, near Cambridge.

HOLMFIRTH (Yorkshire).—During a heavy flood, the Bilberry reservoir, at Holmfirth, near Huddersfield, burst at half-past 12 in the morning, Feb. 5, 1852. Between 90 and 100 persons perished, and the damage to property was estimated at £600,000.

HOLSTEIN (Germany).—Charlemagne wrested this country from its Saxon inhabitants, and erected it into the margraviate of Nordalbingia, about 811. It was conferred upon Adolphus, Count of Schauenburg, by the Emperor Conrad II. in 1030, and in 1106 or 1110 was permanently erected into a county under his descendant Adolphus I., by Lothaire, Duke of Saxony. It was for many years harassed by Danish invaders, who were finally expelled in 1227, and in 1326 it received the duchy of South Jutland as an hereditary fief. The house of Schauenburg becoming extinct, Dec. 4, 1459, the States elected Christian of Oldenburg, King of Denmark, count, March 3, 1460. Holstein was erected into a duchy Feb. 14, 1474, and in 1544 it was divided between the King of Denmark and Adolphus of Holstein-Gottorp. His duchy was again divided, on the death of Christian Albert, in 1695, between his sons Frederick IV., who succeeded as Duke of Holstein, and Christian Augustus, first Duke of Holstein-Eutin. In 1751 the house of Holstein-Eutin succeeded to the throne of Sweden, and in 1762 to that of Russia, the Grand Duke of Russia being also Duke of Holstein-Gottorp. In 1773 the Grand Duke of Russia ceded all his possessions in Holstein to the King of Denmark, and the whole duchy became an appanage of the Danish crown. On the dissolution of the German empire in 1806, Holstein was incorporated with Denmark, Sep. 9, and in 1813 it was taken by the Swedes, who restored it in 1814. Provincial states for the government of Sleswig and Holstein were appointed by a law of May 28, 1831. In 1839 ill-feeling arose between the duchies and Denmark, in reference to the Danish succession, and this dissatisfaction was increased in 1844, by the demand of the German inhabitants of Sleswig to be united with Holstein, while the Danes desired union with Denmark. The Provincial States appealed to the Germanic diet, Aug. 3, 1846, and the revolution, of which the object was the separation of the duchies from Denmark, commenced at Kiel, March 24, 1848. The general assembly of the States met at Rendsburg, April 3, and voted the annexation of the duchies to the German Confederation; and a Prussian force entered Holstein, April 6, to assist in carrying this proposition into effect. This led to the Sleswig-Holstein war, which continued till the end of 1850, when the duchies tendered their submission to Denmark. The provincial diets were restored Jan. 28, 1852. The refusal of the states of Holstein to take the oath of allegiance to Christian IX. of Denmark led to a second war (see DENMARK and GERMANY), which resulted in the treaty of Gastein (q. v.), Aug. 14, 1865, vesting the government of this duchy in the Austrians, who retired in June, 1866.

HOLSTEIN-AUGUSTENBURG.—This line was founded in 1627 by Ernest Gunther, son of Alexander, second Duke of Holstein-Sonderburg. (See AUGUSTENBURG.)

HOLSTEIN-BECK.—Augustus Philip, son of Alexander, Duke of Holstein-Sonderburg, acquired in 1627 the land of Beck, in Westphalia.

HOLSTEIN-EUTIN.—This duchy was founded in 1695 by Christian Augustus, son of Christian Albert, Duke of Holstein-Gottorp. His son Adolphus Frederick succeeded, in 1751, to the throne of Sweden.

HOLSTEIN-GLÜCKSBURG (Germany).—This duchy was founded by Philip, son of John the Young, Duke of Holstein-Sonderburg, in 1622. The dukedom of Holstein-Glücksburg became extinct on the death of Frederick Henry, March 13, 1779.

HOLSTEIN-GOTTORP.—This duchy was founded in 1544 by Adolphus IX., son of Frederick, Duke of Holstein, whose successor, Peter III., succeeded to the throne of Russia in 1762. It was governed by its own dukes until it was ceded to Denmark by Paul Petrowitz, Nov. 16, 1773.

HOLSTEIN-PLON.—This branch of the ducal family of Holstein was founded in 1622 by Joachim Ernest, son of John the Young, Duke of Holstein-Sonderburg, and became extinct on the death of Frederick Charles without male issue, Oct. 10, 1761, when its territories were annexed to Denmark.

HOLSTEIN-SONDERBURG.—This branch of the Holstein family, founded in 1564 by John the Young, third son of Christian III., King of Denmark, became extinct on the death of Christian Adolphus, April 2, 1708.

HOLY ALLIANCE.—This celebrated compact, between the Emperors of Russia and Austria and the King of Prussia, was signed at Paris, Sep. 26, 1815. Other powers afterwards acceded to the alliance, which expressed the intention of the contracting sovereigns to continue in the bonds of Christian union, and recommended their subjects to "fortify themselves daily in the principles and exercise of the duties which the divine Saviour has taught men," as the only means of securing lasting and real happiness. The Duke of Wellington declined to sign this compact.

HOLY ANNUNCIATION.—(See ANNUNCIADA.)

HOLY BROTHERHOOD, or the SANTA HERMANDAD, an association for the maintenance of the public peace and the protection of property, was instituted at Aragon about the middle of the 13th century, and fully organized in 1488. It was established in Castile in 1282. A similar league was entered into by the cities of Castile and Leon in 1295. Kindred associations were organized in various parts of Spain at subsequent periods.

The laws of the association, codified in 1485, were published in 1527. The Hermandad in Valencia raised an insurrection in 1520–21.

HOLY COAT OF TRÈVES, said to be the coat mentioned in John xix. 23, which Christ wore at his crucifixion. A holy coat is said to have existed in Galatia in 580; another in Jerusalem in 589; another at Oviedo in 800; another at Santiago de Compostella in 899; another at Ghent in 1014; another at London in 1066; another at Mayence in 1115; another at Bremen in 1217; and another at Trèves in 1196. This last-named coat was declared to be the true garment of Christ by an apostolic decree of Pope Leo X., dated Feb. 1, 1514. Another holy coat appeared at Argenteuil, in France, and Pope Gregory XVI., Aug. 22, 1843, declared this garment to be the one worn at the crucifixion. Bishop Arnoldi of Trèves exhibited in 1844 the coat kept in his cathedral to an immense concourse of people, and this act provoked much controversy in the Roman Catholic Church.

HOLY GHOST.—The third person in the Trinity, whom the Saviour promised to send to comfort his disciples (John xiv. xv. & xvi.). The doctrine of the "Filioque," asserting the "Procession" from the Father and the Son formed one of the chief points of dispute which led to the separation of the Greek and Roman Churches, the former contending that he proceeded from the Father only. The Anglican Church, by the Fifth Article, maintains the doctrine held by the Romish Church.

HOLY GHOST, or SPIRIT.—Nuns of the Holy Spirit (Saint Esprit), or Annunciada, established at Paris in 1636, and suppressed in 1782.

HOLYHEAD (Anglesey).—A religious house is said to have been erected here by Maelgwyn in the latter part of the 6th century. The "college" was probably built by Hwfa ap Cynddelw, a contemporary of Owen Gwynedd, who began his reign in 1137. A school was founded in 1745; baths, and an assembly-room, were introduced in 1770. An act was passed in 1809 for erecting a pier and breakwater, and improving the harbour; and it was made the chief packet station for Ireland in 1830.

HOLY INNOCENTS' DAY.—(See INNOCENTS' DAY.)

HOLY ISLAND, or LINDISFARNE.—The see of Lindisfarne, founded in this small island in 635, was removed to Chester-le-Street in 875. The Danes assailed the church in 787, and destroyed it Jan. 8, 794. The island was invaded by Malcolm III., King of Scotland, in 1061. The castle was taken by adherents of the Pretender in 1715, and it was dismantled in 1819.

HOLY LAND.—(See ELIS and PALESTINE.)

HOLY LEAGUES.—The term, applied to several alliances, is more particularly used to describe the league formed Oct. 4, 1511, by Pope Julius II., with King Ferdinand and the Venetian republic, to protect the territories and to maintain the authority of the Romish Church, and to expel the French from Italy. The Emperor Maximilian I. and Henry VIII. of England afterwards acceded to it. Ferdinand concluded the truce of Orthes with Louis XII. of France, April 1, 1513, and thus broke up the league.—The Holy League of Castile was formed at Avila, in July, 1521.—Pius V. allied himself with Philip II., Venice, and some other powers, in a holy league against the Turks, May 24, 1571.—The Roman Catholic states of the circles of Swabia and Bavaria formed a holy league in 1609, which was joined by Pope Paul V. in Aug. of that year. —Another holy league against the Turks was formed by the Emperor Leopold I., John III., King of Poland, and Venice, March 5, 1684.

HOLY PLACES (Palestine).—The first of these, the church of the Holy Sepulchre, built upon Mount Calvary, was founded by the Empress Helena, mother of Constantine I., in 326, and was partly destroyed by the Persians in 614. It was rebuilt, and various "Holy Places" were added by Modestus, superior of the convent of Theodosius, in 630. The structures, again destroyed by Hakim in 1010, were rebuilt in 1048. The holy places were occupied by the Crusaders in 1099; burned by the Saracens in 1244, and re-erected in 1292. A fire broke out in the chapel of the Armenians, and destroyed nearly the whole of the sacred edifices, Oct. 12, 1808. After long negotiations with the Porte, permission was given to erect a new church, which was consecrated in 1810. A tragedy occurred at the church of the Holy Sepulchre in 1834, when nearly 500 people, pilgrims to the Holy Fire, were crushed to death. The guardianship of the Holy Places has long been a matter of dispute between the Greek and Latin Churches; Russia espousing the cause of the former, and France that of the latter. In 1690 the Holy Sepulchre was allotted to the Latins, and a treaty on the subject was signed between France and the Porte in 1740. A serious outbreak occurred at Jerusalem in 1759 between the followers of the rival Churches, and an imperial edict was soon after issued placing the holy sanctuaries under the protection of the Greek Church. France and Russia interfered in 1819, and in 1820 the French commissioner sent to inquire drew up a list of the Holy Places. The French Government made certain demands May 28, 1850, and most of these were on the point of being conceded in 1851, when Nicholas, Emperor of Russia, required from the Sultan of Turkey a strict adherence to the status quo ante. Negotiations were carried on for some time, and the other European powers offered their mediation; but the Emperor of Russia thought this a favourable opportunity to attempt the overthrow of the Turkish dominion, and his ambassador quitted Constantinople May 21, 1853.

HOLY ROMAN EMPIRE.—On the decline of the Western empire, and the abdication, in 476, of Romulus Augustulus, at the instance of Odoacer, chief of the Heruli, the imperial title merged in that of the emperors of the East, and was not separated till Dec. 25, 800, when Charlemagne was crowned emperor, with the diadem of the Cæsars, at Rome. On his death in 814 his empire was divided, the title of emperor passing by the treaty of Verdun in 843 to his grandson Lothaire I., through whom it was transmitted to Charles the Fat, on whose death in 888 it became extinct. Otho or Otto I. (the Great), crowned emperor at Rome by Pope John XII., Feb. 2, 962, is regarded as the founder of the Holy Roman empire, which claimed the secular government of Christendom, in the same manner as the spiritual superiority was arrogated by the Popes. Otho III. (983—1002) endeavoured to restore the capital to Rome; and Henry III., under whom the empire attained great magnificence, created in 1055 the title of King of the Romans as the style of the eldest son of the emperor. The election of Gregory VII. to the papacy in 1073, without the consent of the Emperor Henry IV., led to a struggle between the temporal and spiritual rulers of Christendom. (See CANOSSA, GERMANY, and INVESTITURE.) Under Frederick I., Barbarossa (1152—1190), the empire regained power, and indeed attained its highest magnificence, receiving the epithet "Holy," by which it has since been known. It declined rapidly in 1246, when Frederick II. was deposed by his subjects. The election of Rodolph of Habsburg in 1273 restored its prestige for a time, but it gradually lost importance until the reign of Frederick III. (1439—1493), when it sank to its lowest depth of degradation, and subsequently, under Charles V. (1519—1556) and his successors, became the mere appendage of the other dignities held by the emperors. Its destruction was effected by Napoleon I., at whose instigation Bavaria, Würtemberg, and Baden, with 13 minor states, renounced their allegiance, July 12, 1806, and the Emperor Francis II. formally abdicated the imperial dignity Aug. 6; thus terminating a government which, under varying forms, had existed from the establishment of the power of Augustus at the sea-fight of Actium, Sep. 2, B.C. 31.

HOLY ROOD.—(See CROSS.)

HOLYROOD (Edinburgh). — The abbey and palace, founded in 1128, by David I., were dedicated in honour of the Holy Cross or Rood brought to Scotland (see BLACK ROOD) in 1067, and the earliest charter was granted between 1143 and 1147. In 1607 John Bothwell, commendator of this place, was advanced to the peerage under the title of Lord Holyrood-house. The abbey was burned by the English in 1385, in 1544, and in 1547, on which occasion nothing was left standing but the body of the church, which, in its turn, was plundered and despoiled by the mob in 1688. Rizzio was murdered in one of the apartments of the palace, March 9, 1566. Charles I. was crowned here June 18, 1633. A new roof, erected in 1758, fell in 1768. The existing palace of Holyrood was designed by Sir William Bruce in 1669. The French royal family took up their residence at Holyrood in 1796; and Queen Victoria held a court here Aug. 30, 1850.

HOLY SEPULCHRE, or SACRED TOMB (Order of the).—This military order is said to have been founded by St. James in 69, to guard the Holy Sepulchre against unbelievers. Other authorities say it was established by Helena, mother of Constantine I., in 326; others, by Godfrey of Bouillon, King of Jerusalem, in 1097; and some consider Baldwin I. (1100—1118) its founder. It was incorporated with the Hospitallers in 1484, but re-established by Pope Alexander VI. in 1496. Louis XVIII. of France restored it Aug. 19, 1814.

HOLY UNION. — (See ROMAN CATHOLIC LEAGUE.)

HOLY WATER.—The custom of sprinkling churches, &c., with consecrated water is traced by some to the time of the Apostles. Pope Alexander I. (109—119) refers to it as an established custom in his time; and it is mentioned by Tertullian (160—240).

HOLYWELL (Wales) was named after the well of St. Winifred. The parish church was founded in 1769, and the Holywell Level or great lead mine was opened in 1773.

HOMER.—See ILIUM.)

HOMERIDES, or SONS OF HOMER, were numerous in the island of Chios, and in Asia Minor, B.C. 1000. Lycurgus, on his journey to Asia, is said to have received from this famous fraternity the first fragments of the poet's works, which were introduced into Greece B.C. 890. Pisistratus and Hipparchus collected the remainder B.C. 580.

HOMERITES. — In the middle of the 4th century, the princes of the Axumites joined to their titles that of King of the Homerites, an Abyssinian colony in Yemen. They entered into an alliance with Justinian I., for the protection of the Christians in Arabia, in 531. The kingdom lasted 67 years.

HOMILDON HILL (Battle).—Henry Percy (Hotspur) inflicted a humiliating defeat upon the Scots (who had invaded England in July), at Homildon Hill, near Wooler, Sep. 14, 1402. The Earl of Douglas and several Scottish nobles were taken prisoners.

HOMILIES. — Discourses delivered in the 1st or 2nd centuries upon the lesson of the day, or some passage of Scripture, were called Homilies or Conversations. The practice of compiling homilies commenced in 796, when Charlemagne ordered Paulus Diaconus and Alcuin to discourse upon the New Testament. The famous "Homilarium" of Charlemagne was made public in 809. The English Book of Homilies was brought out in two parts; the first, containing 12 homilies, published in 1547, by Cranmer, in the reign of Edward VI.; and the second, containing nine homilies, by order of Convocation, in 1563, during the reign of Elizabeth. The 35th article declares, "the Book of Homilies doth contain a godly and wholesome doctrine, and necessary for these times."

HOMŒOPATHY.—This system of medicine, first advocated in 1796 by Dr. Samuel Hahnemann, who published his "Matière Médicale Pure" in 1820, and his "Theory of Chronic Diseases and their Remedies" in 1829. He died at Paris, July 2, 1843. The Homœopathic Association of London and the Irish Homœopathic Society were established in 1845; the London Homœopathic Hospital, in 1849; the Hahnemann Medical Society and Hospital, in 1850; and the Hahnemann Homœopathic Dispensary, in 1850.

HOMOIOUSIANS and HOMOOUSIANS.—The former of these terms was applied to the Arians, and the latter to the orthodox party, at the Council of Nicæa, June 19—Aug. 25, 325. The Arian war-cry at the Council of Seleucia, Sep. 27, 359, was Homoiousion.

HOMS (Battle).—Ibrahim Pasha defeated a Turkish army of 20,000 men at this place on the Orontes, July 8, 1832. The Turks lost 2,000 killed and 2,500 prisoners, with 20 cannon and the whole of their baggage. The Egyptian losses only amounted to 102 killed and 162 wounded.

HONDSCHOOTE (Battle).—The French defeated an Austrian and Dutch force at this place, near Dunkirk, Sep. 8, 1793.

HONDURAS (Central America), discovered by Columbus in 1502, was conquered by one of Cortes's associates in 1523. It joined the republic of Central American States in 1821, and became an independent state in 1839. British settlers first established themselves here in 1643. (See BELIZE.) The present constitution was voted in 1853. The Bay Islands were ceded to Honduras by Great Britain Nov. 28, 1859. The President, Gen. Santos-Guardiola, was assassinated at Comayagua by Pablo Agurcia, commander of his body-guard, Jan. 11, 1862. Honduras united against Guatemala with St. Salvador (q. v.), under President Carrera, March 3, 1863. Owing to military reverses, the President Montes was compelled to take flight July 26, when José Maria Medina was provisionally elected in his stead. The election was confirmed in Feb., 1864. A treaty of peace and amity was signed with Spain March 15, 1866.

HONEYMOON.—The practice of distinguishing the first month after marriage by this title probably arose from an old custom of drinking metheglin, a beverage made of honey, for 30 days after a nuptial ceremony.

HONFLEUR (France).—This town of Normandy, taken from the English by Charles VII. in 1440, was in 1662 seized by the Calvinists, who were compelled to quit it the same year by the Duke of Aumale. It yielded to Henry IV. in 1594.

HONG-KONG (China).—This island, situated at the mouth of the Canton River, about 100 miles from Canton, was ceded to Great Britain Jan. 20, 1841, and formal possession was taken Jan. 26. Hostilities having been renewed, it was ceded in perpetuity to Great Britain by the treaty of Nankin, signed Aug. 29, 1842. Hong-kong was regularly constituted a British colony June 26, 1843. The bishopric was founded in 1849. (See VICTORIA.)

HONI SOIT QUI MAL Y PENSE, "Evil be to him that evil thinks," the motto of the order of the Garter, is said to have had its origin in an exclamation made by Edward III. on picking up a garter belonging to the Countess of Salisbury, at a ball, in 1349.

HONITON (Devonshire).—The parish church was founded in 1482, by Courtenay, Bishop of Exeter. Assizes were held here in 1590, when 17 criminals were executed. The lace manufactory flourished as early as 1630. Fairfax entered Honiton with his army, Oct. 14, 1645. The new parish church, commenced in 1835, was completed in April, 1838.

HONOLULU, or HONORURU (Hawaiian Archipelago).—This harbour, situated on the island of Oahu, was discovered and surveyed by Capt. Brown, of the English ship Butterworth, in 1794, and became the seat of an American mission in 1820. When visited by Capt. Beechy, of H.M.S. Blossom, May 20, 1826, it was fortified, and laid out into streets and squares, with many evidences of European civilization, and was the chief city of the group. At this place Kamehameha III. concluded a treaty with the French, July 24, 1837, and formally ceded his territories to Great Britain, Feb. 25, 1843. A treaty with Great Britain was also signed here July 10, 1851. The Rev. Thomas Nettleship Staley, D.D., consecrated first Bishop of Honolulu at Lambeth, Dec. 15, 1861, landed in his diocese Oct. 11, 1862. (See HAWAIIAN ARCHIPELAGO.)

HOOD.—The length of the monastic hood was regulated by a council at Aix-la-Chapelle, in 817. A dispute respecting its proper form caused great dissensions among the Cordeliers, and divided them into two parties in the 13th century. The weaker party was expelled from the convents by force of arms in 1314. It was condemned by John XXI. or XXII., and four of its adherents were burned by the Inquisition at Marseilles in 1318. Bishops and canons were forbidden by the Council of Paris, March 9—14, 1347, to wear hoods of silk or velvet.

HOOPS, at first called fardingales (q. v.), appear to have been of smaller proportions. The hoop petticoat is mentioned as a novelty in 1711. In a scarce book, entitled "The London Tradesman," published in 1747, the following occurs: "Some will have it that Semiramis wore one of them in her famous expedition, and some other antiquaries will have us believe the Queen of Sheba was dressed in one full five yards in circumference, at her first interview with Solomon." Crinoline made of horsehair, brought into fashion in 1855, is the modern hooped petticoat.

HOPE.—(See CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.)

HOPS.—The commonly received account, that hops were first brought to England in 1524, is incorrect, as they were cultivated in this country during the 15th century. The term hop-grounds first occurs in the statute-book in 1552. In 1603 the cultivation of hops had become general. The duty was repealed by 25 Vict. c. 22 (June 3, 1862).

HORATII and CURIATII.—The Albans having invaded Rome B.C. 670, it was resolved to decide the contest by a battle between three champions on each side. Three twin brothers having been found in both armies, the Romans named the Horatii, and the Albans the Curiatii, the issue of the struggle was entrusted to them, and the Curiatii having been vanquished in the fight which followed, Alba was forthwith united to Rome.

HORN.—Athenæus (xi. c. 51) mentions the use of horns as drinking cups as a very ancient custom. The exportation of horns from Great Britain was prohibited by 4 Edw. IV. c. 8 (1464). This act was repealed by 1 James I. c. 25, s. 44 (1604).

HORNBOOKS, consisting of a single sheet of paper mounted on wood and protected by a transparent sheet of horn, were formerly extensively used in the education of children. They were very common in the Elizabethan period; but as they had no dates attached to them, it is impossible to give a precise account of their use.

HORNCASTLE (Battle).—Sir Thomas Fairfax and Oliver Cromwell defeated the Royalist forces here in 1643.

HORNERS (The) were incorporated by Charles II., Jan. 12, 1638.

HORN, or HOORN.—(See CAPE HORN.)

HORNPIPE.—This dance, believed to be identical with the monocheros of the ancient Greeks, derives its name from having been danced by the ancient Britons to the music of the Welsh pib-corn, or hornpipe.

HORNS were used at a very early period as musical instruments, and were employed by the Jews in the proclamation of the jubilee. Chromatic horns were first made in Germany early in the 18th century, and horns on which it was possible to play in all keys were introduced into England by the Messings in 1740. The instrument was much improved in 1772 by Spandau.

HOROLOGY.—(See CHRONOMETER, CLOCK, and WATCHES.)

HOROLOGICAL INSTITUTE (London).—This society was established at Clerkenwell in 1858, to develop and improve everything relating to the art of clockmaking, &c., by means of a library of books, a reading-room, a museum of tools and machines or models, the reading of lectures and essays, and the publication of a journal.

HORSE-GUARDS.—The royal regiment of horse-guards, raised by Charles II. in 1660, first mustered in Tothill Fields, Westminster, Feb. 16, 1661, and was first under fire in the Monmouth insurrection, July 4—8, 1685. Sent to oppose William III., the Guards were repulsed by his army at Axminster Nov. 13, and many of the officers and soldiers went over to the enemy. The regiment was re-organized by William III. Dec. 17, 1688. The Horse-Guards, Westminster, was built in 1758.

HORSE LITTER.—(See CARRIAGES.)

HORSEMANSHIP.—This art probably originated with the Egyptians, who are the earliest known possessors of horses, B.C. 1706 (Gen. xlvii. 17). It passed from them to the Phœnicians, by whom it was imparted to the Greeks before the institution of the Olympic games, B.C. 1450, as chariot and horse races constituted a prominent feature of those festivals. Gibbon mentions the Scythians as consummate masters of the equestrian art, and adds that it was commonly believed that it was their custom "to eat, to drink, and even to sleep, without dismounting from their steeds." The rise of modern horsemanship depended greatly on the tournaments of the Middle Ages, which became common soon after the accession of Charles the Bald, in 840. The present mode of shoeing horses was introduced into this country by the Normans at the time of the Conquest. Several statutes have been passed for the improvement of the breed of horses, the first of which was 27 Hen. VIII. c. 6 (1535). Horse-stealing was made a capital offence, without benefit of clergy, by 37 Hen. VIII. c. 8, s. 2 (1545); and the penalty was commuted to transportation by 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 62 (July 11, 1832). The first horse-tax was imposed by 24 Geo. III. c. 31 (1784).

HORSE-RACING formed an important part of the Grecian games, the race for full-aged horses having been introduced B.C. 649; that for mares, called the Calpe, B.C. 493; and that for under-aged horses B.C. 253. It is believed to have been practised by the Anglo-Saxons, and it was held in high estimation by King John (1199—1216). Camden (1551—Nov. 9, 1623) speaks of a golden bell as the prize; whence the expression, "bears the bell." This was exchanged for a cup, with the exploits and pedigree of the winning horse engraved upon it, 1661—1685.

1824. The Chester Cup or Tradesmen's Plate is instituted.
1838. The new rules of the Jockey Club are enacted.
1837, Oct. 25. The royal stud is sold by auction at Hampton Court.

HORSE SHOW.—An exhibition of horses, similar in character to the annual cattle show of the Smithfield Club, took place for the first time at the Agricultural Hall, Islington, July 1, 1864. A national horse show was opened in Dublin April 15, 1864.

HORTENSIAN LAW, conferring legislative power upon the plebeians of Rome, was passed B.C. 286.

HORTICULTURAL GARDENS.—The gardens of the London Horticultural Society at Chiswick, commenced in 1822, and finished, as to the orchard and great part of the grounds, in 1824, were completed by the formation of the arboretum in 1825. The annual show, instituted in 1831 for the exhibition of fruit, was extended in 1833 to flowers. The new gardens at Kensington were inaugurated by Prince Albert June 5, 1861. The Great Exhibition Memorial, consisting of a statue of Prince Albert, &c., erected in these gardens, was inaugurated by the Prince of Wales June 10, 1863. By desire of Queen Victoria the gardens were opened free on the anniversary of Prince Albert's birth, Aug. 26, 1864, and the day was appointed by the Society as an annual holiday. (See INTERNATIONAL HORTICULTURAL EXHIBITION AND CONGRESS.)

HORTICULTURAL SOCIETIES.—The Horticultural Society of London was founded in 1804, and incorporated by royal charter in 1809; the Edinburgh society was founded in 1809, and the Dublin society in 1816. The Transactions of the London Society were first published in 1812, and their gardens at Chiswick were commenced in 1822. The Royal Society of Horticulture of Paris was founded June 11, 1827.

HOSEA.—This prophecy was written between B.C. 780 and B.C. 740, or, according to other authorities, between B.C. 783 and B.C. 725, by Hosea the son of Beeri.

HOSPICE.—The term applied to establishments formed as a refuge for travellers over the mountains. The Great St. Bernard hospice was founded on the Alps by Bernard de Menthon, a Savoyard nobleman, in 962, and the St. Gothard hospice in the 13th century.

HOSPITALLERS, or ORDER OF ST. JOHN OF JERUSALEM.—This celebrated military order originated in a monastery, chapel, and hospital, founded at Jerusalem by some merchants of Amalphi in 1048. In 1099 the hospital received increased territories from Godfrey de Bouillon, who transferred its government from the monks to his knights. In 1100 they established a house at Clerkenwell, London, and in 1113 were confirmed as a spiritual order by Pope Pascal II. The Hospitallers greatly distinguished themselves in the crusades, especially at Jerusalem in 1152, and at Acre in 1191. In 1308 their order was united with that of St. Samson of Jerusalem. They conquered Rhodes Aug. 15, 1309, and from their settlement in that island are sometimes called the Knights of Rhodes. Their wealth was much increased in 1311 by the addition of the possessions of the suppressed Templars, which were granted them by the Council of Vienna. In 1321 they defeated the Turks in a great naval battle, and in 1341 took Smyrna. They took Alexandria in 1365, and in 1480 compelled Mohammed II. to retreat from Rhodes, which he had besieged with 100,000 men and 160 ships. In 1484 the possessions of the dissolved orders of the Holy Sepulchre and of St. Lazarus were bestowed upon the Hospitallers. In 1522 they were compelled to quit Rhodes by Soliman II., who besieged their garrison of 600 knights and 4,500 soldiers with a force of 140,000 men and 400 vessels, and in 1530 they were allowed to settle in Malta by the Emperor Charles V. Hence they are often spoken of as the Knights of Malta. The order was suppressed in England by 32 Hen. VIII. c. 24 (1540), and lost all its privileges in France, Sep. 19, 1792. In 1798 it was expelled from Malta by the French, and has never recovered its political importance.

HOSPITALS.—Institutions similar to Chelsea Hospital, for the support of decayed soldiers, were known at Rome, where they were called Meritoria. The first hospital of celebrity was established at Cæsarea by the Emperor Valens, between 370 and 380. St. Ephraim, who died in 381, or St. Fabiola, in 400, is the reputed founder of infirmaries supported by voluntary contributions. A foundling hospital was instituted at Milan in 787, and an hospital for orphans at Constantinople in 1090. The most important hospitals are mentioned under the places where they are situated. St. Bartholomew's, Bethlehem, St. Thomas's, Christ's Hospital, and Bridewell, are known as the five Royal Hospitals, which were united for purposes of administration in 1557, and placed under the care of the Corporation, but with a distinct government, by 22 Geo. III. c. 77 (1782). The following is a list of the London hospitals, with the dates of foundation :—

HOST.—The date at which the custom of elevating the elements of the Eucharist previous to distribution was introduced, has given rise to considerable controversy. Some authorities assert that it originated in the 4th century, some that it was unknown till the 12th, while others fix its commencement in 1201. The custom of ringing a bell during the elevation was introduced in 1228, and the miracle of the bleeding host is said to have occurred in 1290.

HOT-BLAST.—(See BELLOWS.)

HOTTENTOTS.—The aborigines of the southern portions of Africa first became known to Europeans in 1493, and were very numerous when the Dutch began to form their settlements at the Cape. Their number has, however, been much reduced by the small-pox, which committed fearful ravages in 1713, and from other causes. Missionaries were first sent to them in 1736. (See CAFFRE WAR.)

HOUNSLOW, or HOUNDSLOW (Middlesex).—At this place, anciently called Hundeslawe, a priory of the order of Trinitarians, for the redemption of captives, was founded in the 13th century, the chapel of which subsequently became a chapel-of-ease. In 1650 it contained only 120 houses, and in June, 1688, James II. established a camp upon the heath. The barracks were erected in 1793, and the parish church, occupying the site of the priory chapel, commenced in June, 1828, was completed in Dec., 1829. (See EXPLOSIONS.)

HOUR.—The division of the day into hours was known to the Babylonians and Egyptians, from whom it was transmitted to the Greeks and Romans. The system of L. Papirius Cursor, introduced about B.C. 293, divided the natural day and night, or the periods during which the sun was above and below the horizon, into 12 parts; thus necessitating a continual alteration in the duration of the hour. The present system of 24 equal hours was adopted about the end of the 4th century.

HOUR-GLASS.—This invention is of great antiquity, and is mentioned by the Greek dramatist, Baton, who flourished B.C. 280. It is said to have been lost on the decline of ancient civilization, and to have been restored by the monks during the Middle Ages.

HOUSE OF COMMONS. — The earliest instance of the assembly of knights, citizens, and burgesses as members of Parliament, occurred Jan. 20, 1265, the Parliament of 1258 having been composed exclusively of barons. They were not again summoned till the Parliament of Nov. 12, 1294, and were established as a necessary part of the legislature by the declaratory statute of York, in 1322. Various statutes have been passed to regulate the amount of property necessary to enable a man to sit in the House of Commons, all of which were repealed by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 26 (June 28, 1858). The House of Commons has frequently changed its place of assembly. Our earliest knowledge on this point is that the Parliament of April 30, 1343, met in the Painted Chamber, Westminster. In 1376 the Chapter-house is mentioned as the usual meeting-place, and in 1547 Edward VI. granted St. Stephen's chapel for the purpose. This building was destroyed by fire Oct. 16, 1834, and the Commons took possession of their new house Nov. 4, 1852. The House of Commons consists of 658 members.

HOUSE OF LORDS. — The bishops and archbishops of England have composed a portion of the great council of the nation from the time of the Saxons, and they, with the barons, formed the king's council from the Conquest to the reign of John. The personal privilege of the peers was determined in 1341. The House of Lords, abolished by the Long Parliament, Feb. 6, 1649, constituted part of the first Parliament after the Restoration, April 25, 1660. The House of Lords has had various places of assembly. The first record on the subject states that in 1343 it met in the White Chamber, Westminster. The Painted Chamber was also a frequent place of assembly. Its place of meeting is first styled the "House of Lords" in 1543. The old Palace of Westminster having been destroyed by fire Oct. 16, 1834, the present Houses of Parliament were erected in its stead. The peers took possession of their new house April 15, 1847. The number of members in the House of Lords is always liable to increase, owing to the royal prerogative of creating new peerages. It is between four and five hundred.

HOUSELESS POOR.—(See METROPOLITAN HOUSELESS POOR.)

HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT, or NEW PALACE OF WESTMINSTER.—The earlier Parliaments met in various places, chiefly at Westminster, but occasionally in provincial towns. The old buildings were destroyed by fire, Oct. 16, 1834. The first stone of the new building was laid April 27, 1840. The House of Lords was opened April 15, 1847, and the House of Commons Nov. 4, 1852. Big Ben, the bell for the clock-tower, was cast Aug. 6, 1856, and proved a failure. The Victoria Tower was completed in 1857. Sir Charles Barry, the architect of the New Palace of Westminster, died May 12, 1860.

HOUSE-TAX of two shillings was levied upon all houses, except cottages, by 7 Will. III. c. 18 (1695). It was raised to three shillings, and frequently varied, until reduced by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 39 (Aug. 14, 1833); and repealed by 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 19 (June 16, 1834). It was reimposed, in place of the window-tax, by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 36 (July 24, 1851).

HOWITZERS, first used in 1697. (See ARTILLERY.)

HOWLAND GREAT WET DOCK.—(See DOCKS.)

HUAMANGA (Peru).—The battle of Ayacucho (q. v.) was fought near this city, founded by Pizarro, in 1539.

HUARINA (Battle).—Pizarro, with 480 men and 85 horse, defeated Centeno at the head of 1,000 foot and 250 cavalry, on the plains of Huarina, in Peru, Oct. 26, 1547.

HUBERTSBURG (Saxony).—The castle was built in 1721, by Prince Augustus of Saxony, afterwards Elector Augustus III. The treaty of Hubertsburg, which terminated the Seven Years' War, was signed Feb. 15, 1763. A separate act, in accordance with the 20th article of the treaty of Hubertsburg, between the Empress and the King of Prussia, was signed at Dresden, March 12, and at Berlin, March 20, 1763.

HUDSON (New York).—The river was discovered by Henry Hudson in 1609, and the city was founded by settlers from Rhode Island and Massachusetts in 1784, and received its charter of incorporation in 1785.

HUDSON'S BAY (North America).—The sea was discovered by Sebastian Cabot in 1512, and was rediscovered by Hudson, from whom it derives its name, in 1610. The Hudson's Bay territory was first explored by adventurers from Canada. Prince Rupert sent a vessel with colonists to the territory in 1668. Charles II. incorporated the Hudson's Bay Company, May 2, 1670. A rival association, called the North-West Company, was formed out of several smaller ones in 1787. The two companies were united in 1821. An extended licence for trading over the continent east of the Rocky Mountains was given to the Company, May 13, 1838. The English Government granted Vancouver Island to the Hudson's Bay Company in Aug. 1848.

HUÉ (Cochin-China) was fortified by French officers in the reign of King Gia-long (1801—1820). The French concluded a treaty here, July 15, 1864.

HUE AND CRY.—This mode of creating alarm was in use among the Romans. Cæsar speaks of a case, B.C. 50, in which an alarm was carried 160 miles in 16 hours. In Normandy it was called Clameur de Haro. The hue and cry, a legal mode of procuring the arrest of offenders, was introduced into England at an early period. It is noticed in the statute of Westminster, 3 Edw. I. c. 9 (1275), and by 13 Edw. I. st. 22, cc. 1 & 4 (1285), the hundred in which the offence was committed was held liable until the felon was caught. By 27 Eliz. c. 13 (1585), the hue and cry was ordered to be effected by both horsemen and footmen; and by 8 Geo. II. c. 16 (1735), constables, &c., refusing or neglecting to make hue and cry, were to pay a fine of £5. They were repealed by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27 (June 21, 1827). The Highland mode of raising the hue and cry, called the cross tarric, or fiery cross, was carried 32 miles in three hours in 1745. The "Hue and Cry," issued three times a week by the Police Court, was first published early in the 18th century.

HUESCA (Spain), the ancient Osca, a town of the Ilergetes, is mentioned by Strabo, under the name of Ileosca. Sertorius founded a school here, B.C. 77. Pedro I. of Aragon took it, Nov. 25, 1096, after his victory over the Moors at Alcoraza (q. v.). The university was founded in 1354, and the cathedral was built in 1400.

HUGUENOTS, or HUGONOTS.—This was the name given to the French Protestants in the 16th century. Its etymology is disputed, some deriving it from Hugues, a noted Calvinist of Geneva, and others from the German eidgenossen, confederates. They were first persecuted in France in 1559, and in 1561 they received the name Huguenots, and resorted to arms for protection. A large number of them were slaughtered at Vassy, March 1, 1562. The massacre of St. Bartholomew's Day (q. v.) occurred Aug. 24, 1572. In 1598 they were protected by the Edict of Nantes (q. v.), and received additional religious liberty by the Pacification of Nismes, July 14, 1629. The Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, Oct. 22, 1685, depriving them of their liberties, induced many to take refuge in neighbouring countries. The National Assembly granted liberty of worship Aug. 24, 1789.

HULI FESTIVAL.—(See ALL FOOLS' DAY.)

HULL, or KINGSTON-UPON-HULL (Yorkshire).—In a grant made by Matilda Camin to the monks of Melza, in 1160, Hull is described as the "Wyk of Myton." Edward I. bought it from the monks in 1293, and called the place "King's town upon Hull." Edward I. visited it May 26, 1300. It was ordered to be made a fortress, by a charter of Edward II., in 1322. The walls were repaired and strengthened by Sir Michael de la Pole in 1377. The free grammar-school was founded in 1482, and the first hospital was erected in 1517. The town was taken by Hallam, "the pilgrim of grace," in 1537. The merchants of Hull embarked in the whale fishery in 1598. Lister's almshouses were founded in 1642. The first stone of the dock was laid Oct. 19, 1775, and it was opened Sep. 22, 1778. The Marine Hospital was established in 1787; the new waterworks were erected by the corporation in 1831; the Chamber of Commerce was established in 1837; and the Hull and Selby Railway was opened July 1, 1840. The town-hall was opened and the first stone of a new middle-class school laid by Earl de Grey and Ripon, Thursday, Jan. 25, 1866.

HULSEAN LECTURES.—Sermons upon the evidences of Christianity, or the difficulties of Holy Scripture, were instituted by the will of the Rev. John Hulse, who died Dec. 14, 1790. His will, dated July 21, 1777, fills a folio volume of nearly 400 pages of closely-written MS., and is one of the most extraordinary in existence. It contains nine codicils, the last being dated Nov. 23, 1789. The funds were inadequate until 1818, when the Rev. C. Benson delivered the first course.

HULSEAN PROFESSORSHIP.—The office of Christian Advocate, founded in connection with Cambridge University, by the Rev. John Hulse, who died Dec. 14, 1790, was, by a statute confirmed by the Queen in Council, Aug. 1, 1860, changed into that of Hulsean Professor of Divinity.

HUMANE SOCIETY.—(See ROYAL HUMANE SOCIETY.)

HUMILIATI, a peculiar order of monks, founded by a number of Italian noblemen in 1017. They subjected themselves to the rule of St. Benedict, and their statutes were revised in 1151, and confirmed by Innocent III. in 1200. Females were admitted to this order in 1325. A considerable laxity of discipline having arisen, Pius V. suppressed the society in 1571.

HUNDRED DAYS, from March 20, 1815, the day on which Napoleon I. entered Paris on his return from Elba, to June 29, the day on which he quitted it for the last time.

HUNDREDS.—The precise nature of the division of a country into hundreds is not known; it existed in Germany at a very early date, and was established among the Franks in the 6th century. Alfred the Great (871—901) is said to have introduced the hundred system into this country. All statutes relating to men composing a hundred were repealed by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27 (June 21, 1827); and hundreders are rendered liable for damages committed by rioters by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 31 (June 21, 1827).

HUNGARY includes part of the ancient provinces of Dacia and Pannonia, and was, according to Gibbon (ch. xxxiv.), successively occupied by three Scythian colonies:—1. The Huns of Attila; 2. the Abares, in the 6th century; and 3. The Turks or Magyars, in 889.

(The succession is identical with that of the Emperors of Germany and of Austria.)

HUNGERFORD (London).—The first market was built on the site of Hungerford House in 1681. Another was founded June 18, 1831, and opened July 2, 1833. Its demolition, for the Charing Cross (q. v.) Railway Station, commenced April 16th, 1862. The suspension-bridge, designed by I. K. Brunel, was opened Friday, April 18, 1845. It was removed to Clifton in 1863. (See BRISTOL.)

HUNINGEN.—This fortified post, at the bridge of Huningen, near Basel, in Switzerland, was destroyed, in accordance with the provisions of the treaty of Baden, Sep. 7 (O.S.), 1714. The French restored the works in 1796. They were besieged by the Imperialists, Jan. 25, 1796, and capitulated Feb. 1. The victors entered a few days after, when they found the place a mass of ruins. The allied armies invested Huningen in Jan., 1814; and by the 3rd article of the treaty of Paris, concluded Nov. 20, 1815, the fortress was ordered to be demolished. It was a place of great strength, and was called the gate of Alsace.

HUNS.—Historians are not agreed as to the origin of this famous barbaric tribe. Niebuhr considers them to be Mongolians; Humboldt, Ugrians; and Zeuss, Latham, and Dr. W. Smith, Turks. They invaded China about B.C. 200; and after harassing that empire for a succession of years, were finally expelled about 93. They subsequently migrated to the plains of Tartary; and about 100 defeated the Alani on the banks of the Tanais. They defeated the Goths on the Dniester in 376, and attained their highest glory during the reign of Attila, 433—453. They invaded the Eastern empire in 441, ravaged Gaul (where they were defeated by Aëtius at Chalons) in 451, and crossed the Alps into Italy in 452. After the death of Attila their power declined.

HUNTING.—(See FIELD SPORTS and FOX-HUNTING.)

HUNTINGDON.—Edward the Elder erected a castle here in 917. A priory of Black Nuns, dedicated to St. Mary, was established in 973. St. Mary's church was rebuilt in 1620, and the county gaol was erected in 1829.

HUNTLY HILL (Battle).—The Earl of Huntly defeated the rebel Earl of Crawford at this battle, fought on a moor near Brechin, May 18, 1452.

HUR.—(See UR.)

HURON (Canada West).—The bishopric was founded in 1857.

HURRICANES.—(See CYCLONE and STORMS.)

HURST CASTLE.—On the rupture of the negotiations at Newport, the council of the army seized Charles I. at Carisbrook Castle, Nov. 30, 1648, and conveyed him to Hurst Castle, whence he was removed, Dec. 18, to St. James's.

HUSK.—(See BROOM FLOWER.)

HUSSARS, light cavalry, first in use among the Magyars, in 1610, and so called because the twentieth man of all the vassals of the nobles in each province was compelled to be armed as a trooper. Tilly introduced hussars into the Austrian army; and at the battle of Leipsic, in 1631, had five regiments of them in the field. Luxemburg formed a troop in France in 1692; and Frederick William I. of Prussia organized two regiments in Prussia, 1730. The first hussars forming part of the English army were enrolled by William III. during the war in Flanders in 1694. The same troops were afterwards called light dragoons, and only employed temporarily, and on foreign service.

The first British regiment of light cavalry raised for permanent service was the "King's Regiment of Hussars," now called the 15th Hussars, formed by Col. G. Eliot in 1759, by order of George II.

HUSSITES, the followers of John Huss, burned at Constance July 7, 1415. Upon receiving the news of his death, several nobles and knights formed an association, Dec. 2, 1415. This party obtained the majority at the parliament of Prague, Sep. 5, 1416, and being opposed by the emperor, they took the field, and appointed Ziska their leader, March 10, 1418. Active war soon commenced, and a schism occurred in 1420. (See CALIXTINES and TABORITES.) The battle of Prague was gained by Ziska, July 14, 1420; and in the still more brilliant victory of Deutschbrod, Jan. 8, 1422, he almost annihilated the Emperor's army. The Hussites overran the whole of Bohemia and Moravia, and were on the point of marching upon Vienna, when the sudden death of Ziska, Oct. 12, 1424, put a stop to their plans. They gained two more battles,—at Aussig, June 15, 1426, and at Mies, July 21, 1426; but, weakened by internal disputes, they were induced to sue for peace. After long negotiation, the treaty of Iglau was concluded between the Emperor Sigismund and the leaders of the Hussites, July 5, 1436. Though this treaty did not put an end to the struggles of the Protestants in Bohemia, yet from this time the name of Hussites was no longer applied to them.

HUSTINGS.—This term was apparently applied by the Anglo-Saxons to courts held within a house or building, to distinguish them from such as were held in the open air. Edward the Confessor granted such a court to the city of London in 1052. An attempt was made in 1856 to abolish it. Lincoln, Winchester, York, and other places, also possessed courts of hustings.

HUTCHINSONIANS, the followers of John Hutchinson, who was born in 1674, and who died Aug. 28, 1737. The sect arose in 1727. "Thoughts concerning Religion," published at Edinburgh in 1743, contains an exposition of the views of this religious sect.

HUY (Belgium) was taken by the English and Dutch, Sep. 26, 1694. The Duke of Marlborough captured it Aug. 27, 1703. The French took it early in 1705, and Marlborough recaptured it July 12. It once more fell into the hands of the French, Aug. 20, 1746. The church of Notre Dame was commenced in 1311. (See ABBOT OF HUY.)

HYACINTH. — This plant, which is indigenous to the Levant, and grows abundantly round Aleppo and Bagdad, received its name from Hyacinthus, whom, according to the legend, Apollo slew and transformed into a flower. It was first cultivated by the Dutch, probably at the commencement of the 16th century, and is mentioned in England by Gerard in 1596. Parkinson enumerates eight varieties in 1629. Double hyacinths were first grown by Peter Voorhelm at the commencement of the 18th century.

HYCSOS, HYKSOS, or SHEPHERD KINGS, a tribe of Arabian or Scythian shepherds, who overran Egypt more than 2000 years B.C. Some authors deny the existence of the Hycsos; others suppose them to represent the captive Jews in Egypt (q. v.); and various theories have been circulated on this perplexing subject. Manetho states that they reigned 511, Africanus 284, and Eusebius 103 years. Lepsius says their rule terminated B.C. 1842, and Bunsen B.C. 1639.

HYDASPES (Battle). — Alexander III. defeated Porus on the banks of the river Hydaspes, the modern Jelum, B.C. 327.

HYDE PARK (London), formerly the "Manerium de Hyde," belonging to the monastery of St. Peter's, Westminster, in 1535, was enclosed about 1545. Cottages existed here in 1655. The custody of Hyde Park, "with all the lodges, houses, and edifices in the same," was granted in 1596 to Sir Edmund Cary, knight. The House of Commons resolved that Hyde Park should be sold, Dec. 21, 1652; and Sir Heneage Finch, solicitor-general, obtained a grant of part of the park in 1661. Queen Anne enclosed another portion in 1705, and Queen Caroline another in 1730. The Serpentine was formed 1730–33, by order of Queen Caroline. In consequence of the Gordon riots, troops were encamped here in 1780. The volunteers formed a camp in 1799. The statue of Achilles, "inscribed by the women of England to Arthur, Duke of Wellington, and his brave companions in arms," was erected in Hyde Park June 18, 1822. The triple archway and gate at Hyde Park Corner were constructed from the designs of Burton in 1828. The bronze equestrian statue of the Duke of Wellington, by Wyatt, was erected in 1846. The Marble Arch was placed at Cumberland Gate in March, 1851. Riotous assemblies met in this park to denounce Lord Robert Grosvenor's Sunday Trading Bill, June 24 and July 1 and 8, 1855. Turbulent meetings were held, in consequence of the high price of bread, Oct. 14, 21, and 28. Queen Victoria reviewed 18,000 rifle volunteers in Hyde Park, June 23, 1860. Collisions ensued between the followers of Garibaldi and the supporters of the Pope, and several persons were injured, Sep. 28 and Oct. 5, 1862. The Prince and Princess of Wales reviewed the volunteers in this park, May 28, 1864. Another review of the volunteers took place June 23, 1866. A monster reform meeting, called by the Reform League for Monday, July 23, was prohibited by the Government. The park gates having been closed, the mob destroyed the railings, and a collision with the police ensued. The riots continued for several days.

HYDERABAD (Hindostan), the capital of Hyderabad and the Nizam's dominions, was founded by Kootab Shah, about 1585, being then called Baunuggur. It was taken and plundered in 1687 by the troops of Aurungzebe.

HYDERNAGUR.—(See BEDNORE.)

HYDRAULIC CRANE.—This machine, invented by Sir William Armstrong, who erected the first at Newcastle-upon-Tyne in 1846, was greatly improved in 1851 by the introduction of the "accumulator." Sir W. Armstrong described its principle and action before the British Association in 1854.

HYDRAULIC or HYDROSTATIC PRESS.—

The principle was suggested by Pascal (June 19, 1623—Aug. 19, 1662), but the machine itself was not invented till 1796, when Joseph Bramah patented a water-tight collar, and thus rendered it available for practical purposes.

HYDRAULIC RAM.—This machine was invented and patented in France by Montgolfier, in 1797.

HYDRO-CARBON LIGHT, obtained by impregnating common gas with hydro-carbon, was invented by the Rev. W. R. Bowditch, who tested it at the Westgate railway-station, Wakefield, from Aug. 15, 1863, to Jan. 4, 1864, and exhibited his process in London, Oct. 12, 1864.

HYDROCHLORIC ACID GAS, discovered by Priestley in 1772, was shown by Davy in 1810 to consist of chlorine and hydrogen.

HYDROGEN.—The combustibility of this gas was known early in the 18th century, when it was often exhibited as a curiosity. Little was ascertained respecting its real nature till Henry Cavendish published an account of its most important properties in the Philosophical Transactions, May 12, 1766.

HYDROMETER.—This instrument for ascertaining the weight of fluids was probably invented by Archimedes, who was killed B.C. 212, though it is not mentioned till the time of Hypatia, who died about 415. It was afterwards forgotten, and was not revived or reinvented till the end of the 16th century. It is also called areometer and volumometer.

HYDROPARASTATES.—(See ENCRATITES.)

HYDROPATHY, or the Water-Cure, was in use among the Arabs, and recommended by Rhazes, in 920. The system also flourished in Italy, having been advocated by Avicenna in 1030; by Barzi in 1450; and by Cardan in 1540. From Italy it passed into Germany, where it found zealous disciples in Hildanus (1560—1600), and Von der Heyden (1630—43); and thence to England, where Floyer (1649—1734), George Cheyne in 1725, and Lucas in 1750, strongly recommended the system. At Malta Padre Bernardo, the self-styled "medicus per aquam," made a great sensation in 1724; and at Paris the celebrated Tissot in 1760 advocated in eloquent language the use of cold water as a universal panacea. Dr. Currie published a work on the subject in 1797, and Vincent Priessnitz, a peasant's son, established his famous cold-water cure establishment at Gräfenberg in 1825. He began with two patients, and in 1829 his system was in full operation.

HYDROSTATICS.—The phenomena connected with water were but little studied by ancient philosophers. Archimedes announced the equal force with which each particle of a fluid mass is pressed when in equilibrio, B.C. 250, and Ctesibius about B.C. 250, and his pupil Hero of Alexandria (B.C. 150) invented the siphon force-pump and pneumatic fountain. Galileo (1564—1642), Castellio (1577—1644), Torricelli (1608—1647), and Pascal (1623—1662) contributed to advance the science. Hallam says the science was entirely created by Castellio and Torricelli. The motion of waters in rivers and canals was first studied by Guglielmini, who published his work on the subject in 1691; and the nature of the oscillation of waves was taught by Newton in 1714. Daniel Bernouilli's theory of the motion of fluids was published in 1738, the compressibility of water was first demonstrated by M'Canton in 1762, and Coulomb published his law of resistance in 1800. Professor Airy suggested an improved theory of fluids in 1830. Scott Russell's experiments on the motion of ships and waves were published in 1837.

HYGROMETER.—Various instruments for testing the humidity of the atmosphere have been from time to time invented. The most general are the hair hygrometer of Saussure, who published an account of his instrument in 1783, and the whalebone hygrometer of M. de Luc, which was described in 1786.

HYMENEAL HYMNS.—(See EPITHALAMIA.)

HYMNS, or songs of praise to the Deity, were in use among the Hebrews as well as the Greeks, and are mentioned Matt. xxvi. 30, and Col. iii. 16. The "Te Deum" and "Benedictus" are in our liturgy both called hymns. According to some authorities, St. Hilary, Bishop of Poitiers, who died in 367, was the first who composed hymns for the church. The use of hymns was authorized by the fourth Council of Toledo, Dec. 9, 633.

HYPERESIA.—(See ÆGIRA.)

HYPOTHETICAL UNIVERSALISTS.—(See CAMERONITES.)

HYRCANIA (Asia).—This ancient province was situated to the south of the Caspian Sea, and varied considerably in size and importance at different periods. Little is known respecting its history. It appears that the inhabitants were rendered subject to the Assyrians at an early date, and that a troop of 6,000 of them formed part of the army with which Darius III. resisted Alexander III. (the Great), B.C. 334. Hyrcania was occupied by the Parthians B.C. 244. Christianity was introduced during the 8th century.

HYSLÆ (Battle).—The Argives defeated the Lacedæmonians near this town B.C. 669. The Lacedæmonians destroyed the town B.C. 417.

HYTHE (Kent), one of the Cinque Ports, was, according to Leland, once "a very great towne yn lenght, and conteyned iiii paroches, that now be clene destroied." St. Bartholomew's Hospital was founded by Hamo, Bishop of Rochester, in 1336. The town-hall and market-place were rebuilt in 1794. The School of Musketry was established in 1854.

I.

IAGO.—(See SANTIAGO, SPANISH TOWN, &c.)

IAMBICS.—Iambic verse, said to have been thus named from Iambe, an attendant at the court of Metanira, wife of Celeus, King of Sparta. She is supposed to have amused the goddess Ceres, whilst on her sad pilgrimage in search of her daughter Proserpine, with her witty stories and allusions, and her poetical talent. It is generally used in satirical compositions, and often figuratively to signify satire.

The Greek poet Archilochus, of Paros, who flourished B.C. 714—B.C. 676, was the first who wrote in iambics. Hipponax of Ephesus (B.C. 546—520) invented the Choliambus, or "Lame Iambic."

IAPYGIAN RACE.—Among the earliest known inhabitants of Italy, named, according to Greek mythologists, from Iapyx, who led a Cretan colony into the southern portions of the peninsula now called Apulia and Calabria.

IBERIA (Asia), the modern Georgia (q. v.), anciently formed part of the Persian empire, and passed under the power of Alexander III., B.C. 331. The Romans first came into contact with the Iberians B.C. 65, when Pompey led an army against them, and compelled them to sue for peace. Instigated by Tiberius, the inhabitants invaded and subdued Armenia in 35, and in 115 they made a show of submission to the Romans. Christianity was introduced during the reign of Constantine I. (323—337), and in 365 the Romans resigned the sovereignty of the country, which subsequently became a Persian province. It was erected into a bishopric about the pontificate of Gregory I. (590—604), and annexed to the Eastern empire by Heraclius in 623. The Greek name for Spain was also Iberia.

IBRAHIMIAH.—(See ABRAHAMITES.)

IBRAIL.—(See BRAILOW, Battle.)

ICANHOE.—(See BOSTON, Lincolnshire.)

ICE.—The manufacture of artificial ice was known to the Greeks and Romans. The custom of cooling beverages with saltpetre was general in Italy in the 16th century. In the 17th "ice cups" were introduced into France and Spain. A new mode of producing ice by chemical means was invented by Walker in 1782. Leslie introduced the employment of sulphuric acid for the same purpose in 1810. Harrison patented an ice-making machine, in which ether and salt are used, in 1857. Tudor first established the trade in ice at Boston (U.S.) in 1806, and began to export it in 1820. It increased to such an extent that there were soon 16 companies for the exportation of the article in that town. Many of the "ice farms" of the states of New York and Massachusetts are reputed to be as valuable as the rice-fields of Georgia. The French ice trade dates from 1859, when some Paris speculators constructed a range of ice-houses near Auteuil, in the Bois de Boulogne.

ICELAND (North Atlantic Ocean).—The discovery of this island is attributed to a Norwegian pirate, Nadodd, who was cast by a tempest on its coast in 860. It was then called Snæ-land, i. e. Snowland. Gardar circumnavigated it in 864, and gave it the name of Gardarsholm. In 874 it was colonized by a band of Norwegians under Ingolph. The Icelanders discovered Greenland in 982, and the American coast in 986. Its inhabitants were converted to Christianity towards the end of the 10th century. In 1261 it was united to Norway, and in 1380 was ceded to Denmark, to which country it still belongs. Protestantism, introduced in 1540, was established in 1551. The commerce of Iceland was declared free to all Danish subjects in 1787, and to foreigners in 1855. It suffered from famine in 1824–5, and from a pestilence in 1827. The mountains of Iceland were explored during the summer of 1861 by Messrs. Holland and Shepherd, members of the London Alpine Club.

ICENI.—This ancient British tribe, inhabiting Norfolk and Suffolk, and the frontiers of Essex and Hertfordshire, led by Queen Boadicea, suffered a defeat from the Romans under Suetonius Paulinus, in 61.

ICH DIEN.—The motto of John of Luxemburg, King of Bohemia, inscribed upon his helmet found upon the battle-field of Crécy, Aug. 26, 1346, where he fell, fighting under the French banner. The motto was adopted by Edward the Black Prince, who took the plumed helmet from the head of the Bohemian monarch. The heirs to the English crown have retained the device, as well as the plume of three ostrich feathers. Sir H. Nicolas holds a somewhat different theory on this subject. (See FEATHERS.)

ICHNOLOGY, or the science of footprints, a section of Palæontology, which treats of the fossilized impressions made on mud or sand by the animals of the various geological periods, was founded in 1828 by Dr. Duncan, who discovered the tracks of an extinct species of tortoise, at Corncockle, Dumfriesshire.

ICHTHYOLOGY.—Aristotle (B.C. 384—322) is the first, and indeed the only, author of antiquity, who scientifically investigated and described the structure of fishes. Modern ichthyology dates from the 16th century, when Belon (in 1553), Rondelet (in 1554 and 1555), and Salviani (from 1554 to 1558), published works upon it. Francis Willoughby (1635—1672) and John Ray (1628—1705) distributed fishes into species defined by their natural characteristics, without reference to the name assigned to them by the Greeks and Romans; and Peter Artedi (1705—Sep. 21, 1735) and Charles Linnæus (May 24, 1707—1778) laboured with much success in the same work. Cuvier's "Histoire Naturelle des Poissons," containing an exhaustive history of Ichthyology, was published from 1828 to 1849. William Yarrell's "History of British Fishes" appeared in 1835–36.

ICILIAN LAWS.—A law proposed by the Tribune Spurius Icilius, B.C. 471, decreed sentence of death against all persons who should interrupt the Tribunes while they were speaking in the Comitia Tributa. The same name is given to the Lex de Aventino Publicando, proposed by the Tribune Lucius Icilius, B.C. 456, which regulated the ownership of ground used for building, &c.

ICOLMKILL.—(See ABBOT OF HUY and IONA.)

ICONIUM (Asia Minor).—Paul and Barnabas preached in this ancient city, now called Koniah (Acts xiii. 51), in 45, from which they were compelled to flee, on account of a conspiracy against them (Acts xiv. 1–6). Councils were held here in 231 and in 378. It was made the metropolis of Lycaonia. The Saracens captured it in 1074, and founded the kingdom of Iconium or Roum, which lasted till 1209. The Crusaders took it in 1097, and again under Frederick I. (Barbarossa), June 10, 1190. The Mongols seized it in 1244, and the Turks in 1307. Ibrahim Pasha defeated the Turks near this town, Dec. 20, 1832.

ICONOCLASTS, or IMAGE BREAKERS.—The custom of exhibiting images of the Saviour and of saints in churches, introduced about the 3rd century of the Christian æra, met with strong opposition in the Eastern empire, under Leo III., the Isaurian, who issued an edict prohibiting the worship of all statues and pictures which represented the Saviour, the Virgin, and the saints, in 726. A second decree, commanding the destruction of all images, and the whitewashing of the churches, appeared about 728. The attempt of an official to destroy a statue of the Saviour caused an insurrection, which spread to Greece and the Ægean Islands. Gregory II. denounced this crusade against images in a letter to Leo III. in 729. Another letter followed. Constantine V. (Copronymus,) the successor of Leo III., renewed his edict, and summoned the third council at Constantinople (Feb. 10—Aug. 8, 754), which issued a decree against the worship of images. The controversy raged with great fury, and a council summoned at Constantinople, Aug. 1, 786, was dissolved on account of the violence of different parties. It met at Nicæa (second council), Sep. 24, and lasted till Oct. 23, 787. The Iconoclasts were anathematized, and the worship of images was re-established. A council at Constantinople, in 814, annulled all decrees made against the Iconoclasts. After much resistance and many struggles, the Greeks restored the worship. A council was held at Constantinople, Feb. 19, 842, when the decrees of the second Council of Nicæa were accepted, and the Iconoclasts denounced. A solemn festival was appointed, and the whole of the clergy of Constantinople went in procession to the church of St. Sophia, to commemorate the event. The eighth general council held at Constantinople, Oct. 5, 869, to Feb. 28, 870, anathematized the Iconoclasts.

ICONOGRAPHY, or THE SCIENCE OF IMAGES.—Fairholt (Dictionary of Terms in Art, 243), describes it as "the Art exercised by the image-makers of all ages; at one period, expressing by sculpture, carving, and painting, actual persons and events; at another seeking to represent, by sensuous forms, abstract and spiritual notions, as in symbols, emblems, and allegories. . . . . Hence it is the history of the world, written not only upon papyrus and parchment, but deeply graven upon stone, marble, and bronze; or reproduced in vivid colours." Didron's "Iconographie Chrétienne" was published in 1843.

ICULISMA.—(See ANGOULÊME.)

ICY CAPE (North America) was discovered by Capt. Cook in 1778.

IDAHO (North America) was organized as a separate territory of the United States by Act of Congress in March, 1863.

IDES, in the ancient Roman calendar, were eight days in each month, the first of which, denominated the Idus, fell on the 15th of March, May, July, and October, and on the 13th of the other months. The ides came between the calends and the nones, and were reckoned backwards. Thus, the 14th day of March, May, July, and October, and the 12th of the other months, was called the day before the Ides. This mode of reckoning is still retained in the chancery of Rome, and in the calendar of the Breviary. The Ides of March are celebrated in history as the date upon which Julius Cæsar was assassinated, B.C. 44.

IDIOTS.—An asylum for idiots was established in 1847, and the establishment at Earlswood, Surrey, was opened in June, 1855.

IDOLS.—Idolatry, practised in some form or other by all ancient nations, passed from Egypt to India about the 17th century B.C., and thence to North Europe about the 6th century B.C. The earliest mention of idols occurs Gen. xxxi. 19 and 30, B.C. 1739. Constantine I. ordered the destruction of idolatrous temples in 330, and Honorius abolished idolatry throughout the Roman empire in 404.

IDOMENE (Battle).—The Acarnanians, under Demosthenes, defeated the Ambraciots with great slaughter, at this pass, near Argos, B.C. 426.

IDRIA (Austria). — The quicksilver mines at this town in Carniola were discovered in 1497.

IDSTEDT (Battle). — The Danish forces under Gen. Von Krugh defeated the Sleswig-Holsteiners under Willisen, at this village of Southern Denmark, July 24 and 25, 1850. The loss on both sides amounted to about 8,000 men.

IDUMÆA.—(See EDOM.)

IERNE.—(See BRITANNIA and IRELAND.)

IGLAU (Treaty) was concluded at this town, in Moravia, between the Emperor Sigismund and the Hussites, July 5, 1436. The latter obtained a general amnesty and the free exercise of their religion. The treaty was based upon the Compactata of Prague made in 1433.

IGNORANTINES. — This Roman Catholic Association for the gratuitous instruction of poor children in secular and religious knowledge, founded in France by the Abbé de la Salle in 1724, has been introduced into other Roman Catholic countries. The brethren, expelled from France at the Revolution, were recalled in 1806 by Napoleon I.

IGUVIUM.—(See GUBBIO.)

ILDEFONSO, ST. (Treaties). — Several treaties have been signed at this town of Old Castile, in Spain. The first, between Spain and Portugal, was concluded Oct. 1, 1777, and confirmed March 31, 1778. It was aimed at England, and diplomatic negotiations with Spain were broken off.——An offensive and defensive alliance between France and Spain was concluded here Aug. 19, 1796, and a secret treaty between the same powers, by virtue of which France obtained Louisiana, was signed Oct. 1, 1800. It was confirmed by the treaty of Madrid, March 21, 1801.

ILERDA.—(See LERIDA.)

ILE ROYALE.—(See CAPE BRETON.)

ILIAD.—(See ALLEGORY and ILIUM.)

ILITURGIS (Spain).—This town was taken and destroyed by Publius Scipio, B.C. 206.

ILIUM, or ILION (Asia Minor), the real name of the city of Troja, or Troy, the latter, a Roman appellation, being, strictly speaking, the name of the district. Ilium, the capital of Troas, is supposed to have stood on a height between the rivers Scamander and Simois, at the southern extremity of the plain of Troy, close to the modern village of Bunarbashi. This ancient, or Old Ilium, generally believed to have been captured and destroyed after a siege of 10 years, B.C. 1184, or B.C. 1127, is distinguished by the epithet vetus, from Ilium Novum, or New Ilium, a village which Alexander III., after the battle of Granicus, B.C. 334, ordered to be enlarged and called a city. Fimbria captured it B.C. 85. After the battle of Pharsalia, B.C. 48, it was visited by Julius Cæsar, who conferred upon the inhabitants numerous privileges, and, in remembrance of his victory, instituted the Ludi Trojani, to which Virgil refers in the Æneid. Homer, who flourished B.C. 962—927, or, according to Herodotus, B.C. 850, wrote the Iliad, an epic poem, containing an account of the siege of Troy, and the Odyssey, describing the wanderings of Ulysses after the siege. These poems were first collected B.C. 531, by Pisistratus, tyrant of Athens. The first English translation of the Iliad, by Arthur Hall, was published in London in 1581. George Chapman's translation of the first seven books appeared in 1598, and of the whole Iliad in 1611. His translation of the Odyssey was published in 1615. Pope's translation of the Iliad appeared 1715–20, and of the Odyssey, 1725–6. Cowper published a translation of the Iliad and Odyssey in 1791; and the Earl of Derby's translation of the Iliad appeared in 1865.

ILLIBERIS.—(See ELIBERIS.)

ILLINOIS (United States).—The French settled in this country in the 17th century. It was ceded to England in 1763, separated in 1775, and formed part of the territory of Indiana from 1800 to 1809, in which year a division took place. Illinois was admitted as the 20th state of the Union in 1818.

ILLUMINATI.—The name of Illuminati, or Enlightened Men, was adopted by several secret political societies of a revolutionary tendency, which arose during the 16th, 17th, and 18th centuries. They appeared in Spain, where they were termed Alombrados, in 1575, and having been suppressed, sprang up again at Seville in 1623 or 1627. In Belgium they were called Mystics, and in France Guerinets. The order of Illuminati, at first called the order of the Perfectibilists, was established at Ingoldstadt, Bavaria, May 1, 1776, by Adam Weishaupt. The avowed object of this association was the extirpation of the Jesuits and the diminution of the papal influence. It soon became very powerful, and was suppressed by decrees issued June 22, 1784, and March 2 and Aug. 16, 1785. Mirabeau was one of its disciples. Its agents visited Paris for the purpose of illuminating France. For many years after its suppression, the Society of Illuminati lingered on under the name of the German Union. The favourite saying of the Illuminati was,—"The last king ought to be hanged with the entrails of the last priest."

ILLUMINATION and ILLUMINATED MSS.—The art of decorating manuscripts is of considerable antiquity, and was practised by the Romans. Cicero commends Marcus Varro, who flourished B.C. 116—B.C. 28, for having adorned his works with the portraits of more than 700 persons. The most ancient illuminated documents extant are the Terence of the 4th century and the Virgil of the 5th, both of which are in the library of the Vatican. The art received great encouragement from the Eastern emperors in the 9th, 10th, and 11th centuries, and was extensively patronized by Charlemagne. About 1150 a better style of drawing became common. The finest specimens of illuminated MSS. are of the 15th and 16th centuries, from which time the introduction of printed books has superseded MS. works, and hence put a stop to the illuminator's art. It has, however, been revived as a fashionable amusement.

ILLUSTRISSIMI, or MOST ILLUSTRIOUS.—(See CARDINAL and EMINENCE.)

ILLYRIA, or ILLYRICUM (Europe).—This name was anciently applied to all the countries on the east coast of the Adriatic. In the 4th century B.C. the northern portions of Illyria were visited by the Gauls, who expelled the natives and drove them to the south. Philip II., King of Macedon, waged war with the Illyrians B.C. 359; and the Romans sent an army against them, and compelled them to sue for peace, B.C. 233. The second Illyrian war commenced B.C. 229, and also terminated in favour of the Romans. The Dalmatæ revolted from the Illyrians B.C. 180, and formed the independent state of Dalmatia (q. v.); and the remaining country was reduced into a Roman province by L. Anicius, B.C. 168. It became an imperial province B.C. 11. Dalmatia, Carniola, and some neighbouring countries, received the name of Illyrian Provinces by a decree issued by Napoleon I., Oct. 14, 1809.

ILVA.—(See ELBA.)

IMAGES.—From the Apostolical Constitutions, it appears that image-makers were refused the sacraments of the Holy Supper and of baptism by the primitive Church. The decoration of churches with images and pictures was prohibited by the Council of Elvira in 277. It was first rendered common by Paulinus, Bishop of Nola, who flourished about 400. The worship of images and pictures was introduced some time before 692, and was approved by the second Council of Nicæa in 787. By 3 & 4 Edw. VI. c. 10 (1549), all images in churches were ordered to be destroyed; and the Puritans committed great havoc in the churches during the Civil War. (See ICONOCLASTS and ICONOGRAPHY.)

IMAGE-WORSHIP.—(See ICONOCLASTS.)

IMBROS (Ægæan Sea).—An island, inhabited at an early period by the Pelasgians, was annexed to the Persian empire B.C. 505, and afterwards belonged to the Athenians. Mohammed II. subdued it in 1457.

IMMACULATE CONCEPTION.—The dispute in the Romish Church respecting the Immaculate Conception of the Virgin Mary commenced about 1140, the Franciscans supporting, and the Dominicans opposing, the dogma. In 1384 the discussion was revived at Paris by the Dominican John de Montesono, and having been continued with great bitterness, resulted in the exclusion of the Dominicans from the university in 1389. It also occasioned great discussion during the pontificates of Paul V. (1605—1621), of Gregory XV. (1621—1623), and of Alexander VII. (1655—1667). Pius IX. wrote letters on the subject, Feb. 2, 1849, and May 20, 1850; and it was made an article of faith of the Romish Church by a bull promulgated Dec. 8, 1854.

IMMACULATE CONCEPTION (Feast), traced in the Greek Church to the 5th, and in the Latin to the 7th century, has been celebrated annually since the 12th. It received the sanction of the Council of Basel in 1431, and was ordered to be celebrated by Sixtus IV. in 1476. The Latin Church observes the feast Dec. 8, and the Greek Dec. 9.

IMMÆ (Battle), fought at this village, near Antioch, June 7, 218, when Elagabalus defeated Macrinus.

IMPEACHMENT is the accusation of a peer or member of Parliament of treason or other high crimes. The earliest example is the case of the Lord Chancellor Pole, Earl of Suffolk, in 1386. By 12 & 13 Will. III. c. 2, s. 3 (1700), no pardon under the Great Seal is pleadable to an impeachment by the Commons in Parliament. Persons impeached of high treason are allowed counsel by 20 Geo. II. c. 30 (1747).

IMPERIAL CHAMBER, or COURT OF THE GERMAN EMPIRE.—A supreme tribunal of the empire, established by Maximilian I., at the diet of Worms, in 1495. It was a paramount court of justice, and consisted, at its first formation, of a chief judge, who was to be chosen amongst the princes or counts, and of 16 assessors, partly of noble or equestrian rank, partly professors of law. They were nominated by the emperor, subject to the approbation of the diet. Hallam says,—"The functions of the Imperial Chamber were chiefly the two following. They exercised an appellant jurisdiction over causes that had been decided by the tribunals established in states of the empire. But their jurisdiction in private causes was merely appellant. The second part of the chamber's jurisdiction related to disputes between two states of the empire. But these two could only come before it by way of appeal." The police of the circles had to enforce the sentences pronounced by the Imperial Chamber. It lasted three centuries.

IMPERIAL GUARD.—The Consular Guard received this title on the accession of Napoleon I., in 1804. It originally numbered 9,775 men, but was gradually increased, till in 1814 it included 102,708 men. This guard was disbanded on the restoration of Louis XVIII. in 1815, but was again enrolled by a decree of Napoleon III., May 4, 1854.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.—Clergymen in the performance of their duties, and members of Parliament, are exempt from arrest for debt. (See CLERGY, and FERRARS'S ARREST.) By 12 Geo. I. c. 29 (1726), no arrest for debt could take place unless the cause of action amounted to £10 in superior, or 40*s.* in inferior courts. The restriction was extended to £10 in inferior courts by 19 Geo. III. c. 70 (1779). By 51 Geo. III. c. 124 (July 2, 1811), £15 was the lowest sum recoverable by imprisonment, and by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 71 (July 2, 1827), it was fixed at £20. Arrest (q. v.) on mesne process was abolished except in the case of the debtor's attempting to quit England, by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110 (Aug. 16, 1838). By the Absconding Debtors' Arrest Act, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 52 (Aug. 1, 1851), absconding debtors who owe £20 or upwards are liable to arrest.

IMPROPRIATIONS.—Impropriation is defined by Wharton as "the act of employing the revenues of a church living to a layman's use." The suppression of the monasteries by 31 Hen. VIII. c. 13 (1539), led to many such impropriations. The "feoffees for impropriations" were censured in the Star Chamber, and their livings forfeited to the crown, Feb. 13, 1633. It was a self-constituted corporation, formed for the purpose of purchasing impropriate rectories, and owes its origin to John Preston, a celebrated preacher.

IMPROVISATORI, or extempore versifiers, arose in Italy during the 12th century. Serafino Aquilano (1466—1500) was the first improvisatore of note. The two blind brothers Brandolini excelled at Florence as improvisatori, in the 15th century.

INCENSE.—(See FRANKINCENSE.)

INCH OF CANDLE.—At an auction by inch of candle, persons continued to bid whilst a small piece of candle was burning, the article being knocked down to the person who made the last offer before it was extinguished. In excommunication by inch of candle, the sentence was not passed upon the offender if he repented before the piece of candle burned out. Shakespeare (2 Hen. IV. ii. 4) alludes to the old custom practised by the amorous gallant, who "drinks off candles' ends for flap-dragons." Nares remarks that "as a feat of gallantry, to swallow a candle's-end formed a more formidable and disagreeable flap-dragon than any other substance, and therefore afforded a stronger testimony of zeal for the lady to whose health it was drunk."

INCHCAPE, or BELL-ROCK.—Upon this dangerous rock, situated in the German Ocean, about 12 miles from Arbroath, or Aberbrothock, an abbot of that place is said to have placed a bell as a warning to mariners, which was maliciously cut adrift by a Dutch rover, whose ship subsequently struck on the same reef, and sank, with all hands on board. Southey has founded a well-known ballad on this story. A lighthouse was ordered by 46 Geo. III. c. 132 (July 21, 1806), and the building, commenced in 1807, was completed, at a cost of £60,000, in Oct., 1810. The light was exhibited for the first time Feb. 1, 1811.

INCHCOLM, or ST. COLM'S INCH (Firth of Forth).—This island, referred to by Shakespeare (Macbeth, act i., sc. 2), situated within sight of Edinburgh, was the abode, in the 6th century, of St. Colm, or Columba. Alexander I. of Scotland, who was wrecked here in 1123, when it was inhabited by one solitary hermit, erected an Augustine monastery in gratitude for his escape. It was repeatedly sacked by the English in the 14th, 15th, and 16th centuries.

INCHKEITH (Firth of Forth).—This island, in which a monastery was founded in 679 or 704, having been fortified by an English force in 1547, was captured by the French, who called it the "Isle of Horses," in 1549. A revolving light was placed on the island in 1805.

INCOME AND PROPERTY TAX.—The first income-tax was levied in 1512 to defray the expenses of the war with France. It was imposed upon the commons, who were rated at two-fifteenths, and the clergy at two-tenths. Mr. Pitt's income-tax was also levied to defray the expense of a French war, by 39 Geo. III. c. 13 (Jan. 9, 1799). It imposed a graduated series of rates on all incomes of £60 per annum and upwards, and was repealed by 42 Geo. III. c. 42 (May 4, 1802). It was, however, virtually restored by the Property-tax Act, 43 Geo. III. c. 122 (Aug. 11, 1803), which imposed a rate on all incomes above £60 per annum, 5 per cent. on incomes of £150 being the standard. The rate was increased to 6½ per cent. by 45 Geo. III. c. 15 (March 18, 1805), and to 10 per cent. by 46 Geo. III. c. 65 (June 13, 1806). This tax expired in 1816, Government having been defeated March 19, on the motion for its renewal, by a majority of 37. Sir Robert Peel's rate of sevenpence in the pound was levied by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35 (June 22, 1842), for three years. It was continued three years longer by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 4 (April 5, 1845), and again for three years by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 8 (April 13, 1848). It was renewed for one year by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 12 (June 5, 1851), and for another year by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 20 (May 28, 1852). By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 34 (June 28, 1853), it was arranged for the rate to undergo a gradual diminution, and to expire in seven years, and the tax was also extended to Ireland; but in consequence of the Russian war the plan was abandoned, and a double rate was imposed by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 10 (May 12, 1854). An addition of twopence in the pound on incomes of more than £150, and of three half-pence on those between £150 and £100, was imposed by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 20 (May 25, 1855). These rates were reduced to sevenpence and fivepence in the pound by 20 Vict. c. 6 (March 21, 1857), and increased to ninepence and sixpence-halfpenny by 22 & 23 Vict. c. 18 (Aug. 13, 1859). By 23 Vict. c. 14 (April 3, 1860), they were further increased to tenpence and sevenpence. A select Parliamentary committee to inquire into the mode of assessing and collecting this tax, with a view to its more equitable adjustment, was appointed Feb. 19, 1861. By 24 Vict. c. 20 (June 12, 1861), it was reduced to ninepence in the pound on incomes above £150 per annum, and on incomes between £100 and £150 to sixpence in the pound. It was reduced to sevenpence in the pound, and persons with incomes of less than £100 per annum were exempted, and those with less than £200 were allowed an abatement of £60 from their assessed income, by 26 Vict. c. 22 (June 8, 1863). It was reduced to sixpence in the pound by 27 Vict. c. 18 (May 13, 1864), and to fourpence in the pound by 28 Vict. c. 30 (May 26, 1865).

INCORPORATED CHURCH BUILDING SOCIETY (London), established in 1818, and incorporated in 1828, was supported till 1851 by a triennial Royal Letter, producing about £30,000, but has been since dependent on subscriptions, donations, &c.

INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY of the United Kingdom, formed in 1823, was instituted in 1827. It was incorporated by charter Dec. 22, 1831, and the institution was opened July 4, 1832. It was placed upon a new basis and re-incorporated Feb. 26, 1845.

INCORRUPTIBLES.—(See CORRUPTIBLES.)

INCURABLES.—(See HOSPITALS.)

INDEMNITY.—An act of indemnity, passed May 20, 1690, exempted from penal consequences the instruments of popery and arbitrary power during the reign of James II. In addition to the regicides, 35 persons were by name exempted in this act. Various statutes render it incumbent upon most Government officers to take certain oaths as a necessary qualification for their office; but as this would prove very troublesome in many instances, an act of indemnity is passed every year to exempt persons from any omission in this respect. Indemnity bills are also passed to release Government or its agents from the consequences of illegal acts which circumstances may have rendered necessary. Bills of this kind were passed on behalf of the advisers of the embargo on the exportation of corn, Dec. 16, 1766; also to indemnify officers who arrested persons during the suspensions of the Habeas Corpus Act, April 10, 1801, and March 10, 1818; and for the violations of the currency laws by the suspension of the Bank Charter Act in 1848 and in 1857.

INDEPENDENTS, or CONGREGATIONALISTS.—The term Independents was applied to several sects of Dissenters, principally Brownists, about 1610. Jacobs and Brown are said to have established the first Congregational assembly at Leyden in 1616. John Robinson founded the first Independent Church in America at Plymouth, New England, in 1620. In 1637 much controversy took place relative to Antinomianism, which was condemned by a synod held in New England. Harvard College was founded in 1638, and the Savoy Confession was adopted in America in 1658. The Independents did not make much progress in Scotland before 1729. The colleges for the education of Independent ministers in this country are Western College, Plymouth, founded in 1752; Rotherham College, Yorkshire, in 1756; Brecon College in 1760; Cheshunt College in 1768; Airedale College, Bradford, in 1784; Hackney Seminary in 1796; Lancashire College in 1806; Springhill College, Birmingham, in 1838; New College, St. John's Wood, London, in 1850; and Cavendish Theological College, Manchester, in 1860.

INDEPENDENT TARTARY.—(See TURKESTAN.)

INDEX EXPURGATORIUS, or LIBRORUM PROHIBITORUM.—A list of books considered pernicious by the Romish Church was pro-

pared by the Inquisition in 1559, by order of Paul IV., and received the sanction of the Council of Trent (1545—1563). In 1564 Pius V. appointed a committee for the express purpose of continuing this catalogue. (See BOOK CENSORS.)

INDIA (Asia).—The term India is believed to be derived from Sindhu, the Sanscrit name of the river Indus. Hindostan, the country of the Hindoos, is the name given to the whole country by the Persians. Some writers believe that those early navigators the Phœnicians reached India by way of the Red Sea. The ancient Greeks had but a slight acquaintance with India. Hecatæus of Miletus (B.C. 549—486) is the first historian who speaks of the country.

INDIA.—(See STAR OF INDIA.)

INDIANA (United States) separated in 1809 from Illinois, with which, from May 7, 1800, it formed a territorial government, and was admitted into the Union as an independent state, Dec. 11, 1816.

INDIANAPOLIS, the capital of Indiana, was founded in 1821.

INDIAN COUNCIL, for the government of India, established by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 106 (Aug. 2, 1858), to supersede the Board of Control, consists of 15 members, eight of whom are appointed by the Crown, and seven by the directors of the East India Company. They receive an annual salary of £1,200, retain their office during good behaviour, and are not permitted to sit in Parliament. The first meeting of this council was held in 1858.

INDIAN MUSEUM (London).—In 1798 the directors of the East India Company resolved to establish a Museum in their house in Leadenhall Street, which was accordingly founded under the direction of Mr. (afterwards Sir Charles) Wilkins, in 1800. In 1851 it was enriched by many specimens of Indian manufactures sent by the native princes to the Great Exhibition. The Museum was transferred to Fife House, Whitehall Yard, in 1860.

INDIA-RUBBER, or CAOUTCHOUC, was first brought to Europe by M. de la Condamine in 1733. An account of the substance, as used by the natives of S. America, was presented by him to the Academy of Sciences at Paris in 1736. A further report was given in 1761, by Messrs. Herissent and Macquer, to the French Government, and by its order Grossart made several successful experiments, the results of which were published in 1768. The first allusion to the subject in English literature is by Joseph Priestley, in a work printed in 1770, in which India-rubber is recommended as good for "wiping from paper the marks of a black-lead pencil." The substance came into more general notice some 10 years after, when it was sold in the shape of bottles, at the rate of about a guinea the ounce. Macintosh succeeded in dissolving India-rubber, and applying it to waterproof clothing. The first patent obtained by him for cloaks, called "Macintoshes," was in 1823. Barnard took out a patent for caoutchoucine in 1833. The sulphuration of caoutchouc, a valuable invention, is due to Goodyear, who took out a patent for it in 1839.

INDICTION.—This term was originally applied to a tribute of corn exacted by the Romans every 15 years; but it was afterwards used to denote the period at which the payments were made. The institution of indictions dates from the time of Constantine I., Sep. 1, or, according to some authorities, Sep. 15, 312; but the first instance of their use is mentioned in the Theodosian code, under the reign of Constantius II., who died Nov. 3, 361. The papal court adopted computation by indictions about 800, the commencement of the first indiction being referred to Jan. 1, 313.

INDIGO.—Beckmann is strongly inclined to believe that what Dioscorides calls indicon, and Pliny and Vitruvius indicum, is our indigo. Muratori speaks of a treaty in Latin, in 1193, between the people of Bologna and Ferrara, in which indicum is mentioned as an article on which duty must be paid. Marco Polo found it in Asia in 1285, and gave a description of the plant and its uses after his return to Europe in 1298. An act was passed in the reign of Elizabeth, authorizing searchers to burn indigo in all dye-houses and other places where it could be discovered. This act remained in force till the time of Charles II. Indigo was so little known on the continent that some proprietors of mines in the Harts mountains obtained authority in 1705 to dig for the article in the hills near Halbertstadt. Its use was prohibited in Languedoc in 1598. The cultivation of indigo commenced in Carolina in 1747. (See ANILINE.)

INDORE (Hindostan).—Mulhar Rao Holkar obtained a grant of the territory of Indore in 1733. The town of Indore was founded by Alia Baee in 1767. A great battle was fought here Oct. 14, 1801, when Holkar was defeated by Scindia, a powerful Mahratta chieftain, who destroyed Indore. Murray captured the town, which had been restored, Aug. 24, 1804. By the treaty of Mundisore, Jan. 18, 1818, the British extended their protection to Holkar, the ruler of Indore. The troops mutinied here July 1, 1857.

INDULGENCE. — According to Bingham, anciently an indulgence was no more than the power which every bishop had of moderating the canonical punishments which, in course of penance, were inflicted upon sinners, and not any pretended power of delivering souls from the pains of purgatory, by virtue of a stock of merits, or works of supererogation, of which the Pope is become the sole dispenser. Valentinian commenced the practice of granting, on Easter Sunday, a general release to all except the worst criminals, in 367. This act of grace, continued by the emperors, was in the 11th century first termed an indulgence. The papal system of indulgences originated with Pope Gregory VII. in 1077, and they were granted by the Council of Clermont to the Crusaders Nov. 18—28, 1095. They were sold publicly in all parts of Europe on the occasion of the jubilee in 1300. The doctrine of indulgences was made an article of faith by Clement VI. in 1343. Indulgences were farmed out for 15 years to John Tetzel in 1502. The Tax-book of Indulgences was published at Rome in 1514. Luther denounced the traffic Oct. 31, 1517. The Council of Trent framed a new law of indulgences, Jan. 13, 1546.

INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITIONS.—By 28 Vict. c. 3 (March 27, 1865), that portion of the patent laws which refuses protection to inventions exhibited before they have been patented, was modified with respect to articles displayed at working-class industrial exhibitions certified by the Board of Trade. The most important exhibitions of the kind are the following:—

A.D.
1864,	March 1. South London (Lambeth Baths).
	Oct. 17—Nov. 7. North London (Agricultural Hall).
1865,	Feb. 1. South London (Lambeth Baths).
	Feb. London Operative Coachbuilders (Coachmakers' Hall).
	May 1.—Aug. 2. West London (Floral Hall).
	Aug., Sep., and Oct. Anglo-French Working Man's Exhibition (Crystal Palace).
	Sep. North London (Agricultural Hall).
	Sep. Hastings.
	Sep. 19. Bristol.

A.D.
1865. Sep. 21. Preston.
Nov. 1. Clerkenwell Juvenile Industrial Exhibition.
Dec. 12. Glasgow.
1866. March 6. City of London (Guildhall).
July 24. York.

INDUSTRIAL AND PROVIDENT SOCIETIES.—By 15 & 16 Vict. c. 31 (June 30, 1852), it was declared lawful for any number of persons to establish a society for raising by voluntary subscriptions of the members funds for attaining any purpose authorized by the laws relating to friendly societies, &c. This act was amended by 17 Vict. c. 25 (June 16, 1854), and by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 40 (July 7, 1856); and all these statutes were repealed by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 87 (Aug. 7, 1862), by which the laws relating to Industrial and Provident Societies were consolidated and amended. (See BENEFIT SOCIETIES, CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETIES, FRIENDLY SOCIETIES, &c.)

INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS.—The first attempt to introduce these institutions into this country was made at Norwood by Mr. Aubin, in 1836. The Industrial Schools Act, 20 & 21 Vict. c. 48, for the care and education of poor children, passed Aug. 17, 1857, was amended by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 108 (Aug. 28, 1860), which transferred the powers of control from the Committee on Education to the Secretary of State, and empowered justices sending children to such schools to order the parents to pay such weekly sums as they deemed advisable.

INEXPIABLE WAR.—The name given to the revolt of the mercenaries at Carthage (q.v.), B.C. 241, suppressed by Hamilcar, B.C. 238.

INFANTICIDE.—This practice, permitted in ancient Greece and Rome, was checked by the progress of Christianity. Infanticide, especially of females, which prevailed in India and the Eastern archipelagos, is becoming extinct, owing to the benign influence of Christianity. In 315 Constantine I. endeavoured to suppress it, by providing for the maintenance of children whose parents were too poor to support them; but it was not treated as murder till the reign of Valentinian (364—375). By 21 James I. c. 27 (1623), the concealment of the death of an illegitimate child was made legal proof that it had been murdered. This law was repealed by 43 Geo. III. c. 58 (June 24, 1803).

INFANTRY.—The Jews, the Egyptians, and the Persians, amongst ancient nations, devoted considerable attention to the formation of their infantry. Cyrus (B.C. 559—529) clothed his foot-soldiers in armour. The Greek phalanx and the Roman legion first came into collision at the battle of Heraclea, B.C. 280. On the decline of the Roman empire, the barbarians relied principally upon their infantry. The Franks borrowed from the Romans the square, employed with such success at the battle of Tours, in 732. The Anglo-Saxon forces were composed chiefly of infantry. During the Middle Ages, infantry was but little used. Louis VI. (1108—1137) formed the communal militia in France, and his example was followed by Frederick I. (1152—1190) of Germany, and Henry II. (1154—1189) of England. This led to the gradual re-establishment of infantry as the chief arm in war. The battle of Bovines, July 27, 1214, was the first entirely decided by modern infantry, and led to the establishment of this force in all the states of Europe. Infantry was for some time composed of irregular bands; and Charles VII. of France was the first to organize a standing army, in 1444. Francis I. increased this army to the number of 12,000. The battles of Biberach, Oct. 2, 1796, and of Caldiero, Oct. 29 and 30, 1806, were fought solely by infantry.

INFANT-SCHOOLS.—The first establishment of this kind was opened by James Buchanan at New Lanark, in 1815, Mr. Robert Owen providing the means for the undertaking. Mr. (afterwards Lord) Brougham and Lord Lansdowne introduced them into London in 1819, and the success achieved by Mr. Wilderspin in their management led to their general adoption throughout the kingdom. The Home and Colonial Infant-School Society was founded in 1836.

INFERNAL MACHINE, an apparatus filled with gunpowder or other explosive materials for the destruction of human life and property. The Italian engineer Federico Gianibelli was the first to employ these engines at the siege of Antwerp in 1584-5. In modern times, infernal machines have been repeatedly used, especially in France, for the purpose of assassination. The most notorious instances of this kind are the attempts made on the lives of Napoleon Buonaparte, Dec. 24, 1800; Louis Philippe, July 28, 1835; and Napoleon III. and his empress, Jan. 14, 1858. (See FIESCHI and ORSINI CONSPIRACY.) The Russians employed infernal machines against the British fleet in the Baltic in 1854 and 1855.

INFIRMARIES.—These institutions were not known before the Christian æra. Julian (361-3), observing the charitable institutions of the Christians, founded similar establishments for the sick poor, which were called Xenodochia. The clergy were the first to establish houses for the reception of the sick. St. Fabiola, a Roman lady, a friend of St. Jerome, established one at Rome about 400. The first in London was established by the Rev. S. Wesley, in 1715. (See HOSPITALS.)

INFLUENZA, an epidemic catarrh, which first appeared in Europe in 1510. Visitations occurred in 1557 and 1580. It raged with great severity in England, and especially in London, in 1729, 1803, 1831, 1833, 1836, and 1847. It broke out in Cape Town, Africa, in 1836.

INFORMERS. — The custom of paying a portion of a fine imposed for an offence, to the person by whom the offender has been exposed, has created the business of common informers. They were very numerous in Greece and Rome, and much discouraged by Titus (79—81) and Trajan (98—117). By 18 Eliz. c. 5 (1576), and 27 Eliz. c. 10 (1584), informers were compelled to appear in person, and if they withdrew the action, were condemned to pay the costs. For compounding without permission of the court, they were to stand in the pillory two hours, pay a fine of £10, and be incapacitated from suing in future. By 31 Eliz. c. 5 (1589), no prosecution could take place on information, in cases where the penalty is divided between the informer and the crown, when a year has elapsed since the commission of the offence. An act to prevent malicious informations in the Court of King's Bench was passed in 1692 (4 & 5 Will. & Mary, c. 18).

INFRALAPSARIANS.—(See CALVINISM.)

INGENA.—(See AVRANCHES.)

INGOLDSTADT (Bavaria). — This strongly fortified town has been frequently besieged. By the 13th secret article of the treaty of Campo-Formio, Oct. 17, 1797, the Emperor agreed to surrender Ingoldstadt and other German fortresses. The fortifications destroyed in 1800 were restored in 1827. The university where Urb Rhegius, better known as Dr. Faustus, studied, founded in 1472, was transferred to Landshut in 1800.

INGOUR (Battle). — Omar Pasha, at the head of a Turkish army, passed this river, in Asia Minor, Nov. 6, 1855, and assailed a strong Russian force. The latter was defeated with the loss of 1,250 in killed and wounded. The Turks lost about 400 men.

INGRIA (European Russia).—This province was invaded by the Poles in 1579, and by the Swedes in 1609. Peter the Great invaded it in 1703, and it was ceded by Sweden to Russia at the peace of Nystadt, Aug. 30, 1721.

INK.—The ink used by the ancients was of a viscid nature, being chiefly composed of ivory-black and gum. A varnish of wax was also employed, especially in the 9th century. The Anglo-Saxon black inks of the 8th, 9th, and 10th centuries are remarkable for their excellence. Gold and silver inks were sometimes employed, and red ink is very common for capital letters, &c., though no MS. is entirely written with it. Indian ink was first made in China about 800, and was first perfumed about 1100. Sympathetic inks were known to the ancients, and a method of secret correspondence is mentioned by Ovid in the Art of Love, B.C. 2. Inks of this character were invented by Peter Borel in 1653, by Le Mort in 1684, and by Waits in 1705. The French Academy of Sciences appointed a commission for the discovery of an indelible ink, which published two receipts for the purpose, May 30, 1831.

INKERMANN (Battle). — During the Crimean war, the Russians, nearly 50,000 strong, assailed the weakest part of the English position facing the harbour of Balaclava and the caverns of Inkermann, Nov. 5, 1854. For six hours, 8,000 British troops encountered at various points, and resisted, the assault of this overwhelming force. The French came to the support of the English, and the Russians were driven back with great slaughter. The English loss amounted to 3,000, and that of the French to 1,726 men. The Russians lost about 12,000 in killed and wounded.

INLAND NAVIGATION. — Extensive works for facilitating communication by water were erected by the ancient Egyptians, the Chinese, &c. In this country it was promoted by the labours of James Brindley (1716—Sep. 30, 1772). The following are the principal British and foreign canals :—

CANALS IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

B.C.

610. From the Nile to the Red Sea. Herodotus says it was commenced by Necbus and completed by Darius I. (Hystaspes), B.C. 521. Diodorus Siculus states that it was completed by Ptolemy Philadelphus B.C. 280. Various dates are assigned by different writers.

INLAND REVENUE.—(See EXCISE.)

INNISKILLEN.—(See ENNISKILLEN.)

INNOCENTS' DAY, CHILDERMAS, or the Feast of the Holy Innocents (Matt. ii. 16), instituted at a very early age, is celebrated by the Western Church Dec. 28, and by the Eastern, or Greek, Dec. 29.

INNS were established in Egypt B.C. 1707. Herodotus ascribes the introduction of inns to the Lydians. They existed among the Romans, who frequently used the chequers as a sign. The city of Herculaneum is said to have contained 900 public-houses. Tiberius (14—37) prohibited innkeepers from selling any baker's goods, and Nero (54—68) restricted them to the sale of boiled vegetables. By 27 Edw. III. st. 1, c. 3 (1353), commissioners were appointed to inquire into impositions by innkeepers, and by 11 Hen. IV. c. 2 (1409), innkeepers were prohibited from being officers in the customs. The latter act was enforced by 20 Hen. VI. c. 5 (1442). Innholders were incorporated in 1514. (See TAVERNS.)

INNS OF COURT AND CHANCERY, called hospitia or hostels, are first mentioned in the time of Edward II. (1307—27). According to Pearse (Inns of Court and Chancery, p. 51), "the inns of court are voluntary societies, for ages submitting to government analogous to that of other seminaries of learning." They are four in number, viz., the Inner and Middle Temple, Lincoln's Inn and Gray's Inn, with the nine inns of Chancery; viz., Clement's Inn, Clifford's Inn, Lion or Lyon's Inn, New Inn, Furnival's Inn, Thavies' or Taives' Inn, Symond's Inn, Barnard's Inn, and Staple's Inn. New Inn is supposed to have been formed on the old foundation of St. George's Inn. There were other inns, such as Chester Inn, Strand or Stronde Inn, and Scrope Inn. The two Serjeants' Inns are so called because the judges or serjeants resided in them. One, also named Faryndon Inn, is in Chancery Lane, and the other in Fleet Street.

INNSPRÜCK, or INNSBRÜCK (Austria), the capital of the Tyrol, a very ancient city, was taken by Maurice of Saxony in 1552, and by the Bavarians in 1703. They were driven out in a few days, and the French took it in 1805, and ceded it to Bavaria. The French and Bavarians were expelled April 15, 1809. They regained possession May 19, 1809, and were expelled, after a desperate battle around the city, May 29. Innsprück once more fell into the hands of the French and Bavarians in July, 1809, but was rescued Aug. 12, 1809. The Emperor Leopold I. founded a university at Innsprück in 1672, and the palace was erected by Maria Theresa in 1770.

INOCULATION for small-pox was introduced into England from Turkey, about 1721, by Lady Mary Wortley Montagu. It was tried as an experiment on seven condemned criminals, who submitted to the operation on condition that their lives should be spared if they survived. The royal family were inoculated in 1726, and the practice was afterwards generally adopted. On the discovery of vaccination (q. v.) about 1796 it was abandoned, and was finally prohibited by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 29, s. 8 (July 23, 1840). (See CATTLE PLAGUE.)

INQUISITION.—This ecclesiastical tribunal, also called the Holy Office, dates from the mission of Pierre de Castelnau against the Albigenses in 1210. In 1215 St. Dominic was appointed the first inquisitor-general by the fourth Lateran Council, and in 1233 the Inquisition received a definite constitution from Pope Gregory IX. Sicily received the Inquisition in 1224, Aragon in 1233, Venice in 1249, France in 1255, Castile and Leon in 1290, and Poland in 1327. The modern Inquisition was formed in Castile, by a bull dated Nov. 1, 1478. The tribunal was erected in Sep., 1480, and commenced its operations at Seville, under the Inquisitor-General Torquemada, Jan. 2, 1481. It was firmly established in Spain by two bulls of Sixtus IV., Aug. 2 and Oct. 17, 1483. In 1526 it was established in Portugal; and in 1571 it was introduced into Peru and Mexico by Philip II., whose reign is known as the Spanish reign of terror, owing to the numerous victims sacrificed to the Inquisition during its progress. It was suppressed in France by the edict of Nantes in 1598, and was abolished in Tuscany and Naples in 1782. Napoleon I. published an edict for its suppression in Spain, Dec. 4, 1808, and the Cortes also ordered its abolition, Feb. 12, 1813; but Ferdinand VII. restored it July 21, 1814. The acts of the Inquisition were burned at Goa, by order of John, Regent of Portugal, May 27, 1815, and the office was finally abolished in Spain in 1820. The total number of victims of the Holy Office is quite unknown. In Spain alone it is estimated by Llorente that 32,000 persons were burned, 17,000 burned in effigy, and 291,000 condemned to other penalties. The last sufferer condemned to the flames was a woman, burned at Seville, Nov. 7, 1781, for having made a contract with the devil. This tribunal was abolished by the provisional government of Tuscany, Nov. 16, 1859.

INQUISITORS OF THE PRESS were instituted by Pope Sixtus IV. (1471—1484). No work was to be printed without their permission. (See BOOK CENSORS.)

INSOLVENCY.—The first act for the relief of insolvent debtors was passed by the Long Parliament. A court for their relief was temporarily established by 53 Geo. III. c. 102 (July 10, 1813), which was continued by several acts till June 25, 1820. New measures for their relief by means of the court were adopted by 1 Geo. IV. c. 119 (July 26, 1820), and the numerous laws on the subject were amended and consolidated by 7 Geo. IV. c. 57 (May 26, 1826). Insolvent mayors, aldermen, or councillors of boroughs are compelled to vacate their office by 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 52 (Sep. 9, 1835). By 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116 (Aug. 12, 1842), insolvent debtors whose liabilities were less than £300, might obtain relief in the Bankruptcy Court. This was amended by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96 (Aug. 9, 1844). By the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134 (Aug. 6, 1861), the business of the Insolvent Debtors' Court was transferred to the Court of Bankruptcy.

INSTITUTE OF FRANCE. — L'Académie Française, founded by Richelieu in 1635, met for the first time July 10, 1637. The Académie des Inscriptions, founded in 1663, became the Académie Royale des Inscriptions et Belles-lettres, which held its first meeting July 16, 1701. The Académie Royale des Sciences, founded by Colbert in 1666, and remodelled by Bignon in 1699, was extended in 1785. The Académie de Peinture, founded by Le Brun in 1648, received a charter in 1655, and became the Académie Royale de Peinture et Sculpture in 1664. These were suppressed by the Convention, Aug. 8, 1793. The Directory established a new association, named the Institut National, by decree, Oct. 25, 1795. It held its first public session in 1796. In 1803 the constitution of the society was remodelled; in 1806 the name was changed to Institute of France; and in 1811 to that of Imperial Institute. The Académie des Sciences Morales et Politiques was established by a decree of Louis-Philippe, of Oct. 25, 1832.

INSURANCE, or ASSURANCE.—Some authorities are of opinion that it was introduced into Europe by the Jews in 1182; whilst others state that it arose in Lombardy about 1280, and was brought to London about 1350. The earliest ordinance respecting insurance is dated Barcelona, 1435. The next was published at Florence in 1523. The Emperor Charles V. of Germany issued the "Caroline code" in 1551; his son, Philip II., added a number of new decrees concerning insurance in 1563 and 1565. The preamble to the first English statute on this subject (43 Eliz. c. 12), passed in 1601, states that insurance had been "time out of mind an usage amongst merchants." Louis XIV. issued an ordinance on the subject in 1681. Dr. Barton set up the first insurance office against fire in 1696, then called the Amicable, afterwards the Hand-in-Hand. The Amicable Society General Insurance was established by charter in July, 1706; the Union Fire Office in 1714; and the Westminster Fire Office in 1717. The first companies for marine insurances, the Royal Exchange Insurance and the London Insurance, were established June 22, 1720.

INSURRECTION.—(See List in Index.)

INTAGLIO.—Engraving in this style, which is distinguished from Cameo (q. v.) by having the figures sunk into the material employed, instead of being raised in relief, was practised by the Egyptians and the ancient Jews, and was brought to its highest perfection by the Greeks. It is the method employed in the engraving of seals (q. v.).

INTERDICT.—(See EXCOMMUNICATION.)

INTEREST, in use among the ancient Greeks, and restricted to 12 per cent. by a law of Solon, B.C. 550, was regulated by law in India, B.C. 324, and was reduced to 4 per cent. at Rome, B.C. 29. It was prohibited by a law of Richard I. in 1197, but was apparently legal at the signing of Magna Charta, as it was then declared not payable by minors. It was again prohibited by 3 Hen. VII. c. 5 (1436,) was fixed at 10 per cent. by 37 Henry VIII. c. 9 (1545), and was prohibited again by 5 & 6 Edw. VI. c. 20 (1552). Legal interest at 10 per cent. was restored by 13 Eliz. c. 8 (1570), and after undergoing successive reductions, was ultimately settled at 5 per cent. by 12 Anne, sess. 2, c. 16 (1713). All restrictions were repealed by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 90 (Aug. 10, 1854). (See FUNDS.)

INTERIM.—Several decrees have been issued bearing this title. The first, published by the diet of Ratisbon, July 29, 1541, referred the religious disputes of the Germans to the arbitration of a general council. The second, known as the Augsburg Interim, issued by Charles V., was read before the diet of Augsburg, May 15, 1548, and failed in its object of reconciling the Roman Catholics and the Protestants. The Interim of Leipsic was promulgated by the Elector Maurice of Saxony, Dec. 22, 1548, and was accepted by some Protestants. Charles V. and Maurice resorted to arms to support their respective decrees, and the Emperor was compelled to revoke his interim in 1552.

INTERIM TREATY.—This treaty between Austria and Prussia was signed Sep. 30, 1849, but was not to take effect till May 1, 1850. Its object was the maintenance of the Germanic Confederation, and of the peace of Germany.

INTERLUDE.—A species of dramatic composition between the moral plays and the modern drama, was, according to Disraeli (Amenities, I. 348), "called the interlude, or a play between, to zest by its pleasantry the intervals of a luxurious and sometimes a wearisome banquet. The most dramatic interludes were the invention of John Heywood, who flourished 1521—1565, the jester of Henry the Eighth." Heywood was in fact the inventor of the interlude.

INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT. — The benefit of international copyright was secured to authors in certain cases by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 59 (July 31, 1838), which was extended by 15 Vict. c. 12 (May 28, 1852). A treaty on the subject was concluded with France Nov. 3, 1851, one was signed with the United States, Feb. 18, 1853, and with Hamburg in 1853.

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION OF 1862. —In 1858 it was resolved by the council of the Society of Arts that the holding of decennial industrial exhibitions would be of national benefit. Circulars were accordingly sent to the foreign exhibitors of 1851, to ascertain their views respecting a similar undertaking for 1861; but in consequence of the Italian war, the Society of Arts, in June, 1859, passed a resolution for the postponement of the scheme. The sudden termination of the war induced them to resume their efforts, and 1862 was suggested as the year for the exhibition. In Feb., 1860, Prince Albert signified his desire to further the undertaking, and a guarantee fund was opened, which soon amounted to £430,000. In June, the commissioners of 1851 gave permission for the erection of the new building on the ground purchased with the surplus fund of the old exhibition, and in Feb., 1861, the trustees were incorporated by charter, as the Royal Commissioners of the Exhibition of 1862. The building, designed by Capt. Fowke, was commenced March 9, the contractors being bound to complete it by Feb. 12, 1862. Its principal front was of brick, 1,200 feet long and 50 feet high. Brick wings receded at each end, between 500 and 600 feet, and the parallelogram included between these erections formed the industrial exhibition, built of iron, wood, and glass. The immense domes at each end of the building measured 160 feet in diameter and 250 feet in height, being the largest structures of the kind in existence. Including the large wooden galleries forming the machine department, the Exhibition buildings covered an area of more than 25 acres. The building was insured for £400,000, at a cost of £3,300, Feb. 20. It was opened by the Duke of Cambridge and other commissioners appointed by the Queen, May 1. The commissioners gave a conversazione at the South Kensington Museum, June 6, and the State ceremonial of declaring the prizes awarded to exhibitors took place July 11. A banquet in honour of French workmen was held in the refreshment rooms, July 26. The Exhibition closed to the public Nov. 1, was kept open to exhibitors for a fortnight longer, to enable them to remove their goods. An application by Lord Palmerston's government for a grant of £105,000, towards the purchase of the site and buildings for the purposes of the National Portrait Gallery, the Patent Museum, the Natural History collections of the British Museum, &c., was negatived by the House of Commons by 287 to 121 votes, July 2, 1863.

INTERNATIONAL HORTICULTURAL EXHIBITION AND CONGRESS, held on the site of the International Exhibition of 1862, was opened Tuesday, May 22, 1866. A banquet at the Guildhall was given the same day. The congress held its first session at South Kensington Museum, May 23. The exhibition was closed May 31.

INTERNATIONAL STATISTICAL CONGRESS.—The first congress of this description, in which the European states were officially represented, met at Brussels in 1853, and others were held at Paris in 1855, at Vienna in 1857, in London in 1860, at Berlin in 1863, and at Florence in 1866.

INTERREGNUM.—Sometimes called the Commonwealth or Protectorate, lasted from the execution of Charles I. till the restoration of Charles II., being an interval of little more than 11 years. After the king's execution, Jan. 30, 1649, a republic was proclaimed, which continued till the expulsion of the Parliament by Cromwell, April 20, 1653, after which he exercised absolute power as lord-general. He surrendered his power to a convention appointed by himself, July 4, but was reinstated by them Dec. 12, and proclaimed Lord Protector of the Commonwealth, Dec. 16. A new settlement was adopted May 25, 1657, by which Cromwell received full powers to appoint his successor. He died Sep. 13, 1658, and was succeeded by his son Richard, who resigned the protectorate May 13, 1659. The regal authority was restored in the person of Charles II., May 29, 1660.

INVASION.—(See List in Index.)

INVENTION OF THE CROSS.—(See CROSS.)

INVENTORS' INSTITUTE (London), for the protection of inventors' interests and the promotion of improvements in the patent laws, was inaugurated May 1, 1862.

INVERLOCHY (Battle). — The Royalist troops, commanded by the Marquis of Montrose, defeated Argyle and the Covenanters at this place, in Scotland, Feb. 2, 1645.

INVERNESS (Scotland) was one of the capitals of the Picts during the 6th century. Its first charter as a burgh was granted by William, the Lion (1165—1214). Alexander II. founded a Dominican monastery in 1233. Robert Bruce captured it in 1313, and Donald, Lord of the Isles, burned it in June, 1411. The bridge over the Ness was built in 1686; and the old castle, in which James I. held a Parliament in 1427, was destroyed by the rebels in 1746. (See CULLODEN, Battle.) The town-hall was founded in 1708, the Assembly-rooms in 1789, and the Royal Academy in 1792. A disastrous earthquake occurred in 1816, and an inundation of the river Ness in 1848, which swept away the old bridge. The new suspension-bridge was opened in 1855.

INVESTIGATION. — (See DELICATE INVESTIGATION.)

INVESTITURE.—The whole right of investiture by the temporal sovereign was abrogated by a decree of Gregory VII. at a council held at Rome, Feb. 24–28, 1075. The decree deposed every bishop, abbot, or inferior ecclesiastic who should receive investiture from any lay person. The claim led to many contests in Europe. The Emperor Henry V. gave up the right of investiture in a treaty signed at Rome Feb. 12, 1111. Another dispute having arisen on the subject, it was once more settled by the concordat of Worms, 1122, which was ratified by the Lateran Council in 1123. The Norman kings refused to concede the right, and Urban II. threatened excommunication. Anselm in vain attempted to persuade Henry I. to submit in 1103. At a council held at London, Aug. 1, 1107, it was agreed that bishops should do homage to the king, but not receive investiture from him. It led to frequent contests between the temporal and secular powers.

INVESTITURES (War of) between the Emperor Henry IV. and Gregory VII., respecting the right of investiture, commenced in 1074, and terminated with the capture of Rome, March 21, 1084.

INVOCATION OF SAINTS.—The practice of imploring the intercession of the dead became general in the Romish Church during the 5th century. It is first enjoined in the canons of the English Churches in 994.

IODINE. — This substance was discovered in 1811 by Courtoise, a saltpetre manufacturer at Paris, who described it to the Institute of Dec. 6, 1813. It received its name from the Greek ἰώδης, violet-coloured, and has been successfully employed in the treatment of several diseases.

IODIZED COLLODION.—(See COLLODION.)

IONA, HUY, or ICOLMKILL (Argyleshire). —This island, one of the Hebrides, is celebrated for the ruins of the cathedral, &c., founded by St. Columba in 565. It was sacked by the Danes in 795, in 802, and Dec. 24, 986. Many of the monks suffered martyrdom in 806 and in 825. In accordance with an act passed by the Scotch convention of estates in 1561, the ecclesiastical buildings on this island were destroyed. Shakespeare (Macbeth, ii. sc. 4), referring to it as the ancient place of sepulture of the Scottish sovereigns, says that Duncan's body was > "Carried to Colmes-kill,

> The sacred storehouse of his predecessors,
> And guardian of their bones."

IONIA (Asia Minor).—This country is said to have been peopled by Greek colonists about B.C. 1045. After founding Colophon, Ephesus, Miletus, and other important cities, the Ionians obtained possession of Smyrna about B.C. 688, and the country soon attained a high degree of prosperity. At the commencement of the reign of Cræsus, B.C. 560, it was subject to the Lydians, and it was conquered by Cyrus B.C. 557. The inhabitants made unsuccessful efforts to regain their independence, B.C. 500 and 496, and they assisted the Greeks against the Persians at the battle of Mycale, B.C. 479. The Persian yoke was at length shaken off by the victory at the Eurymedon (q. v.), but the peace of Antalcidas again imposed it upon the Ionians, B.C. 387. On the overthrow of the Persian empire by Alexander III., Ionia became subject to Macedonia, and it afterwards formed part of the Roman empire, B.C. 133.

IONIAN ISLANDS (Mediterranean).—Cephalonia, Cerigo, Corfu, Ithaca, Paxo, Santa Maura, and Zante, with their dependencies, were erected into the republic of the Seven United Islands, March 21, 1800. It was to pay a moderate tribute to the Porte, and its independence was guaranteed by Turkey and Russia. By the 9th article of the treaty of Amiens, March 25, 1802, Napoleon Buonaparte recognized this republic. The French captured the islands in 1807, and Russia ceded them to France by a secret article of the treaty of Tilsit, July 7, 1807. The French garrisons surrendered to an English force Oct. 3, 1809, and by a treaty between Great Britain and Russia, signed at Paris Nov. 5, 1815, they were formed into an independent state, called the United States of the Ionian Islands, or the Septinsular Republic, under the protection of England. The Prince Regent, afterwards George IV., ratified their constitution July 11, 1817, and it was proclaimed Dec. 28. A university for this republic was founded at Corfu in 1823. In 1848 and 1849, Lord Seaton, the Lord High Commissioner, introduced numerous changes in the constitution. In 1851 Greek became the official language of the Ionian Government. Mr. Gladstone was despatched on a commission of inquiry, and arrived at Corfu Nov. 23, 1858. The legislative assembly proposed the annexation of their republic to Greece, Jan. 27, 1859, and presented a petition to that effect, Jan. 30, which Mr. Gladstone rejected Feb. 5. Gen. Sir H. Storks succeeded as Lord High Commissioner, Feb. 17, and Mr. Gladstone embarked for England Feb. 19. The legislative assembly at Corfu petitioned the Lord High Commissioner in favour of the union of the seven isles with Greece, April 4, 1862, and 1863. A protocol, ceding them to Greece, signed May 28, 1864, was carried into effect June 1, 1864, and the governor, with the last detachment of British troops, retired June 2.

IONIC ORDER of architecture, distinguished by the use of the volute, originated in Asia. Several examples have been discovered at Persepolis and Khorsabad. It ranks next to the Doric Order (q. v.), and corresponds to the Decorated Style (q. v.) of Gothic architecture.

IONIC SECT.—This school of philosophers was founded by Thales of Miletus, born B.C. 636. His two cardinal doctrines were that the whole world is a living being, produced from a seed, and that water is the grand origin of all things. Anaximander, Anaximenes, and Heraclitus adopted these views.

IOWA (United States).—The French settled in this part of America in 1686. It was made a separate territory in June, 1838, and was admitted into the Union Aug. 4, 1846.

IPATSKOI.—(See COSTROMA.)

IPSUS (Battle).—Ptolemy (I.) Soter I., Cassander, Lysimachus, and Seleucus Nicator, having entered into a confederacy against Antigonus, Alexander the Great's general, their armies met at this village, in Phrygia, in Aug., B.C. 301. Antigonus, who was in his 81st year, was defeated and slain.

IPSWICH (Suffolk) was pillaged by the Danes in 991, and again in 1000. A hurricane destroyed many churches Jan. 1, 1287. The grammar-school was founded in 1527; the gaol was erected in 1790, and the Hall of Commerce in 1845.

IRELAND.—Its most ancient name is Eri, or Erin, called by the Greeks Ierne, and by the Saxons Ierland, or Ireland. From the 2nd to the 10th century it bore the name Scotia, and the inhabitants were called Scoti or Scots. The term Hibernia came into use at a later date. No authentic records of its early history exist.

IRIDIUM.—This metal was discovered by Mr. S. Tennant in 1803.

IRISH BISHOPRICS.—Two archbishoprics were reduced to bishoprics, and several sees merged into others by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 37 (Aug. 14, 1833), and by 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 90 (Aug. 15, 1834). The archbishop and two bishops sit in the House of Lords, a change being made each session, that all the bishops may sit in turn. (The sees printed in italics have either been suppressed or merged in others.)

IRISH CHURCH.—In 431, Pope Cœlestine I. consecrated Palladius and sent him into Ireland as Bishop of its inhabitants, then called Scots. Patrick, son of Calpurnius, a deacon, having been captured from his father's farm near Boulogne, and sold as a slave to Milchu, an Irish chieftain, with whom he remained for six years, on obtaining his liberty resolved to labour for the conversion of the heathen islanders amongst whom he had sojourned in bondage. After receiving consecration as a bishop, he landed in Ireland in 432, or, according to Dr. Todd (St. Patrick, Apostle of Ireland, p. 392), between 440 and 460, and preached with success, founding the bishopric of Armagh (q. v.) in 445. Chronologists differ respecting the date of his death, some placing it as early as 460, while Dr. Todd (p. 497) assigns it to 493. Although established according to the principles of the Culdees (q. v.), the Irish Church gradually submitted to the see of Rome, the supremacy of which was acknowledged by many of the clergy at a national synod held at Kells March 9, 1152. In 1291 the bishops and priests formed a confederacy for the maintenance of their power. In 1535 George Brown became the first Protestant archbishop of Dublin, and in 1536 370 monasteries were suppressed. The English Bible and liturgy were introduced in 1551, and a series of 12 articles were adopted by a synod held at Dublin in 1566. Other articles were prescribed in 1615, which gradually fell into disuse. The churches of England and Ireland were united by the Act of Union, 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 67 (July 2, 1800). The Church Education Society was instituted in 1839.

IRISH INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION.—(See DUBLIN.)

IRON.—Tubal Cain is spoken of as the "instructor of every artificer in brass or iron," B.C. 3204 (Gen. iv. 22). It was manufactured by the Egyptians about B.C. 1706, and the ore was discovered on Mount Ida, by the Dactyli, about B.C. 1406. The Romans were acquainted with iron at an early date, and derived large quantities from Elba and Spain. Its manufacture was encouraged by them in Britain, where iron-mines were in operation B.C. 54. Bath became the great centre of the British manufacture about 120. The exportation of iron was prohibited by 28 Edw. III. c. 5 (1354), and the importation of manufactured iron goods which could be made at home was restricted by 1 Rich. III. c. 12 (1483). In consequence of the destruction of forests to obtain fuel for the manufacture, the erection of iron-works was restricted by 23 Eliz. c. 5 (1581). Lord Dudley obtained a patent for carrying on the manufacture with coal instead of wood in 1619; but was unable to bring his invention to perfection, and at his death it was forgotten. It was revived and successfully introduced at Colebrook Dale by Darby in 1713. Cort's patent for rolling iron is dated Jan. 17, 1783, and for puddling, Feb. 13, 1784. The hot-blast was discovered by Neilson in 1827. Bessemer's process for converting crude iron into manufactured iron and steel without fuel, which attracted much attention in 1856, did not fulfil the expectations of its inventor. In consequence of a strike among the operatives in N. Staffordshire, the masters closed their works March 4, 1865, and maintained a lock-out till April 10. The N. Staffordshire men returned to their work May 22.

IRON CAGE.—Louis XI. was betrayed to Charles the Bold of Burgundy, at Peronne, Oct. 10, 1468, by the Cardinal de la Balue, whom he had raised from a low condition, and was compelled to sign an ignominious treaty, Oct. 14. On discovering De la Balue's treachery in 1469, Louis XI. confined him for ten years in an iron cage, eight feet square, in the Château d'Ouzain, near Blois. This punishment was at that time common in Spain and Italy. (See ANCORA.)

IRON CROSS.—This Prussian order of knighthood was instituted by Frederick William III., March 10, 1813.

IRON CROWN OF LOMBARDY, consisting of a band of gold set with jewels, and a thin circle of iron, which was said to have been made from a nail of the Holy Cross, given by Pope Gregory I.; was first used in the coronation of Agilulph, King of the Lombards, in 591, and afterwards in that of Charlemagne in 774. It was used at the coronation of 34 sovereigns. Napoleon I. was crowned with it at Milan, May 26, 1805, when he instituted the order of the Iron Crown. It ceased in 1814, but was renewed by the Emperor Francis I. of Austria, Feb. 12, 1816.

IRON MASK.—The man with the iron mask was a mysterious state prisoner in France, who always wore a black velvet mask, which completely concealed his face. He was at first confined at Pignerol in 1679; he was removed to Exilles in 1681; to the island of St. Marguerite in 1687; and finally, Sep. 18, 1698, to the Bastille, where he died Nov. 19, 1703. He was everywhere attended by M. de St. Mars; and although the slightest attempt on his part to reveal his real name would have met with instant death, he was uniformly treated with the greatest courtesy and indulgence. Various attempts have been made to ascertain the identity of the man with the iron mask. Some affirm that he was the Duke of Vermandois (who died in camp in 1683), a natural brother of the dauphin. Voltaire published an account of him in 1751. In 1759 it was announced that he was the Duke of Beaufort; and in 1768 St. Foix suggested that he was the Duke of Monmouth, who had been executed in England. He was reported to be an illegitimate son of Anne of Austria by Cardinal Mazarin or the Duke of Buckingham. He is said to have been an elder and also a twin brother of Louis XIV. The last theory on the subject appeared in 1837, and suggested that he was the statesman Foucquet, whose death was believed to have occurred just before the mysterious prisoner arrived at Pignerol. There seems to be little doubt that the mysterious prisoner was, as announced in a letter by a Baron d'Heiss in 1770, Count Matthioli, minister of the Duke of Mantua. Having broken faith with Louis XIV., Count Matthioli was lured to the French frontier, arrested May 2, 1679, and imprisoned at Pignerol.

IRONMONGERS' COMPANY. — This, the tenth of the twelve chief companies of London, was incorporated by Edward IV. in 1463. The hall was erected from the designs of Thomas Holden in 1748.

IRON SHIPS.—(See SHIP-BUILDING.)

IRRIGATION. — Brande states, "It is as old as human civilization, and some of the first machines which we read of in history are those for raising water from the Nile for irrigating the lands on its banks." So celebrated was Egypt for its fertility, that Abraham, during a famine, went there to procure corn, B.C. 1920 (Gen. xii. 10). The Spaniards were surprised at the canals and subterraneous aqueducts on a large scale which they found in Peru when they conquered it in the 17th century. (See CANALS, INLAND NAVIGATION, &c.)

IRUN (Battle). — The British Auxiliary Legion defeated the Carlist forces and captured this town, in Spain, May 17, 1837.

IRVINGITES.—This sect was founded by the Rev. Edward Irving, who was born Aug. 15, 1792, and joined the Scotch church in 1819. In 1821 he removed to London, and created a great sensation by his preaching at Cross Street, Hatton Garden; and in 1825 he published "Babylon Foredoomed," and appeared as the founder of a new theological school. The first utterances of the "unknown tongue" in London were heard in 1830; and Irving was expelled from the Scottish church for heresy in 1833. Many of his congregation adhered to him, and he had a meeting-house in Newman Street. He died at Glasgow Dec. 8, 1834. In 1835 the sect numbered seven congregations in London; and in 1838 the apostles, as certain of the new hierarchy were called, visited the continent with a view of diffusing their doctrines. The liturgy of the sect was framed in 1842, and enlarged in 1847, which styled itself the Apostolic Catholic Church, and in 1852 lighted candles and incense were prescribed as essential parts of the ritual. The church in Gordon Square was erected in 1853.

IRWINSVILLE (Georgia).—At this town, named in honour of Gen. J. Irwin, Governor of Georgia in 1807, Jefferson Davis, President of the Confederate States of America, was, with his staff, taken prisoner by the Federals, May 10, 1865.

ISABELLA (Hayti).—Christopher Columbus founded this city, named after the Queen of Spain, in 1493. It was abandoned when St. Domingo rose to importance.

ISABELLA OF PORTUGAL (Order).—This order of knighthood for ladies was founded in Portugal by Queen Maria I. (Francesca) in 1804.

ISABELLA, ST., THE CATHOLIC.—This order of knighthood was founded by Ferdinand VII. of Spain, March 24, 1815, and placed under the patronage of St. Isabella of Portugal.

ISAIAH.—This book of the Old Testament, called, from its frequent reference to the coming of the Messiah, the "evangelical" prophecy, was written by Isaiah the son of Amoz, about B.C. 758. According to the traditions of the Rabbins the author was sawn asunder in a trunk of a tree, by order of Manasseh (B.C. 698—643), King of Judah.

ISAURIA (Asia Minor).—This country was invaded by the Romans B.C. 78, and reduced to submission. The inhabitants afforded an asylum to the Emperor Zeno during his exile from Constantinople, in 475, and rebelled against Anastasius I. in 493. Isauria was conquered by the Saracens in 650, but it was recovered by Leo III., the Iconoclast, who founded the Isaurian dynasty of eastern emperors, which lasted from 717 to 797.

ISCA SILURUM.—(See CAERLEON.)

ISCHIA (Mediterranean Sea).—This island, the ancient Ænaria, which belongs to Naples, was colonized at a very early period by Eretrian and Chalcidian settlers, and by the Syracusans B.C. 474; but it was deserted in consequence of a violent eruption of Monte Epomeo, B.C. 470. Ischia was seized by the Saracens in 813 and 847. It was sacked by the troops of Pisa in 1135, became the seat of a bishopric before 1179, and was taken by the Emperor Henry VI. in 1191. The last volcanic eruption took place in 1302. In 1495 Ferdinand II. sought refuge here from his rival Charles VIII.; and, in 1544, the island was plundered by the pirate Barbarossa. The Duke of Guise seized it in 1647, and it was taken by the English and Sicilians in 1807. Ischia suffered severely from an earthquake, Feb. 2, 1828.

ISLE OF MAN (Irish Channel), governed by a succession of Norwegian kings, from 1092 to 1264, was invaded by Alexander III., King of Scotland, in 1266, and was conquered by the Scots in 1270. They ruled it until 1290, when the inhabitants claimed the protection of Edward I., who immediately took possession. It was recovered by the Scots, under Robert Bruce, in 1312, and reconquered by the Earl of Shaftesbury in 1340. Henry IV. granted it to Sir John Stanley in 1403. James I. bestowed it upon William, sixth Earl of Derby, in 1610. It fell, in 1763, by inheritance, to James, second Duke of Athol, who sold it for £70,000 to the British Government, in 1765. A further sum of £133,000 was paid to the Athol family in discharge of revenue, in Jan., 1829. (See SODOR AND MAN.)

ISLE OF PALMS (Pacific Ocean). — This island, situated in Choco Bay, was discovered by Pizarro in 1527.

ISLE OF PINES (Pacific Ocean). — The French took possession of this small island in 1853.

ISLES.—(See SODOR AND MAN.)

ISLINGTON (London).—This large parish, mentioned in Domesday-book as the village of Isendone, was the scene of the arrest of Henry VI. by the Earl of Warwick, 1465, and was frequently visited by Henry VIII., who published a proclamation for the preservation of the game, July 8, 1545. Queen Elizabeth also frequently visited the village. In 1666 its fields afforded shelter to about 200,000 persons, who were rendered houseless by the Great Fire. The first stone of St. Mary's Church was laid Aug. 28, 1751, and that of the New Independent College at Highbury, June 28, 1825. The Islington Literary and Scientific Society was established in Feb., 1833, and the building founded April 10, 1837. The cattle-market was opened Jan. 9, 1849. The first stone of the new buildings was laid March, 1854, and they were opened June 13, 1855. The statue of Sir Hugh Myddelton, the projector of the New River (q. v.), was inaugurated July 26, 1862.

ISLY (Battle). — The French defeated the army of the Emperor of Morocco at Isly, Aug. 14, 1844.

ISMAIL (Moldavia).—This strongly-fortified town was taken by the Russians Aug. 6, 1770; Suwarrow stormed it Dec. 22, 1790, when a barbarous massacre of the inhabitants was perpetrated; and it was again taken by the Russians Sep. 26, 1809. It was ceded to Russia at the peace of Bucharest, May 28, 1812. It was ceded to Moldavia by the 20th and 21st articles of the treaty of Paris, March 30, 1856. The Russians blew up the fortifications before retiring.

ISPAHAN, or ISFAHAN (Persia), formerly the capital, was taken by Timour in 1387. The Turks captured it in 1547. Shah Abbas I. made it the capital of Persia in 1590. The Affghans seized it in 1722; it was retaken by Nadir Shah in 1727, and ceased to be the residence of the kings of Persia in 1794. Ispahan was devastated by an earthquake July 11, 1853.

ISRAEL.—On the revolt of the ten tribes (1 Kings xii. 1—19), B.C. 975, the Jewish territory was divided into the kingdoms of Israel and Judah. The kingdom of Israel lasted from B.C. 975 until the captivity of the ten tribes, B.C. 721. Some authorities assign the revolt of the ten tribes to B.C. 990. (See JEWS and JUDAH.)

ISSUS (Battles).—Alexander III. (the Great) defeated the Persians, led by Darius III., near this city, in Cilicia, in Nov., B.C. 333. Arrian states that 110,000 Persians fell in this battle. ——The Emperor Septimius Severus defeated Niger at the same place in 194.——Heraclius pitched his camp on this spot in 622. (See BEYLAC, Battle.)

ISTALIF (Affghanistan).—This town was captured and destroyed by an English army Sep. 29, 1842.

ISTAMBOUL.—(See CONSTANTINOPLE.)

ISTER.—(See DANUBE.)

ISTHMIAN GAMES are said to have been instituted by Sisyphus, brother of Athamas, King of Corinth, B.C. 1326, and re-organized by Theseus, B.C. 1234. They were held regularly every third year from B.C. 584, and in the Isthmian solemnities, B.C. 228, the Romans were privileged to take a part. They were discontinued after the destruction of Corinth by Lucius Mummius, B.C. 146, and were re-established by Julius Cæsar B.C. 60. They ceased after the sack of Corinth by Alaric I., King of the Goths, in 396.

ISTRIA, or HISTRIA.—The inhabitants of this Adriatic peninsula are referred to by Livy as having been engaged in piracy, B.C. 301. Their territory was invaded without success by the consul M. Claudius Marcellus, B.C. 183; but it was reduced by subjection by C. Claudius, B.C. 177. Istria passed under the domination of the Heruli in 476; of the Ostrogoths in 489; of the Greek empire in 522; of the Lombards in 751; and of Charlemagne in 774. In 997 it formed a league with the towns of Dalmatia against the pirates of Narenta; was taken by Premislaus Ottocar II. in 1262; and it was annexed to the territories of the Venetian republic in 1420. It was annexed to Austria by the treaty of Campo-Formio, Oct. 17, 1797; formed part of the kingdom of Italy in 1806; was declared an integral portion of the French empire by the treaty of Schönbrunn, Oct. 14, 1809; and was ultimately restored to Austria by the treaty of Paris, May 30, 1814, and the congress of Vienna in 1815.

ITALIAN ARCHITECTURE.—This style, based upon the architecture of the ancient Romans, was employed by Arnolfo di Lapo in the cathedral of Florence, founded in 1298. Giovanni Pisano, in 1350, used it in the pulpit of Pisa, and in the 15th, 16th, and 17th centuries it was generally practised by Italian architects.

ITALIAN REPUBLIC.—(See CISALPINE REPUBLIC.)

ITALICA, or "THE ITALIAN CITY" (Spain), founded by Scipio Africanus, on the site of the town of Sancios, B.C. 207, was taken by the Goths and named by them Talika, or Talca. In consequence of a change in the bed of the river Guadalquiver, the inhabitants migrated to Seville. The ruined city of Italica is called Old Seville.

ITALY.—The etymology of the name Italia is very doubtful, some authorities deriving it from a mythical Œnotrian or Pelasgic chief Italus, and others from an old Greek word signifying an ox, applied to the country to indicate the numerous herds of cattle for which it was celebrated. At first only the southern point of the peninsula was so named.

MODERN KINGDOM OF ITALY.

1805—1814. Napoleon Buonaparte.

KINGDOM RESTORED.

1861, Feb. 26. Victor Emanuel.

ITCHINGFORD (Treaty).—Edward the Elder concluded a peace with the Danes at Itchingford, in 906.

ITHACA (Ionian Isles).—This small island is famous as having been the kingdom of Ulysses (B.C. 1215), whose feats at the siege of Troy, and subsequent adventures, are related in the Homeric poems. It became subject to the Tarentines in 1207, to the Venetians in 1215, to the French in 1797, and in 1815 was placed under the protection of Great Britain, with the other Ionian Islands (q. v.).

* Teias was killed in 553, and Italy remained under the government of Narses until the establishment of the Lombard kingdom by Alboin.

IUKA (Battle).—The Federals under Gens. Grant and Rosecrans attacked the Confederate forces of Gen. Price at this town in Mississippi, Sep. 19, 1862. The battle, interrupted by night, was renewed by Gen. Rosecrans Sep. 20, when it was discovered that Gen. Price had evacuated the town during the night.

IVORY.—This substance has been used for ornamental purposes from the earliest periods. Ivory carving was known to the Jews in the time of Solomon (1 Kings x. 22), B.C. 1000, and is often mentioned by Homer. Phidias (B.C. 440) was famous for his ivory statues plated with gold.

IVRY (Battle).—Henry IV. of France defeated the forces of the League, led by the Duke of Mayenne, at this village, near Evreux, March 14, 1590.

IVY LANE CLUB (London), formed by Dr. Johnson in 1749, met every Tuesday evening at the King's Head Tavern, Ivy Lane, Paternoster Row. The house in which the assemblies were held was destroyed by fire Sep. 17, 1859. (See Essex Head Club.)

J.

JACA, or JACCA (Spain), belonged to the Vascones in the time of Ptolemy, and was taken from the Moors in 795. The ancient fortress, captured by the French in 1809, was wrested from them by the English in 1814. It was unsuccessfully assailed by the revolutionary forces in Sep., 1822.

JACATRA.—(See Batavia, Java.)

JACK KETCH. — A writer in Notes and Queries (2nd series, i. 72) refers for the origin of this cognomen to the following extract from Lloyd's MS. Collections in the British Museum:—"The manor of Tyburn was formerly held by Richard Jaquett, where felons were for a long time executed; from whence we have Jack Ketch."

JACKSON (United States), the capital of Mississippi, having been abandoned by the Confederates, was occupied by the Federals under Gens. Grant and Sherman, May 14, 1863. In consequence of the approach of the Confederates under Gen. Pemberton, the Federals retired May 16, and it was occupied by Gen. Johnston, who withdrew July 16. The town, one of the most beautiful in N. America, was destroyed by Gen. Sherman.

JACOBIN, or BRETON CLUB (Paris).—One of the numerous political associations that came into existence just before the first French revolution, the members of which styled themselves "Society of the Friends of the Constitution." When they met at Versailles, they received the name of the Breton Club, because the deputies from Britanny took the lead in their proceedings. In Oct., 1789, the sittings of the club were transferred to the monastery of the Jacobin friars, whence the name, at Paris, when the public were first admitted to its conferences. In 1790 this club increased rapidly in numbers (see Club of 1789 and Feuillant Club); in 1791 the funeral of Mirabeau was attended by 1,800 of its members; and in 1792 it wielded a pernicious influence over the government, and assumed the title of "The Society of the Friends of Liberty and Equality." The Jacobins had affiliated societies in the provinces, and sought to establish branches, known as the Propaganda, in foreign countries. The club was closed Nov. 9, 1794.

JACOBINS.—This name, generally applied to the advocates of extreme democratical opinions, took its origin from the members of the Breton, or Jacobin Club, formed in Paris in 1789. (See Carmagnole.) The French Dominicans were called Jacobins.

JACOBITES.—This term was first applied in England to the party which adhered to James II., after the revolution of 1688, and afterwards to those who continued to maintain sentiments of loyalty towards the house of Stuart, and sought to secure the restoration of that family to the English throne. The unsuccessful rebellions of 1715 and 1745 in Scotland were brought about by the agency of the Jacobites. A Jacobite plot, in which Atterbury, Bishop of Rochester, was concerned, was discovered in 1723. (See Layer's Conspiracy.)

JACOBITES (Ecclesiastical History). — A Christian sect which arose during the 5th century, and maintained that Christ had but one nature. They were thus named from Jacob Baradæus, Bishop of Edessa, and apostle of the East, who restored the sect about 545. From this man, Mosheim remarks, as the second father of the sect, all the Monophysites in the East are called Jacobites. Baradæus died in 578. (See Abyssinian Church, and Copts.) A small section of the Jacobites joined the Roman Catholics in the 17th century, but the majority remained firm in the faith of their ancestors. Riddle enumerates amongst the remains of oriental sects or Christian communities existing in 1837, the Syrian Jacobites living under their patriarch at Antioch. Roger of Wendover mentions a new sect of preachers called "Jacobites," because they imitated the life of the apostles, who sprang up in 1198, under the auspices of Pope Innocent III. They were mendicants, and suffered great privations. Mosheim believes the sect ceased to exist soon after the Council of Lyons, in 1274.

JACOB'S POST.—(See Gallows.)

JACOB, ST. (Battle), was fought at this hamlet, near Basel, Aug. 26, 1444, when the Swiss were defeated by a French force of superior numbers.

JACOB'S STAFF.—De Morgan (N. and Q., 3rd s. iv. 113) states that the astrolabe and Jacob's staff are entirely different instruments, but used for the same purposes, the staff being an old instrument in the 15th century, and the astrolabe an introduction from the East in perhaps the 14th century.

JACOBUS.—This gold coin, of which there were two kinds, viz., the old Jacobus, worth 25 shillings, and the new Jacobus, also called Carolus, valued at 23 shillings, was struck in the reign of James I. (1603—25).

JACQUARD LOOM, for weaving figured fabrics, is named after its inventor, Joseph Marie Jacquard, who was born at Lyons, July 7, 1752, and died Aug. 7, 1834. He first conceived the idea of the loom in 1790, and in Sep., 1801, the jury of the exhibition of products of industry awarded him a bronze medal, and he secured a 10 years' patent for his loom. For a net-making machine another gold medal was awarded to him at Paris in Feb., 1804. English manufacturers have effected important improvements on the Jacquard loom.

JACQUERIE, so called from the cant phrase Jacques Bonhomme, applied to the peasantry, was an insurrection of this class against the nobles, that broke out near Beauvais (q. v.), in France, May 21, 1358. Many thousands of the unhappy insurgents were slaughtered in a conflict June 9, and the insurrection was speedily suppressed.

JAEN (Battle).—Alphonso VIII. of Leon, or III. of Castile, defeated the Moors near this city in Spain, in 1157.

JAEN (Spain), supposed to be the ancient Aurgi, is the capital of a province which nearly coincides with the Moorish kingdom of Jaen. It was captured after a long siege, by Ferdinand III., in 1246. The French general Cassagne captured and sacked Jaen in June, 1808. Its cathedral was erected in 1525, on the site of a Moorish mosque demolished in 1492. A new road to Granada was completed in 1828.

JAEN DE BRACAINOROS (Ecuador).—Near this town, founded in 1549, M. de la Condamine commenced his survey of the river Amazon (q. v.) in 1743.

JAFFA, or YAFFA (Syria).—This fortified town, the ancient Joppa, was probably founded by the Phœnicians, about B.C. 1400. It was made a bishopric by Constantine I., in 332; was captured by the caliph Omar I. in 636, and by the Crusaders in 1099. It was the scene of a great battle between the Saracens and King Baldwin I. of Jerusalem in 1102. Richard I. (Cœur de Lion) encamped here in 1191. Saladin attacked Jaffa, July 26, 1192. He was compelled to retire, but gained possession of the town in 1193. It was retaken and strongly fortified by Louis IX. of France, in 1252. The Mameluke sultan Bibars took it in 1267. Napoleon Buonaparte invested Jaffa March 4, 1799, and took it by storm March 7. Four thousand prisoners were put to death March 10, 1799. Mehemet Ali obtained possession of the town in 1832; but it was restored to the Turks in 1840. It suffered greatly from an earthquake Jan. 21, 1837, and again July 17, 1845.

JAGELLONS.—This Polish dynasty, founded by Jagellon, Grand Duke of Lithuania, who married Hedwig, daughter of Louis of Hungary, in 1385, and succeeded to the throne of Poland as Ladislaus V., became extinct on the death of Sigismund II., in 1572.

JAGEPORE.—(See CUTTACK.)

JAGGERNAUT.—(See JUGGERNATH.)

JAGO DE LA FEGA, or VEGA, ST.—(See SPANISH TOWN.)

JAGO, ST.—(See JAMAICA and SANTIAGO.)

JAICZA (Bosnia).—This important fortress was wrested from the Turks, into whose hands it had fallen, by Matthias, after a siege of three months, in Dec., 1463, and was retaken by the Turks in 1528.

JALULA (Battle).—The Saracens defeated the Persians in this battle, fought in 637.

JAMAICA (West Indies), the largest of the British West Indian islands, was discovered by Columbus, May 3, 1494, and called by him St. Jago, after the patron saint of Spain. Jamaica, the Indian name, signifies the Isle of Springs.

A special commission for the trial of rebel prisoners opens at Kingston.—Jan. 25. The commissioners commence their sittings at Spanish Town.—March 21. The inquiry terminates, the commissioners having held 60 sittings, and examined 730 witnesses.—

A.D.
1866, June. The report of the commission is published.—July 16. Sir J. P. Grant is appointed governor.—Aug. 12. Ex-governor Eyre lands at Southampton.—Aug. 21. He is entertained at a public banquet.

JAMES (Epistle), generally believed to have been written by St. James the Just, son of Alphæus and Bishop of Jerusalem, about 61, was accepted as canonical by the Council of Carthage in 397.

JAMES, CAPE.—(See CAPE COD.)

JAMES THE FIRST, the only child of Lord Darnley and Mary Queen of Scots, born at Edinburgh, June 19, 1566, was proclaimed King of Scotland, under the title of James VI., July 24, 1567, and King of England, March 24, 1603. He married Anne, daughter of Frederick II. of Denmark, in 1590, and they were both crowned at Westminster, July 25, 1603. They had three sons and two daughters; viz., Henry, born Feb. 19, 1593, and died Nov. 6, 1612; Elizabeth, born Aug. 19, 1596, married to the Elector-Palatine Feb. 14, 1613, and died Feb. 13, 1662; Charles (see CHARLES I.), and Robert and Mary, who died in infancy. The queen died March 1, 1619, and James I. died at Theobalds, near Cheshunt, Sunday, March 27, 1625.

JAMES THE SECOND, the second son of Charles I. and Henrietta Maria, born at St. James's, Oct. 15, 1633; ascended the English throne on the death of Charles II., Feb. 6, 1685; and was crowned April 23. Whilst Duke of York he married, first, Anne Hyde, daughter of Lord Clarendon. She died March 31, 1671; and Sep. 30 (N.S.), 1673, James married Mary d'Este, who outlived him, dying May 7, 1718. His family by his first wife consisted of four sons, who died in infancy, and two daughters, Mary (see WILLIAM III. AND MARY) and Anne (q. v.). His second wife bore him five daughters, who died young, and one son, James Francis Edward, or the Chevalier de St. George, known as the Pretender. James II. fled from Whitehall, Dec. 11, 1688. The throne was declared vacant Jan. 28, 1689, and William III. and Mary became king and queen Feb. 13. The latest instrument of his reign entered on the patent rolls is dated Dec. 7, 1688. James II. died at St. Germain's, Sep. 6, 1701, and was buried in the Benedictine monastery at Paris.

JAMES RIVER (N. America), called by the natives Powhatan, was named James River after James I., May 13, 1607. (See CHICKAHOMINY, Battles.)

JAMES, ST. (Order).—The military order of St. James of Compostella, called also the order of St. James of the Sword, was founded in 1170 by Ferdinand II., King of Leon and Castille, in consequence of the obstructions offered by the Moors to pilgrims journeying to the shrine of St. James at Compostella. It received the papal sanction July 5, 1175, and continued under the government of an independent grand master till 1493, when the administration was seized by Ferdinand and Isabella I., and permanently vested in the crown of Spain in 1522. The order undertook to defend the doctrine of the Immaculate Conception in 1652. A branch of this order, admitting all the rules of the original order, excepting that of chastity, was established by Denys, King of Portugal, in 1288. It was confirmed by Pope Innocent VIII. in 1486.——A similar order for ladies was founded in Spain in 1312, to afford food and shelter to pilgrims. The ladies of this order were originally at liberty to marry and quit the institution; but in 1480 they were compelled to adopt the conventual laws of poverty, chastity, and obedience.

JAMES'S (ST.) HALL (London), designed by Owen Jones, consisting of one large hall, 140 feet long, 60 feet wide, and 60 feet high, with two smaller halls, each 60 feet square and 25 feet high, was opened to the public with a concert in aid of the Middlesex Hospital, March 25, 1858.

JAMES'S (ST.) PALACE (London) stands on the site of an hospital for female lepers, founded by Gislebert, Abbot of Westminster, in 1100. Henry VIII. ordered the hospital to be pulled down and a mansion to be erected in 1530. It was finished in 1536. James I. presented it to his son Henry, Prince of Wales, in 1612. Charles I. was kept a prisoner here Dec. 18–22, 1648, and Jan. 27–30, 1649. It was made a royal residence after the destruction of Whitehall Palace by fire, Jan. 4, 1698, and was partly destroyed by a conflagration, Jan. 21, 1809.

JAMES'S (ST.) PARK (London) was first enclosed and drained by Henry VIII. in 1530. Rosamond's Pond was filled up in July, 1770. A great display of fireworks took place in the park Aug. 1, 1814. Two pieces of cannon were placed here as trophies in 1816. Gas-lamps were first introduced into the park in 1822; the "Chinese Bridge" was demolished in 1827; and an iron suspension-bridge was erected in 1857.

JAMES'S (ST.) THEATRE (London) was constructed by Beazley, architect, for John Braham, the celebrated English tenor (born 1777, died Feb. 15, 1856), and opened Dec. 14, 1835.

JAMES TOWN, in Virginia, was founded on the James River in 1607. (See BARBADOES.)

JANE (Queen of England).—Lady Jane Grey was proclaimed queen against her will July 10, 1553, Edward VI. having bestowed the crown upon her by letters patent, June 21, 1553. Her reign commenced July 6, the day on which Edward VI. died, and she relinquished the title July 19. She was condemned to death Nov. 13, 1553, and beheaded Feb. 12, 1554. The earliest public document of her reign that has been discovered is dated July 9, and the latest July 18, 1553.

JANEIRO.—(See RIO JANEIRO.)

JANESVILLE (United States), founded in 1836, was made the chief town of Rock county in 1839, and incorporated in 1853.

JANINA, or JOANNINA (Albania), supposed to occupy the site of the ancient Dodona (q. v.), was taken by the Normans in 1082, and by the Turks in 1431. The Albanians rebelled in 1611. Ali Pasha, the Lion of Janina, made it his capital, and, on being pressed by the Turks, ordered it to be set on fire, when it was almost entirely destroyed. Ali himself, who had retired to the citadel, surrendered on a promise of pardon, in Jan., 1822. An intimation having been given to him that the Sultan intended to put him to death, a desperate contest ensued, in which Ali was slain, Feb. 5, 1822.

JANISSARIES, or JANIZARIES, Turkish infantry, literally "new troops," organized by Sultan Orchan in 1329, remodelled by Amurath I., 1360, and increased to the number of 100,000 in the 17th century. The corps was at first composed of 1,000 Christian children taken from their parents, compelled to embrace the faith of Mohammed, and trained as soldiers. After a time, the Janissaries became masters of the empire; deposed Bajazet II. in 1512; procured the death of Amurath III. in 1595; dethroned and executed Osman II. in 1622; his successor, Mustapha I., in 1623; and strangled Ibrahim in 1649. Mustapha II. was deposed by them in 1703, Achmet III. in 1730, Selim III. in 1807, and Mustapha IV. in 1808. At last, after long and powerful efforts, Sultan Mahmoud II. succeeded in mastering the Janissaries, June 15, 1826, when 15,000 of them were killed in the streets of Constantinople. By an imperial firman of June 16, 1826, the institution of the Janissaries was abolished.

JAN MAYEN (Arctic Sea).—This island was discovered by the Dutch navigator, whose name it bears, in 1611. Scoresby gave the name of Esk to a volcano observed by him in 1817.

JANOWITZ, or JANKOWITZ (Battle).—A Swedish army, commanded by Torstenson, defeated the Imperialists at this place, in Bavaria, March 16, 1645. The latter lost 8,000 men.

JANSENISTS, the followers of Cornelius Jansen, or Jansenius, born in 1585 at the village of Acquoi, near Leerdam, Holland. He was appointed professor of theology at the university of Louvain in 1630, and made Bishop of Ypres in 1636, where he died May 6, 1638, having scarcely finished his famous work "Augustinus," the labour of 22 years. The book was published by Libertus Fromont, at Louvain, in 1640, and created an extraordinary sensation. The Jesuits at once attacked the "Augustinus," which defended the doctrine of free grace; and the book was interdicted by the Inquisition in 1641, and by Urban VIII. in 1642. The Jansenist doctrines prevailed in many parts of France and Holland, and the inmates of Port Royal (q. v.) became celebrated for the ardour with which they took up the cause. The Jansenists grew very numerous, and Clement IX. was compelled to sign a compromise with the party in 1668, commonly called the "Peace of Clement IX." Fresh disturbances arose in France after the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, Oct. 22, 1685, and the Jansenists were excommunicated by the bull (termed Unigenitus) of Clement XI., Sep., 1713. The bull met with great opposition in Holland and France; led to an increase of Jansenism, and the establishment, in Holland, of a religious party called the "Pupils of St. Augustine," presided over, from 1723, by the Archbishop of Utrecht and the Bishops of Haarlem and Deventer. Leo XII. revived the old dispute by excommunicating, in 1825, the newly-elected Archbishop of Utrecht and the Bishop of Deventer. (See ACCEPTANTS and CONVULSIONISTS.)

JANUARIUS, ST.—This order of knighthood, founded in the Two Sicilies by Charles, King of Sicily, afterwards Charles III. of Spain, July 6, 1738, and abolished in 1806, was restored in 1814.

JANUARIUS, ST. (Blood of).—Januarius, Bishop of Benevento, was beheaded at Pozzuoli, in 291 or 305, the wild beasts to which he was at first exposed having refused, according to the chroniclers, to injure so holy a man. His relics were removed to Naples, where a small phial of his blood is said to liquify spontaneously every anniversary of his festival, Sep. 19.

JANUARY, the first month of the year, was introduced into the Roman calendar by Numa, about B.C. 700. By 24 Geo. II. c. 23 (1751), the commencement of the legal year in this country was changed from March 25 to Jan. 1. It was called Wolf-monath by the Anglo-Saxons.

JANUS.—This temple, in ancient Rome, the gates of which were kept open in time of war, and closed in time of peace, is said to have been founded by Romulus. The gates were shut eight times; namely, in the reign of Numa, B.C. 714; soon after the first Punic war, B.C. 235; after the battle of Actium, B.C. 30; after the Cantabrian war, B.C. 25; at the general peace under Augustus, B.C. 5; under Nero in 58; under Vespasian in 71; and under Gordian in 241.

JAPAN (Asia) is called by the inhabitants Nipon, or the Land of the Rising Sun, and by early English travellers Zipangu. According to native annals the first emperor ascended the throne B.C. 660. The country was visited by Marco Polo, who described it under the name of Zipangu in his travels, published in 1298.

A.D.
552. Buddhism is introduced.
749. Gold is discovered.
788. Japan is seized by foreign invaders, who maintain possession for 18 years.
810. The Japanese phonetic alphabet is invented.
1143. Yoritomo, commander-in-chief of the army, obtains the greater share of government with the title of Siogoon or Tycoon, thus dividing with the mikado, or emperor, the chief power.
1284. The Mongol Tartars, under Kublai Khan, invade Japan, when their fleet is dispersed and wrecked by a storm.
1540. The Tycoon Taiko-Sama deprives the mikado of executive power, thus instituting the existing government of Japan by a tycoon or secular emperor, nominally subject to a mikado or spiritual emperor.
1542. Japan is accidentally discovered by the Portuguese De Mota, one of whose ships is cast upon the shore during a storm.
1549. Aug. The Jesuit Xavier lands in Japan
1562. The Prince of Omura is converted to Christianity.
1585. An embassy of Japanese Christians appears before the Pope at Rome.
1587. The Emperor Taiko-Sama prohibits Christianity under pain of death.
1590. The native Christians suffer persecution.
1597. The Christians are again persecuted.
1600, April 12. A Dutch ship, piloted by William Adams, an Englishman, anchors in the harbour of Bungo. They establish a factory at Firando.
1612. A cruel persecution of the Christians commences.
1613. July. The English open communication with Japan. (See JEDDO.)

A.D.
1616. Their commerce is restricted by the native government to the port of Firando.
1622. The Christians are massacred.
1623. The English withdraw from the country.
1635. The Portuguese are only permitted to trade to Decima.
1637. A royal proclamation banishes the Portuguese, and prohibits all intercourse with foreigners.
1638, April 12. 37,000 Christians suffer death.
1640. A Portuguese embassy is imprisoned by the natives, and the members are put to death.
1642. The Portuguese are finally expelled.
1653. The English in vain attempt to open commerce with Japan.
1692—1698. Corea (q. v.) is subject to Japan.
1783, Aug. 1. An earthquake destroys 27 towns and villages and thousands of lives.
1804. The Russians fail in attempts to establish trade.
1811. The Russians are again unsuccessful.
1818. The English fail in an attempt to open trade.
1853, July 8. An American squadron, commanded by Commodore Perry, arrives at Japan with a letter from President Franklin, proposing a treaty of amity and commerce.
1854, March 8. A commercial treaty is concluded with the United States.
1858, Aug. 26. The English secure important privileges by the treaty of Jeddo (q. v.).
1859, July 11. The treaty of Jeddo is ratified.—Aug. 9. Sir Rutherford Alcock, British diplomatic agent in Japan, protests against the outrages committed on Europeans by the Japanese.
1860, Jan. 21. Dankirche, linguist to the British legation, is assassinated by the Japanese.—March 24. The Gotairo, or regent of the empire, is assassinated.
1861, Jan. 14. Mr. Heuskin, secretary to the American legation, is assassinated at Jeddo.—July 5. The Japanese attack the British embassy at Jeddo, and wound several persons.—Aug. 14. Sir R. Alcock obtains for the first time a private and confidential conference with the Japanese foreign ministers.
1862, Jan. 23. A Japanese mission leaves Jeddo.—April 30. It reaches England.—June 25. The British embassy at Jeddo is attacked by the Japanese, and is removed in consequence to Yokohama.—Sep. 14. Mr. Richardson is murdered by the adherents of Prince Satsuma.
1863, June 24. The Japanese ports are declared closed against foreign traders.—July 15-19. The forts at the entrance of Strait Simonoseki having fired upon several European vessels, are bombarded by a united English, French, and American squadron.—Aug. 15 and 16. Kagosima is bombarded by an English squadron under Admiral Kuper, in requital of the murder of Mr. Richardson.—Oct. 26. The government removes restrictions on foreign commerce, but prohibits traders from buying or selling at Yokohama.—Dec. 11. Prince Satsuma pays the indemnity claimed by the English for the murder of Richardson.
1864, April 15. Three Japanese ambassadors, accredited to the French imperial court, arrive at Marseilles.—June 20. Having signed a treaty they leave Paris on their return voyage.—Sep. 7. The batteries of Prince Nagato are destroyed, and a passage is opened through the straits of Simonoseki by the combined English, French, and Dutch fleets.—Nov. 21. Major Baldwin and Lieut. Bird are murdered at Kamakura.—Dec. 28. Execution of the murderer.
1865, April 11. Sir Harry Smith Parkes is appointed to succeed Sir Rutherford Alcock as envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary in Japan.

JAPANNING, or LACQUERING.—This method of embellishing articles by coating them with a particular kind of varnish, was introduced into Europe from Japan; whence the name.

JARNAC (Battle).—The Huguenots were defeated at this town, in France, by Henry of Anjou, afterwards Henry III., March 13, 1569. The Prince of Condé fell in this battle.

JASHER (Book of).—The author and character of this ancient Jewish book, referred to Josh. x. 13, and 2 Sam. i. 18, are unknown; but the title is believed to signify the "book of the upright," and it is supposed to have been a collection of records or poems concerning the Israelitish wars. The name is also given to two Rabbinical works, the first of which was written in 1394 by Shabbatai Carmuz Levita, and the other was published by the Rabbi Tham, in Italy, in 1544, and at Cracow in 1586. An anonymous work, printed at Venice and Prague, in 1625, and translated into German in 1674, contained the historical portion of the Pentateuch and books of Joshua and Judges, and was believed by some to be the work quoted in the Scriptures. A forged book, published in 1751, in England, under the title of "the Book of Jasher," and accompanied by a fictitious attestation by John Wyckliffe, was reprinted at Bristol in 1827, and was again published in 1833.

JASMINE, or JESSAMINE.—The common jasmine was introduced into Great Britain from Circassia before 1548, the Catalonian jasmine from the East Indies in 1629, the yellow Indian jasmine from Madeira in 1656, and the jasmine-flowered chironia from the Cape of Good Hope in 1812.

JASPER.—This gem, the twelfth in the breast-plate of the Jewish high-priest (Exod. xxviii. 20), B.C. 1491, was esteemed by the Greeks and Romans, and is mentioned by Onomacritus, B.C. 500, as the "grass-green jasper, which rejoices the eye of man, and is looked on with pleasure by the immortals." Galen (130—200) recommended the wearing of a jasper hung round the neck, to strengthen the stomach.

JASSY, or YASSY (Moldavia), the ancient Jassiorum Municipium, the capital of the province, founded by the Emperor Trajan, about 105, was conquered by the Turks in 1538, stormed by the Tartars in 1659, and delivered by John Sobieski in 1686. The Russians took it in 1739 and in 1769, but on each occasion restored it to its native princes. A great fire in 1783 destroyed part of Jassy and the castle, built by Trajan. The Austrians occupied it in 1788, and peace was concluded here between Russia and Turkey Jan. 9, 1792. The Russians again occupied it from 1807 to 1812. It revolted in March, 1821, and was sacked by the Janissaries Aug. 10, 1822. Two extensive conflagrations caused much destruction in July, 1821, and Aug., 1827. The Russians occupied it in 1828, and quitted it May 11, 1834.

JAUCOURT (Battle).—Louis III. of France defeated the Northmen at this place, on the Somme, in 881.

JAVA (Indian Archipelago).—This island is spoken of by Marco Polo in 1208, although it had not been visited by that adventurous traveller. Buddhism was introduced about the 10th century, Mohammedanism in the 14th, and the Hindoo ascendancy was overthrown in 1475. The Portuguese succeeded in forming several settlements in 1511. The Dutch made their first appearance in 1595, building a fort on the site of the present city of Batavia in 1612. They founded a church in 1621. At Bantam, in 1619, the English erected a factory, which was one of their first possessions in the East. A landing having been effected Aug. 4, 1811, the island was taken from the Dutch, Aug. 26, by an English force under Sir S. Auchmuty and Gen. Wetherall. It was restored Aug. 13, 1814. Slavery was abolished Sep. 20, 1859.

JEAN D'ACRE, ST.—(See ACRE.)

JEAN DE LUZ, ST. (France).—The marriage of Louis XIV. with Maria Theresa, Infanta of Spain, was celebrated at this frontier town of the south of France in 1660. In Aug., 1813, the French, under Marshal Soult, took up their position in front of this town, and erected strong fortifications. Lord Wellington attacked them Nov. 10, Sir Rowland Hill commanding the British right, and Marshal Beresford the centre. The next morning the French were compelled to retire beyond the Nivelle. During the conflict the English made 1,400 prisoners, and took 51 pieces of cannon and six tumbrils of ammunition.

JEDBURGH (Scotland).—Ecfred, Bishop of Lindisfarne, built two towns at this place in Roxburghshire in 829 and 854, which are now represented by Old Jedburgh and Jedburgh proper. David I. founded an abbey of Austin canons about 1130, which was burned in 1523 by the Earl of Surrey, and in 1544 by the Earl of Hertford. The dispensary was erected in 1807, and the bath houses, &c., in 1822.

JEDDA, JEDDAH, or DJIDDA (Arabia).—This town, the port of Mecca, visited by Bruce in 1796, was taken from the Wahabees by Mehemet Ali in 1812. The Mohammedans attacked the Christian residents June 15, 1858, and murdered upwards of 20, including the English vice-consul and the wife of the French consul. The Cyclops, Capt. Pullen, anchored July 23, and 36 hours were granted for the execution of justice on the perpetrators of the outrage. No satisfaction having been afforded, Capt. Pullen bombarded the town July 25 and 26, when he acceded to the request of the Turkish governor to suspend hostilities until instructions were received from the Porte. The necessary firman arrived from the Sultan Aug. 2, and 11 of the criminals were surrendered and executed.

JEDDO, JEDO, or YEDDO (Japan), the capital of the empire, was visited by a company of Jesuit missionaries from Goa, led by Francis Xavier, in 1549. Capt. Saris, of the Clove, bearing a letter and presents from James I., was received at the court in July, 1613. In 1818 the captain of an English brig was compelled to leave without receiving a cargo; and an American ship was fired upon from the shore in 1831. A convention and revised tariff were concluded here between the governments of Japan, Great Britain, France, Holland, and the United States, June 25, 1866. (See JAPAN.)

JEDDO (Treaty) was negotiated by Lord Elgin, signed at Jeddo Aug. 26, 1858, and ratified July 11, 1859. By this treaty the ports of Hakodadi, Kanagawa, and Nagasaki were to be opened to British subjects on and from July 1, 1859; Nee-a-gata on and from Jan. 1, 1860; and Hiogo on and from Jan. 1, 1863. For purposes of trade it was also stipulated that British subjects should be allowed to reside at Jeddo after Jan. 1, 1862, and at Osaca after Jan. 1, 1863.

JEFFERSON (Battle).—The Federals defeated the cavalry of Gen. Stuart at this village of Virginia, Nov. 7, 1862.

JEFFREYS' CAMPAIGN.—(See BLOODY ASSIZES.)

JEKATERINOSLAV.—(See EKATERINOSLAV.)

JELALABAD (Affghanistan) was taken by the British in 1839. Sir Robert Sale, with a few hundred troops, defended it against a numerous Affghan force from Nov., 1841, to April, 1842. The fortifications were destroyed, by order of Gen. Pollock, in 1842.

JELUM, or JHELUM.—(See BUCEPHALA and HYDASPES.)

JEMALIS.—(See DERVISH.)

JEMAULABAD (Hindostan), formerly called Narasingha Augady, a town containing a fortress of great natural strength, built by Tippoo Saib, was taken by the English in 1797.

JEMMAPES (Battle).—Dumouriez, at the head of a French army, defeated the Austrians in a warmly contested battle at this village, near Mons, in Belgium, Nov. 6, 1792.

JENA (Battle).—Napoleon I. defeated the Prussian army of Prince Hohenlohe and Gen. Ruchel at this town of Saxe-Weimar, Oct. 14, 1806. The casualties were severe on both sides, the Prussians having lost nearly 10,000 men, and the French 6,500. The fugitives from this battle, and from the field of Auerstadt (q. v.), fought the same day, to the number of 6,000 men, threw themselves into Erfurt (q.v.), where they were captured, together with 8,000 men, consisting of the wounded and the garrison of the place, Oct. 15.

JENA (Germany).—This town, in the duchy of Saxe-Weimar, is celebrated for its university, founded in 1547 by the Elector John Frederick of Saxony, and opened Feb. 2, 1558. Fichte founded a new school of philosophy here in 1794. Jena was the capital of the duchy of Saxe-Jena from 1672 to 1690, and of the duchy of Saxe-Eisenach from 1690 to 1741.

JENNERIAN INSTITUTION (London), founded in 1803, was merged in the National Vaccine Establishment, founded in 1808.

JEREMIAH.—This prophetical book of the Old Testament was written by Jeremiah, "the son of Hilkiah, of the priests that were in Anathoth," about B.C. 627.

JERGEAUX (Battle).—The French, led by Joan of Arc, wrested this town from the Earl of Suffolk, who was taken prisoner, June 12, 1429.

JERICHO (Palestine), the first city which fell into the hands of the Israelites on their entrance into the Holy Land, was taken by Joshua (vi. 20) B.C. 1451. Jericho was rebuilt by Hiel, the Bethelite (1 Kings xvi. 34), about B.C. 918. Vespasian retook it in 68. Henry VIII. is said to have had a retreat called Jericho, at Blackmore, near Chelmsford. Hence the origin of the term "gone to Jericho."

JERSEY (English Channel), originally called Stugia, taken by the Normans about 850, was united to the crown of England by William I. in 1066. King John visited it in 1205. Mont Orgueil Castle, seized by the French in 1461, was retaken by the English in 1467. Jersey was taken by the Parliamentarians in Dec., 1651. A French force seized it Jan. 4, 1781, and were made prisoners of war Jan. 6. Queen Victoria visited Jersey in 1846, and the Victoria College, St. Helier's, founded in honour of the visit, was opened Sep. 29, 1852.

JERUSALEM (Latin Kingdom). — This kingdom was founded by the Crusaders at the close of the first Crusade. Godfrey of Bouillon was elected the first king, July 23, 1099. In 1104 Baldwin I. effected the conquest of Acre. He took Sidon, with the assistance of Sivard, Prince of Norway, in 1115; and in July, 1124, Tyre submitted to his arms. Saladin defeated the Latins at the great battle of Tiberias (q. v.), and recaptured Jerusalem in Oct., 1187. Conrad de Montserrat, who claimed the kingdom on his marriage with Isabella, daughter of Almeric, in 1190, was assassinated in 1192, during the preparations for his coronation, and the succession devolved upon Henry of Champagne. On the death of Almeric of Lusignan, in 1206, Mary, daughter of Conrad and Isabella, was the nearest heir, and she was accordingly married to John of Brienne, who assumed the sovereignty in 1206. In 1229 he was compelled to abdicate by Frederick II. of Germany. Jerusalem was taken by the Mameluke sultan Bibars in 1260, and the last remnant of the kingdom was absorbed in 1291.

JERUSALEM, or HIEROSOLYMA (Palestine), probably identical with Salem, a city of Sechem, of which Melchizedek was king and priest (Gen. xiv. 18), B.C. 1913. The name Jerusalem is first mentioned Josh. x. 1. The city was not finally wrested from the Canaanites till B.C. 1049, when David made it the capital of his kingdom, and called it the "City of David." Councils were held here between 49 and 51, in 335, 349, 399, Aug. 1, 415; Aug. 6, 518; Sep. 19, 536; in 553, 766 or 767, 879, 1107, 1112, and 1143. (See SOLOMON'S TEMPLE.)

B.C.
1011. Solomon commences the temple (1 Kings vi. 1).
1004. Completion and dedication of the temple (1 Kings vi. 38, and viii.).

610 or 608. It is taken by Pharaoh Necho, King of Egypt, after the battle of Megiddo (2 Kings xxiii. 29, 30).
606. Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon, takes Jerusalem (2 Kings xxiv. 1—7).
598. Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon, takes Jerusalem, and plunders the temple, carrying away the sacred vessels, together with the king and several thousands of his subjects (2 Kings xxiv. 10—16).
588. Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon, besieges Jerusalem, but raises the siege on the approach of the army of Pharaoh, King of Egypt.
586. The Chaldean army renews its attack on the city, and carries it by storm. Zedekiah, who takes to flight, is pursued, and captured; his two sons are slain, and his own eyes put out. The temple, after having been pillaged, is burned to the ground; the whole city is destroyed, and the people are carried captive to Babylon (2 Kings xxv. 1—7).
536. Cyrus issues a proclamation for the return of the captive Jews (Ezra i. and ii.).
535. The second temple is founded (Ezra iii. 8—13).
522. The rebuilding of the city and temple is stopped by Artaxerxes or Smerdis, King of Persia (Ezra iv. 7—24).
516. The second temple is finished (Ezra vi. 15).
515. The second temple is dedicated (Ezra vi. 16—22).
445. Nehemiah rebuilds the walls of Jerusalem (Neh. ii. 1—11).
332. It is visited by Alexander III. (the Great). (See JEWS.)
320. Ptolemy (I.) Soter captures Jerusalem.
302. Jerusalem is annexed, by treaty, to Egypt.
170. The walls of the city are razed by Antiochus Epiphanes, who massacres 40,000 of the inhabitants, and sets up a statue of Jupiter in the temple. From this period the daily sacrifice is discontinued.
168. Apollonius, general of Antiochus, takes Jerusalem, fortifies the city of David, and dedicates the temple to Jupiter Olympius.
63. It is taken by Pompey; and the Jews pass under the dominion of the Romans.
54. Crassus plunders the temple, to obtain treasure for the Parthian war.
44. The walls are rebuilt by Antipater, father of Herod the Great.
37. The Romans, under Herod and Sosius, take Jerusalem, and massacre the inhabitants.

A.D.
70, Sep. 8. It is taken by the Romans, under Titus, the temple and city being razed to the ground. During the siege 1,100,000 Jews perished, and 97,000 were carried into captivity.
130. The Emperor Hadrian rebuilds the city, when it receives the name of Ælia Capitolina.
335. The church of the Holy Sepulchre is founded by Constantine I.
451. It is made a patriarchate.
614. The Persians, under Chosroes II., take the city.

1832. It is rendered subject to the Pasha of Egypt.
1841. It passes under the protection of the Turkish Government.—Nov. 7. The Rev. M. S. Alexander is consecrated Bishop of England and Ireland in Jerusalem, by the Archbishop of Canterbury. The queen, by licence, assigns to his jurisdiction Syria, Chaldæa, Egypt, and Abyssinia; and the new bishopric is placed under the protection of England and Prussia.
1862, Sep. 5. A convention is signed at Constantinople by representatives of Russia, France, and Turkey, for the preservation of the Holy Sepulchre.

JESSAMINE.—(See JASMINE.)
JESSEANS.—(See CHRISTIANITY.)

JESTER, or FOOL.—The fool, according to Nares, was the inmate of every opulent house; but the rural jester or clown seems to have been peculiar to the country families. The clown in Shakspeare is generally taken for a licensed jester or domestic fool. The king's jester or fool was a member of the English court at a very early period. Douce remarks: "With respect to the antiquity of this custom in our own country, there is reason to suppose that it existed even during the period of Saxon history; but we are quite certain of the fact in the reign of William the Conqueror. An almost contemporary historian, Maitre Wace, has left us a curious account of the preservation of William's life, when he was only Duke of Normandy, by his fool Eoles. Mention is made in Domesday Book of 'Berdic joculator regis.'" The allowance of cloth and a list of the articles of clothing allowed to William, Henry the Fifth's fool, is given in Rymer's "Fœdera." In 1652 the king's fool is described as wearing a long coat and a gold chain. Douce considers it probable that Muckle John, the fool of Charles I. and the successor of Archie Armstrong, was the last regular personage of the kind. The Lord Mayor's state fool was compelled on Lord Mayor's day to leap, clothes and all, into a large bowl of custard. The patent of creation of the Order of Fools (q. v.), dated Clèves, Nov. 12, 1381, is still in existence. The custom also existed on the other side of the Atlantic, as the Peruvian and Mexican monarchs had their jesters. The Spanish conquerors had this officer in their train. Prescott speaks of Velasquez's jester as "a mad fellow, his jester, one of those crack-brained wits—half wit, half fool—who formed in those days a common appendage to every great man's establishment."

JESUIT'S BARK.—(See PERUVIAN BARK.)

JESUITS, or SOCIETY OF JESUS, founded by Ignatius Loyola, at the chapel of St. Mary, Montmartre, Paris, Aug. 16, 1534, and confirmed by a bull of Paul III., Sep. 27, 1540, was made independent of all civil and ecclesiastical supervision by a bull dated Oct. 18, 1548. Jesuit colleges were established in Portugal in 1540, at Antwerp and at Louvain in 1552; and Ignatius Loyola died July 31, 1556. The Jesuits received permission to settle in France, Sep. 15, 1561; were banished from France, Jan. 8, 1595; and were allowed to return, Jan. 2, 1604. A decree banishing the Jesuits from England was issued Nov. 15, 1602. The secret instructions were first printed at Cracow in 1612. The university of Tyrnau, Austria, the first high school of the Jesuits, was opened Nov. 13, 1635. They were expelled from Venice in 1606, and permitted to return in 1656. A French edict was issued against the Jesuits Sep. 2, 1716; they were banished from Portugal Sep. 3, 1759; from Brazil in 1760; again from France in 1764; and from Spain in 1767. The Jesuit seminaries at Rome were dissolved Sep. 17, 1772, and the order was put down by a bull of Clement XIV., July 21, 1773. They were expelled from Austria, Oct. 1, 1773. The Jesuits were re-organized in Parma in 1799, in Lithuania and White Russia in 1801, in Sicily in 1804, and were completely restored by a bull issued by Pius VII., Aug. 7, 1814; and a decree for their admission into Spain was issued May 29, 1815. They were expelled from Russia, March 25, 1820, and from Switzerland Oct. 1, 1847. (See ASSASSINATION.)

JESUS COLLEGE (Cambridge) was founded in 1496, by John Alcock, Bishop of Ely. The building previous to that time had been used for the nunnery of St. Radegund, founded by Malcolm IV. (1153—65) of Scotland.

JESUS COLLEGE (Oxford).—Queen Elizabeth, on the petition of Hugh ap Rice, or Price, granted a charter of foundation for this college, June 27, 1571. The inner quadrangle was completed in 1676. James I. granted the college a new charter in 1622.

JET, the gagates of Theophrastus (B.C. 370—287) and Pliny (23—Aug. 24, 79), was anciently obtained from the Syrian river Gagus.

JEUNESSE DORÉE, or GILDED YOUTH —This party, chiefly composed of the middle and richer classes, and distinguished by a peculiar dress called the "costume à la victime," was formed in France in 1794, and was protected by Fréron. The members opposed the Jacobins, whom they expelled from their place of meeting, Nov. 8.

JEWELLERY, or the setting of precious stones, is an art of very ancient origin.

JEWISH ÆRA.—The Jews date from the creation of the world, which they consider to have occurred 3,760 years and three months before the commencement of the Christian æra. According to some authorities, they used the æra of the Seleucidæ after they became subject to the kings of Syria, and only abandoned it in the 15th century.

JEWISH DISABILITIES BILL. — Mr. Robert Grant's bill for releasing the Jews from civil disabilities was rejected by the Lords Aug. 1, 1833; another, introduced by Lord John Russell, after passing the Commons May 4, 1848, was rejected in the Upper House May 25. A third, which received the sanction of the Lower House July 3, 1851, was thrown out by the Lords, July 17. A similar bill passed the Commons April 15, 1853, and was again rejected April 29; and after having been again approved by the Commons, was defeated by the Lords July 10, 1857. By 21 & 22 Vict. c. 49 (July 23, 1858), the House of Commons was empowered to modify the oaths in such a manner that they might be taken by Jews; and by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 63 (Aug. 6, 1860), the words "upon the faith of a Christian" were expunged permanently in the case of Jewish members.

JEWS. — Strictly speaking, this term can only be applied to the subjects of the kings of Judah after the separation of the ten tribes; but in its usual acceptation it refers to the whole race of Abraham.

JEWS'-HARP, or JEWS'-TRUMP. — This musical instrument, deriving its name from a corruption of the French jeu trompe, toy-trumpet, is mentioned in a rare black-letter book, called "Newes from Scotland," in 1591, where it is related that one Geilles Duncan, a servant-girl celebrated for her performance upon this instrument, played before King James VI. of Scotland. Prätorius, in his "Organographia," published in 1619, refers to it under the name of Crembalum. M. Eulenstein excited considerable interest by performing on 16 of these instruments at the Royal Institution, and various public concerts. Fools used to play upon the Jews'-harp, to amuse the guests at taverns. It is also called Jaws'-harp, which Douce maintains to be its proper name, because played upon between the jaws.

JHANSI (Hindostan). — This province became connected by treaty with the East India Company in 1804, was made a tributary province in 1817, and was ceded to the British Government in 1854.

JHELUM.—(See BUCEPHALA and HYDASPES.)

JICIN.—(See GITSCHIN.)

JIONPORE, or JOANPORE (Hindostan), the chief town of a district bearing the same name, which came into possession of the British in 1775. The fort is of great strength, and was built in 1370 by the Sultan of Delhi. On the capture of Delhi by Tamerlane in 1398, Jionpore passed from under the royal sway, but was again annexed to the empire in 1478. In 1570, having become much dilapidated, the fort was put into a state of thorough repair by the governor of Bengal.

JOACHIMITES. — This heretical sect, founded by Joachim, Abbot of Fiore, in Calabria, was condemned by the Lateran Council in 1215, and by the Council of Arles in 1260, or 1261. The Joachimites were a branch of the Fraticelli, or Spiritualists.

JOACHIM, ST. (Order of).—This equestrian order of Franconia was founded in 1755, by an association of younger members of the German aristocracy. It was originally named the "Order of Defenders of the Honour of Divine Providence," and received its present title in 1785. Lord Nelson was made a member April 3, 1802.

JOAN OF ARC, or JEANNE D'ARC.—(See ORLEANS.)

JOAN SANDERSON. — (See CUSHION DANCE.)

JOANNINA.—(See JANINA.)

JOANNITES, or JOHANNITES, followers of John Chrysostom (347—Sep. 14, 407), who was consecrated Archbishop of Constantinople, Feb. 26, 398. Having, by his vigorous repression of clerical luxury and immorality, provoked powerful opposition, Theophilus, Patriarch of Alexandria, procured his deposition by the Council ad Quercum, or Synod at the Oak, a villa near Chalcedon, in June, 403. Having resumed his see under the imperial authority, he was again deposed by the Council of Constantinople in 404, and compelled to seek refuge in flight, when his adherents were treated with great severity by the victorious faction. His followers continued a distinct body till about 438.

JOB (Book of). —This, perhaps the most ancient book in existence, was written (Smith's "Dictionary of the Bible," i. 1099) "many years after the death of Job, before the promulgation of the Law, by one speaking the Hebrew language, and thoroughly conversant with the traditions preserved in the family of Abraham."

JOCKEY CLUB. — This corporate racing body, instituted at Newmarket during the reign of George II. (1727—1760), was first officially noticed in "Heber's Racing Calendar," for 1758. Its decisions in disputed cases, first published in 1808, have been continued in the "Racing Calendar" ever since. New rules were enacted in 1828 and 1858.

JOEL.—This prophetical book of the Old Testament was written by Joel, the son of Pethuel, about B.C. 877—847. Commentaries were published by Edward Pocock in 1691, and by Samuel Chandler in 1735.

JOHANNISBERG (Battle). — The French, under the Prince de Soubise, defeated the hereditary Prince of Brunswick at this place, in Nassau, celebrated for its wine, near Friedberg, Bavaria, Aug. 30, 1762.

JOHN, the youngest child and the fifth son of Henry II. and Eleanor of Aquitaine, born at Oxford Dec. 24, 1166, was crowned King of England at Westminster May 27 (Ascension-day), 1199. He divorced his wife Isabel, the Earl of Gloucester's daughter, in order to marry Isabel of Angoulême, who was crowned at Westminster, Oct. 8, 1200. By his second wife he had two sons and three daughters, namely, Henry (see HENRY III.), and Richard, Duke of Cornwall, who was born in 1209, and died in 1271. His daughters were Joan, married to Alexander II. of Scotland; Eleanora, to the Earl of Pembroke, and afterwards to Simon of Montfort; and Isabel, to the Emperor Frederick II. John died at Newark Oct. 19, 1216, and was buried at Worcester. He was surnamed Lackland.

JOHN O'GROAT'S HOUSE, or DUNGANSBY HEAD, the north-eastern extremity of Scotland, was founded, according to tradition, in the reign of James IV. (1488—1513), by John Groat, who settled a question of precedency among the eight families into which his relations were divided, by erecting an eight-sided house, with a door and window on each side, and a table of eight sides within, so that the head of each family might enter by his own door, and occupy his own head of the table. In 1741 Malcolm Groat sold the house, of which only a small green mound now remains.

JOHN, ST.—The Royal Prussian Order of St. John was founded in 1812.

JOHN, ST. (Epistles).—The first epistle was written from Ephesus in 68 or 69. The second and third, addressed respectively to "the Elect Lady" and to "Gaius," were probably written soon after.

JOHN, ST. (Gospel), was written at Ephesus by St. John about 97 or 98, though a writer in "Smith's Dictionary of the Bible" (i. 1112) places it as early as "about 78." (See ALOGIANS.)

JOHN, ST. (Knights).—(See HOSPITALLERS.)

JOHN'S, ST. (Antigua), the capital, was connected with a small island on which the lunatic asylum is situated, by a causeway completed in 1846. The cathedral and savings-bank were erected in 1847.

JOHN'S, ST. (Newfoundland), the chief town of the island, was fortified by Queen Elizabeth in 1583, when she formally claimed its sovereignty. The French were repulsed in attacks upon St. John's in 1705 and in 1708, and obtained possession June 24, 1762. The garrison capitulated to an English force Sep. 18, 1762. The town suffered considerably from fires in 1815, 1817, 1818, and June 9, 1846. On the last-mentioned occasion it was almost entirely destroyed.

JOHN'S (ST.) COLLEGE (Cambridge) was founded in 1511, on the site of the Priory, styled the Hospital of St. John the Evangelist, dissolved in 1510, in pursuance of the will of Margaret, Countess of Richmond, who died in 1509.

JOHN'S (ST.) COLLEGE (Oxford).—King Henry VIII. granted St. Bernard's College, an educational establishment of the Cistercians, founded in the time of Henry VI., to Christ Church, Oxford; and Sir Thomas White, a Muscovy merchant, twice lord mayor of London, purchased it in 1555, and founded St. John's College, March 5, 1557. Archbishop Laud added a second quadrangle, commenced in 1631 and completed in 1635, from a design by Inigo Jones.

JOHNSON CLUB (London). — (See CLUB, THE.)

JOHNSTON, or ST. JOHN'S TOWN (Battle). —Aymer de Valence defeated Bruce, who had incited the Scottish people to rebel against England, at this place, in Scotland, July 22, 1306.

JOHORE (Malacca), the capital of an independent state of the same name, was founded by some refugees from Malacca, when it was captured by the Portuguese in 1511. The new principality was conquered by the Portuguese in 1608, and it passed into the power of the Sultan of Acheen in 1613.

JOINERS were incorporated in 1569.

JOINT-STOCK BANKS.—By 7 Geo. IV. c. 46 (May 26, 1826), copartnerships of more than six were permitted to carry on business as bankers in England, 65 miles from London, provided they had no establishment in the metropolis. By 7 & 8 Vict. c. 113 (Sep. 5, 1844), no joint-stock bank was allowed to transact business except under letters patent. This act, amended by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 100 (July 29, 1856), was repealed and superseded by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 49 (Aug. 17, 1857). Joint-stock banking companies, on the principle of limited liability, were sanctioned by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 91 (Aug. 2, 1858).

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES ACTS.—The registration, incorporation, and general management of joint-stock companies were regulated by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110 (Sep. 5, 1844), which was amended by 10 & 11 Vict. c. 78 (July 22, 1847). The Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 16 (May 8, 1845), united into one act certain provisions usually inserted in acts with respect to the constitution of joint-stock companies. The dissolution and winding up of the affairs of companies were facilitated by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 45 (Aug. 14, 1848), which was amended by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 108 (Aug. 1, 1849). The Limited Liability Act, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 133 (Aug. 14, 1855), enabled all joint-stock companies with a capital divided into shares of not less than £10 each, to obtain a certificate of complete registration with limited liability upon certain stated conditions. The laws relating to all joint-stock companies, except those formed for purposes of banking and insurance, were consolidated and amended by the Joint-Stock Companies Act, 19 & 20 Vict. c. 47 (July 14, 1856), which was again amended by 20 and 21 Vict. c. 14 (July 13, 1857), and by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 60 (July 23, 1858). The incorporation, winding up, &c., of trading companies, is regulated by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 89 (Aug. 7, 1862), which came into operation Nov. 2, 1862. A convention, relative to joint-stock companies, between Queen Victoria and the Emperor Napoleon III., was signed at Paris, April 30, and ratifications were exchanged May 15, 1862.

JOLIBA.—(See NIGER.)

JONAH.—This prophecy of the Old Testament, written by Jonah, son of Amittai, according to some authorities about B.C. 825, relates the mission of the prophet to the impious inhabitants of Nineveh, and their consequent repentance and deliverance from the dangers with which he had threatened them. According to Smith's "Dictionary of the Bible" (i. 1119), "the King of Nineveh at this time is supposed (Usher and others) to have been Pul, who is placed by Layard (Nin. and Bab., 624), B.C. 750; but an earlier king, Adrammelech II., B.C. 840, is regarded as more probable by Drake. The English Bible gives B.C. 862." Rawlinson ("The Five Great Monarchies of the Ancient Eastern World," ii. 390, note) assigns it to about B.C. 760—750.

JONESBOROUGH.—(See ATLANTA.)

JONKÖPING (Treaty) was concluded between Sweden and Denmark, at this town, in Sweden, Dec. 10, 1809.

JOPPA.—(See JAFFA.)

JOSHUA.—This historical book of the Old Testament, written by Joshua, originally Oshea, or Hoshea (Num. xiii. 16), before B.C. 1443, relates the conquest and occupation of Canaan by the Israelites under that leader. A Samaritan Book of Joshua, in the Arabic language, was printed at Leyden in 1848.

JOTAPATA (Galilee). — Flavius Josephus (38—100) the historian, at that time Governor of Galilee, defended this city, the site of which is occupied by Arbil, against Vespasian, for 47 days, in 67. The city was captured and razed to the ground.

JOURNAL DES SAVANTS.—This celebrated French review, established by Denis de Sallo, Jan. 5, 1665, was suspended in 1792. It was re-established in 1797; again suspended in 1802; and resuscitated, with an annual subsidy of 25,000 francs, by Louis XVIII. in 1816.

JOURNALS OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS. —The official record of the proceedings of this department of the legislative body commenced Nov. 8, 1547. They were not kept with any degree of regularity until 1607.

JOURNALS OF THE HOUSE OF LORDS. —The record of the business in the House of Lords, commenced in 1509, was first ordered to be printed in 1767.

JOUSTS.—(See TOURNAMENTS.)

JUANA.—(See CUBA.)

JUAN FERNANDEZ, or MAS-A-TIERRA (Pacific).—This island was discovered by Juan Fernandez, a Spanish navigator, in 1567. Alexander Selkirk having quarrelled with his captain in a buccaneering expedition, was set on shore here in Sep., 1704, remained in solitude four years and four months, and was rescued by an English vessel in Feb., 1709. He arrived in England in 1711, and an account of his extraordinary adventures is said to have given Daniel Defoe the idea of the story of "Robinson Crusoe," of which the first edition appeared in two volumes in 1719. In 1750 the Spaniards formed a colony, which was soon afterwards destroyed by an earthquake.

JUBILEE.—The Jews celebrated a jubilee every 50 years (Lev. xxv. 8), B.C. 1490. A jubilee once a century, for granting plenary indulgences, was first established by Boniface VIII., in 1300. Clement VI., in 1350, reduced the period of the jubilee to 50 years; Urban VI., in 1389, appointed it to be held every 35 years; and Sixtus IV., in 1475, reduced the term to 25 years. It has been observed with great regularity by the popes. The centenary of the Reformation was celebrated in Germany by a Protestant jubilee in 1617. The Shakspeare Jubilee was held at Stratford-upon-Avon, Sep. 6, 1769. A jubilee was celebrated in England at the commencement of the 50th year of George the Third's reign, Oct. 25, 1809. The close of the revolutionary war was celebrated in England by a jubilee, Aug. 1, 1814.

JUDAH.—On the revolt of the ten tribes (1 Kings xii. 1—19), B.C. 975, the Jewish territory was divided into the kingdoms of Israel (q. v.) and Judah. The kingdom of Judah lasted from B.C. 975 to B.C. 606. (See JEWS.)

B.C.
975. Rehoboam, King of Judah.
972 or 970. Shishak, King of Egypt, invades Judah and plunders Jerusalem (1 Kings xiv. 25).
957. Abijah defeats Jeroboam I., King of Israel.
951. Asa abolishes idolatry (1 Kings xv. 12).
941. Asa defeats Zerah the Ethiopian (2 Chron. xiv. 9—12). He induces the people to enter into a covenant with God (2 Chron. xv. 12).
940. Asa obtains the aid of Benhadad, King of Syria, against Baasha (1 Kings xv. 16—20).
912. Jehoshaphat sends princes and Levites through all the cities of Judah, to teach his subjects the law of the Lord (2 Chron. xvii. 7—9).
897. Jehoshaphat joins Ahab against the Syrians.
896. Jehoshaphat defeats a combined army of Ammonites, Moabites, and Syrians (2 Chron. xx. 22).
892. Jehoram, or Joram, on succeeding his father Jehoshaphat, slays "all his brethren with the sword," and does that which is "evil in the sight of the Lord" (2 Chron. xxi. 4—6).
887. Judah is pillaged by the Philistines and Arabians, who plunder the king's house and slay all his sons except Jehoahaz, or Ahaziah, the youngest (2 Chron. xxi. 16, 17).
884. Ahaziah, smitten at Gur by Jehu, King of Israel, flees to Megiddo, where he dies (2 Kings ix. 28). His mother, Athaliah, usurps the throne, and destroys all the seed royal except Jehoash or Joash, son of the late king, who is preserved by his aunt Jehosheba (2 Kings xi. 1—3).
878. Athaliah is slain at Jerusalem by order of Jehoiada the priest, who raises Jehoash to the throne of his father (2 Kings xi. 20, 21).
856. Jehoash gives orders for the repairs of the temple (2 Kings xii. 4).
850. Death of the high-priest Jehoiada, aged 130 years. "They buried him in the city of David among the kings, because he had done good in Israel, both toward God, and toward his house" (2 Chron. xxiv. 15, 16).
840. Jehoash having lapsed into idolatry, and slain Zechariah, son of Jehoiada, is defeated by Hazael, King of Syria, and is assassinated by his own servants (2 Chron. xxiv. 17—26).
827. Amaziah invades the Edomites, and slays 10,000 in Mount Seir (2 Kings xiv. 7).
826. Amaziah is defeated and made prisoner by Jehoash, King of Israel, at Beth-shemesh (2 Kings xiv. 8—14).
765. Azariah or Uzziah becomes a leper (2 Kings xv. 5).
758. Isaiah begins to prophesy.
742. Pekah, King of Israel, and Rezin, King of Syria, invade Judah (2 Kings xvi. 5).
741. Pekah ravages Judah (2 Chron. xxviii. 6).
730 (about). Ahaz submits to Tiglath-Pileser II., King of Assyria, who slays Rezin (2 Kings xvi. 7—9).
726. Hezekiah effects a reformation.
713. Sennacherib invades Judah for the first time (2 Kings xviii. 13). Rawlinson (Anct. Monarchies ii. 437) places this invasion B.C. 700.
713. Ambassadors from Berodach-Baladan, King of Babylon, arrive in Judah (2 Kings xx. 12—15).
710. Sennacherib invades Judah for the second time. By divine interposition 185,000 of his soldiers perish in one night, and the invaders retire (2 Kings xviii. 17, &c.). Rawlinson (Anct. Monarchies ii. 439) assigns B.C. 698 as the probable date of this invasion.
698. Manasseh restores idolatry, profanes the temple, and makes his children pass through the fire to Moloch (2 Kings xxi. 1—9).
678. Esar-haddon, King of Assyria, places different nations in Samaria, and expels the Israelites (2 Kings xvii. 24).
677. Manasseh is taken prisoner, and carried to Babylon, by Esar-haddon (2 Chron. xxxiii. 11).
655. Holofernes, chief captain of Nabuchodonosor, King of Nineveh, is slain at Bethulia, by Judith. No authentic records mention this sovereign, and the history is regarded as fictitious. (See JUDITH, BOOK OF.)

B.C.
644. Josiah effects a reformation in religion (2 Kings xxi. 26, and xxii.).
623. Josiah celebrates a solemn passover (2 Kings xxiii. 21).
610. Josiah, slain at Megiddo by Pharaoh Necho, King of Egypt (2 Kings xxiii. 29), is succeeded by his son Jehoahaz. After reigning three months he is imprisoned at Riblah by Pharaoh, who exacts a tribute of 100 talents of silver and one talent of gold, and makes Eliakim, son of Josiah, king, under the name of Jehoiachim (2 Kings xxiii. 31—34). Rawlinson (Anct. Monarchies iii. 486) assigns these events to B.C. 608.
609. Jeremiah predicts the captivity of the Jews, and the destruction of Jerusalem.
607. Jeremiah predicts the 70 years' captivity. First reading of the Roll.
605. Jehoiachim burns the roll of Jeremiah (Jer. xxxvi. 23). Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon, takes Jerusalem and carries off several of the Jews into captivity in Babylon (2 Kings xxiv. and xxv.). Second reading of the Roll.
598. Nebuchadnezzar suppresses an insurrection in Judah, and carries King Jehoiachin and more captives into Babylon (2 Kings xxiv. 10, 16).
597. Duration of the captivity and the restoration predicted.
588. Zedekiah rebels against Nebuchadnezzar, who invades Judah, and lays siege to Jerusalem.
586. He takes Jerusalem (q. v.) and puts out the eyes of Zedekiah, whom he keeps in captivity at Babylon till his death (2 Kings xxv. 1—7).

JUDAIZERS, or JUDAIZING CHRISTIANS.—Persons who during the 1st century sought to impose upon the Christian converts the yoke of the Jewish observances, or who attempted to sanction by Jewish example the practice of Oriental licentiousness, were called Judaizers. Several sects repeated these errors. (See CERINTHIANS, EBIONITES, and NAZARENES.)

JUDE.—This epistle was written by Jude, the brother of James, and, according to many of the Fathers, son of Joseph, the husband of the Virgin Mary, about 66. Lardner places it between 64 and 66, Davidson before 70, and Credner in 80. It was first mentioned in the Muratorian Fragment, about 170, and was accepted as authentic by the Council of Carthage in 397.

JUDENBURG.—An armistice for six days was signed at this place, the ancient Idunum, between the French and the Austrians, April 7, 1797. The preliminaries of peace were signed at Leoben April 18, and this led to the treaty of Campo-Formio, concluded Oct. 17.

JUDGES were appointed by God to rule over the people of Israel (Judges ii. 16) B.C. 1405. Joshua and the elders ruled from B.C. 1451 to B.C. 1095. The government by judges lasted from B.C. 1405 to B.C. 1095; or, according to Hales, from B.C. 1564 to B.C. 1110.

JUDGES (Book of).—This book of the Old Testament is generally supposed to have been written by Samuel, before B.C. 1060, though some authorities make it as late as B.C. 562.

JUDGMENT CAP.—(See BLACK CAP.)

JUDICIAL ASTROLOGY is "so called (N. & Q. 3rd S. vii. 497) because its professors deliver judgments, or opinions, as to what in their judgment the events will be which will follow certain configurations of the heavenly bodies: opinions based on the past experience of ages."

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL, composed of the Lord President, the Lord Chancellor, and such members of the Privy Council as from time to time hold certain high judicial offices, was instituted by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 41 (Aug. 14, 1833). It is a court of appeal in ecclesiastical and maritime causes. (See DELEGATES and ESSAYS AND REVIEWS.)

JUDITH.—This book of the Apocrypha, relating the deliverance of Bethulia from Holofernes, chief captain of Nabuchodonosor, King of Nineveh, by Judith, about B.C. 655, was written between B.C. 175 and B.C. 100, probably B.C. 170, when Antiochus Epiphanes attacked the Temple. Other authorities refer it to the period of Demetrius II., B.C. 129, or of the war of Alexander Jannæus, B.C. 105–4.

JUGGERNATH, or the "Lord of the World," the name of a celebrated temple at Jaggernaut, Jaggernaut Puri, Puri, or Juggernath, in the province of Cuttack, India, completed in 1198. It came into the possession of the British in 1803. A pilgrim-tax, instituted by Sir George Barlow, in 1806, was repealed by Lord Auckland in 1839. The allowance made by the East India Company to the temple was discontinued in June, 1851.

JUGGLERS, adepts in the art of juggling, existed as early as B.C. 1491, when Pharaoh's magicians imitated the miracles performed by Aaron (Exod. vii.). The Chinese and the Aztecs took great delight in witnessing the performances of jugglers. The practice of the art was attended with considerable danger in former times. A horse which had been taught to perform a number of tricks was condemned to the flames and actually burned at Lisbon in 1601. In 1739 a juggler in Poland, tortured until he confessed that he was a sorcerer, was hanged.

JUGURTHINE WAR was waged by the Roman republic against Jugurtha, King of Numidia, B.C. 111. The Consul Calphurnius, in the first year of the war, concluded a peace with Jugurtha, on condition that he should submit to Rome. It was not observed, and Aulus having been defeated, B.C. 109, entered into a treaty which the Roman Government disavowed. The struggle was conducted on the part of the Romans by the famous Caius Marius. Jugurtha was killed, and his dominions made a Roman province, B.C. 104.

JULIAN PERIOD was first properly explained by Joseph Justus Scaliger, in his "De Emendatione Temporum," published at Paris in 1583, and at Geneva in 1629. Scaliger corrected certain inaccuracies in that work in his "Thesaurus Temporum," &c. The period consists of 7,980 years. It commenced B.C. 4714, and will close in 3266. Hallam says that Scaliger was very proud of the invention, of which he confesses himself unable to perceive the great advantage. (See CALENDAR.)

JÜLICH, or JULIERS (Prussia), the ancient Juliacum, so called from its supposed founder, Julius Cæsar, was, with the adjoining territory, made a duchy in 1356. On the extinction of the ducal line, March 25, 1609, several claimants appeared. Juliers was taken by the Spaniards in 1622. It was allotted to the Count Palatine of Neuburg by the peace of the Pyrenees, Nov. 7, 1659. The French seized it and annexed it to France in 1794, and it was ceded to Prussia in 1815.

JULIOMAGUS.—(See ANGERS.)

JULY.—This month, now the seventh, was with the Romans the fifth month of the year, being called Quintilis. Marcus Antonius (B.C. 49—A.D. 31) changed its name to Julius, after Cæsar, who was born in this month. The Anglo-Saxons called it Mæad-monath, or "mead-month," because the meads were then in bloom.

JUMPERS.—This sect, akin to the Dancers of the 14th century, arose among the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists about 1760. They received their name from their habit of jumping during the celebration of their religious rites. (See CHASIDIM and CONVULSIONISTS.)

JUNE was the fourth month in the old Roman calendar. Numa (B.C. 715—673) gave it the sixth place, which it has since retained.

JUNIOR ATHENÆUM CLUB (London) was opened July 2, 1864.

JUNIOR CARLTON CLUB (London), formed under the auspices of a committee of Conservative noblemen and gentlemen, was opened July 1, 1864. From the first report, May 29, 1865, it appeared that during the first six months 1,150 members were enrolled. The new house in Pall Mall was commenced in 1866.

JUNIOR UNITED SERVICE CLUB (London) was founded in 1826, and the new house was built in 1857.

JUNIOR UNIVERSITY CLUB (London) was founded in 1864, and the new house was commenced in 1866. The Oxford and Cambridge Club (q. v.) was for some time known as the Junior University, to distinguish it from the University Club, though it never took the name.

JUNIUS'S LETTERS were published in the Public Advertiser under the signature of "Junius," the first appearing Jan. 21, 1769, and the last, making the 69th, in Jan., 1772. The first authorized edition, printed under the author's inspection, was published in London,

March 3, 1772, and was issued with an index and a table of contents in March, 1773. The question of the authorship of these letters has excited considerable controversy. They have been attributed to various persons, and the question is involved in mystery, though Sir Philip Francis (Oct. 22, 1740—Dec. 22, 1818) is generally believed to have been the author.

JUNKSEYLON.—(See SALANG.)

JUNONIA.—These festivals, in honour of Juno, were instituted at Rome B.C. 430. The chief, called the Matronalia, was observed March 1.

JUNONIA (Africa).—Caius Gracchus, who in his first tribunate, B.C. 123, had carried a proposal for establishing a colony on the site of Carthage, under the name Junonia, took with him into Africa 6,000 colonists, B.C. 122, but the project was abandoned after his death, B.C. 121.

JUNTA.—This name, originally applied in Spain to the councils of commerce, mines, &c., was afterwards extended to administrative and political assemblies. In 1808 the provincial juntas declared against the ambitious schemes of Napoleon I., and excited the people to opposition. A supreme central junta, composed of deputies from the provincial juntas, was organized at Aranjuez in Sep., and the apostolic junta was erected in 1824.

JUPITER.—Galileo having examined this planet with a new telescope, Jan. 7, 1610, discovered three small stars, which, with a fourth not at first perceptible, he ascertained to be satellites Jan. 13. The rotation was discovered by Hooke in May, 1664, and the period of each revolution was made known by Cassini in 1665. Roemer, by observation of the satellites, determined the velocity of light in 1675. Airy's observations were made at Cambridge in 1834 and 1835.

JURY.—Trial by 12 compurgators, which was of canonical origin, existed in Anglo-Saxon times, and only resembled what is now known as trial by jury in the number of persons sworn. Under the name of Wager of Law, it continued to be the law of England until abolished by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42 (Aug. 14, 1833). Traces of trial by jury are found in the reigns of William I. and II., Henry I., and Stephen; but it was not fully established until the reign of Henry II. Trial by jury was first adopted in criminal cases in the reign of John (1199—1216), and was the established mode of dealing with them at the end of the 13th century. Witnesses were examined, and evidence was first laid before juries, in the reign of Henry VI. (1422—1461); but this change was not fully carried out till the time of Edward VI. (1547—1553). The laws respecting juries were remodelled by 6 Geo. IV. c. 50, June 22, 1825. (See GRAND JURY.)

JURY COURT (Scotland) was established as subsidiary to the Court of Session by 55 Geo. III. c. 42 (1815). Improvements were introduced into these courts, which were made a permanent part of the judicial establishment of Scotland, by 59 Geo. III. c. 35 (1819). This court, as a separate tribunal, was abolished by 1 Will. IV. c. 69 (July 23, 1830).

JUSTICES IN EYRE, or Itinerant Justices, the judicial representatives of the royal authority, were established by the parliament held at Northampton Jan. 26, 1176. They received a delegated power from the aula regia, and made their circuit round the kingdom once in seven years. By the 12th article of Magna Charta, in 1215, they were ordered to be sent into the country once a year. (See ASSIZE COURTS.)

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.—Conservators (q. v.) of the peace received this title when, by 34 Edw. III. c. 1 (1360), the power of trying felonies was intrusted to them. From an entry in the Harleian MSS., it appears that the Countess of Richmond, mother of Henry VII., was a justice of the peace. The form of the commission by which justices of the peace are appointed was settled by the judges in 1590. The jurisdiction of justices at quarter sessions is defined by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38 June 30, 1842. The office is noticed in Scotland in the act of 1587.

JUSTICIARS.—These high officers were first appointed by William I. Six ad audiendum clamores populi in Curia Regis were appointed at a parliament held by Henry II. at Windsor, in April, 1179.

JUSTICIAR OF SCOTLAND.—Geoffrey of Maleville, in the reign of Malcolm IV. (1153—1165), is the first person holding this office of whom any record remains.

JUSTICIARY, CHIEF, or GRAND JUSTICIARY, an officer who under the Norman sovereigns acted as president of the Curia Regis, and governed the kingdom during the king's absence, answered to the aldermannus totius Angliæ of the Saxons. Odo, Bishop of Bayeux, half brother to William I. and William Fitz-Osberne, Earl of Hereford, appointed by William I. in 1067, were the first chief justiciars after the conquest. The office fell into disuse in the reign of Henry III., and was superseded March 8, 1268, by the Chief Justice of the King's Bench.

JUSTINIANA.—(See CARTHAGE.)

JUSTINIAN CODE.—This compilation of Roman laws, ordered to be made by the Emperor Justinian I., was promulgated April 7, 529. A revised edition was issued Nov. 16, 534. (See AMALPHI.)

JUST, ST.—(See YUSTE.)

JUTE, the fibre of an Indian plant, was introduced into this country for the manufacture of sacking, &c., about 1830.

JÜTERBOCK (Prussia). — At this town Tetzel commenced the sale of papal indulgences in 1517. A conference held here in 1523, by the German Lutheran princes, to adopt measures against the effects of the Edict of Worms, resulted in the League of Torgau (1526). The Swedish general Torstenson defeated the Austrians under Gallas at this place in 1644, and the field of Dennewitz (q. v.) is in the vicinity.

JUTLAND (Denmark).—This peninsula was the home of the Danes and Northmen, who for many years devastated Europe. During the 10th and 11th centuries the entire surface was covered with forests. The Jutes, who established themselves in Kent and Hampshire, came from Jutland. It was overrun by Wallenstein in 1627, and restored to Denmark by the treaty of Lübeck in 1629. The allies occupied the south of Jutland in 1813, and an armistice was concluded with Denmark Dec. 15, 1813. This led to a treaty between Denmark and Great Britain and Sweden, concluded at Kiel Jan. 14, 1814. (See DENMARK.)

JUVENALIA, a feast instituted at Rome by Nero on attaining his majority, in 59. He dedicated the first clippings of his beard and whiskers to Jupiter, and, on the public stage, sang to the accompaniment of his lyre verses of his own composition.

JUVENILE OFFENDERS.—By 1 & 2 Vict. c. 82 Aug. 10, 1838, Parkhurst military hospital, Isle of Wight, was provided for the detention and correction of young offenders of both sexes. Magistrates and justices were empowered by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 86 (Aug. 10, 1854) to commit convicts under 16 years of age, for certain periods of tuition in reformatory schools (q. v.), in addition to such term of imprisonment as they might award. (See FLOGGING.)

K.

KAABA.—(See CAABA.)

KABBELJAUWEN AND HOEKS, or HOOKS, the former signifying the Cod-fish party, and the latter the Fish-hooks, two factions that arose in the Netherlands about 1355, soon after the death of William IV., "dividing," as the historian remarks, "noble against noble, city against city, father against son, for some hundred and fifty years, without foundation upon any abstract or intelligible principle." In the end, the Kabbeljauwen represented the city, or municipal faction, and the Hoeks the nobles, or aristocrats, who were to catch and control them. The Hoeks were defeated in a naval action July 21, 1490, by the fleet of the Kabbeljauwen, commanded by Jan von Egmont.

KABUL.—(See CABUL.)

KABYLES, or BERBERS, descended from the aborigines of Northern Africa, though conquered by the Phœnicians, the Romans, the Vandals, and the Arabs, continued to occupy the countries south of the Mediterranean till the 11th century, when they were driven to the Atlas Mountains by the Saracens. The French occupied the valley of Sebaon in 1844. Expeditions were sent against them in 1844, 1845, and 1846. Great part of their territory was subdued in 1847, and the remainder was taken by Gen. St. Arnaud in 1850. (See ALGERIA.)

KADRIS.—(See DERVISH.)

KAFFA.—(See CAFFA.)

KAFFRARIA and KAFFRE.—(See CAFFRARIA and CAFFRE WAR.)

KAGOSIMA (Japan).—Mr. Richardson, an English subject, was murdered by the Japanese within the jurisdiction of the Prince of Satsuma, Sep. 14, 1862, and Admiral Kuper was instructed to proceed to Kagosima, his capital, and exact payment of a heavy indemnity. He arrived in the bay Aug. 11, 1863, anchored off the town Aug. 12, and, receiving no satisfactory reply, seized three screw steamers, Aug. 15. His squadron was immediately attacked by the batteries, and retaliated by bombarding the town, which was reduced to ruins Aug. 16.

KAGUL (Battle).—The Russians defeated the Turks in a great battle on the left bank of the River Kagul, or Kahul, Aug. 1, 1770.

KAHOOLAUI.—(See HAWAIIAN ARCHIPELAGO.)

KAI-FONG.—(See CAI-FONG-FOU.)

KAINARDJI.—(See KUTSCHOUC-KAINARDJI.)

KAINLY (Battle).—The Russians, after a severe struggle, defeated the Turks in the plain of Kainly, near Erzeroum, July 1, 1829.

KAIRWAN.—(See CAIRVAN.)

KAISER CARLSBAD.—(See CARLSBAD.)

KAISERS-LAUTERN, or LAUTERN (Germany).—The castle of this very ancient town was built by Frederick I., 1152—1190. The French, under Hoche, failed in an attack upon the allied army near this town, Nov. 28, 1793. A French army was defeated here by Möllendorf, with a loss of 3,000 men and several pieces of cannon, May 24, 1794.

KALAFAT (Wallachia).—At the commencement of the Russian war, a Turkish force of 12,000 men took possession of this town, Oct. 28, 1853, and an attempt made to dislodge them by a corps of Russians, 20,000 strong, led to the spirited engagement of Citate, in which the Turks were victorious, Jan. 6, 1854. They fortified the town, and maintained their position till Austria entered the Principalities, by virtue of a treaty signed June 14, 1854.

KALEB MEDINA (Battle).—A combined force of English, Austrians, Turks, and Druses, defeated Ibrahim, son of Mehemet Ali, at this place in Syria, Oct. 10, 1840.

KALEIDOSCOPE.—This optical instrument, invented in 1814 by Sir David Brewster, was patented by him in 1817.

KALISCH, or KALISZ (Poland), was founded in the 7th century, and its citadel was built by Casimir III. (1333—1370). Here the Russians defeated the Swedes, Nov. 19, 1706; and the Saxon infantry, commanded by Reynier, Feb. 13, 1813. The latter victory was followed by the "Treaty of Kalisch," between Russia and Prussia, signed Feb. 28, 1813. A secret convention between the Austrian and Saxon commanders, to allow the troops of the latter a passage through the Imperial territories, was concluded at this place about the end of March, 1813. A conference was held at Kalisch between the Emperor of Russia and the King of Prussia, in Oct., 1835.

KALIYUGA.—(See CALIYUGA.)

KALKA (Battle).—The Mongols defeated the Russians and the Cumans on the banks of this river, June 16, 1224.

KALMAR.—(See CALMAR.)

KALMUCKS.—(See CALMUCKS.)

KALPEE.—(See CALPEE.)

KALUNGA FORT (Hindostan) was unsuccessfully attacked, during the Ghoorka war, by the British, under Major-Gen. Gillespie, who fell in the assault, Oct. 31, 1814. A second storming party under Col. Mawby also failed, Nov. 27, and the fort was evacuated by the Nepaulese garrison Nov. 30.

KAMAKURA.—(See YOKOHAMA.)

KAMINIECK, KAMINIETZ, or PODOLSK (European Russia).—This town, founded by the sons of Olgherd, in 1331, was erected into a city in 1374. In 1672 it was seized by the Turks, to whom it was ceded in 1676. They surrendered it to the Poles in 1699. The Russians took it in 1793, and demolished the fortifications in 1812; but they have since been rebuilt.

KAMPTULICON.—This flexible substitute for oil-cloth, composed of powdered cork and india-rubber, and said to be the invention of Fanshawe, was patented by E. Galloway, Feb. 14, 1844.

KAMTSCHATKA (Siberia) was discovered by some Russians, who had been wrecked upon the coast, in 1639. The Cossacks penetrated into the country in 1690, and the Russians took possession in 1696, though they did not succeed in subjugating the inhabitants until 1706. Behring ascertained that it was a peninsula in 1728.

KANAGAWA (Japan).—By the treaty of Jeddo (q. v.), Aug. 26, 1858, this town, the seaport of Jeddo, was opened to British subjects from July 1, 1859.

KANAWHA (North America).—Western Virginia, having remained loyal to the government of the United States, was admitted into the Union as a separate State, under the name of Western Virginia, or Kanawha, Dec. 31, 1862, and was inaugurated at Wheeling, the capital, June 20, 1863.

KANDAHAR (Affghanistan), though said by some authorities to have been built by Lohrasp, a Persian king, who flourished at a very early period, is generally supposed to have been founded by Alexander III. (the Great), during his campaigns in Asia, B.C. 334—323. In the beginning of the 11th century it was held by the Affghan tribes, from whom it was taken by the Sultan Mahmoud of Ghizni. Zinghis Khan seized it towards the commencement of the 13th, and Timour in the 14th century. In 1507 the Emperor Baber took it; but being unable to retain possession, he again laid siege to it in 1521, effecting its capture after a determined resistance. In 1625 it fell under the power of Shah Abbas I. (the Great), from whom it was recovered in 1649. In 1747 it was taken by Ahmed Shah, who made it the capital of Affghanistan. The seat of government was, however, transferred to Cabul in 1774. During the Affghan war (q. v.), a British force occupied the town from Aug. 7, 1839, to May 22, 1842.

KANDSAG.—(See ELIZABETOPOL.)

KANDY (Ceylon), captured by Rajah Singha I., in 1582, was seized in Feb., 1803, by the British, who evacuated it June 24, after a most disastrous occupation. Kandy was once more conquered by the English, Feb. 14, 1815, and was ceded to Great Britain by a treaty signed there, March 2. (See CEYLON.)

KANGAROO ISLAND (Gulf St. Vincent) was discovered by Flinders in 1802, and thus named by him from the numbers of kangaroos seen sporting about in every open spot.

KANGRAH (Punjaub).—This important fortress, taken in 1010 by Mahmoud of Ghizni, and recaptured in 1043 by the Rajah of Delhi, came into the possession of England on the annexation of the Punjaub in 1849.

KANISA, or CANISSA (Hungary).—The fortifications of this town, taken by the Turks in 1600, were dismantled in 1702.

KANOJE, KUNNOJ, KUNNOUJ, or CANOUJ (Hindostan).—This city, though not mentioned in the poem Mahabharat, B.C. 1400, is believed to be nearly as ancient. It attained its greatest prosperity about 590, was taken by Mahmoud in 1018, and by Shahabuddin Mohammed, sovereign of Ghoor, in 1194. It was sacked by Mohammed Toghluk, Tyrant of Delhi, in 1340, and in 1528 was seized by Baber, whose son and successor, Humayun, sustained a defeat in its neighbourhood from his Affghan rival, Sher Shah. A body of fugitive mutineers was defeated here with great slaughter by Sir Hope Grant, in 1857.

KANSAS (North America) formed part of Louisiana, purchased by the United States Government from France in 1803, was erected into a territory in May, 1854, and admitted into the Union as an independent state Jan. 29, 1861. A convention to frame a constitution met in Sep., 1857. A resolution to appoint a committee to investigate certain charges against President Buchanan, of having used bribes and other influence in order to insure the success of a bill legalizing slavery in this state, was adopted by the House of Representatives, March 5, 1860.

KAPPEL.—(See CAPPEL.)

KAPOLNA (Battle).—The Austrians defeated the Hungarians in a series of encounters near Kapolna, Feb. 26 and 27, 1849.

KARAÏTES.—(See CARAÏTES.)

KAREGITES, or CHAREGITES.—A Mohammedan sect, which repudiated the authority of Ali in 657, and were reduced to submission in 659. Three of their number entered into another conspiracy against Ali, who was stabbed by one of them in a mosque at Cufa, Jan. 19, and died Jan. 21, 661. The term Karegite, deserter, or rebel, was applied to all who revolted from the lawful Imam.

KARISMIANS, or KHARIZMIANS.—(See CARISMIANS.)

KARITA.—(See CARITA, Battle.)

KARKAR (Battle).—(See AROER.)

KARLOWITZ.—(See CARLOWITZ.)

KARNAK (Egypt). — Nothing certain is known respecting the foundation of this temple, which contains sculptures, with inscriptions for the most part of the time of Rameses III., B.C. 1200. The great hall, however, is ascertained to have been built by Sethee I., B.C. 1340. Fragments have been found bearing the name of Sesortasen I., B.C. 2080.

KARS (Asiatic Turkey).—Once the capital of the Chorzene district, in Armenia, the residence of the Bagratid Princes, 928—961, was exchanged by them in 1064, and has since been known under the name of Kars. It contains a castle, built by Amurath III., in 1586, and besieged in 1735 by Nadir Shah, who, after cutting off a Turkish army of 100,000 men, abandoned the enterprise. The Russians blockaded the town for a few months in 1806. Paskewitch laid siege to it July 7, 1828, and captured it July 15. The Turkish garrison, commanded by Gen. Williams, held out against the investing army of Russia from June 16, 1855, till compelled by a famine to capitulate, Nov. 25. The general assault made by the Russians, Sep. 29, was repulsed. Kars was restored to the Turks by the third article of the treaty of Paris, March 30, 1856.

KASAN, or KAZAN.—(See CAZAN.)

KASHGAR, or CASHGAR (China), anciently called Sule, existed before the Christian æra, and after exchanging rulers several times, was conquered by the Chinese in 1759. Marco Polo visited it about 1275.

KATHARINE (ST.) DOCKS (London), constructed according to the Local and Personal Act, 6 Geo. IV. c. cv. (June 10, 1825), were founded May 3, 1827, and opened Oct. 25, 1828. They occupy an area of 24 acres, obtained by the removal of 1,250 houses, including St. Katharine's Hospital (q.v.), and the cost of construction was £1,700,000. A fire in the bonded warehouses of these docks caused great destruction of property Jan. 1, 1866.

KATHARINE (ST.) HOSPITAL (London).—This charity was founded by Matilda, queen-consort of King Stephen, in 1145, "for a master, brethren, and sisters, and almspeople, in pure and perpetual alms." After a series of lawsuits, lasting from 1255 to 1273, it was re-established by Eleanor, consort of Henry III., "for a master, three brethren, and three sisters, ten bedeswomen, and six poor scholars." The site being required in 1824 for St. Katharine's Docks, a large compensation was paid, and service having been performed for the last time at the old church, Oct. 30, 1825, an edifice near Regent's Park was erected in 1827.

KATZBACH (Battle).—Blucher defeated the French, commanded by Macdonald and Ney, on the banks of the Katzbach, Aug. 26, 1813. Blucher took 18,000 prisoners and above 100 guns.

KAUAI.—(See HAWAIIAN ARCHIPELAGO.)

KEARNEYSVILLE (Battle). — Skirmishes without decisive results occurred near this hamlet in Virginia, between the Confederates, under Gen. Lee, and the Federals, Oct. 16 and 17, 1862.

KEELING, or COCOS ISLANDS (Indian Ocean), were discovered by Keeling in 1609.

KEEPER. — (See GREAT SEAL AND LORD KEEPER.)

KEEPER OF THE ROLLS.—(See CUSTOS ROTULORUM.)

KEEPERS OF THE PEACE.—(See CONSERVATORS.)

KEHL (Germany) was captured by the French under Marshal Villars, March 9, 1703, and by the Duke de Berwick in Dec., 1733. Moreau surprised the fort June 23, 1796. The Austrians attempted to recover it by a coup de main, but failed, Sep. 18, 1796. After a siege of 50 days, the French surrendered to the imperial general, Jan. 9, 1797. Kehl was again given up to the French, April 21, 1797, and, by a decree of the senate, was annexed to the French empire, Jan. 21, 1807. It was finally restored to Baden by the treaty of Paris, May 30, 1814.

KEINTON, or KINETON.—(See EDGEHILL, Battle.)

KELAT, or KHELAT (Beloochistan).—This strongly fortified town was stormed by the English, Nov. 13, 1839, when the khan and several of his chiefs fell in the struggle. It was left under the care of a garrison of native troops, who surrendered, after a defence of three days' duration, to Meer Nussoor Khan, July 27, 1840. The Beloochees, having plundered the town, abandoned it, and the British troops regained possession Nov. 3, 1840.

KELDEES.—(See CULDEES.)

KELLY'S FORD (Battle).—Gen. Stuart defeated a superior Federal force at this ford, on the Rappahannock River in Virginia, March 17, 1863.

KEMAOON, or KUMAON (Hindostan).—The whole of this district was ceded to the East India Company by the convention of Almorah, April 27, 1815.

KEMMENDINE (Burmah). — This fortified post was captured by the British troops June 10, 1824, during the Burmese war. The Burmese failed in an attempt to recapture the place, Dec. 1, 1824.

KENDAL (Westmoreland).—A hospital for lepers was established in the reign of Henry II. (1154—89). Edward III., in 1331, granted a letter of protection to "John Kempe, of Flanders, cloth weaver," for the manufacture of woollen cloths, afterwards known as "Kendals." The grammar-school was founded in 1535, Sande's hospital and blue-coat school were founded in 1670, the dispensary was erected in 1782, the obelisk commemorating the expulsion of James II. in 1688, and the green-coat Sunday-school in 1814. The Lancaster and Kendal canal was opened in 1819, and the Roman Catholic chapel was completed in 1837.

KENESAW MOUNTAIN (Battle).—The Federals, under Gen. Sherman, were repulsed, June 27, 1864, with a loss of nearly 3,000 men, in an attack upon the Confederate forces of Gen. Johnston stationed on this mountain in Georgia.

KENILWORTH CASTLE (Warwickshire) was built about 1122 by Geoffrey de Clinton, on land granted for the purpose by Henry I. In 1172 it was garrisoned by Henry II. against his rebellious sons; and in 1253 was bestowed for life upon Simon De Montfort, Earl of Leicester. After the battle of Evesham (q. v.), Kenilworth, held by De Montfort's second son, Simon, was taken by Henry III. after a six months' siege. In 1286 Roger Mortimer held a great chivalric meeting or "round table" in this castle, which was enlarged by John of Gaunt in 1391. In 1414 Henry V. kept his Lent here, and received a present of tennis-balls from the French Dauphin. Queen Elizabeth was entertained here with great magnificence by Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester, in 1575. She arrived July 9, and prolonged her visit for 17 days. The decline of Kenilworth commenced during the civil wars, when it was given by Cromwell to some of his officers, by whom it was dismantled.

KENNET (Battle).—The Danes defeated Ethelred II. at Kennet, in 1006. Ethelred II. retired into Shropshire, and assembled the witan, when it was determined to make a truce with the invaders to give them food and pay tribute. In the following year 36,000 pounds of gold were paid.

KENNINGTON COMMON (Surrey).—Jemmy Dawson was hanged, drawn, and quartered on this common, near London, July 30, 1746. The Chartists, headed by Feargus O'Connor, held a meeting here, April 10, 1848, which proved a failure as far as the objects of its projectors were concerned. Kennington Common was ordered to be inclosed and converted into a public pleasure-ground by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 29 (June 17, 1852).

KENSAL-GREEN CEMETERY (London).—The cemetery at this place, on the Harrow Road, laid out by a joint-stock company incorporated by act of Parliament in 1831–2, was opened Jan. 31, 1832, and consecrated Nov. 2. Additional ground was consecrated by the Bishop of London Aug. 14, 1862. A fire, the origin of which was not ascertained, broke out in the catacombs and destroyed several coffins, Sep. 18, 1865.

KENSINGTON PALACE AND GARDENS (London).—From the Close Roll, temp. Edward I., it appears that a council was held Aug. 23, 1302, "in the king's chamber at Kensington." Kensington House was the seat of Heneage Finch, Earl of Nottingham, whose son sold it to William III. soon after his accession, and he converted it into a royal palace. William III., his queen Mary, Queen Anne, and George II., died here. Queen Victoria was born here May 24, 1819, and held her first council here in 1836. The Serpentine was formed between the years 1730 and 1733, and the bridge over it, which separates the gardens from Hyde Park, was erected from the designs of Rennie in 1826. (See SOUTH KENSINGTON MUSEUM.)

KENT (East-Indiaman), 1,400 tons burden, carrying troops and passengers, amounting with the crew to 637 souls, left the Downs in the middle of Feb., 1825, and after experiencing bad weather in the Bay of Biscay, took fire March 1. The flames spread with great rapidity, owing to the violence of the gale, and all on board were in expectation of perishing, when they were rescued by the Cambria, Capt. Cook, bound for Mexico. Out of the whole number of people on board, 554 were saved, and the ill-fated vessel blew up at two o'clock in the morning, March 2.

KENT (England), on the coast of which Cæsar landed B.C. 55, was erected into a kingdom by Hengist in 455. Ethelbert (568—616) was the first Christian monarch in England. It was united to Wessex in 824. Alfred made it a county in 886.

KENTISH FIRE, a term first applied to the enthusiastic applause elicited at the various public meetings held in Kent, in 1828 and 1829, against the Roman Catholic Emancipation Act.

KENTISH PETITION, drawn up at the assizes at Maidstone, April 29, 1701, and signed by the grand jury, several magistrates, and freeholders, was presented to the House of Commons May 8. The petitioners besought that assembly to "drop their disputes, have regard to the voice of the people, and change their loyal addresses into bills of supply." The House refused to entertain the petition, and imprisoned William Colepepper and four other persons who had presented it. This act provoked a memorial, which charged the Commons, under 15 points, with tyranny and oppression. A new parliament, which met Dec. 30, 1701, again committed Colepepper to prison, and passed resolutions in answer to the Kentish Petition, Feb. 26, 1702.

KENTUCKY (North America), first visited by Europeans in 1767, and settled in 1775, originally formed part of Virginia. A division took place in 1790, when its first constitution was framed, and Kentucky was admitted into the Union as an independent state, June 1, 1792. A new constitution was drawn up in 1799, and another in 1850.

KERAITES.—Some Tartar tribes who were converted to Christianity in the early part of the 11th century. Their Princes were known under the title of Prester John.

KERBESTER.—(See CORBIESDALE, Battle.)

KERESZTES (Battle).—Mohammed III. defeated the Germans in this plain in 1596.

KERGUELEN LAND.—(See DESOLATION-ISLAND.)

KERTCH (Crimea), on the site of the ancient Panticapæum (q. v.), capital of the ancient kingdom of Bosporus (q. v.), became a Milesian settlement about B.C. 500, and was annexed to Rome by Pompey B.C. 63. The Huns seized it in 375, and the Genoese in 1280. They were compelled to abandon it by the Turks in 1475. These were displaced by the Russians in 1770, to whom the place was formally ceded in 1792. An expedition against the peninsula of Kertch was despatched from the Crimea by the allied forces of France and England, May 23, 1855. Kertch surrendered May 25, and was restored to Russia by the 4th article of the treaty of Paris, March 30, 1856. Kertch is still called Bospor amongst the inhabitants of the Crimea.

KESSELDORF (Battle).—Prince Leopold, commanding a portion of the Prussian forces of Frederick II. (the Great), defeated the Saxons under Rutowski, at this place, in Saxony, Dec. 15, 1745.

KET'S INSURRECTION, so called from its leader, a tanner by trade, broke out at Wymondham, in Norfolk, in July, 1549. The insurgents, whose watchword was "Kill the gentlemen!" having defeated a force sent against them and captured Norwich, were dispersed in an encounter at Dussindale (q. v.), by the Earl of Warwick, Aug. 27. William Ket, or Knight, the leader, and his brother Robert, with other ringleaders, tried at Westminster, Nov. 26, were executed.

KEW HOUSE (Surrey) was made a royal residence by Frederick, Prince of Wales (son of George II.), who took it upon a lease from the Cappel family, in 1730. He began to form the pleasure-grounds, then containing 270 acres; and dying here, March 20, 1751, the work was completed by his widow, Augusta, Princess of Wales. George III. purchased Kew House about 1789. It was afterwards pulled down, and the furniture, &c., removed to Kew Palace (q. v.).

KEW PALACE AND GARDENS (Surrey).—This small red-brick building, erected in the time of James I. or Charles I., was purchased by Queen Charlotte in 1781. William Aiton was appointed manager of the botanical garden of Kew in 1759, and the pleasure and kitchen gardens were also placed under his care in 1783. He published his "Hortus Kewensis; or, A Catalogue of the Plants cultivated in the Royal Botanical Garden of Kew," in 1789. Dr. Hill had published a catalogue of the plants in the exotic garden of Kew, in 1768. Sir W. Chambers erected the old stove in 1760, and the orangery in 1761. The pagoda, commenced in 1761, was completed in 1762. A greenhouse for Cape plants was built in 1788; and another, for the vegetable productions of New Holland, was added in 1792. The former has been pulled down; but the latter, greatly improved, is known as the Australian House. The conservatory was transferred here from Buckingham House in 1836. A committee was appointed, in 1838, to inquire into the management, &c., of the Royal Botanical Gardens, and the report was presented in May, 1840. The gardens, pleasure-grounds, &c., were transferred to the management of the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, and in 1841 were thrown open to the public. The ornamented gateway was erected in 1845–6. In 1841 the orange-trees were removed to Kensington Palace from the orangery, which was considerably improved in 1842. The palm-house was finished in 1848. A wooden bridge, built over the Thames at Kew in 1759, was replaced by the stone bridge in 1783. Sir W. J. Hooker, who died Aug. 12, 1865, effected great improvements in these gardens, and wrote a popular guide, published in 1847.

KEYS.—(See LOCKS AND KEYS.)

KEY WEST (Florida), supposed to be a corruption of Cayo Hueso, or Bone Key, was settled in 1822.

KHALULI (Battle).—At this place, on the lower Tigris, Sennacherib, King of Assyria, defeated the allied forces of Susub, Chaldæan monarch of Babylon, and Umman-minan, King of Elam, about B.C. 689.

KHANDESH, or CANDEISH (Hindostan), was an independent sovereignty from the early part of the 15th century till it was conquered by Akbar, towards the close of the 16th century. A famine, which carried off a large number of the population, occurred in 1803. It was annexed by the British Government in 1818, although not finally tranquillized till 1825.

KHART (Battles).—The Russians were defeated by the Turks under the walls of this town, in Asia Minor, July 19, 1829.——Paskewitch advanced with another army, and defeated the Turks at the same place, Aug. 20, 1829.

KHARTANI.—(See ALGERIA and DAHARA, or DAHRA MASSACRE.)

KHARTOUM, or KHARTUM (Egypt), the capital of Nubia, consisted only of a few huts until 1821, was made the seat of the government for Beledes Sudan, when that district became an Egyptian province in 1822. An inundation occurred in 1850.

KHERSON.—(See CHERSON.)

KHIVA, KHARASM, KHAUREZM, or URGENGE (Asia).—This country, the seat of the Carismians (q. v.), after forming part of the empire of the Seleucidæ, and of the kingdoms of Bactria, Parthia, Persia, and of the territory of the Caliphs, became in 1692 an independent monarchy under a Seljukian dynasty. In 1221 it was conquered by Zingis Khan, and in 1370 by Timour, whose descendants were expelled from the throne in 1511 by Shahy Beg, chief of the Uzbeks. In 1602 it was seized by the Cossacks, and in 1622 its khan offered to become a vassal of Russia. A similar proposal was made to Peter the Great in 1700, but on attempting to take possession in 1717, he was totally defeated. Nicholas I. renewed attempts at conquest in 1839, when great part of his army perished in the desert; but a commercial treaty, obtained in 1854, greatly extended Russian influence. A treaty with Russia, concluded in 1842, was virtually abandoned in consequence of Khivan aggressions in 1846. In 1857 Gen. Perofski destroyed the Khivan fort of Khoja-Niáz, which had obstructed Russian operations against Kokand (q. v.), and in 1858 Gen. Ignatief was despatched on a mission to the khan.

KHOI (Battle).—The Turks, led by Selim I., were defeated by Shah Ismael in this plain, near a fortified town of the same name, in Persia, in 1514.

KHORASSAN (Persia), or Country of the Sun, was invaded by the Saracens, who overthrew the Sassanides dynasty in 651. Taher revolted, and established his sway in 813; Tamerlane conquered it in 1383; Ismael, defeating Shakibek, took possession of it in 1510; and it became a Persian province in 1768.

KHORSABAD, or KHISHTABAD (Assyria), is mentioned by the early Arab geographers, who described it as occupying the site of an ancient Assyrian city. Excavations for the discovery of ancient buildings, sculpture, &c., commenced by M. Botta in 1841, disclosed the first Assyrian edifice discovered in modern times. It is believed the ruins formed part of the great city of Nineveh (q. v.).

KHYBER PASS (Affghanistan). — By this route Alexander III., Tamerlane, Nadir Shah, and other conquerors, penetrated into India, of which it has been termed the iron gate. The passage was forced by Col. Wade, July 26, 1839. Keane's army retreated through it in 1840. Brigadier Wild, on his way to the relief of Jelalabad, assailed the key of the pass Jan. 15, 1842; but for want of additional support was obliged to retire Jan. 23. Major-Gen. Pollock entered the pass April 5, and the rear of the force emerged from it April 14. The British army, after the subjugation of the Affghan chiefs, retired through this pass in Oct., 1842.

KHYRPORE (Hindostan).—By a treaty between the East India Company and the ameers of Scinde, signed here April 20, 1832, a free passage up the Indus and other rivers was secured to British ships. The Ameer of Khyrpore ceded the place by treaty in 1838, and it was annexed by the British March 24, 1843. A commission to investigate an alleged forgery of certain documents by the Ameer Ali Murad, found him guilty of the act, Jan. 5, 1853.

KIDDERMINSTER (Worcestershire) was represented in Parliament in 1300. The privilege, subsequently lost, was restored by the Reform Bill, June 7, 1832. It was incorporated by royal charter in 1637. The manufacture of carpets was introduced in 1745.

KIEF, KIEV, or KIOW (European Russia), the chief town of a government of the same name, is of great antiquity, was a flourishing place during the 9th and 10th centuries, was made a principality in 1157, annexed to Poland in 1386, was conquered several times by the Poles and Tartars, and ceded in perpetuity to Russia in 1686. The cathedral of St. Sophia was founded in 1037, the Greek academy, the oldest in Russia, in 1588, and the university in 1834. A celebrated fair is held annually in January.

KIEL (Holstein), the capital, joined the Hanseatic League in 1300. Its university was founded in 1665. It was, with the duchy of Holstein, exchanged for other places by Russia in 1773. An insurrection in favour of the independence of Sleswig and Holstein occurred here, and a provisional government was formed March 24, 1848. By the convention of Gastein, Aug. 14, 1865, Kiel, unlike the rest of Holstein, was to be held by Prussia as a German Federal harbour.

KIEL (Treaty). — Concluded between Denmark, Sweden, and Great Britain, at this town, Jan. 14, 1814. Denmark ceded Norway to Sweden, while the latter gave up Pomerania and the Isle of Rugen. Heligoland was assigned to England, and the King of Sweden engaged to use his best efforts to obtain for Denmark an equivalent for Norway at the general peace. The three contracting powers also entered into engagements for the prosecution of the war against Napoleon I.

KIERSY.—(See QUIERCY-SUR-OISE.)

KILCULLEN (Battle). — Gen. Dundas was defeated in an endeavour to dislodge the Irish rebels from their position at this place, in Kildare, May 24, 1798. In consequence of their success, the insurgents immediately took up a position between Kilcullen and Naas, and attempted to intercept Gen. Dundas in his retreat. The English army having received reinforcements, the rebels were defeated in this second engagement with the loss of about 300 men.

KILDARE (Bishopric).—This Irish bishopric was founded early in the 6th century, and was originally governed by archbishops. The first bishop was St. Conlaeth, who died May 3, 519. By the Church Temporalties Act, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 37 (Aug. 14, 1833), the see was annexed to Dublin (q. v.).

KILDARE (Ireland). — The abbey of St. Bridget, one of the oldest in Ireland, was founded about the 5th century. It was frequently assailed by the Danes, and a parliament was held here in 1309. The "sacred fire," extinguished for a short time in 1220, was kept burning till the Reformation. The town was taken by the Marquis of Ormond in June, 1649; and the Irish rebels were defeated at Kildare, May 29, 1798.

KILFENORA (Bishopric).—No trustworthy account of the foundation of this small diocese exists. The first bishop of whom any record has been preserved is Christian, who died in 1254. From 1606 to 1617 Kilfenora was held by the Bishop of Limerick. In 1661 it was united to the archbishopric of Tuam, and formed part of that diocese till 1742, when it was held by the Bishop of Clonfert. In 1752 it was annexed to Killaloe.

KILIMANJARO, or THE GREAT MOUNTAIN, the highest mountain in Africa, was discovered by Dr. Krapf, a missionary, in April, 1848.

KILKENNY (Ireland) became the site of an English settlement shortly after Richard de Clare landed in Ireland in 1170. A cathedral was founded in the 12th century, and the town grew up around it. A castle in course of erection was destroyed in 1193, and the present edifice was founded in 1195. Parliaments were frequently held here. The Duke of Clarence held one in February, 1366, when severe enactments were made against the Anglo-Irish, and the Brehon law was suppressed. The preceptory of St. John was founded in 1211, and the Dominican or Black Abbey in 1225. Kilkenny was surrounded by walls in 1400, and was made a city in 1609. It was taken by Cromwell, March 28, 1650. William III. entered Kilkenny after the battle of the Boyne, July 1, 1690. The grammar-school, founded in the 16th century, was endowed by the Duke of Ormond in 1684. The episcopal palace was enlarged in 1735, and the St. James's Asylum was endowed in 1803. Disturbances, which broke out in Kilkenny in April, 1833, were speedily suppressed.

KILLALA (Bishopric).—This Irish bishopric was founded by St. Patrick some time between 434 and 441. In 1623 the see of Achonry was annexed to Killala, and by the Church Temporalties Act, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 37 (Aug. 14, 1833), the united sees were added to the archbishopric of Tuam (q. v.).

KILLALA (Ireland).—A French expedition arrived in the Bay of Killala Aug. 22, 1798. They landed 1,150 men, with four field-pieces, and arms, ammunition, and equipments for distribution amongst the disaffected, reached Ballina Aug. 24, defeated a force sent against them at Castlebar (q. v.) Aug. 27, and were surrounded at Ballinamuck (q. v.) Sep. 8.

KILLALOE (Bishopric).—The cathedral of this diocese was founded during the 7th century, and the first bishop was St. Flannan, the date of whose consecration is not known. About 1195 the sees of Roscrea and Inis-Cathay were annexed to Killaloe, and in 1752 the bishopric of Kilfenora was also united. By the Church Temporalties Act, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 37 (Aug. 14, 1833), the sees of Clonfert and Kilmacduagh were united to those of Killaloe and Kilfenora.

KILLALOE (Ireland), an ancient town, long the capital of the O'Briens of Thomond, who built a bridge here across the Shannon in 1054. The cathedral was rebuilt about 1160. Near this place Sarsfield intercepted the artillery belonging to the royal army, destined for the siege of Limerick in 1691.

KILLARNEY (Ireland). — This town of Kerry is interesting for the beautiful lakes in its vicinity. Innisfallen Abbey was founded in the sixth century; and Muckross Abbey, anciently called Irrelagh, founded in 1440, was rebuilt in 1626. Ross Castle, defended by Lord Muskerry in 1652, at last surrendered to the Parliamentary forces. Killarney Church was erected in 1812. Queen Victoria and Prince Albert visited Killarney in Aug., 1861.

KILLIECRANKIE (Battle). — Graham of Claverhouse, Viscount Dundee, having erected the standard of James II. in Scotland, attacked and defeated the forces of William III. in the pass of Killiecrankie, near Blair Athol, July 27, 1689. Dundee, however, received a wound which caused his death, and his followers dispersed.

KILMACDUAGH (Bishopric).—The see was founded by Colman MacDuagh, about 620. During the first five or six centuries of its existence, the succession of its bishops is exceedingly indefinite. It was annexed to Clonfert in 1602, and the two sees were added to Killaloe by the Church Temporalties Act, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 37 (Aug. 14, 1833).

KILMAINHAM HOSPITAL (Dublin).—This institution, for the maintenance of old and disabled soldiers, was founded by charter in 1680, and completed in three years, at an expense of £23,559. The chapel was consecrated in 1686. The abolition of this institution was proposed in 1833; but objections having been made by the inhabitants of Dublin, the idea was abandoned.

KILMALLOCK (Ireland). — St. Malloch is said to have founded an abbey at this place, in Limerick, in the 6th century. During the 13th century a Dominican abbey was erected. In 1598 Kilmallock was besieged by the Irish, and relieved by the Earl of Ormond. Several battles were fought in its vicinity in 1641 and 1642.

KILMORE (Bishopric). — This, one of the most modern of the Irish bishoprics, was originally fixed at Brefny, and Bishop Hugh O'Finn, the earliest on record, died in 1136. The see was transferred to Kilmore in 1454, and Feb. 24, 1660, was united with Ardagh. It was again separated in 1742, and remained distinct, until it was permanently united to Ardagh by the Church Temporalties Act, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 37 (Aug. 14, 1833). The union was effected in 1839. A new cathedral, erected on a different site from that occupied by the ancient edifice, was consecrated by the bishop of the diocese, Tuesday, July 17, 1860.

KILRUSH (Battle). — The Marquis of Ormond, lord-lieutenant of Ireland, defeated the Irish, taking all their baggage and ammunition, at Kilrush, in Clare, in April, 1643.

KILSYTH (Battle).—Montrose defeated the Covenanters at this place, in Stirling, Aug. 15, 1645.

KILWINNING (Scotland). — This town of Ayrshire is named after St. Winning, who, having removed from Ireland, resided here during his efforts for the conversion of the Caledonians. A monastery in his honour was founded in 1140, which was removed in 1560, in accordance with an act of the estates of Scotland. Kilwinning was the first place in which Freemasonry obtained a footing in Scotland, and its lodge continued to exercise supremacy over all others till 1736, when the Grand Lodge of Scotland was founded at Edinburgh. The ruins of the monastery were converted into a Presbyterian church in 1775; the ancient tower fell in 1814. The Eglinton tournament (q. v.) took place in the neighbourhood.

KINBURN (Russia) was attacked by a force of 5,000 Turks, commanded by Kap-Pasha, who were totally defeated by the Russians under Suwarrow, June 28, 1788. The combined French and English fleets bombarded it Oct. 17, 1855, and compelled the garrison to surrender. It was restored to Russia by the fourth article of the treaty of Paris, March 30, 1856.

KINDER GARTEN.—This system of education for children was introduced by Frederick Froebel, who was engaged to teach it at Hamburg by Ronge in 1849. In 1851 it was introduced into England by Madame Ronge, who established a Kinder Garten, or children's garden, at Hampstead. The "Practical Guide to the English Kinder Garten" was published in 1855. Great prominence is given in this system to the pastimes of the young, in which modelling, drawing, and singing are introduced, and corporal punishment is altogether excluded.

KING.—This title, under different forms of orthography, exists amongst most of the northern nations of Europe. From the old Latin title rex, a ruler, comes the Italian re, the Spanish rey, and the French roi. The English word king is derived from the Teutonic. By some writers the origin of the kingly office is derived from Adam, who "governed or commanded all mankind, as long as he lived." Nimrod was the founder of the earliest post-diluvian kingdoms, namely, those of Babylon and Assyria, about B.C. 2218. Gibbon affirms that from the earliest period of history the sovereigns of Asia were known by the title of basileus, or king. He also states that of the whole series of Roman princes in any age of the empire, Hannibalianus alone was distinguished by the title of king. This nephew of Constantine I., made King of Pontus in 335, was assassinated by his cousins in 337. (See NATIONAL ANTHEM.)

KING-AT-ARMS.—England is placed under the heraldic jurisdiction of Clarencieux (q. v.) and Norroy (q. v.), the two provincial kings-at-arms, and of Garter, who takes precedence in dignity and importance. Clarencieux king-at-arms comprehends in his jurisdiction the whole of England south of the Trent, and Norroy presides over the districts north of that river. Clarencieux received his title from Lionel, son of Edward III., and Duke of Clarence, and Norroy from his being the north king. The precise year in which they were instituted is unknown, but they were probably founded by Edward III. The office of Garter king-at-arms was created by Henry V. in May, 1418. ——The office of Bath king-of-arms, created in 1725, was constituted Gloucester king-of-arms Jan. 14, 1726. Ireland is under the heraldic jurisdiction of Ulster king-at-arms, whose dignity was instituted by Edward VI. Feb. 2, 1553. In Scotland, the Lyon king-at-arms is an officer of great antiquity.

KING CLUB, or CLUB OF KINGS (London), of which all the members bore the name of "King," existed in the reign of Charles II. (1660—1685), who was himself an honorary member.

KING GEORGE'S or NOOTKA SOUND (Australia), discovered by the Spaniards about 1774, was visited in 1778 by Capt. Cook, who changed the name of the coast from Nootka to King George's Sound. The Spaniards in 1791 recognized the right of England to the possession of King George's Sound; and Vancouver arrived here in April, 1792, having been sent by the English Government to receive from the Spaniards the restitution of the territory, which he was to explore and survey. A settlement formed upon its shores in 1826 was transferred to Swan River in 1830. Its capacious harbour is much frequented by whalers, and is used as a coaling station for steamships.

KING HENRY'S COLLEGE.—(See CHRISTCHURCH.)

KING OF CLUBS (London), established about 1801 by Robert Smith, brother of Sidney Smith, assembled, one Saturday in each month, at the Crown and Anchor Tavern in the Strand, and discussed literary and social questions, to the exclusion of political topics.

KING OF ENGLAND.—Egbert is usually believed to have assumed the title of King of England in 827; but Sharon Turner regards Athelstan as the earliest prince who bore that title, which he states was instituted in 934. The plural number, as referring to the king, was first adopted by Richard I. after his coronation, Sep. 3, 1189. John added the title of "Lord of Ireland;" and in 1337 Edward III. assumed that of "King of France." Henry VIII. received the title of "His Most Christian Majesty" from Pope Julius II. in 1513. He changed the title of "Lord of Ireland" into "King of Ireland" in 1542. The kingly office was abolished by the Long Parliament, March 17, 1649; but the regnal years of Charles II. are always computed from the date of his father's death. The title of "King of France" was relinquished Jan. 1, 1801, when the royal style was proclaimed to be "Georgius Tertius, Dei gratiâ Britanniarum Rex, Fidei Defensor," or George the Third, by the grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith. Queen Victoria was proclaimed throughout British India by the title of "Victoria, by the grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and the colonies and dependencies thereof, in Europe, Asia, Africa, America, and Australia, Queen, Defender of the Faith," Nov. 1, 1858.

KING OF ITALY. — After the reign of Charlemagne, the title "King of Italy" was borne by the heirs to the imperial throne of the Western empire. It was conferred upon Victor Emanuel II. of Sardinia, with the style of "Victor Emanuel II., by the grace of God and by the will of the people, King of Italy," &c., by the Italian Parliament, March 17, 1861.

KING OF THE FRENCH.—This, the original title of the French sovereigns, was changed into "King of France" by Philip II. (1180—1223). The National Assembly ordered the old style to be resumed, Oct. 16, 1789, and abolished royalty Sep. 21, 1792. Louis XVIII. revived the royal title, as King of France, in 1814; and Louis Philippe accepted that of "King of the French," Aug. 9, 1830. Royalty was abolished in France Feb. 26, 1848; and Napoleon III. restored the title of emperor, Dec. 2, 1852.

KING OF THE ROMANS. — The Emperor Henry II. assumed this title previous to his coronation, in 1014. It was borne for many years by the heirs of the emperors of Germany, and was first conferred upon Henry the Third's eldest son in 1055. Napoleon I. conferred the title of King of Rome upon his son, March 20, 1811. (See HOLY ROMAN EMPIRE.)

KINGS.—The two books of Kings in the Old Testament, which originally formed only one in the Hebrew, are supposed to have been written by Ezra before B.C. 444.

KING'S (or QUEEN'S) BENCH (England). —Foss (Judges ii. 155) remarks, "a new title was given to the head of the king's court, by the appointment of Robert de Brus as 'Capitalis Justicarius ad placita coram Rege tenenda;' or, as we now style it, chief justice of the king's bench." By 28 Edw. I. c. 5 (1300), it was made a movable court, attendant on the king's person, but it has seldom been held anywhere except at Westminster. During the Interregnum it was styled the Upper Bench. The Bail Court was erected as a branch of this court by 11 Geo. IV. & 1 Will. IV. c. 70 (July 23, 1830). The following is a list of the Chief Justices, given by Foss in his Tabulæ Curiales.

KING'S (or QUEEN'S) BENCH PRISON (London).—This debtors' prison is said to have been the gaol to which Judge Gascoigne committed Prince Henry in the reign of Henry IV. The office of marshal of the King's Bench was sold to a company of proprietors by the Earl of Radnor, Sep. 20, 1718, for £10,500. The prison was built in 1751, enlarged in 1776, and burned by the mob during the Gordon riots (q. v.) June 7, 1780. Another was erected in 1781. A fire broke out in this prison July 13, 1799, and was not extinguished until several apartments had been destroyed. The freedom of prisoners to live anywhere within the rules of this prison was abolished in 1835. By 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22 (May 31, 1842), the Fleet and Marshalsea prisons were consolidated with the King's Bench, and the three received the name of the Queen's Prison.

KING'S BOOK, called also "Valor Ecclesiasticus Tempore Henrici VIII., Auctoritate Regia institutus," is the return of the commissioners appointed by 26 Hen. VIII. c. 3 (1534), to value the first-fruits and tenths bestowed by that act on the king. John Bacon published an edition in 1786, under the title of "Liber Regis, vel Thesaurus Rerum Ecclesiasticarum;" and it has been printed by the Record Commission in five volumes, which appeared in 1810, 1814, 1817, 1821, and 1825, with a sixth containing a general introduction, appendix, and index. A book entitled, "A Necessary Doctrine and Erudition for any Christian Man," published in 1543 by authority of Henry VIII., was also known as the King's Book. (See PRIMERS.)

KING'S COCK-CROWER. — (See COCK-CROWER.

KING'S COLLEGE.—(See ABERDEEN.)

KING'S COLLEGE (Cambridge) was founded by Henry VI. in 1441. The first stone of the celebrated chapel was laid in Sep., 1447. Henry VII. gave £5,000 towards the completion of the building in 1508, and his executors, under a power conferred by his will, gave a further sum of £5,000 in 1513. The exterior was completed in July, 1515, and the painted windows were designed in 1526. The screen and stalls were completed in 1534. Gibbs erected the Fellows' building in 1724. The new buildings were commenced in 1824, and finished in 1828.

KING'S COLLEGE (London). — The first steps for the foundation of this educational establishment were taken at a meeting over which the Duke of Wellington presided, June 21, 1828. The announcement that Government had granted the ground originally intended for the east wing of Somerset House for the site of the institution, free of expense for a thousand years, was made May 16, 1829. The charter of incorporation bears date Aug. 14, 1829; and the building, from designs by Smirke, was opened in 1831. Mr. Marsden left the college a library, consisting of about 3,000 volumes, in 1835.

KING'S COLLEGE HOSPITAL (London) was founded in 1839. The statue of Dr. Todd was inaugurated July 3, 1862.

KING'S (or QUEEN'S) COUNSEL. — The appointment of this officer, beyond the usual law officers of the crown, is believed to have originated during the reign of Queen Elizabeth. A warrant of James I., dated April 21, 1603, speaks of Francis Bacon as "one of the learned councell to the late queen, our sister, by special commandment," and confirms him in the office; and a patent exists of Aug. 25, 1604, by which he was formally appointed.

KING'S COUNTY (Ireland), forming part of a large extent of territory, known, amongst other names, under that of the kingdom of Offaly, or East and West Glenmallery, was confiscated to the crown by 3 & 4 Philip & Mary, c. 2 (1556). One portion was named Queen's County, in honour of Queen Mary, and the other King's County, in honour of her husband Philip. The native chieftains struggled against this settlement, and were subdued in 1600. Many of them took part in the revolt of 1641.

KING'S COURT, or AULA, or CURIA REGIS. —This court, established by William I. (1066—1087), was thus named because composed of the great officers of state resident in the palace, in the hall or court of which it was held. It accompanied the king's household in all his expeditions, and exercised unlimited jurisdiction. (See JUSTICIARY, CHIEF.) It met generally at Christmas, Easter, and Whitsuntide. Great inconvenience having ensued from making the trial of common causes dependent on the presence of the sovereign, it was enacted by the 11th chapter of Magna Charta, June 15, 1215, that a fixed court should be erected for their settlement. (See COMMON PLEAS.)

KING'S EVIL.—Touching for king's evil or scrofula is alleged to have been first practised by Edward the Confessor (1043—1066), and Evelyn, in his Diary, July 6, 1660, records that King Charles II. began to touch for the evil, "according to custom." A notice was issued May 16, 1664, that "his sacred Majesty would continue the healing of his people during the month of May, and then give over till Michaelmas." In White's "Coronations of the Kings of France," it is related that Louis XVI., immediately after his coronation at Rheims, in 1775, touched 2,400 individuals who were suffering from this disease, and healed them. Queen Anne (1702—1714) was the last English monarch who touched for the evil. Charles Edward touched a female child for the king's evil at Holyrood House, in October, 1745. The office for the ceremony appeared in the Litany as late as 1719. The Jacobites contended that the power of cure did not descend to Mary, William III., or Anne.

KING'S HEAD CLUB (London).—This club, also called the Green Ribbon Club, of which Charles II. (1660—1685) was an honorary member, was founded by Lord Shaftesbury for the support of the court and Government. The members, who carried the celebrated Protestant Flail as a defence against the anticipated attacks of the Roman Catholics, wore pistol-proof silk doublets, from which they derived their popular nickname of hogs in armour. They assisted in the pope-burning procession of Nov. 16, 1680, when, according to Roger North, they introduced the expression mobile vulgus, or "mob." The club declined on the suppression of these celebrations in 1683.

KING'S SPEECH.—The first from the throne is said to have been delivered by Henry I. in 1107.

KINGSTON (Canada), settled in 1783 by the Dutch, who gave it the name of Esopas, was incorporated as a town in 1838, and as a city in 1846. The seat of the government, established here in 1840, was removed to Toronto in 1844.

KINGSTON (Jamaica) was built in 1693, in consequence of the destruction by an earthquake of Port Royal in 1692. It was nearly destroyed by fire, Feb. 8, 1782; and the cholera carried off about one-eighth of the population in 1850. The railroad from Kingston to Spanish Town was opened in 1845. The bishopric of Kingston was founded in 1856. Kingston suffered severely from a fire which broke out March 29, 1862, and occasioned the death of three persons, and the destruction of property to the value of £250,000.

KINGSTON-UPON-THAMES (Surrey) was the abode of royalty in the Anglo-Saxon period; and between 902 and 979 seven kings were crowned at this place. The stone on which this ceremony was performed is still preserved. A council was held here in 838. King John granted the town its first charter in 1199. In the reigns of Edward II. and III. (1307—1377) it returned members to parliament, a privilege it has not since enjoyed. Queen Elizabeth's free grammar-school was founded in 1561. The bridge over the Thames was erected in 1827; the town-hall in 1838. Miss Burdett Coutts built the district church in 1845.

KINGSTOWN (Ireland), called Dunleary prior to the embarkation of George IV. for England, Sep. 3, 1821, received its present name in honour of that event. The construction of the harbour was commenced in 1817, from designs by Rennie, at a cost of nearly £800,000. It was connected with Dublin by railway, Dec. 17, 1834, and with Dalkey by atmospheric railway March 29, 1844. Queen Victoria embarked at this port, on her return from Ireland, in August, 1849. The Bird's Nest, an institution for the education and maintenance of Roman Catholic children, founded April 7, 1861, was opened April 9, 1862.

KINSALE (Ireland). — This town, in the county of Cork, is a place of considerable antiquity. Sir John de Courcey erected a castle on the Old Head of Kinsale in the 12th century; and in 1380 the English fleet defeated the combined naval forces of France and Spain in the harbour. A Spanish force landed here Sep. 23, 1601, and seized the town on behalf of the Roman Catholic rebels; but it was besieged by the English and recaptured, Dec. 28. In March, 1689, Kinsale was garrisoned by the French and Irish forces of James II., who held it till the end of 1690, when it surrendered to Gen. Churchill, afterwards Duke of Marlborough. Kinsale has been in a declining condition since the peace of 1814. The railway to Cork was opened May 16, 1863.

KINTRISHI (Battle). — The Russians defeated the Turks near this place in the province of Erivan, March 15, 1829.

KINTYRE—(See CANTIRE.)

KIÖGE (Sea-fights).—In the Bay of Kiöge, on the coast of the island of Zealand, the Swedish fleet was defeated by a combined Dutch and Danish fleet, in 1676. From the fact that the action took place near Bornholm, it is often called by that name.——A Swedish fleet having assailed a Danish fleet here, Oct. 4, 1710, one Danish ship of 90 guns blew up, and two of the Swedish flag-ships grounded on a sandbank, and were abandoned. The Swedish fleet retired Oct. 7.

KIOW.—(See KIEF.)

KIPSALE, KIPTCHAK, or KIPZAK (Plains of), extending for an immense distance on both sides of the Volga, were conquered by the Mongols of the Golden Horde (q. v.) in 1235. Their empire was dismembered late in the 15th century.

KIRCHDENKERN (Battles). — The French were defeated by the allies at this village in Germany, July 15, 1761. The first attack was made upon the English, commanded by the Marquis of Granby, and both leader and men displayed extraordinary gallantry. The combat was renewed July 16, when the French were again defeated. The French lost 5,000 and the allies only 1,500 men in killed and wounded. These combats are sometimes mentioned under the name of Villingshausen.

KIRCHENTAG.—This association of ministers and laymen, belonging to the different Protestant Churches in Germany, held its first meeting at Wittenberg in 1848.

KIRCHHOLM (Battle). — Sigismund III., King of Poland, defeated the Swedes at Kirchholm, in 1605.

KIRK.—(See CHURCH OF SCOTLAND and FREE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.)

KIRKCALDY (Fifeshire).—This town, the seat of an ancient establishment of the Culdees, was erected into a royal burgh in 1334, when it was rendered subject to the Abbot of Dunfermline and his successors. It became independent in 1450, and received a charter from Charles I. in 1644.

KIRKTON.—(See CREDITON.)

KIR OF MOAB (Palestine).—This stronghold of Moab, mentioned Isaiah xv. 1, was noticed in an act of the Council of Jerusalem in 536. In 1131 Fulk, Count of Anjou, and Latin King of Jerusalem, erected a castle, which successfully resisted a siege by Saladin in 1183.

KIS (Battle).—Sennacherib, King of Assyria, totally defeated Merodach Baladan, King of Babylon, and his Elamitish allies, near this city of Chaldæa, B.C. 702.

KISSING, as a religious act, was practised in the time of the patriarch Job, B.C. 2130, who protests (Job xxxi. 26 and 27) that he had not kissed his hand to the sun or to the moon. This mark of devotion was paid to Baal (1 Kings xix. 18), B.C. 910. It passed to the Greeks, and from them to the Romans. Dr. Winsemius declares that the custom was unknown in England till 449, when the Princess Rowena, daughter of Hengist, King of Friesland, pressed her lips to the cup, and saluted Vortigern with a "little kiss." From a passage in Evelyn's Diary, it appears that men kissed each other in the streets of London towards the end of the 17th century. The Spanish conquerors found the custom prevalent in the New World.

KISSINGEN (Bavaria).—The importance of this fashionable watering-place arose from the patronage of Louis I., King of Bavaria (1825—1848). The celebrated artesian well, 2,000 feet deep, commenced in 1832, was completed in 1852. The Emperors of Austria and of Russia, and some German sovereigns, met here June 16—21, 1864.

KISS OF PEACE.—The osculum pacis, or the solemn kiss of peace, was anciently given by the faithful one to the other, as a testimony of cordial love and affection. After the priest had given the salutation of peace, the deacon ordered the people to salute one another with a holy kiss. It was also given before the Eucharist, until the 12th or 13th century, when the Pax (q. v.) was introduced. Towards the end of the 3rd century the kiss of peace was given in baptism. It is said to have been omitted at the coronation of Stephen in 1135. Henry II. of England refused to give Becket the kiss of peace, at that time the usual pledge of reconciliation, in 1169.

KIT-CAT CLUB (London).—This celebrated association, formed about 1700, which held its first meetings at a small house in Shire Lane, originally consisted of thirty-nine noblemen and gentlemen distinguished for the warmth of their attachment to the house of Hanover. The Duke of Marlborough, Sir Robert Walpole, Addison, Garth, and many famous men of the period, were members. The club is said to derive its name from Christopher Katt, a pastrycook, at whose house the members dined.

KITT'S, ST.—(See CHRISTOPHER'S, ST.)

KIWEROWA-HORKA (Treaty), concluded between Russia and Poland, Jan. 15, 1582, at this village near the Polish frontier, ceded Livonia to the latter power. The peace, limited by the original compact to ten years, was renewed in 1591.

KLAGENFURT (Illyria), the capital of Carinthia, belonged to the crown till 1518, when Maximilian I. transferred it to the states of Carinthia, for the purpose of erecting a fortress. The house of assembly was built in 1391. At various times the city has suffered from extensive fires. Those which occurred in 1535, 1723, and 1796, were very destructive. It was taken by the French, March 29, 1797, and Napoleon I. made it his head-quarters, March 30. A skirmish took place here between Chastellar and the Italian general Rusca, in June, 1809.

KLAUSENBURG (Battle).—George Ragotski II., Waiwode of Transylvania, was defeated and slain by the Turks near his capital city, in May, 1660.

KLAUSENBURG (Transylvania), the capital, called Colosvar or Kolosvar by the Hungarians, is believed to have been founded by the Romans, and by them named Claudia, whence its modern Latin appellation of Claudiopolis. A colony of Saxons settled in the town, which they enlarged in 1178. The cathedral was built in fulfilment of a vow by King Sigismund, 1399. Matthias Corvinus Huniades, King of Hungary, was born here in 1443. On a lofty eminence stands the citadel, erected in 1721.

KLEIN-SCHNELLENDORF (Convention).—Frederick II. (the Great) of Prussia, by a secret convention, concluded at this castle in Silesia with the generals of Maria Theresa, Oct. 9, 1741, permitted the Austrians to retire from Silesia into Moravia, receiving Lower Silesia, and the right to take Neisse by siege. Frederick II. broke the convention before the end of 1741.

KLOSTER SEYVERN (Treaty).—An alliance was concluded at this place near Munich between Saxony, Hesse, Bavaria, and France, who united against the recognition of Ferdinand, brother of Charles V., and afterwards Emperor of Germany, as King of the Romans, May 26, 1532. The place must not be confounded with the Hanoverian village where the convention of Closter Seven (q. v.) was signed.

KLUM, or CHLUM.—(See SADOWA, Battle.)

KNEELERS.—A third order of catechumens was distinguished by this name by the Council of Neocæsarea, in 314 or 315, and other councils. Amongst the penitents was an order of kneelers or prostrators.

KNEELING was practised as the ordinary posture of devotion from the earliest times. Amongst the primitive Christians, on the Lord's day, all prayers were performed standing, but on other days some were said standing, some kneeling.

KNIGHT-BANNERET, a person who received the order of knighthood, under the royal standard, for some distinguished service in the field. Shakspeare (King John, I. 1) speaks of—

> "A soldier, by the honour-giving hand
> Of Cœur-de-Lion, knighted in the field."

The time and place at which the dignity was first conferred have excited much controversy. In 5 Rich. II. s. ii. c. 4 (1382), bannerets are mentioned amongst those summoned to Parliament. "No man," says Hallam (Middle Ages, iii. ch. 9, pt. 2), "could properly be a banneret unless he possessed a certain estate, and could bring a certain number of lances into the field. His distinguishing mark was the square banner, carried by a squire at the point of his lance; while the knight-bachelor had only the coronet or pointed pendant. When a banneret was created, the general cut off this pendant to render the banner square." Selden states that the first account of this dignity occurs in the reign of Edward I. Edmondson traces it as far back as 736. The Black Prince made Sir John Chandos a knight-banneret in 1367. The order was discontinued from 1642; the last, Sir John Smith, having been created by Charles I.

after the battle of Edgehill. It was, however, revived by George II. after the battle of Dettingen, June 27, 1743; and Sir William Erskine was made a knight-banneret by George III. in 1764, for distinguished services in the war on the continent.

KNIGHT-ERRANTRY is described by a writer in the "Encyclopedia Britannica" (vii. 536) as "a practical caricature of chivalry, which, by bringing it into contempt, exposed it to ridicule, and thus sealed the doom of an institution which, with all its follies, absurdities, and vices, has conferred essential benefits upon mankind." Cervantes wrote "Don Quixote," of which the first part was published in 1605, and the second in 1615, in ridicule of knight-errantry.

KNIGHTHOOD.—The institution of knighthood originated in the honour anciently bestowed upon those who excelled in horsemanship. Hence the Latin, French, Italian, Spanish, and Dutch words for knight are all derived from terms which signify 'horse.' Some zealous antiquarians consider that Pharaoh conferred the honour of knighthood upon Joseph when he put his ring on his finger and invested him in robes of dignity (Gen. xli. 42), B.C. 1715; but there is no evidence of the existence of any such institution until Romulus established the equestrian order at Rome. Modern knighthood did not originate in this order, but in the tenure which compelled feudal vassals to hold their lands by furnishing armed men for the service of the sovereign, the obligation to furnish one soldier constituting one knight's fee. The earliest mode of conferring the honour of knighthood in England was the consecration of the novitiate's sword by the priest at the altar. The first knight created by the stroke of a sword was Athelstan, who was dubbed by Alfred the Great in 900. The chivalric element was not introduced into knighthood until the period of the Crusades, when devotion to God and to the fair sex became the chief characteristics of all good knights. Ecclesiastics were prohibited from conferring knighthood by a council held in 1102. In the reigns of Edward VI. and Elizabeth, all persons possessed of lands yielding a yearly income of £40 were compelled to receive knighthood or pay a fine; and in 1626 Charles I. recruited his exhausted exchequer by reviving this obsolete custom. The compensation exacted from those knights who declined to perform military service was abolished by 16 Charles I. c. 20 (1640), and the service itself was abolished by 12 Charles II. c. 24 (1660). (See FOREIGN ORDERS.) Many of the following orders are noticed under their respective titles:—

KNIGHT-MARSHAL.—The earl-marshal of England (q. v.) had a knight under him called the knight-marshal. In ordinances made by Henry VIII. at Eltham, in 1526, directions were laid down for his attendance at court, &c.

KNIGHTS (Female).—Beside the orders of knighthood bestowed upon men, several were instituted for the honour of meritorious ladies. The following table exhibits a list of these, the most important of which are noticed under their titles:—

A.D.
1645. Amaranta (Sweden).
1714. Anna, St. (Wurtzburg).
1784. Anna, St. (Bavaria).
1703. Bee (France).
1319. Calatrava (Spain).
1714. Catherine, St. (Russia).
1498. Cordelière (France).
1668. Cross, or Starry Cross (Germany).
1654. Death's Head.
1804. Elizabeth, St. (Brazil).
1766. Elizabeth, St. (Palatine).
1801. Isabela, St. (Portugal).
1312. James, St. (Spain).
1107. Ladies Knights of Malta (Palestine).
1814. Louisa, St. (Prussia).
1792. Maria Louisa (Spain).
1261. Mercy (Spain).
1708. Neighbourly Love (Austria).
1662. Slaves to Virtue (Austria).
1668. Starry Cross (Austria).
1827. Theresa (Bavaria).
1734. Ulrica, St. (Sweden).

Ladies were admitted to other orders, such as Malta, Santiago, &c.

KNIGHTS OF THE ROUND TABLE.—This order is said to have been founded by King Arthur, a British prince, supposed to have been killed at the battle of Camelon in 542. Edward III., anxious to revive it, offered free conduct to persons from various parts of Europe, desirous of attending a solemn festival of the Round Table, to be held at Windsor in 1344. From this originated the order of the Garter (q. v.). Philip VI., King of France, prohibited his subjects from attending, and announced his intention of holding a Round Table at Paris.

KNIGHTS OF THE SHIRE.—The representatives in Parliament of the English counties were first summoned about 1254, in the reign of Henry III., and in a more regular form Jan. 20, 1265. By 8 Hen. VI. c. 7 (1429), and 10 Hen. VI. c. 2 (1432), amended by 14 Geo. III. c. 58 (1774), knights of the shire were to be elected by persons possessing a freehold to the value of forty shillings by the year within the county.

KNITTING.—The art of knitting is said to have been invented during the 16th century. The French stocking-knitters were incorporated into a guild Aug. 26, 1527; and Queen Elizabeth received a present of a pair of black silk stockings in 1561, which gave her such satisfaction that she refused to wear any other kind. The first knitted woollen stockings in England were worked by William Ryder in 1564; and in 1577 the art of knitting seems to have been common.

KNIVES were, according to Anderson, first made in England in 1563. Fosbroke states that towards the end of the 16th century they formed part of the accoutrements, and were worn by European women at the girdle. The Anglo-Saxons and the Normans carried about with them the metsœx, or eating-knife. An Egyptian knife, with blade of copper, has been found in the catacombs of Sacarrah.

KNOW-NOTHINGS.—This political party of the United States published its "Platform of Principles" June 15, 1855. Its distinguishing features were the approval of slavery and hostility to the Roman Catholics.

KNOXVILLE (United States).—This town of Tennessee, having been occupied by the Federals, Sep. 1, 1863, was entered by Gen. Burnside, Sep. 3. After the battle of Campbell's Station (q. v.) he was besieged here by the Confederates under Gen. Longstreet, Nov. 17 and 18. An assault was repulsed Nov. 29, and the garrison was relieved by Gen. Sherman Dec. 3.

KOHINOOR, or MOUNTAIN OF LIGHT.—This diamond, having long formed a chief feature of the treasury of Delhi, passed in 1526 into possession of the Mongol Emperor Baber. During the reign of Aurungzebe (1658—1707) it was unskilfully cut by Hortensio Borgio, a Venetian lapidary, who, reducing its weight from 793 carats to 186, was deprived by the emperor of all his possessions, and narrowly escaped with life. In 1739 it was seized by Nadir Shah, and in 1849 it was surrendered to the British troops, by whom it was presented to Queen Victoria June 3, 1850. Having been exhibited at the Great Exhibition of 1851, it was recut by Coster, of Amsterdam, July 16—Sep. 7, 1852, and its weight reduced to 106⅓ carats.

KOKAND (Asia).—The Russians were in 1852 defeated in an attack upon this fort of Ak-Mesjed, or the White Mosque, erected in this state of Turkestan in 1817. It surrendered after a siege lasting from July 5 to 27, 1853. The Kokandis were defeated with the loss of 2,000 men in a battle fought near the same place Dec. 14, 1853. Pishpek surrendered to the Russians in Oct., 1862, and Avliata and Hazret-i-Turkestan in 1864. Another battle was fought near Tashkend May 9, 1865, and the town surrendered May 15.

KOLIN, COLIN, KHOLIN, KOLLIN, or NEU-KOLIN (Battle).—The Prussians under Frederick II. (the Great) sustained a signal defeat from the Austrians under Marshal Daun, at this town in Bohemia, June 18, 1757.

KOLOSVAR.—(See KLAUSENBERG.)

KOMARI.—(See CAPE COMORIN.)

KONGE-LOV, LEX REGIA, or ROYAL LAW.—By this constitution, established in Denmark Oct. 1660, the government was changed from an elective into an hereditary monarchy, and the power of the sovereign was made absolute.

KONGSBERG (Norway).—The silver-mines in the neighbourhood, for which this town is celebrated, were discovered in 1623.

KONIAH, or KONIEH (Battle).—The Turkish army, under Reschid Pasha, was defeated, with a loss of 30,000 men, by Ibrahim Pasha, at this city, the ancient Iconium (q. v.), Dec. 21, 1832.

KÖNIGSBERG (Prussia).—This city was founded in 1255 by the knights of the Teutonic order, at the suggestion of Premislaus II. of Bohemia. The royal castle was erected in 1257, and the cathedral commenced in 1332. In 1365 it joined the Hanseatic League, and in 1525 became the residence of the Prussian dukes, and the capital of the duchy. The university, founded in 1544, by the Margrave Albert, is called the Albertine in consequence. Königsberg was surrounded by walls in 1626, and the citadel of Fredericksburg was built in 1657. The Elector Frederick III. was crowned King of Prussia at this place in 1701. The plague raged here with great fury in 1709, and much damage was done by fires in 1764, 1769, 1775, and 1811. The Russians entered Königsberg in triumph, Jan. 16, 1758, the French seized it in 1807, and it was again fortified in 1843. The coronation of William I. of Prussia was celebrated here with great magnificence, Oct. 18, 1861.

KÖNIGSGRATZ.—(See SADOWA, Battle.)

KÖNIGSHOFEN (Battle) was fought at this place, in Germany, June 2, 1525, during the Peasants' War, when the peasantry were defeated by the imperial troops, and perished in great numbers.

KÖNIGSTEIN (Germany) was surrendered to the Prussians, after a blockade of some months, March 9, 1793. For about three months in 1849, the King of Saxony sought refuge here, on account of the revolutionary tendencies of his subjects. The fortress is considered impregnable, and at its foot stands the camp of Pirna (q. v.).

KOOM (Persia) was built by the Saracens about the beginning of the 9th century. The Affghans destroyed it in 1722. It was at one time celebrated for its manufacture of silk.

KOORIA MOORIA ISLANDS.—(See CURIA MARIA ISLANDS.)

KORAN.—This word, signifying in the original Arabic "that which ought to be read," is the name given to the bible of the Mohammedans, which was prepared by Mohammed about 612, and collected and published by his successor Abubeker in 634. The divine authority of the book was denied by Djenb Ibn-Dirhem in 740, and by others in 826; in consequence of which Haroun II. in 842 prohibited all discussion on the subject. The first Latin translation of the Koran was made in 1143. Hinckelmann published the Arabic text in 1694. Sale's English Koran appeared in 1734, and Savary's French version in 1783. Fluegel's stereotyped edition was published at Leipsic in 1834. The work contains 114 chapters and 6,000 verses, and the contents are divided into the three general heads of precepts, histories, and admonitions.

KORDOFAN, or THE WHITE LAND (Central Africa).—This district of the Nigritia, long tributary to the King of Sennaar, was taken in the latter half of the 18th century, by the King of Dar-Fur, from whom it was wrested in 1820 by Mehemet Ali, who was confirmed in the possession by a firman issued by the Sultan Feb. 13, 1841. Slavery was abolished in 1857.

KOREISH.—This celebrated Arabian tribe was descended from Fihr, born about 200, and was elevated to importance by Kussai, born about 400. The custody of the Caaba (q. v.) was usurped by the Koreishites in 400, and Mohammed was born a member of the tribe in 570. In 613 he was vigorously opposed in his religious reformation by his fellow Koreishites, and a war resulted, which terminated in the total defeat of his opponents in 630. Milman says the Koreishite tribe was a kind of hierarchy, exercising religious supremacy.

KORNEUBURG (Treaty) was concluded between Frederick III., Emperor of Germany, and Mathias Corvinus, King of Bohemia, Dec. 1, 1477. Frederick III. agreed to invest him with the crown and to pay 100,000 ducats towards the expenses of the war against Ladislaus VI.

KÖSLIN, or CÖSLIN (Prussia), the ancient Cholin, destroyed by fire in 1718, was restored by Frederick William I. (1713—40).

KOSLOV.—(See EUPATORIA.)

KOSTROMA.—(See COSTROMA.)

KOTAH (Hindostan).—A treaty was concluded between the state of Kotah and the East India Company, relative to the succession, in 1817. The town of Kotah was the scene of the murder of Major Burton, of the 40th Bengal Infantry, Oct. 15, 1857, during the mutiny, when his two sons were also put to death, and the residency was plundered and burned. Gen. Roberts captured it March 30, 1858.

KOTRIAH (Battle).—Lieut. Marshall, at the head of 900 sepoys and 60 horse, defeated 4,000 Beloochees, posted among the hills of Kotriah, in Scinde, Dec. 1, 1840.

KOTZIM.—(See CHOCZIM.)

KOULEFTSCHA (Battle).—The Russians, after a desperate contest, in which victory wavered from one side to the other, defeated the Turks in the valley of Kouleftscha, June 11, 1829.

KOUSADAC (Battle).—The Mongols defeated the Sultan of Iconium at Kousadac in 1244.

KOUYUNJIK (Assyria).—Excavations for the recovery of ancient sculptures, &c., were commenced here in 1841 by M. Botta, French consul at Mosul. It is believed that the ruins formed part of the city of Nineveh (q. v.).

KOWNO (Russia) was reached by the invading army of Napoleon I., June 23, 1812, and taken possession of by the advanced guard the following morning. The Russian commander Platoff captured 3,000 French soldiers here Dec. 12, and the remnant of the "Grand Army" commenced their retreat from this point Dec. 13.

KRAJOVA (Wallachia).—The Russians suffered a defeat from the Turks near this town of Wallachia, Sep. 26, 1828. Here their army commenced its retreat from Turkey, April 24, 1854.

KRASNOÏ (Battles).—The French defeated the Russians here Aug. 10, 1812.——The Russians gained an important victory over the French army under Napoleon I., near this town, in Russia, Nov. 17, 1812. No less than 6,000 prisoners fell into the hands of the conquerors, together with part of the emperor's archives.

KREFELD.—(See CREVELDT, Battle.)

KREMLIN (Moscow) was erected as a palace by the Grand-duke of Russia in 1367, and fortified in 1492. Napoleon I. reached the new palace, built in 1743, Sep. 14, 1812. He remained here till Sep. 16, when the conflagration reached the Kremlin, and it was soon reduced to ashes. Another palace was built upon its site in 1816.

KREUTZNACH (Prussia).—This town was stormed by Gustavus II. (Adolphus) in 1632. The French drove the Austrians from this place, Nov. 30, 1795. Its salt-springs were discovered in 1478.

KROIA, or KROJA (European Turkey).—Amurath II. led two expeditions on a large scale against this town in 1449 and 1450, and they were both unsuccessful. The Turks were repulsed in another attempt in 1477. By a treaty signed Jan. 26, 1479, the Venetians ceded it to the Turks.

KROTZKA (Battle).—The Austrians were defeated by the Turks at this place July 22, 1739.

KULM.—(See CULM, Battle.)

KUNOBITZA (Battle).—John Huniades defeated the Turks at this place, in the Balkan, Dec. 24, 1443.

KURDISTAN (Asia), the ancient Cordyene, or Gordyene, a district inhabited by the wandering tribes of the Carduchi. Originally subject to Persia, it was, in the time of Alexander III., annexed to Syria. The Parthians conquered it in the 3rd century before Christ. Lucullus passed the winter here B.C. 68, and Pompey annexed it to Rome, B.C. 64. It again passed under the dominion of the kings of Persia, from whom it was wrested by Galerius, in 298. It was restored to Chosroes I., by Jovian, by the treaty of July, 363, and it afterwards fell to the caliphs of Bagdad. In 1258 Kurdistan was conquered by the Mongols, and in 1388 by the Tartars under Tamerlane. The greater portion of the country was conquered by the Turks in 1515, Persia retaining only about a fourth. The Kurds remained in a state of insubordination. They massacred the Nestorian Christians in 1846, destroying 67 towns and villages. The Sultan despatched an army into Kurdistan in 1846, when the murderers of the Christians were punished, and the country was reduced to subjection.

KURILE ISLES (Pacific Ocean.)—This group of 26 islands was first discovered by the Russians in 1713. Five of the islands were known in 1720, and the discovery of the whole archipelago was completed in 1778. Capt. Golownin, of the Russian navy, was sent to survey them in 1811. The Russians formed a settlement on one of them, called Urup, in 1828; and the three southernmost islands of the group are occupied by the Japanese.

KURRACHEE (Hindostan).—This seaport town of Scinde, celebrated for its pearl-fishery, was bombarded and taken by the British, Feb. 3, 1839.

KUSTRIN, or CÜSTRIN (Prussia).—This strongly fortified town, on the Oder, was besieged Aug. 15, and burned by the Russians Aug. 22, 1758. The battle of Zorndorf, near Küstrin, was fought between the Prussians and the Russians, Aug. 25, 1758. It lasted from 9 in the morning until 7 at night, and neither side could boast of having obtained a victory. The town, rebuilt by Frederick II., was taken by the French in 1806, and occupied by them till March 30, 1814, when it surrendered to the allies. The fortifications have been much strengthened since 1815.

KUTCH.—(See CUTCH.)

KUTSCHOUC-KAINARDJI (Bulgaria).—A treaty of peace between Russia and Turkey was concluded at this village, on the Danube, July 10, 1774 (O.S.). It was confirmed by the leaders of the armies, July 15. By an edict of Catherine II., March 19, 1775 (O.S.), fixing a day of thanksgiving for the re-establishment of peace, the ratifications were said to have been exchanged at Constantinople, Jan. 13, 1775 (O.S.). The Crimea was declared independent, and the free navigation of the Black Sea guaranteed. It is often called the treaty of Kainardji.

KUTTENBERG (Bohemia).—Silver was found in the neighbourhood in 1237, and silver groschen were first struck here in 1300.

KYTHUL (Hindostan).—This district lapsed to Great Britain in 1843, through failure in the succession.

L.

LAALAND, or LOLLAND (Sea-fight).—The combined Dutch and Swedish squadrons defeated the Danes off this island in the Baltic in 1644.

LABARUM, or SACRED STANDARD, was adopted by Constantine I. in memory of the figure of the cross, with the legend "In hoc signo vinces," alleged to have been seen by him shining at midday in the heavens, during his march against Maxentius in 312. This standard was entrusted to a chosen body of 50 men.

LABENTO (Battle).—The Greeks were defeated by the Normans near this river, in Italy, in 1041.

LABIAU, or LIEBAU (Treaty).—By this treaty, signed at Labiau, in Prussia, Nov. 20, 1656, Charles X. (Gustavus) of Sweden recognized Frederick William, Duke of Prussia, and his descendants, as legitimate and independent sovereigns of Prussia. It is regarded as having laid the foundations of the Prussian monarchy.

LABORATORY.—The Royal Laboratory at Woolwich, established early in the century, was reorganized in 1855.

LABOUR (Festival).—The annual celebration of this festival was fixed in the French Revolutionary Calendar of 1793 for Sep. 19.

LABOURERS are defined as servants in agriculture or manufactures, not living within the master's house. The Statute of Labourers, 25 Edw. III. st. 1 (1350), made various regulations respecting wages, and the penalties incurred by refractory servants, and prohibited labourers from moving from one county to another under pain of imprisonment. Hallam (Middle Ages, ch. ix. pt. 2) remarks on this subject: "The Statute of Labourers in 1350 fixed the wages of reapers during harvest at threepence a day without diet, equal to five shillings at present; that of 23 Hen. VI. c. 12, in 1444, fixed the reapers' wages at fivepence and those of common workmen in building at threepence-halfpenny, equal to 6*s.* 8*d.* and 4*s.* 8*d.*; that of 11 Hen. VII. c. 22, in 1496, leaves the wages of labourers in harvest as before, but rather increases those of ordinary workmen. The yearly wages of a chief hind or shepherd by the act of 1444 were £1 4*s.*, equivalent to about £20, those of a common servant in husbandry 18*s.* 4*d.*, with meat and drink; they were somewhat augmented by the statute of 1496." The same writer comes to the conclusion, that the labouring classes, especially those engaged in agriculture, were better provided with the means of subsistence in the reign of Edward III. or of Henry VI. than at present. Conspiracies of workmen to increase their wages or interfere with the prescribed hours of work, were made punishable by fines and the pillory, by 2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 15 (1548). Statutes relating to hiring, wages, keeping, &c., of labourers, were amended by 5 Eliz. c. 4 (1562), which prohibited masters from discharging their servants, or servants from quitting their employers until the term of service agreed upon had expired. It also placed the regulation of the amount of wages in the hands of the justices, sheriffs, mayors, &c., and compelled employers and employed to abide by the appointed rates under severe penalties. In harvest-time artificers were compelled to work, under pain of the stocks, and single women aged between 12 and 40 years were at all times liable to be sent to service. The Labourers' Dwellings Act, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 132 (Aug. 14, 1855), was passed to facilitate the erection of healthy and convenient houses for the working classes by public companies.

LABRADOR (North America) was discovered in 1497, by Sebastian Cabot. Cortereal, a Portuguese, was the first who landed here, in 1500. The Moravians formed a settlement in 1771, with a view of Christianizing the natives. Martin Frobisher, in 1576, was the first Englishman who made a voyage to Labrador.

LABUAN (Indian Archipelago).—This island was ceded to the English Government in 1846, and Sir James Brooke took possession Oct. 28, 1848. The bishopric was founded in 1855.

LABURNUM, or GOLDEN CHAIN TREE, was brought to this country from the Alps before 1596.

LABYRINTH of Arsinoë, near Lake Mœris, in Egypt, said to have been constructed by the kings of Egypt about B.C. 1800, consisted of 3,000 chambers. Herodotus states that it was used as a burial-place for the kings of Egypt. Lepsius explored it in June, 1843. ——The Labyrinth of Crete, near Cnosus (q. v.), the retreat of the fabled Minotaur, is ascribed to Dædalus.——The Labyrinth of Lemnos, described by Pliny, is said to have been supported by 150 columns. Dr. Hunt in vain endeavoured to find some trace of it in 1801. ——The Labyrinth near Clusium, in Etruria, now Chiusi, is supposed by some authorities to be the tomb of Porsenna, who lived B.C. 508. ——The Labyrinth at Hampton Court was erected in the 17th century.

LA CAMORRA.—The origin of this Neapolitan association is unknown. A writer in "Notes and Queries" (3rd s. ii. 409) suggests that it is descended from a society termed Beati Pauli, which appears to have ravaged Italy during the 18th century, and which bore some resemblance to the Vehmic Courts (q. v.) of the Middle Ages.

LACCADIVE ISLANDS (Indian Ocean) called the Laccadives, and by the natives Lakara Islands, were discovered by Vasco de Gama in 1499. The inhabitants are called Moplays.

LACE.—Beckmann is of opinion that lace worked by the needle is much older than that made by knitting. The art probably originated in Italy. A treaty alleged to have been made in 1390 between England and the city of Bruges, but the text of which has not been discovered, is said to contain the earliest mention of lace. In 1454 the women of the mystery of threadworking in London complained of the importation of six foreign women, probably Flemings, who had brought over to England the cut-work or darned lace of the period, which had previously been unknown. "Laces," "laces de file soie enfile," &c., were prohibited in England by 3 Edw. IV. c. 4 (1463), the first public document in which lace is mentioned. The importation of lace into England was prohibited by a French law in 1483. The earliest pattern-book of needlework lace was printed at Cologne in 1527. Beckmann asserts that the knitting of lace is a German invention, due to Barbara Uttmann, of St. Annaberg, and that it was found out before 1561. The oldest pattern-book for making point-lace appeared at Frankfort-on-the-Maine in 1568. It was written by Nicholas Basseus. Designs for "dantelles" first appeared in a pattern-book published at Montbéliard in 1598. The manufacture of pillow-lace, the first patterns for which were published by Mignerak in 1605, was introduced by Flemish refugees into Buckinghamshire about 1626. Hammond, a framework knitter of Nottingham, first attempted to apply the stocking-frame to lace-making in 1768, and after undergoing various improvements, the process was brought to perfection by John Heathcoate, who patented his bobbinet machine in 1809. Jacquard's apparatus was applied to it in 1837. Frost introduced the point machine in 1777. Morley's double locker machine was brought out in 1824.

LACEDÆMON (Greece).—The ancient name of Laconia, and of its capital city, Sparta (q. v.).

LA CHARTREUSE.—(See CARTHUSIANS.

LÄCHOW, LAE-CHOW, or LIAKHOW ISLANDS (Arctic Ocean).—This group, one of which was seen in 1759 or 1760 by the Jakut Eterikan, was first visited by Liakhow in April, 1770. He returned in 1773 to collect furs and mammoth bones, and in 1775 the group was partially surveyed by order of the Russian Government.

LACONIA, or LACONICA (Greece).—This country was originally inhabited by the Leleges, whose kingdom was founded about B.C. 1516. According to tradition, Lacedæmon, the king of Laconia, married Sparta, the daughter of his predecessor, B.C. 1490, and founded a city, which he named after his wife, while his kingdom was known by his own name. The Dorians of Sparta had made themselves masters of the whole of Laconia by the middle of the 8th century. They waged war against the Dorians in Messenia from B.C. 743 to 724, and from B.C. 685 to 668, and the country was annexed to Laconia. Owing to the brief sententious mode of speech practised by the Laconians, the term "laconic" is employed to signify a similar style. (See SPARTA.)

LACQUERING.—(See JAPANNING.)

LACTEAL VESSELS.—Gaspar Asellius, professor of anatomy at Pavia, discovered these vessels in dissecting a dog, July 23, 1622, and announced the fact in 1627. John Wesling gave the first delineation of the lacteals from the human subject in 1634. Pecquet discovered the common trunk of the lacteals and lymphatics in 1647; and Jolyffe, an English anatomist, the distinction between the lacteals and the lymphatics in 1650, and published his discovery in 1652.

LADAK, LADKAH, or MIDDLE THIBET (Asia), was seized by Gholab Singh, ruler of Cashmere, in 1835, and still forms part of his dominions.

LADE (Sea-fight).—The Persians defeated the Ionians off this island, near Miletus, B.C. 494.

LADIES OF THE BEDCHAMBER.—(See LORDS AND LADIES OF THE BEDCHAMBER.)

LADIES' PEACE.—(See CAMBRAY.)

LADOCEA (Battles).—Two battles were fought at this place in Arcadia: the first, between the Mantineans and the Tegeatæ, B.C. 423, though very sanguinary, proved indecisive; the second, between the Achæan League and Cleomenes III., King of Sparta, B.C. 226, terminated in the victory of the latter.

LADRONE, LAZARUS, or THIEVES'

ISLANDS, also called the LADRONES (Pacific Ocean).—This group was discovered by Magalhaens in 1520. The Spaniards formed a settlement in the middle of the 17th century. The Jesuits, who formed a settlement in 1667, called them the Marianna Islands. Anson visited them in 1742.

LADY.—The title properly belongs to the wives of knights and of all superior degrees except the wives of bishops. The term is derived from the Saxon klæf dig, loaf day, because it was formerly the custom for the mistress of the manor to distribute bread to her poorer neighbours at stated intervals. Fosbroke (Antiq.) remarks: "The ladies of knights and baronets were called Dominæ (whence Dame as a title of honour), and also Militissæ, Knightesses, being sometimes so created by knights by a blow upon the back with a sword, and the usual ceremonies. (See CONGRESS, MERCY, MONTESA, MOUNT CARMEL, OUR LADY OF BETHLEHEM, and WOMAN.)

LADY-DAY, or THE ANNUNCIATION.—The 25th of March, the day on which the festival of the Annunciation of the Virgin Mary is held by the Church, received the name of Lady Day in consequence of its being sacred to Our Lady. The feast originated, according to some authorities, in 350, and according to others in the 7th century. Lady-Day was formerly the first day of the year. It was changed for Jan. 1 in France in 1564, in Scotland in 1599, and in England in 1752.

LADY OF ENGLAND.—This title was conferred upon the Empress Maud by a council held at Winchester April 7, 1141.

LAEKEN (Belgium).—The palace of the Kings of Belgium situated in this suburb of Brussels (q. v.), was erected in 1782. Leopold I. died here Dec. 10, and was buried here Dec. 16, 1865.

LAFAYETTE (United States).—This town of Indiana was laid out in 1825.

LAFFELDT, LAWFELD, or VAL (Battle).—Marshal Saxe defeated the allied English, Dutch, and Austrian army at this village, in Holland, July 2, 1747. The allied army lost 6,000 men and 16 guns, whilst the loss of the French amounted to 10,000 men. Louis XV., who witnessed the battle, remarked: "The English have not only paid all, but fought all."

LA FLÈCHE (France).—Henry IV. of France founded a Jesuit college at this town in the department of Sarthe in 1603. The town was seized by the Vendeans twice in 1793.

LA FLORIANO.—(See GALAPAGOS.)

LA FRATTA (Battle).—The Pisans were defeated by the Sicilians in this battle in 1135.

LAGOS (Africa).—This stronghold of the slave-trade was bombarded by a British squadron Dec. 26 and 27, 1851. The forces landed and took possession of the town, which had been deserted by the enemy, Dec. 28, 1851, and it was made an English colony. The island of Lagos was ceded to Great Britain by King Dioceno, Aug. 6, 1861.

LAGOS (Portugal).—An association for the prosecution of African discovery was formed here in 1444. Near the coast Tourville defeated Admiral Rooke, who was convoying the Smyrna fleet, June 27, 1693. The English fleet, commanded by Admiral Boscawen, defeated a French fleet in this bay, Aug. 18, 1759.

LAGOSTA (Adriatic).—An English force of 300 men landed on this small island, then in possession of the French, Jan. 21, 1813. They made preparations to besiege the enemy's principal fort, which capitulated Jan. 29, when the whole island was surrendered to the English.

LA GRANDE CHARTREUSE.—(See CHARTREUSE.)

LA HARPE.—(See BOW ISLAND.)

LA HOGUE (France).—Edward III. landed at this place, near Cherburg, July 10, 1346. A combined Dutch and English fleet engaged the French fleet, commanded by Tourville, off Cape La Hogue, May 19, 1692. The enemy escaped in a fog, but chase was given, and the conflict was renewed May 21, when nearly the whole of the French squadron was destroyed.

LAHORE (Hindostan), the capital of the Punjaub, was taken by Sultan Baber, and became the residence of its Mohammedan conquerors in 1520. It was captured in 1756 by "Jassa the Kalal," as he styled himself on a medal struck in commemoration of the event; and by Shah Zeman, King of Cabul, in 1798, who bestowed it upon his brother Runjeet Singh, in 1799. A present of horses from King William IV. arrived here July 17, 1831. A revolution occurred at Lahore in 1844. A brigade of British troops, under the command of Sir Hugh Gough, occupied the citadel Feb. 22, 1846, and a treaty, placing the Punjaub under English protection, was signed March 9, 1846. It was, with the Punjaub, annexed to British India, March 9, 1849. During the mutiny, Major Spencer and two native officers were murdered here in July, 1857. The railway to Umritsur was opened March 3, 1862; and an exhibition of arts and industry was opened Jan. 20, 1864. Sir John Lawrence, the Viceroy, held a durbar of unprecedented magnificence here Oct. 18, 1864.

LAIBACH.—(See LAYBACH.)

LAITY.—The term was first used in the 2nd century; and at the council held at Rome in 502, laymen were prohibited from interfering in any way in the affairs of the Church.

LA JAULNAIS (Treaty).—The Republicans and the Royalists in La Vendée entered into a treaty at La Jaulnais, for the termination of the civil war, and the pacification of the west of France, Feb. 20, 1795.

LAKE.—(See ASUNDEN, CHAMPLAIN, TRASIMENE, &c.)

LAKE FUCINUS (Italy), situated nearly in the centre of the peninsula, occupied, according to tradition, the site of a submerged city named Archippe. The sudden rising of the waters having caused repeated inundations, a subterranean channel was constructed by Claudius, the completion of which was celebrated by a gladiatorial seafight in 52. This having been suffered by Nero (54—68) to fall into decay, was repaired by Hadrian (117—138), but became choked up during the Middle Ages. Attempts to clear it were ineffectually made in 1240 and subsequently. It was examined and described in 1825 by the Neapolitan engineer Rivera.

LAKE REGILLUS (Battle). — Fought between the Latins and the Romans, according to the traditional account, July 15, B.C. 498 or B.C. 496, the former being defeated. The exiled Tarquin was in the Latin army. Castor and Pollux, the Dioscuri, were represented in the popular lays of Rome as appearing fighting in the Roman ranks, under the form of two gigantic youths, mounted on white steeds. This battle terminates the mythical period in the history of Rome.

LAKE SCHOOL, or LAKISTS. — A term applied about 1809 to the poetry of S. T. Coleridge (1772—July 25, 1834); Southey (1774—March 21, 1843); Wordsworth (1770—April 23, 1850); and others, who at that time were living near the English lakes.

LAMAISM, the religion of Thibet, the origin of which is involved in mystery, is a modification of Buddhism (q. v.). The hierarchy is under the supreme control of two lamas, called the Dalai-lama and the Tesho-lama, or Bogdo-lama, who combine temporal and spiritual authority in a like manner to the popes. This system of government was founded by the Lamaist reformer Tsong-kha-pa, in 1355 or 1357.

LAMBETH ARTICLES, nine in number, of an ultra-Calvinistic character, were drawn up Nov. 10, 1595, by Whitaker, Master of St. John's College, Cambridge, and Regius Professor of Divinity to that University, at the request of Archbishop Whitgift, who sought to impose them on the Church of England. They were suppressed by order of Queen Elizabeth, and so well was the injunction executed, that for many years a copy of them could not be obtained. They were brought forward and rejected at the Hampton Court conferences, Jan. 14, 15, and 16, 1604. The Irish Church adopted them in 1615.

LAMBETH DEGREES.—Previous to the Reformation, the Archbishop of Canterbury held, as legatus natus from the Pope, the right of conferring academical degrees. The privilege was confirmed by 25 Hen. VIII. c. 21 (April 7, 1534).

LAMBETH PALACE (London) was built by Hubert Walter, Archbishop of Canterbury, in 1200, the property having come into possession of the see in 1197. Archbishop Boniface made considerable additions to it in 1250, and the Lollards' Tower was built by Archbishop Chicheley about 1443. The insurrectionists, headed by Wat Tyler, entered the palace, killing the Archbishop, Simon of Sudbury, and Sir Robert Hales, June 14, 1381. Burglars effected an entrance, Aug. 8, 1823. Archbishop Howley made extensive improvements and additions, at a cost of £55,000, in 1833. The new suspension bridge was opened Nov. 11, 1862.

LAME and UNSTABLE PEACE.—(See LONGJUMPEAU.)

LAMEGO (Portugal), the ancient Lamacum, or Lameca, was wrested from the Moors by Ferdinand I. of Castile, in 1038. The cortes of Portugal assembled here in 1143. The Portuguese rebels captured it Dec. 3, 1826.

LAMENTATIONS.—This book of the Old Testament, written by the prophet Jeremiah, referred by many chronologists to about B.C. 627, is by others said to have been written after, and in consequence of, the sack of Jerusalem and captivity of King Zedekiah by Nebuchadnezzar, B.C. 586.

LAMIAN WAR.—Athens, in alliance with other Greek states, made war upon Antipater, governor of Macedon, B.C. 323. He fled to the city of Lamia, in Thessaly, where he was besieged by the allies, whom he finally defeated at the battle of Crannon (q. v.), Aug. 7, B.C. 322.

LAMMAS-DAY.—Aug. 1 is thus denominated, but the origin of the term is involved in obscurity. It is the day of the feast of St. Peter ad Vincula, or St. Peter in bonds, which was instituted in 317, and, according to some authorities, received its title from the Divine commission to Peter, "Feed my lambs." Others state that it is a corruption of the Saxon Loaf-mass, because an annual feast was then celebrated to return thanks for the first-fruits of corn. Lammas-day is one of the four cross quarter-days of the year, Whitsuntide being the first, Lammas the second, Martinmas the third, and Candlemas the fourth.

LA MOLINELLA (Battle).—A sanguinary but undecisive battle was fought near La Molinella, between some Florentine exiles, assisted by the Venetians, and the Florentines, July 25, 1467.

LA MOTHE, or LA MOTTE (France).—This town, after a siege of five months, at which bombs (q. v.) were first used, was taken from the Duke of Lorraine by Marshal de la Force, in 1634. Restored in 1641, it was retaken and destroyed by Villeroy in 1644.

LAMPEDUSA (Mediterranean).—This small island, the ancient Lopadussa, was made a state prison by the King of Naples in 1843.

LAMPETER (Wales). — The college of St. David, at Lampeter, Cardiganshire, for theological students, founded on the site of an ancient castle, by Bishop Burgess, in 1822, was erected in 1827, and incorporated in 1828. A supplementary charter, granting power to confer the degree of B.D., was obtained in Aug., 1852.

LAMPETERS or LAMPETER BRETHREN. —Henry James Prince, who entered St. David's College, Lampeter, in March, 1836, formed this association among his fellow-students. Having, at a meeting at Swansea in June, 1842, put forth claims to be considered as the incarnation of the Holy Ghost, which were repudiated by the majority of the brethren, he seceded from the connection, and established the Agapemone (q. v.).

LAMPS are said to have been invented by the Egyptians; and Herodotus notices a feast of lamps held annually in Egypt. The Jews used lamps in public festivals and religious ceremonies. The Greeks and Romans made them of terra-cotta, bronze, and also of gold and silver. They were kept burning in sepulchres, a practice adopted by the Christians, and which gave rise to the fiction respecting perpetual lamps. Numbers of lamps, of rich and elaborate workmanship, have been found in the ruins of Herculaneum, destroyed Aug. 24, 79. In the 14th century they were made of glass, and were much used in England. They were introduced into Ireland in 1375. The Argand lamp was patented Jan. 5, 1787, and various improvements have since been made.

LANAI.—(See HAWAIIAN ARCHIPELAGO.)

LANARK (Scotland) was the site of a Roman encampment, of which traces are still found. Here the states of the realm were convoked by King Kenneth III. in 978. It was a royal burgh when Malcolm II. came to the throne, in 1003. The Covenanters published their testimony at Lanark in 1682. (See NEW LANARK.)

LANCASHIRE (England).—The south of Lancashire is said to have been inhabited by the Segantii, or Setantii, i.e. "dwellers in the country of water." It formed part of Northumberland from 547 to 926. It contains several traces of Roman roads and stations. The successors of William, Earl of Ferrers, who took the title of Earl of Derby, held the office of lords of the county till 1265, when their lands were forfeited, and bestowed upon Edmund, son of Henry III., who became first Earl of Lancaster. Riots occurred in many parts of Lancashire in the spring of 1826. The Southern division received an additional member by 24 and 25 Vict. c. 112 (Aug. 6, 1861).

LANCASHIRE DISTRESS.—(See COTTON FAMINE.)

LANCASTER (Duchy) was created by Edward III., in favour of Henry Plantagenet, March 6, 1351, and was bestowed upon his son John of Gaunt, Nov. 13, 1362. It was made a county palatine. The duke was to have jura regalia, and power to pardon treasons or outlawries, and make justices of the peace and justices of assize within the county. The lordship of Ripon was annexed to it by 37 Hen. VIII. c. 16 (1645); and the revenue having declined, other lands were granted by 2 & 3 Phil. & Mary, c. 20 (1555). The courts of the duchy of Lancaster were instituted by Edward III. in 1376. The management of the revenues was entrusted to them. Henry Bolingbroke was Duke of Lancaster on his accession to the crown as Henry IV., Sep. 30, 1399. In the first year of his reign he procured an act of parliament, ordering that the duchy of Lancaster, &c., should remain to him and his heirs for ever. It was declared forfeited to the crown in 1461, and was vested in Edward IV. and his heirs, Kings of England, for ever.

LANCASTER (England).—The Roman Longovicus, according to the "Monumenta Britannica," received a charter from King John (1199—1216), with increased privileges from Edward III. (1327—77). The castle, now a gaol, was originally built in the 11th century. The army of the Pretender occupied the town three days, Nov. 6—9, 1715. It was taken by Prince Charles Edward Nov. 24, 1745. The railroad to Preston was opened June 30, 1840, and to Carlisle, Dec. 16, 1846.

LANCASTER (Pennsylvania) was founded in 1730, and incorporated in 1818. The sessions of Congress were removed here on the capture of Philadelphia, Sep. 26, 1777. It was the chief town of the state from 1799 to 1812, when that dignity was transferred to Harrisburg. Franklin College was established in 1787.

LANCASTER GUN.—C. W. Lancaster's improvements were patented July 3, 1849, and Jan. 16, 1851. Eight old cannon were rebored upon this system and employed against Sebastopol. Three burst during the siege (Sep. 26, 1854—Sep. 9, 1855).

LANCASTER HERALD.—This officer, said to have been first appointed by Edward III. in 1360, and made a king-at-arms by Henry IV. (1399—1413), was reduced to his former status by Edward IV. (1461—1483), who afterwards abolished the office. Henry VII. restored it in 1485.

LANCASTERIAN SCHOOLS.—Joseph Lancaster opened his first school in the Borough Road, London, in 1798. He adopted Dr. Bell's monitorial system, which he brought to such perfection that in 1802 he was able to teach 250 boys, with no other assistance than that afforded by the senior pupils. Lancaster published numerous pamphlets in recommendation of the plan, and obtained influential friends, by whose assistance he founded the British and Foreign School Society in 1805. In 1806 he obtained an interview with George III., who subscribed £100 a year towards the extension of the system; and in 1808 he resigned his school into the hands of trustees, in consequence of which it assumed the importance of a public institution. Owing to imprudence in the conduct of his affairs, Lancaster was compelled to emigrate to America in 1818; and he died at New York, in very reduced circumstances, Oct. 24, 1838.

LANCASTER SOUND (Arctic Sea) was discovered by Bylot and Baffin, July 12, 1616, and named after Sir James Lancaster. Parry passed through it in 1819.

LANCASTRIANS AND YORKISTS.—The supporters of Henry VI., of the House of Lancaster, and of Edward, Duke of York, afterwards Edward IV., who contended for the crown of England, 1455—1461, were known by these titles. The struggle is also designated the War of the Roses, the red rose having been the emblem of the Lancastrian, and the white of the Yorkist party.

LANCERS.—Cavalry regiments armed with the lance were introduced into the French army in 1807, 1810, and 1812. These having proved very effective during the Peninsular War, the Prince Regent authorized the arming of the 9th, 12th, 16th, and 23rd regiments of English Light Dragoons as Lancers, Sep. 19, 1816. The 17th Light Dragoons were made Lancers Aug. 20, 1822.

LAND.—The provisions usually inserted in acts authorizing the taking of lands for public undertakings were consolidated by the "Lands Clauses Consolidation Act," 8 Vict. c. 18 (May 8, 1845). (See ACRE OR LAND.)

LANDAU (Bavaria).—Founded by Rodolph of Habsburg, was made a free city of the empire in the 14th century. The fortifications were commenced by Vauban in 1680, and the city was almost entirely destroyed by fire in 1686. Louis William of Baden invested Landau June 16, 1702, the citadel surrendered Sep. 9, and Landau was captured Sep. 10. Tallard besieged it in 1703, and completed its reduction Nov. 14. Marlborough obtained possession of it Nov. 23, 1704. The Austrians expelled the French in 1743. It was frequently assailed towards the close of the 18th century, and it was besieged in 1793 by the Austrians and Prussians, who were eventually compelled to abandon the undertaking. It was ceded to France by the treaty of 1814, but was restored to Germany by that of 1815.

LANDED ESTATES COURT.—This court was erected by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 72 (Aug. 2, 1858), to facilitate the sale and transfer of lands in Ireland. The sittings were appointed to be held in Dublin, under the presidency of three judges, who were ineligible as members of parliament. The authority of the court commenced Nov. 1, 1858. (See ENCUMBERED ESTATES ACT.)

LAND AND EMIGRATION BOARD.—(See EMIGRATION.)

LANDEN (Battle).—At this village, in Belgium, William III. was defeated by Marshal Luxemburg, with a loss of 12,000 men, July 19, 1693 (O. S.). It is called by French writers the battle of Neerwinden.

LANDFRIEDE.—A perpetual public peace under this name, designed to check the warlike operations of the German barons, was established by a diet held at Worms in 1495. It failed in its object, as the predatory habits of the nobility remained unchecked till the 16th century. (See BARONS OF GERMANY.)

LANDGRAVE.—This title originated in the 10th century, and Albert III. was the first of the Habsburg family who styled himself landgrave of Alsace. The margraves of Thuringia assumed the title in the 11th century. The collateral branch of the house of Hesse took it in 1264.

LANDRECY (Flanders).—Francis I. captured this town in 1543. The Emperor Charles V. failed in an attempt to recapture it the same year, and Prince Eugène besieged it, but without success, in 1712. The Prince of Orange invested it April 16, 1794, and it surrendered April 30. The French retook it July 17, 1794.

LANDSHUT (Bavaria).—The Prussians were defeated by the Austrians near this town, June 23, 1760. The attack was made in the dead of night, and the result was a complete victory. St. Martin's church was built in 1450. The university of Ingoldstadt, removed here in 1800, was transferred to Munich in 1826.

LAND-TAX.—The Danegelt (q. v.) was a species of land-tax. The rate now known by the name was first levied by 4 Will. & Mary, c. 1 (1692), to defray the expenses of the war against France. The original rate was three shillings in the pound on the rental, and the tax was continued every year, most frequently at four shillings in the pound, until it was made perpetual by 38 Geo. III. c. 60 (June 21, 1798). The sum fixed by this act as the amount of the land-tax was £2,037,627 9*s.* 0½*d.* The provisions of several acts for the redemption of the land-tax were consolidated by 42 Geo. III. c. 116 (June 26, 1802). By 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 13 (May 17, 1833), the collection, &c., of the tax in Scotland were vested in the commissioners of taxes.

LAND TRANSPORT CORPS, superseding the Ambulance Corps (q. v.), was organized by Col. McMurdo in 1855 to furnish a means of land conveyance for the British troops during the Crimean war. It has since been designated the Military Train.

LANDWEHR, or LAND DEFENCE. — A force under this name was raised in the Austrian empire in 1805. The introduction of a similar system into Prussia, suggested by Major, afterwards Marshal Knesebeck in 1806, was effected by a royal edict, March 17, 1813, which called out in two separate levies all the men from 26 to 32, and from 32 to 39. By the Landwehr-ordnung or Landwehr regulation of April 21, 1815, Prussia was divided into 104 districts, each of which furnished a battalion. Landwehr brigades have been introduced into the regular army, and did much service against the Austrians in 1866.

LANFANANAN. — (See LANPHANANAN, Battle.)

LANGOBARDI.—(See LONGOBARDI.)

LANGRES (France), the ancient Andomatunnum or Lingonum Civitas, was occupied and made the head-quarters of the Prussian and Russian armies during the campaign in France in 1814. (See LINGONUM CIVITAS.)

LANGSIDE (Battle).—Mary, Queen of Scots, having escaped from Lochleven, May 2, 1567, raised some troops, which were defeated at Langside, near Glasgow, May 13, 1567.

LANGUAGE.—Some writers contend that language was revealed from heaven; others that it is of human invention. The latter opinion was prevalent amongst the Greek and Roman philosophers and authors. Hobbes says: "The first author of speech was God himself, that instructed Adam how to name such creatures as he presented to his sight (Gen. ii. 19), for the Scripture goeth no further in this matter. But this was sufficient to induce him to add more names, as the experience and use of the creatures should give him occasion, and to join them in such manner by degrees, as to make himself understood; and so by succession of time so much language might be gotten as he had found use for, though not so copious as an orator or philosopher has need of." The French, Spanish, and Italian languages are derived from the Latin. Francis I. (1515—17) ordered the French language to be used in all public acts, but the change was not fully effected until 1629. Hallam asserts that no industry has hitherto retrieved so much as a few lines of real Italian, till near the end of the 12th century. The transformation of Anglo-Saxon into modern English was gradual. The Anglo-Saxon chronicle ends at 1154. The French language, which was spoken amongst the higher classes in England from the Conquest, fell into disuse in the reign of Edward III., who banished Norman French from the courts of law in 1362. According to a recent estimate there are 3,014 languages and general dialects in the world: viz., 587 in Europe, 937 in Asia, 226 in Africa, and 1,264 in America. Amongst the most celebrated linguists may be mentioned Arias Montanus, the Spaniard who completed the Antwerp Polyglott Bible in 1572; and James Crichton, commonly called the Admirable Crichton (1560—July, 1583), both of whom are said to have known from 12 to 15 languages. Sir William Jones (Sep. 28, 1746—April 27, 1794) is believed to have known 28 languages. Joseph Caspar Mezzofanti (Sep. 17, 1774—March 15, 1849), whom Byron termed "a walking polyglot, a monster of languages, and a Briareus of parts of speech," is said to have known 120 languages. Though this statement may be exaggerated, he was conversant with above 50, and was the greatest linguist the world ever knew. Berthold George Niebuhr, born at Copenhagen (Aug. 27, 1776—Jan. 2, 1831), was in 1807 acquainted with 20 languages, and afterwards added to the number. (See ENGLISH, FRENCH, and GREEK LANGUAGES, &c.)

LANGUEDOC (France), under the Romans, formed a portion of Gallia Narbonensis, and enjoyed the freedom of Italy. In the Middle Ages it was known as Septimania, from its seven cathedral churches, and was ceded by Honorius to the Goths in 409. The Saracens, who had succeeded them, were driven out by Charles Martel in 725. In the 11th and 12th centuries the Albigensian opinions prevailed in Languedoc. Part of Languedoc was ceded to France in 1229, and the remainder was annexed in 1270. Languedoc had its own provincial assembly, and retained the right of regulating its own taxation till 1789. Above 100,000 Huguenots, of whom about 10,000 perished at the stake, were put to death after the revocation of the edict of Nantes in 1685. The inhabitants of Languedoc took up arms on the return of Napoleon I. from Elba in 1815.

LANGUE D'OC and LANGUE D'OIL, or D'OUI.—In the 11th century two languages were spoken in France, the former the Provençal, or the Romance, in the south, and the latter the Langue d'Oil, or d'Oui, in the north. The use of the Langue d'Oc began to decline towards the end of the 13th century.

LANPHANANAN (Battle).—Macbeth is said, though on doubtful authority, to have been slain at this place in Scotland, in 1056, about two years after his alleged defeat at Dunsinane (q. v.). According to other accounts Macbeth died Dec. 5, 1056.

LANSCRONA, or LANDSKRONA (Battle).—Christian V. of Denmark sustained a severe defeat from Charles XI. of Sweden at this place in Sweden, July 14, 1677.

LANSDOWN (Battle).—The Royalists defeated Sir William Waller at this place, near Bath, July 5, 1643.

LANSING (United States).—This town became the capital of Michigan in 1847.

LANSQUENETS, or lance-men, from lanzknechte, founded by Maximilian I. (1493—1519), played an important part in the European wars of the 16th century.

LANTERNS, or LANTHORNS, were made of horn by the Greeks and Romans; sometimes skin was used, to allow of the transmission of the light. Aldhelm, Bishop of Sherborne, mentions a glass lantern, in 705. Asser, in his life of Alfred 871—901), relates that this king ordered a lantern to be constructed of wood and white ox-horn, which, when planed thin, is almost as transparent as glass. Lanterns for military purposes are said to have been devised by the Emperor Alexius (II.) Comnenus, in 1180.

LANTHANIUM.—This metal was discovered by Mosander, who gave it this name because it had been so long concealed, in 1839.

LAOCOON.—This celebrated Greek statue, the production of the Rhodian sculptors, Agesander, Polydorus, and Athenodorus, who flourished in the reign of Titus (79—81), was found among the ruins of the baths of Titus at Rome in 1506, and is preserved in the Vatican. The subject of the group is the death of the Trojan priest Laocoon and his two sons by serpents, sent against them by Minerva (Æneid, ii. 200). It was carried to Paris, but restored to Rome in 1814.

LAODICEA, or LAODICEIA (Phrygia), formerly called Diospolis and Rhoas, was rebuilt, and named after his wife Laodice, by Antiochus Theus, B.C. 260. To the church of this city one of the seven epistles (Revelation iii.) was addressed in 90. It suffered frequently from earthquakes, having been nearly destroyed in 65 and 494, was captured by the crusaders in 1199, and by the Turks in 1255. It was reduced to ruins in 1402. Councils were held here in 366 and 481. It was called Laodicea ad Lycum, to distinguish it from Laodicea Combusta, one of the five cities built by Seleucus I. (B.C. 312—280), and named after his mother Seleuca.

LAON (Combats).—Napoleon I. sustained a check at this place, in the north of France, from the Allies under Blucher, March 9 and 10, 1814. The French lost 6,000 men and 46 cannon in the conflict, and were compelled to retreat to Soissons. The Allies lost about 4,000 men. (See CRAONNE, Battle.)

LAON (France).—This ancient town, believed by some to be identical with the Bibrax spoken of by Cæsar, received Christianity in the 3rd century, and was the scene of an ecclesiastical council in 948. The Gothic cathedral was consecrated Sep. 6, 1114. In 1419 Laon was taken by the English, who restored it to the French in 1429. Henry IV. of France took it after several engagements in 1594, and erected a citadel and other fortifications. The ruins of the leaning tower, displaced by an earthquake in 1696, were removed in 1832.

LAOS or SHAN COUNTRY (Asia).—This central region of India, beyond the Ganges, after enjoying a long independence under its own rulers, was seized in the 18th century by the Siamese, who established a vice-royalty. The Burmese were assisted by 15,000 of the inhabitants in their operations against the British in 1825.

LAPLAND, or LAND OF THE LAPPS (Europe).—This, the most northern country of Europe, is first spoken of in the works of Saxo Grammaticus, who flourished in the 12th century, and it was very imperfectly known even in the 16th century. Lapland was originally divided into Russian, Danish, and Swedish Lapland; but the three districts were united in 1814. Admiral Little explored the northern coasts in 1822 and 1823.

LA PLATA.—(See PLATA, LA.)

LA PRESE (Battle).—The Italian National Guard drove the Austrians from their cantonments at this place, on the Stelvio, July 11, 1866.

LARENTALIA, LARENTINALIA, or LAURENTALIA.—These festivals, instituted at Rome about B.C. 621, commenced Dec. 23, were held in honour of Acca-Larentia, nurse of Romulus and Remus, or of a courtezan who flourished in the reign of Ancus Martius.

LARES AND PENATES.—The public worship of the lares and penates, or the spirits of good men, instituted at Rome by Servius Tullius (B.C. 578—534), was restored by Augustus Cæsar (B.C. 27—A.D. 14). It also formed an important element in the private and domestic life of the Romans through every period of their history.

LARGER CATECHISM.—(See CATECHISM.)

LARGS (Battle).—At this place, on the Clyde, Alexander III. of Scotland defeated the Norwegians, led by their king, Haco, Oct. 3, 1263.

LARISSA (Turkey), the Turkish Yenitschir, the capital of Thessaly, is supposed to have been founded by Acrisius, B.C. 1344, and took part with the Athenians in the Peloponnesian war, B.C. 431—404. Antiochus the Great made an unsuccessful attempt to take it B.C. 191, and Bohemond failed in a similar effort, in 1083.

LA ROCHE ABEILLE (Battle).—The Roman Catholic forces were defeated at this place, in France, by the Protestants, under Coligni and Henry de Bearn, in 1569.

LA ROCHE DARIEN (Battle).—Charles of Blois, Duke of Britanny, was defeated and made prisoner at this place, in France, by Jane of Montfort, June 20, 1347.

LA ROTHIERE (Battle), fought at this place, in France, between the French, commanded by Napoleon I., and the allied Austrian, Prussian, and Russian army under Blucher, Feb. 1, 1814. The contest was waged with great heroism on both sides; but the French were at length compelled to withdraw, leaving the field of battle in the possession of the allies. The French lost 6,000 men, and 73 pieces of cannon.

LARYNGOSCOPE.—Dr. Liston in 1840 stated the possibility of obtaining a view of the back of the throat, &c., by means of a speculum, and Dr. Warden of Edinburgh showed the larynx in 1845 by means of a spatula and reflecting prism. In 1855 Garcia published a series of laryngoscopical observations on the human voice, and in 1857 Professor Czermak of Pesth commenced researches which resulted in the invention of a laryngoscope employing artificial light, which he exhibited to the Medical Society of Vienna, April 9, 1859.

LAS GARZAS.—(See ARIPONIANS.)

LAS NAVAS DE TOLOSA.—(See TOLOSA.)

LASWAREE (Battle).—A desperate encounter between the British, commanded by Lord Lake, and the Mahrattas, occurred at this village, near Delhi, in Hindostan, Nov. 1, 1803. The former were victorious.

LATAKIA, or LADAKIYEH (Syria), the ancient Laodicea ad Mare, was founded by Seleucus I. Nicator, about B.C. 300, and named after his mother. Dolabella took refuge here from Cassius, and was the cause of much destruction to the city in 43. The remains of an aqueduct, built by Herod the Great about B.C. 10, are still to be seen; and a triumphal arch, believed to have been erected in honour of Septimius Severus, about 200, is in a state of great perfection. It was nearly destroyed by an earthquake, May 16, 1796.

LATERAN (Rome).—This name, derived from the old Roman family of the Laterani, whose chief Plautius, implicated in the Piso Conspiracy, was executed by Nero in 65, was applied to their palace, presented by Constantine I. to the popes. The greater part of the Lateran palace was destroyed by fire in 1308. Gregory XI., on restoring the seat of the papacy from Avignon to Rome, in 1377, took up his abode at the Vatican. The church of St. John of Lateran, called "the Mother and Head of all the churches of the city and the world," built by Constantine I., was dedicated to the Saviour. Lucius II., who rebuilt it in the 12th century, dedicated it to John the Baptist, and it is celebrated for the councils held in it Oct. 5—31, 649; Nov. 1, 864; in August, 900; Jan. 31, 993; Feb. 12, 1111; March 18—23, 1112; March 5, 1116; March 18 to April 5, 1123 (ninth general); April 20, 1139 (tenth general); March 5—19, 1179 (eleventh general); Nov. 11—30, 1215 (twelfth general); and May 3, 1512, to March 16, 1517, by some called the nineteenth general. Every newly-elected pope takes possession of this church in great state, and bestows his blessing upon the people from its balcony. A new palace, adjoining the church, was built by Sixtus V. in 1586.

LATHAM or LATHOM HOUSE (Lancashire).—The Countess of Derby defended this place against the Parliamentary forces from Feb. 28 until May 27, 1644, when it was relieved by Prince Rupert. The Parliamentary forces renewed the siege in July, 1645, and captured it Dec. 2.

LATHE.—Diodorus Siculus attributes the invention to a nephew of Dædalus, named Talus, about B.C. 1240; but Pliny states that it was first used by Theodore of Samos, about B.C. 600. The classical authors make frequent mention of the lathe. The side rest is described in the French Encyclopædia in 1772, and Maudslay invented one in 1794. Roberts invented the screw lathe in 1816, Clement improved the side rest in 1818 and received the gold Isis medal of the Society of Arts for the improvement in 1827.

LATIN EMPIRE.—The Crusaders captured Constantinople April 9, 1204, and founded the Latin Empire of the East, which was overthrown by Michael (VIII.) Palæologus, July 25, 1261, who restored the Eastern or Greek Empire. A list of Latin emperors is given under Eastern Empire.

LATIN LANGUAGE.—Originally spoken in Latium by the Latins (q. v.), was afterwards adopted at Rome, to which city it was for many years practically restricted. Cicero (B.C. 106—43) mentions that in his time Greek was the language used by almost every people. Afterwards the Romans permitted foreigners to employ it, and even enforced its use by law. On the removal of the government to Constantinople in 330, Latin was retained as the official language, but it was gradually neglected till Greek again became nearly universal. Colloquial Latin was already much corrupted in the 6th century. Charlemagne, on succeeding in 800 to the Empire of the West, ordered all law proceedings to be conducted in Latin. This practice continued for several centuries until, in consequence of numerous difficulties, French was generally employed, both on the continent and in England. During the Dark Ages, Latin suffered from the common neglect of learning, the dialects employed by the monks and schoolmen having become much corrupted. The revival of letters about the 15th century led to a renewed study of the ancient classic authors and a consequent restoration of pure Latin, which became the language generally used by philosophers and theologians. (See DICTIONARY, GRAMMAR, LAW, ROMAN LITERATURE, &c.)

LATINS, or LATINI, signified originally the inhabitants of Latium (q. v.).

LATITAT.—This writ, formerly employed in personal actions in the King's (or Queen's) Bench, was abolished by 2 Will. IV. c. 39 (May 23, 1832). The name, according to Wharton, was derived from a supposition that the defendant lurked and was hid, and could not be found in the county of Middlesex in which the court is held, to be taken by bill, but had gone into some other county, to the sheriff of which this writ was directed, to apprehend him there.

LATITUDE and LONGITUDE.—Eratosthenes, the librarian of Alexandria (B.C. 223—194), made some advance towards an accurate measurement of latitude, and, after him, Hipparchus, B.C. 162, who showed how longitude might be determined by attention to eclipses of the sun and moon. The principles laid down by Hipparchus were successfully applied by Ptolemy in 140, in his great geographical work. A reward of 1,000 crowns was offered by the King of Spain, in 1598, for the discovery of a method of determining longitude; and about the same time the States-general of Holland offered 10,000 florins for the same object. The British Government offered £20,000 for a like purpose in 1714, and £5,000 for a chronometer to keep time within certain limits. Harrison, after much delay and many disputes, gained the prize for his timepiece in 1767. Rewards of various amounts have been granted from time to time by parliament for improved timepieces. The act of 1774 was repealed by 9 Geo. IV. c. 66 (July 15, 1828). A method of finding the longitude by means of the electric telegraph was brought to perfection by Airy in 1847.

LATITUDINARIANS.—This term was used about the close of the 17th century to designate some divines who endeavoured to act as mediators between the Episcopalians and the Presbyterians. Hales, Chillingworth, Burnet, and Tillotson belonged to this party. In the reign of Charles II. (1660—1685) the Latitudinarians attained the highest positions in the Church.

LATIUM (Italy).—This country of central Italy derived its name from the city Latium, said to have been founded by King Latinus B.C. 1240. Æneas, according to the legend, settled here with a colony of Trojans B.C. 1181, and the new colonists and aboriginal inhabitants, having united into one nation under his government, were known as the Latins. They formed a confederacy of towns, with Alba Longa (q. v.) at their head; and after the destruction of that town by the Romans, B.C. 665, the whole territory was reduced to subjection. The Latins rebelled B.C. 502, and a treaty was concluded between them and the Romans B.C. 493, by which their independence was acknowledged, and an alliance concluded between the two powers. They joined other states against Rome, and the last war waged against them commenced B.C. 340, and terminated B.C. 338 in the defeat of the Latins, after which time they ceased to exist as an independent people. The Roman franchise was B.C. 91 bestowed upon all people of Italy who were allies of Rome.

LA TRAPPE.—(See TRAPPISTS.)

LATROCINIUM, or Meeting of Robbers, was the term applied by Leo I. to the council held at Ephesus, Aug. 8, 449, in favour of Eutychus, the decree of which was supported by Theodosius II.

LATTER DAY SAINTS.—This term has been applied to the Fifth Monarchy Men, and in more modern times to the Mormonites (q. v.).

LAUDANUM, or TINCTURE OF OPIUM (q. v.), is mentioned in a manuscript diary Oct., 1601.

LAUENBURG, or SAXE-LAUENBURG (Prussia).—This duchy, taken from the Wends by Henry the Lion, Duke of Saxony (1139—1180), passed by inheritance in 1689 to the Duke of Brunswick, through whom it descended to Hanover. Seized in 1803 by the French, it was included in 1810 in the department of Bouches-de-l'Elbe. In 1815 it was restored to Hanover, which ceded it to Prussia, and it was given to Denmark in exchange for Pomerania and Rügen, June 4. By the convention of Gastein (q. v.), Aug. 14, 1865, it was transferred to Prussia for 2,500,000 Danish dollars. William I. converted the inhabitants into Prussians by patent Sep. 13, and took formal possession Sep. 15.

LAUFFEN (Battle).—Philip, Landgrave of Hesse, with an army of 25,000 men, defeated the forces of Ferdinand, King of the Romans, at Lauffen, near Heilbronn in Würtemberg, May 13, 1534.

LAUNCESTON (Tasmania), ranking next in importance to the capital, Hobart Town (q. v.), was founded in 1804, and made a free port in 1845.

LAUREL.—The common laurel was brought into this country from the Levant before 1629; the Portugal laurel from Portugal before 1648; and the Alexandrian laurel from Portugal before 1713. The royal bay-tree was brought from Madeira in 1665, and the glaucous laurel from China in 1806.

LAURENTALIA.—(See LARENTALIA.)

LAURUSTINUS.—This shrub was brought to England from the south of Europe before 1596.

LAUSANNE (Switzerland), the capital of the canton Vaud, was a Roman station. The cathedral, founded in the 10th, was not completed until the 13th century. Gregory X. consecrated it in 1275. Rodolph I. had an interview here with Gregory X. Oct. 6, 1275. In the church of St. Francis a council was held, April 10, 1449. The university was founded in 1535. A memorable controversy, which terminated in the adhesion of the north-western portion of Switzerland to the Reformation, took place in the cathedral in 1536. The academy was founded in 1537, and printing is said to have been carried on in 1556. Gibbon resided at Lausanne from June 30, 1753, to April 11, 1758, again from May, 1763, to April, 1764, and with little intermission from 1782 till June, 1793. Here a great part of the "History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire" was written. The French seized Lausanne Jan. 28, 1798.

LAUTULÆ, or AD LAUTULAS (Battle).—The Samnites defeated the Roman army, commanded by Fabius, at this pass, between Tarracina and Fundi, B.C. 315.

LAVAL (France).—This town was gradually formed round an old castle, destroyed by the Northmen in the 9th century. The church was built in 1040. Having been rebuilt, it was captured by Lord Talbot in Oct., 1466, but the French regained possession in 1467. The Vendeans captured it in 1793, and their leader, Henry de la Rochejaquelein, defeated the republican forces at a short distance from the town in Oct.

LA VALETTA (Malta).—This city was commenced by Sir John de la Valette, grand master of the Knights of Malta, in 1566, and finished Aug. 18, 1571. It capitulated to the French fleet under Admiral Brueys, June 12, 1798, when Malta and its dependencies were ceded to the republic. The inhabitants rose in revolt in Sep., 1798, and the French garrison retired within the walls of the fortress, where they were blockaded by the English, and were compelled by famine to surrender, Sep. 5, 1800.

LAVAUR (France), one of the strongholds of the Albigenses, was captured by Simon De Montfort in 1211, when a wholesale slaughter ensued. Councils were held here in 1213 and July 6, 1368.

LA VENDÉE (France).—The inhabitants of this portion of France rose against the revolutionary party in 1791, and erected the standard of royalty March 10, 1793. Led by Henry de la Rochejaquelein, the Vendeans stormed Thouars, near Saumur, taking 6,000 prisoners, May 5. They sustained a defeat at Fontenay, May 15; stormed Saumur June 7; failed in an attack upon Nantes June 20, but regained courage and had established the royalist ascendancy by the end of July. They failed in an attack upon Granville Nov. 15 and 16; beat off their assailants at Mans Dec. 12, were in turn defeated at Mans Dec. 13, and escaped to Laval. Marceau, with Tilly and Kleber, annihilated their army at Savenay Dec. 22. Early in 1794 they were joined by the Chouans (q. v.) and gained several battles. Henry de la Rochejaquelein fell in a skirmish at the village of Trementine March 4. They won a battle at La Roulière Sep. 5, at Fréliqué Sep. 15. Negotiations were carried on at La Jaunais in Feb. 1795, and a treaty was signed April 20. The final pacification of the province was effected by the treaty of Luçon Jan. 17, 1800, nearly 1,000,000 victims having fallen in the struggle. During the "Hundred Days" the inhabitants of this district again rose in support of the Bourbon cause, but their army was defeated at Mathes or Croix de Vic, June 4, 1815.

LAVENDER was introduced into England from the south of Europe before 1568. To lay in lavender was formerly a cant phrase for pawning. The plant was considered an emblem of affection.

LAVIS (Battles).—The Austrians defeated the French in an attack upon their position near this river, in the Italian Tyrol, Nov. 1, 1796.—The French gained a victory over the Austrians on the same river, March 20, 1797.—The Tyrolese sustained a defeat here in 1809.

LAW.—The earliest system of laws is said to have been that which Phoroneus introduced in Argos, B.C. 1753. The Jewish laws were promulgated by Moses, B.C. 1491. Lycurgus legislated for Sparta, about B.C. 776; Draco for the Athenians, B.C. 621; and Solon, B.C. 594. The civil or Roman law was founded by Servius Tullius, B.C. 566, and amended by the Twelve Tables, B.C. 450. The ancient Britons were governed by certain fixed laws, which were framed by their chiefs and Druids, and Sir William Dugdale states that Malmutius Dunwallo, who began to reign B.C. 444, was the first British lawgiver. Ethelbert published a system in 600, and Ina one in 692. Alfred arranged the common law (q. v.) in 886. Athelstan promulgated a code in 928, and Edgar in 970; and in 1050 Edward the Confessor consolidated the British, Saxon, and Danish laws into a single system, which was confirmed by William the Conqueror in 1070. Stephen's charter of general liberties was granted in 1136. A modification of the Canon law (q. v.) was introduced into England in 1140, the Constitutions of Clarendon (q. v.) were established in 1164, and Magna Charta (q. v.) was granted in 1215. The English laws were much improved by Edward III., who has been called the English Justinian. Law pleadings were ordered to be in English by 36 Edw. III. c. 15 (1362), and the civil law was superseded by the common law, except in the ecclesiastical courts, in 1379. By 4 Geo. II. c. 26 (1731), all proceedings in courts of justice in England and Scotland were ordered to be in English. (See Agrarian Laws, Brehon Law, Incorporated Law Society, &c.)

LAW COURTS.—By 28 Vict. c. 48 (June 19, 1865), called the Courts of Justice Building Act, Government was empowered to raise funds for the erection of new law courts in the metropolis, by contributing £1,000,000 stock from the surplus interest fund, and by a grant of £200,000, as the price of the existing courts and offices, to be transferred to the Commissioners of Public Works and Buildings. The Courts of Justice Concentration (Site) Act, 28 Vict. c. 49 (June 19, 1865) enabled the commissioners to acquire lands in London for the purposes of the new works.

LAW SOCIETY CLUB (London), in connection with the Incorporated Law Society (q. v.), was established in 1832.

LAWFELD.—(See Laffeld, Battle.)

LAWN was introduced into England during the reign of Elizabeth (1558—1603), being used for the large ruffs then in fashion.

LAWRENCE, ST. (North America).—This Gulf was first explored by Cortereal in 1500. Jacques Cartier surveyed it in 1535.

LAW'S BANK (Paris originated in the permission obtained by a daring speculator, named John Law, to establish a bank in Paris, May 20, 1716. It was dissolved by the regent, and merged into the Royal Bank, June 24, 1718. A patent, granting possession of the country of the Mississippi, was secured at the same time. It took the title of the Company of the Indies, and the mint of France was handed over to it July 25, 1719. The right of farming the whole of the public revenue was conceded to this company Aug. 27. In the month of November the shares were sold at sixty times their original price. It was ascertained, May 1, 1720, that the bank had circulated notes representing a sum of one hundred and ten millions sterling, and an edict was issued, reducing them in value one-half, May 21. Immediate ruin followed, and John Law, who resigned his office of comptroller-general May 29, 1720, died in poverty in March 1729.

LAWYER.—Previous to the Norman conquest few persons were learned in the law, except ecclesiastics, who were permitted to practise it without restraint until 1217, when Richard Poore, Bishop of Salisbury, prohibited them from pleading in secular courts. (See ATTORNEY, BARRISTERS, &c.)

LAY ABBOTS.—(See ABBACOMITES.)

LAYBACH, or LAIBACH (Austria), the ancient Æmona, was taken by the French, March 17, 1797, and again June 3, 1809. It was recaptured by the Austrians in July, 1809. A congress was held here, attended by the Emperors of Russia and Austria, and the Kings of Prussia and Naples, Jan. 8, 1821. They signed a treaty, in which they engaged to oppose the revolutionary movement in Naples, Feb. 2, 1821. (See CARBONARI.) This treaty formed the subject of an animated discussion in both houses of the English Parliament Feb. 19 and 21, 1821. The congress of Laybach broke up May 21.

LAY BROTHERS AND SISTERS. — The practice of admitting uneducated persons, termed lay brothers and sisters, into the convents, to assist in the harder kind of work, commenced in the 11th century.

LAYER'S CONSPIRACY to seize the Tower, the Bank, and the Exchequer, and to proclaim the Pretender, was formed in 1722 by a young barrister named Layer, Bishop Atterbury, Carte the historian, a non-juring clergyman named Kelly, Plunkett the Jesuit, and others. The papers of the conspirators were intercepted, and Kelly was arrested May 21. Layer and others were taken shortly afterwards. Atterbury was seized Aug. 24. A select committee was appointed to examine into the matter. Layer was found guilty, and executed at Tyburn, May 17, 1723. A bill of pains and penalties was passed against Atterbury, and it received the royal signature May 27. Atterbury quitted England for France in June, 1723, and he died in Paris, Feb. 15, 1732.

LAZARETTO.—This name, applied to the buildings where crews and passengers of ships suspected of contagion perform quarantine, is derived from St. Lazarus, the patron saint of lepers. The first was established at Venice during the plague of 1423. By 6 Geo. IV. c. 78, s. 18 (June 27, 1825), persons escaping from a lazaretto are liable to a penalty of £200.

LAZARITES.—This order of priests, founded by Vincent de Paul in 1624, and charged with the care of the sick, was confirmed by Urban VIII. in 1631. They exerted much influence in France just before the political changes of 1830.

LAZARO, ST. (Battle).—The French and Spaniards attacked the Austrian and Piedmontese camp at St. Lazaro, about 22 miles from Piacenza, at 11 at night, June 4, 1746. After a fiercely-contested struggle of nine hours' duration the French and Spaniards were compelled to retire, leaving 6,000 killed, and nearly 9,000 wounded, on the field of battle.

LAZARUS, ST.—This military and religious order was established by the Crusaders at Jerusalem, for the purpose of affording relief to lepers, in 1119, and confirmed by Pope Alexander IV. in 1255. Louis VII. (1137—80 introduced the order into France, and it declined as leprosy disappeared. The Italian order was united with the Hospitallers in 1484, the Savoy branch with that of St. Maurice in 1572, and the French branch with the order of St. Michael in 1693.

LAZI. — This Slavonian tribe inhabited Colchis, in Asia Minor, to which they gave the name of Lazica. They first appear in history in 456, when their king, Gobazes, was defeated by the Emperor Marcianus. They were converted to Christianity in 522, and rebelled against the Romans in 542, but returned to their allegiance in 549. In 550 they were attacked by the Persians, who subdued a great part of the country in 553. The Persians were finally defeated by the combined efforts of the Roman and Lazic troops in 556.

LAZZARONI.—This name is derived from Lazarus, the sick man mentioned in the Gospels, and is used to designate the lower orders of the people in Naples. The hospital of St. Lazarus is devoted to the service of the poorer classes, or lazzaroni. They aided Masaniello in the revolution of 1647. They used to elect yearly a head or chief Lazzaro, who was formally acknowledged by the government, which, by this means, was better able to control and wield at will his turbulent adherents, 50,000 or 60,000 in number.

LEA.—The Danes sailed up this river and built a fort, probably near Ware, in 895. The Londoners were defeated in an attack upon it in 896. In the same year Alfred cut another channel for the water, and thus left the Danish fleet aground, whereupon the Danes retired into Shropshire.

LEAD is frequently spoken of in the Old Testament during the time of Moses, B.C. 1400, and was in general use amongst the Greeks and Romans. Pliny, in his Natural History (23—79), describes the manufacture of lead pipes. Lead mines in this country were worked by the Romans B.C. 54. The ancients poisoned their wines with lead. Leaden pipes for the conveyance of water were invented by Robert Brook in 1538. Pattinson's process for extracting the silver from lead, which in 30 years effected a saving of 200,000 ounces of the more precious metal, was introduced in 1829.

LEADENHALL MARKET (London). — In 1309 the Leadenhall was a manor-house, owned by Sir Hugh Neville. It was sold in 1408 to Sir Richard Whittington, who afterwards presented it to the corporation of London. In 1419 Sir Simon Eyre erected a granary, or market of stone; and in 1466 a fraternity of 60 priests was established, to perform service every market-day. The chapel was not taken down till 1812.

LEAGUES. — The most important leagues mentioned in history are the following:—

B.C.
343 to 167. The Ætolian League (q. v.).
280 to 146. The Achæan League.
— to 170. The Bœotian League.

A.D.
1140. The Hanseatic League.
1167, April 7. The Lombard League (q. v.).
1226, March 2. Second Lombard League.
1255. League of the Rhine. (See BARONS OF GERMANY.)
1370. League of Swabia and of the Rhine. (See BARONS OF GERMANY.)
1396. Caddee League (q. v.).
1405. League of Marbach (q. v.).
1410. League of Gien (q. v.).
1424. Grey League, or League of the Grisons.
1437. League of the Ten Jurisdictions.
1465. The League of the Public Good or Weal (q. v.).
1471. League of the Italian States against the Turks.
148-. The Swabian League (q. v.).
1493, April 22. League between Venice, Milan, and the Pope.
1495, March 31. The League of Venice.
1508, Dec. 10. The League of Cambray (q. v.).
1511, Oct. 4. The Holy League (q. v.).
1523. The Italian League is formed against Francis I.
1526, May 22. The League of Cognac, also called the Holy League and the Clementine League (q. v.).
1530, Dec. 31. The League of Smalcald (q. v.).
1538, June. The Holy League of Nuremberg (q. v.).
1560. League of Amboise (q. v.).
1566. League of the Beggars, or Gueux (q. v.).
1571, May 21. League against the Turks. (See HOLY LEAGUES.)
1576. The League, or Roman Catholic League (q. v.).
1599. League of Heidelberg (q. v.).
1610. Leagues of Halle (q. v.), and of Wurzburg (q. v.).
1638. The Solemn League and Covenant. (See COVENANTERS.)
1651. The Roman Catholic League and the Protestant League in Germany.
1684, March 5. Another League against the Turks. (See HOLY LEAGUES.)
1686, July 9. The League of Augsburg (q. v.).

LEAMINGTON, or LEAMINGTON PRIORS (Warwickshire). — This town, mentioned in Domesday Book (1085–6) as the property of Robert de Montgomery, Earl of Shrewsbury, passed, in 1160, into possession of Kenilworth Priory, and was seized by the crown in 1539. Camden mentioned the old Spring or Spa in 1586, the waters of which were analyzed in 1688. It was described in a treatise by Dr. Guidott in 1689. Abbots discovered the second spring in 1784, and erected several baths. The assembly rooms were built in 1812, and the theatre in 1814. Queen Victoria allowed the place to be called Leamington Royal in 1838. St. Mary's church was erected in 1839, Victoria bridge was widened and beautified in 1840, and the college was built in 1845.

LEAP YEAR, or BISSEXTILE.—The name given to every fourth year in the Julian calendar, B.C. 46. In leap year February has 29, instead of 28 days. Under this arrangement the years were made a little too long, and to rectify this error, three leap years are omitted during the course of four centuries in the Gregorian calendar. Thus 1800 was not a leap year, and 1900 will not be; 2000 will be a leap year, and 2100, 2200, and 2300 will not. The Bissextile, or Bissextus dies, that is, the sixth day before the calends of March, twice over, was placed in the Roman calendar between Feb. 24 and 25. By 21 Hen. III. (1175), the Bissextile day, and the day immediately preceding it, were to be considered legally as one day.

LEARNING.—The golden period of Grecian learning was the age of Pericles, who died B.C. 429. In Rome the reign of the Emperor Augustus was so distinguished for learned men and great authors, that it is usual to characterize the æras most remarkable for learning as "Augustan ages." During the 6th century after the destruction of the Western empire, learning declined, and was restricted to ecclesiastics. Classical learning was revived in the Anglo-Saxon church about 668. The 10th century is usually considered the darkest period of human history. The revival of learning after the period of depression known as the "Dark Ages," took place in the 15th century.

LEASE.—This word is derived from the French laisser, to let or give leave, and signifies a conveyance creating an estate for life, for a stated period, or at will. During the reign of Edward III. leases were sometimes extended to several hundred years. The conveyance by lease and re-lease originated soon after the Statute of Uses, 27 Hen. VIII. c. 10 (1535). Leases required by law to be in writing, were declared void unless made by deed, by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106 (Aug. 4, 1845). Leases and sales of settled estates were facilitated by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 120 (July 29, 1856), which was amended by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 77 (Aug. 2, 1858). (See ENTAIL.)

LEATHER.—It is related, Gen. iii. 21, that our first parents were clothed with skins before they were turned out of the garden of Eden, and this may perhaps be considered as the original suggestion of the manufacture of leather. It was in use among oriental nations for shoes, girdles, &c.; and with the Greeks and Romans for numerous articles of dress, as well as bottles and other vessels for containing liquids. The Romans seem to have obtained the art of tanning from Cordova, in Spain, whence the name Cordovan leather. It was used for clothing by the ancient Britons, who also exported it in considerable quantities. A customs duty was imposed upon leather by 27 Hen. VIII. c. 14 (1535). A duty was laid upon it by 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 21 (1697), and an export duty of 12*d.* per cent. was imposed by 9 Anne, c. 6 (1710). By 11 Geo. IV. c. 16 (May 29, 1830), all duties and drawbacks upon this article were repealed. Leathern money is said to have been used by the Romans, and during the Middle Ages in Italy, and even in England. The Skinners were incorporated in 1394, the Leather Sellers in 1383, and the Curriers in 1605.

LEAVENWORTH (United States). — This town, in Arkansas, was founded in 1854.

LEBANON, MOUNT (Syria), was subject to the kings of Tyre, in the reign of Solomon (B.C. 1015—975), fell under the sway of the Mardaites, who rebelled against the Saracens in 677, and became a stronghold of the Assassins about 1190. The Maronites and the Druses are the principal inhabitants.

LECHÆUM (Battle).—Agesilaus II. of Sparta defeated the Athenians and their allies at Lechæum, in the isthmus of Corinth, B.C. 393.

LECH, or LECK.—(See RAIN, Battle.)

LECTISTERNIUM. — This sacrificial ceremony was first observed at Rome, B.C. 400, according to Livy.

LECTOURE (France), the ancient Lactora, belonged to the counts of Armagnac, until besieged by Louis XI., who captured it in 1474, when, in spite of a pledge to the contrary, the count and the inhabitants were put to the sword.

LECTURES. — The publication of lectures without the consent of the lecturer is prohibited by 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 65 (Sep. 9, 1835).

LÉDOS (Battle).—The Saracens were defeated by the Spaniards at Lédos, in 793.

LEEDS (Battle).—(See WINWIDFIELD.)

LEEDS (Yorkshire), Saxon Loidis, was a Roman station, and probably fell into the hands of the Danes about 850. Adel Church, near Leeds, was built in 1140, and Kirkstall Abbey was founded between 1147 and 1153. Leeds became celebrated for its manufactures about the beginning of the 16th century, and received its first charter in 1627, which was renewed, with additional privileges, in 1673. A large portion of the population was cut off by pestilence in 1644–45. Shenfield's Free Grammar School was established in 1552; St. John's Church was founded in 1634; the Coloured-Cloth Hall was built in 1758, the White-Cloth Hall in 1775, the Old Library was established in 1768; the theatre and the general infirmary were erected in 1771; the Literary and Philosophical Society in 1820; and the Mechanics' Institution in 1824. They were united in 1842. This borough was enfranchised by the Reform Act of 1832. The Town-hall, constructed to contain 8,000 persons, for which the town council voted £5,000 to purchase an organ, and £8,500 to erect a dome, was completed at a cost of £102,000, and opened by Queen Victoria Sep. 7, 1858. The new Grammar School was built in 1859. The new Infirmary was founded March 28, 1864. It was made a separate assize town for the West Riding of Yorkshire by an order in council June 10, 1864, a motion that Wakefield should be substituted having been rejected in the House of Commons Feb. 19.

LEEDS BANKRUPTCY COURT AFFAIR. —Mr. Wilde, Registrar of the Leeds Court of Bankruptcy, having been permitted, on the ground of ill-health, to retire with a pension of £600 a year, June 30, 1864, was succeeded, July 30, by Mr. Welch, who had advanced money to the Hon. Richard Bethell, son of Lord Chancellor Westbury, on condition that he should influence his father to procure him the appointment. Mr. Bethell, in consequence of a promise from his father of some provincial office, Feb. 22, 1865, went to Leeds Feb. 23, and announced that he had been nominated to succeed Mr. Welch, who was transferred to London; but this arrangement, if ever made, was set aside by Lord Westbury, Feb. 26. The circumstances were, however, deemed of sufficient importance for investigation by a select committee of the House of Commons, appointed May 23. The report, presented June 26, acquitted the Chancellor "from all charge except that of haste and want of caution in granting a pension to Mr. Wilde," but pronounced the subsequent proceedings as "calculated to excite the gravest suspicions," and affirmed that the inquiry they had conducted was "highly desirable for the public interests." In consequence of this report and of the scandal created by the Edmunds (q. v.) affair, a vote of censure on Lord Westbury was carried in the House of Commons July 3, and his resignation of the Chancellorship was announced July 4, 1865. (See PALMERSTON [SECOND] ADMINISTRATION.)

LEEK.—(See DAVID'S, ST., DAY.)

LEEK (Staffordshire).—The ancient church of St. Edward the Confessor is believed to have been founded between 1042 and 1066. The town, called Lec in the Domesday Book (1085–6), which mentions it as the property of the crown, was bestowed by William I. upon his nephew Hugh Lupus, Earl of Chester, in 1086. Ranulph de Blondeville, sixth Earl of Chester, founded the Cistercian monastery of Dieulacresse abbey about 1214, and Edward VI. conferred the manor upon Sir Ralph Bagnall, July 7, 1552. In 1646–7 the town was visited by the plague. Lord Chancellor Macclesfield founded the grammar school in 1723; and St. Luke's church, the first stone of which was laid May 13, 1847, was consecrated Dec. 19, 1848.

LEESBURG HEIGHTS (Battle).—The Confederates having occupied the Virginian shore of the Potomac for several months, Gen. McClellan, whose army was assembled on the Maryland side, made a reconnaissance Oct. 19, 1861. Several Federal companies crossed the river Sunday, Oct. 20, and took up a position at Leesburg Heights, or Ball's Bluff. Their number was increased to about 1,700 men by large reinforcements, Oct. 21, when they occupied a parallelogram, bounded on three sides by a dense forest, and on the fourth by the river, with only two boats capable of carrying 60 persons each, as a means of return. The Confederates opened a heavy fire from the surrounding woods, and the Federals, their retreat being cut off by the destruction of the boats, suffered a disastrous defeat, losing Col. Baker and 944 men. The Confederate, Gen. Evans, estimated his losses at 300 men.

LEGACY.—The legacy duty was first imposed by 36 Geo. III. c. 52 (April 26, 1796). All gifts by will were ordered to be deemed legacies by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 76, s. 4 (Aug. 4, 1845). The law of legacies was amended, and the legacy duty was extended to real property, by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 51 (Aug. 4, 1853).

LEGANTINE CONSTITUTIONS, ecclesiastical laws made in national synods, held in England during the reign of Henry III., in Nov., 1237, and April 16, 1268. The first synod was held under Cardinal Otho, legate of Gregory IX.; and the second under Cardinal Othobon, legate of Clement IV. These were edited, with a glossary, by John of Athona, Canon of Lincoln, about 1290.

LEGATES.—The Roman ambassadors were so called, and the term was also applied to officers who accompanied the Roman generals in their expeditions to render advice and assistance. After the division of the provinces of the empire by Augustus, B.C. 27, the imperial provinces were governed by legates. During the Middle Ages the term was applied to ambassadors of the popes being cardinals. Other papal ambassadors of high rank were called nuncios. The first legate that appeared in England came at the invitation of William I. Legatine courts were established by Wolsey, under the Pope's authority, to relieve him of part of the duties of the lord-chancellorship; and he was himself made papal legate in 1517.

LEGER, ST., RACE, was established at Doncaster by Col. St. Leger, in 1776, and received this name in 1778.

LEGHORN (Tuscany).—This celebrated seaport owes its importance to the patronage of the Medici family, having been at the commencement of the 13th century an insignificant fishing village. In 1421 it was ceded to the Florentines by the Genoese, and in 1551 its population only numbered 749. The first stone of the new walls was laid by Francesco I. March 28, 1577. The castle was founded by Ferdinand I. in 1595, and the Latin school was established in 1663. An earthquake did great injury to the city in 1741. A large public school was established in 1746. Leghorn was seized by the army of the French republic June 28, 1796, and retained till 1799, when the French were compelled to withdraw. It was, however, retaken by Gen. Clement in 1800. The bishopric of Leghorn was erected in 1806. In 1813 the city was restored to Tuscany. It was seized and plundered by insurgents, April 22, 1849, but was recovered from them by the Austrians, May 12. An alarm of fire at the theatre occasioned the death of 62 persons in June, 1857. It formed part of the new kingdom of Italy in 1859.

LEGION, a body of men in the Roman army, formed by Romulus B.C. 720, consisting of 3,000 soldiers. The number was increased by Servius Tullius to 4,000, B.C. 578; and to 5,000 foot and 300 horse, B.C. 558. Gibbon is of opinion that, after undergoing numerous changes, the constitution of the legion was dissolved by Constantine I. (See FOREIGN and THUNDERING LEGION.)

LEGION OF HONOUR. — This order of merit, as a recompense for civil and military services, established May 19, was inaugurated by Napoleon Buonaparte July 14, 1802. The subject had been brought before the council of state in May, 1801, when a vote in its favour was carried by a small majority. The first crosses were distributed at the head-quarters of the grand army at Boulogne, Aug. 16, 1804. It was reconstituted by Louis XVIII. in 1816.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.—[See NATIONAL ASSEMBLY.]

LEGITIMISTS.—This term was applied in France to the supporters of the elder branch of the Bourbon family in 1830. They held a congress at Lucerne in June 1862, when about 800 assembled.

LEGNANO (Battle).—Frederick I., Emperor of Germany, was defeated at this place, near Verona, by the forces of the Lombard League, May 29, 1176. By this victory the Lombard cities secured their independence. Frederick I. concluded a truce of six years with the Lombard League in 1177, and the treaty of Constance (q. v.) terminated the dispute. The French captured Legnano in 1510.

LEICESTER (Bishopric), founded in 680, was merged in that of Lincoln in 1078.

LEICESTER Leicestershire), believed to be the Roman Ratæ, was founded by a British king, according to some authorities Lear, and became one of the Danish burghs about 878. Since the time of Edward I. (1272—1307) it has returned two members to Parliament. Henry V. held a Parliament here April 30, 1414. Richard III. was buried in the Grey Friars monastery, Aug. 25, 1485. In the abbey, built in 1143, Cardinal Wolsey died, Nov. 28 or 29, 1530. The town Library, formed in the middle of the reign of Elizabeth, was removed to the present building in 1632. During the Parliamentary wars, the town was taken by Charles I., May 31, 1645, and recovered by Fairfax, June 17, 1645. Charles II. ordered the destruction of its walls in 1662. The manufacture of stockings, for which the town is noted, was introduced in 1680. On the inquiry into the state of the municipalities, the corporation refused to deliver up the required documents and to submit to examination, Sep. 24, 1833.

LEIGHLIN (Bishopric).—In Ireland, founded by St. Laserian in 632, was united to Ferns (q. v.) in 1600, and in 1835 the two dioceses were merged in Ossory.

LEININGEN (Germany), formerly a county, gave the title of prince to the line in 1779. The principality lost its possessions on the left bank of the Rhine in 1803, and was mediatized in 1806.

LEINSTER (Ireland).—This eastern province of Ireland formed at the time of the English invasion (1170) a distinct kingdom, under Dermot. An order for the settlement of Leinster was made in 1550. In 1691 it was erected into a dukedom in favour of Meinhard, son of the Duke of Schomberg, but the title became extinct in 1719. It was revived, and conferred upon James Fitzgerald in 1766.

LEIPSIC (Battle).—The French army under Napoleon I., amounting to about 190,000 men, was attacked at this place by 290,450 of the allied forces under Prince Schwartzenberg, Blucher, and other generals, Oct. 16, 1813. The battle was renewed Oct. 18 and 19, when the French were compelled to retreat, leaving 25,000 prisoners in the hands of the allies. The total loss of the French was upwards of 60,000 men, and that of the allies 46,804 men. After the victory, called the Battle of the Nations, the allies entered Leipsic, and Napoleon I. commenced his retreat towards the Rhine. The 50th anniversary of this battle was celebrated with much enthusiasm throughout Germany, Oct. 18, 1863.

LEIPSIC (Treaties).—A union between the German Protestants was signed at Leipsic in Feb., 1631.——The Elector of Saxony concluded a treaty with Maria Theresa at this place, May 18, 1745.——A convention between Great Britain, Austria, Prussia, and Russia, was signed here Oct. 21, 1813.——A Congress of Ladies (q. v.) was held here, Oct. 15, 1865.

LEIPSIC, or BREITENFELD (Battles).—The imperial army, commanded by Tilly, was defeated by the Saxons and Swedes, under Charles X. Gustavus, in the plain of Leipsic, between the villages of Breitenfeld and Podelwitz, Sep. 7, 1631 (N. S.) The Austrians left 7,000 on the field of battle, and 5,000 were taken prisoners. All their baggage and artillery were lost.——The Swedish general, Torstenson, defeated the Austrians near the same place, Nov. 2, 1642.

LEIPSIC or LEIPZIG (Saxony).—This city, which is of Wendish origin, and sprung up round a castle, is first mentioned in 1015. It was destroyed by Wratislaus II., Duke of Bohemia, in 1082. After having been rebuilt, it was again destroyed by Otho IV. in 1212. The celebrated university was founded by German seceders from the university of Prague in 1409. A fire destroyed about 400 houses in 1420. Here Luther, Eck, and Carlstadt held a theological discussion, which commenced June 27, 1519, and lasted 19 days. The book trade, for which Leipsic is famous, commenced in 1545. The town-hall was erected in 1556. In 1680 and 1681 the plague carried off 3,000 of the inhabitants. Leipsic was taken by the Prussians in 1745, by Ferdinand of Brunswick in 1756, and by the French in 1806. The wool market was established in 1826. The booksellers' exchange has been erected since 1834. Political disturbances took place in 1830, 1831, 1848, and 1849. (See INTERIM.)

LEIRIA (Portugal).—At this ancient town, the seat of a bishop, the first printing-press in the peninsula was established in 1466. In July, 1808, the town was taken by the French, who destroyed it in 1811. It was restored in 1813, and was wrested from the Miguelites, Feb. 15, 1834.

LEITH (Scotland), called Inverleith in the charter granted by David I. for the erection of Holyrood Abbey, in 1128. The Earl of Hertford burned the town in May, 1544. Some French troops, sent to espouse the cause of Mary Queen of Scots, fortified Leith in 1560. They capitulated to the English army, and a treaty was signed at Edinburgh, July 6, which provided that they should all leave Scotland. An extraordinary convention of superintendents and ministers was held here in Jan., 1572, and they drew up the agreement of Leith. The first newspaper printed in Scotland was the Mercurius Politicus, which appeared at Leith in Oct., 1653. A dock was commenced in 1720, a small quay in 1777, and the wet docks in 1800. The Trinity-house was erected in 1817, the town-hall in 1828, and the new pier in 1852. The foundation stone of St. James's Episcopal Church was laid by Mr. Gladstone, Jan. 11, 1862.

LEITRIM (Ireland), which originally formed part of the estates of the O'Rourk family, was erected into an English county by Sir Henry Sidney in 1565. The inhabitants, who revolted in 1588, were reduced to subjection in 1603.

LEMBERG (Galicia).—This once strongly-fortified city, founded in 1259, resisted an Italian force in 1666, and a Turkish army in 1672. Charles XII. of Sweden stormed it in 1704, and Poniatowski captured it in 1809. The university was founded in 1784, and the town-hall was built in 1835.

LEMNOS (Ægean Sea) is said to have been peopled by a Thracian tribe, whose descendants were expelled by the Tyrrhenian Pelasgians. It fell under the Persian yoke B.C. 505, and was subjected to Athens by Miltiades, B.C. 489. The Macedonians obtained possession for a short time, and it again passed under the Athenian yoke. It was celebrated for its labyrinth. (See STALIMENE.)

LEMURIA.—This festival, held May 9, 11, and 13, for the souls of the departed, is said to have been instituted B.C. 722, by Romulus, to appease the manes of Remus.

LENS (Battle).—The Austrians and Spaniards were defeated by a French army under Condé, in this battle, fought Aug. 20, 1648. The French captured 100 colours and 38 pieces of cannon.

LENT is derived from an Anglo-Saxon word, signifying Spring. Much controversy has been excited amongst learned men respecting the original duration of this fast, some contending that it lasted 40 days, and others only 40 hours. Bingham believes it probable that it was at first a fast of 40 hours, or the time our Saviour lay in the grave; that is, the Friday and Saturday before Easter. It is said to have been instituted in the time of the Apostles, though it is not mentioned in the New Testament, and appears to have been first enjoined in 136. Consisting at first of only a few hours, it lasted a whole week, if not more, in the time of Dionysius of Alexandria, about 250. At Rome, about the same time, it lasted three weeks; and by the fifth canon of the Council of Nicæa, June 19—Aug. 25, 325, was increased to six. Then it received the name of Quadragesima, or the Forty Days' Fast, because it commenced 40 days before Easter. In reality its duration was only 36 days, all the Sundays being omitted. The duration of Lent, which is said to have been first observed in England in 640, differed very much in the early churches. By 2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 19 (1548), all former laws relating to fasts were repealed, and a penalty of 10*s.* or 10 days' imprisonment, was ordered to be inflicted on those that ate meat at Lent and on other fasts. The penalty was doubled for a second offence. By 5 Eliz. c. 5 (1563), it was enacted, that whosoever should notify that eating of fish, or forbearing of flesh, was of any necessity for the saving of the soul of man, or that it was the service of God, otherwise than as other politic laws are and be, should be punished as spreaders of false news. The same statute laid down regulations for the observance of fasts. Victuallers were not allowed to sell flesh in Lent by 27 Eliz. c. 11 (1586). The last statute on the subject was 35 Eliz. c. 7 (1593). Several proclamations having reference to this subject were issued, and the encouragement of the navy and of fishery was generally set forth as the ground of these regulations.

LEOBEN (Styria).—The preliminaries of a treaty of peace between Austria and France were signed at the castle of Eckenwald, near this town, April 18, 1797. (See CAMPO-FORMIO, Treaty.)

LEOMINSTER (Herefordshire).—Merewald, ruler of the western part of Mercia, erected a monastery here about 660. It was plundered by the Welsh in 760, by the Danes in 980, and again by the Welsh in 1055. Henry I. gave the monastery to the abbey of Reading in 1125. Queen Mary founded the grammar school, May 28, 1554. The town-hall or Butter Cross was erected in 1633, and Mrs. Esther Clark's almshouses for poor widows were established in 1736. The history of the Town and Borough has been written by the Rev. G. F. Townsend.

LEON (Nicaragua), founded at Old Leon in 1523, was removed to its present site in 1532. The bishopric was founded in 1534, and the university in 1812. It is also called Managua.

LEON (Spain).—The city of Leon is said to have been founded by the Romans in the 1st century of the Christian æra. It was anciently called Legio, and received its present name on its capture by the Visigoths in 586. It was afterwards seized by the Moors, from whom it was taken in 722, and became the capital of the Christian kingdom of Leon, which was founded in 913. The city was taken by the Caliph Al Mansur in 996, and remained in his power until his defeat at Calatanazor in 998. In 1037 the kingdom of Leon was annexed to Castile; and with the exception of the intervals from 1065 to 1072, and from 1157 to 1230, did not recover its independence.——Leon was erected into a bishopric in the 3rd century. Its first bishop died in 312, and the see was refounded in 910. The cathedral was commenced about 1199. Councils were held here in 1020, 1091, and 1114. The French under Soult entered Leon Dec. 21, 1808, and destroyed many of the old buildings.

LEONARDS-ON-SEA, ST. (Sussex).—This town, forming a western extension of Hastings (q. v.), was commenced in 1828.

LEONINE VERSES.—This species of Latin versification, consisting of hexameter and pentameter verses, which rhymed in the middle and at the end, is said to have been named after Pope Leo II. (682—84), or Leoninus, canon of St. Victor, Paris, during the 12th century. They have been traced to the 3rd century, and are also found in English poetry.

LEONTIUM, or LEONTINI (Sicily), founded by colonists from Naxos, B.C. 730, fell under the yoke of Hippocrates, B.C. 498, and of Hieron, B.C. 476. It solicited the aid of the Athenians against the Syracusans B.C. 427, when Gorgias, the eminent sophist, acted as ambassador for his native city. In one of its streets Hieronymus was assassinated by Dinomenes, B.C. 215. It passed under the Roman sway, with the whole island, B.C. 210.

LEONTOPOLIS. — (See HIERACIANS and NICEPHORIUM.)

LEPANTO (Greece).—The ancient Naupactos (q. v.), called by the Greek peasants Epakto, was destroyed by an earthquake in the reign of Justinian I., about 550. Another town, built upon its site, was besieged in 1477 by the Turks, who withdrew after having lost 30,000 men, in a siege of about four months' duration. The Turks seized Lepanto in Aug., 1499. The town sustained several sieges, and was restored to Venice by the treaty of Carlowitz Jan. 26, 1699. The Greeks captured the town and citadel of Lepanto, May 9, 1829.

LEPANTO (Sea-fight). — The combined Spanish and Italian fleets, under the command of Don John of Austria, defeated the Turks in a great naval battle in the Gulf of Lepanto, Oct. 7, 1571. The Turks are said to have lost 224 ships and 30,000 men, and the Christians 15 galleys and 8,000 men. Cervantes, the author of Don Quixote, received a wound in this action, by which he was deprived of the use of his right hand during the remainder of his life. By some Italian authors this is called the battle of Curzolari, from a group of islets of this name at the mouth of the Acheloüs.

LEPROSY.—This contagious disease originated in Egypt and Arabia at a very early period. It is frequently alluded to in the Scriptures; and special regulations were prescribed concerning those afflicted with it by the Mosaic law, B.C. 1491 (Lev. xiii.). Christ healed a leper in Galilee in 28. It was known to the Greeks and Romans, and is described by Hippocrates (B.C. 460—357) and Galen (130—200). The Crusaders introduced the disease into Europe, where it raged with such virulence during the Middle Ages, that almost every town had its lazar-house for the reception of lepers. (See LAZARETTO and LAZARUS, ST.) In 1225, during the reign of Louis VIII., there were in France no less than 2,000 of these institutions. Since the commencement of the 17th century the disease has almost entirely disappeared from Europe, where it is now limited to the most northern and southern countries. It was very prevalent in the Faroe Isles in 1676, and five persons were affected with it in Great Britain in 1736. The last case mentioned here was described by Dr. Edmonston in 1809.

LERIDA (Spain).—The ancient Ilerda was taken during the civil war by Julius Cæsar, after a siege of nearly six weeks, June 9, B.C. 49, and destroyed by the Franks in 256. A council was held here in 524. Having been restored, it became the scene of frequent struggles between the Moors and the Spaniards. It was besieged Oct. 2, 1707, and taken by assault Oct. 12. Suchet took it by storm May 13, 1810. The Spaniards regained possession in 1814.

LESSER BRETHREN.—(See FRANCISCANS.)

LETTER.—(See ANONYMOUS LETTERS, BRIEF or QUEEN'S LETTER, SEALED LETTERS, &c.)

LETTER-COPYING MACHINE, invented by James Watt in June, 1778, and patented by him in May, 1780, has undergone various improvements.

LETTERS OF MARQUE.—These commissions, authorizing private persons to equip vessels of war, or privateers, on their own account, against an enemy, in time of war, were first issued in this country in 1295. The cases in which they might be granted were specified by 4 Hen. V. c. 7 (1417). By 33 Geo. III. c. 66, s. 9 (June 17, 1793), they may only be issued to ships belonging to British subjects; or by 41 Geo. III. c. 76 (June 27, 1801), to royal vessels in the Customs service. The abolition of privateering was resolved upon by Great Britain, Austria, France, Prussia, Russia, Sardinia, and Turkey, at the congress at Paris, April 16, 1856.

LETTER-WRITING.—It is exceedingly doubtful whether epistolary communication was known in the Homeric age, which is assigned by various chronologists to different periods between B.C. 1184 and 684. David wrote a letter to Joab, and despatched it by Uriah, B.C. 1035 (2 Sam. xi. 14, 15), and Jezebel wrote letters in Ahab's name, and sealed them with his seal, B.C. 899 (1 Kings xxi. 8). The classical authors regarded Atossa, queen of Darius I. (Hystaspes), who flourished in the 6th century B.C., as the inventor of letter-writing.

LETTUCE was introduced into England about 1540.

LEUCADIA (Ionian Islands) came into possession of the Corinthians, who called it Leucas, from its white cliffs, B.C. 700. They cut through an isthmus, and converted Leucadia into an island. The canal was, however, quite choked up, according to Polybius, B.C. 218. Subsequently it was cleared out, and a bridge thrown across, it is believed by Augustus, about B.C. 17. Sappho's Rock, where the poetess is said to have made her desperate leap, B.C. 590, and the tomb of Artemisia, B.C. 352, are in this town. Leucadia was taken by the Turks in 1467, and it surrendered to the Venetians Aug. 21, 1717. An English force, under Gen. Oswald, displaced the French, March 22, 1810. The fort of Santa Maura, erected near the town in the Middle Ages, was destroyed by an earthquake in 1825. It is sometimes called Santa Maura, from the fort.

LEUCOPETRA (Battle).—The Consul Mummius defeated the forces of the Achæan League at this place, in Italy, B.C. 147.

LEUCTRA (Battle).—The Thebans defeated the Spartans in a great battle on this plain, between Thespiæ and Platæa, in Bœotia, in July, B.C. 371. By this victory the supremacy of Sparta was destroyed.

LEUTHEN, or LISSA (Battle).—The Prussians, under Frederick II., after an obstinate contest, defeated the Austrians, led by Prince Charles of Lorraine and Marshal Daun, at the village of Leuthen, near Lissa, in Silesia, Dec. 5, 1757. The Austrians withdrew through Lissa. (See LISSA, Sea-Fight.)

LEVANT.—The countries situated on the eastern shores of the Mediterranean have received this name, from the French lever, to rise, because the sun rises in that direction. The English trade with the Levant commenced before 1513, and a Levant company of merchants was chartered in 1581, and a second in 1592. The great Levant Company was established in 1605.

LEVELLERS, a party who desired that "all degrees of men should be levelled, and an equality should be established, both in titles and estates, throughout the kingdom," obtained the supremacy in the army of the Long Parliament in 1647. They denounced all existing forms of government, and clamoured for the blood of Charles I. They raised an insurrection in 1649, and Cromwell took measures to suppress them. Levellers appeared in Ireland in 1762. (See ACEPHALI.)

LEVERIAN MUSEUM (London).—This fine collection of objects of natural history was formed by Sir Ashton Lever, who established it at Leicester House, Leicester Square, in 1775. Not being efficiently supported, Sir Ashton was compelled to dispose of it by lottery in 1785. It was won by Mr. Parkinson, who sold it by auction, in 7,879 lots. The sale lasted from May 5 to July 18, 1806.

LEVITICUS, the third book of the Pentateuch, was written by Moses before B.C. 1451.

LEWES (Sussex), one of the most ancient towns in England, was fortified by the Saxons, and the Normans built its castle soon after the Conquest. The royal army was defeated here by the barons May 13, 1264, Henry III. having been made prisoner. Prince Edward entered into a treaty, called the Mise of Lewes, May 14. The 600th anniversary of the battle was celebrated April 16, 1864.

LEXICOGRAPHY.—(See DICTIONARY.)

LEXINGTON (Battle).—(See CONCORD.)

LEXINGTON (Kentucky), founded in 1776, was the chief town until 1792, when Frankfort was made the capital. Lexington was incorporated in 1782.

LEXINGTON (Missouri), fortified by the Federals at the commencement of the war in 1861, was besieged by the Confederates in Aug., and surrendered Sep. 20.

LEYDEN (Holland), the ancient Lugdunum Batavorum, withstood two celebrated sieges by the Spaniards in 1573 and 1574. The first commenced Oct. 31, 1573, and was raised March 21, 1574, by Louis of Nassau. Valdez returned with 8,000 Walloons and Germans, May 26, 1574. Valdez offered pardon to the citizens on condition of an immediate surrender, July 30; but they held out, although reduced to extremities by want of provisions. A flotilla of vessels, fitted out at Zealand for the relief of the city, broke through the dykes, and, assisted by an inundation, caused by a violent equinoctial gale, Oct. 1 and 2, entered the city Oct. 3, and Leyden was saved. The inhabitants had suffered severely from famine and pestilence, and, in acknowledgment of their heroism, the Prince of Orange founded the university in 1575. The round tower called the Burg, in the centre of the town, is supposed to have been built about 450; St. Pancras church was erected in 1280, and St. Peter's in 1315. The town-hall was founded in 1574. Here Arminius published his views, which led to the controversy bearing his name, Feb. 7, 1604. The first congregational assembly was formed at Leyden in 1616. In Jan., 1795, Leyden was seized by the French, who held it till 1813. The city was much injured by a fire caused by an explosion of gunpowder, Jan. 12, 1807.

LIAMUIGA.—(See CHRISTOPHER'S, ST.)

LIBAU (Russia).—This seaport of Courland was fortified by the Teutonic knights, who erected a castle in 1300. It was annexed to Russia, March 28, 1795.

LIBEL.—The Roman laws treated libel as a capital offence, and during the latter period of the empire similar severity was extended to the possessors of libellous documents. Hallam (England, ch. xv.) remarks,—"The law of libel has always been indefinite—an evil probably beyond any complete remedy, but which evidently renders the liberty of free discussion rather more precarious in its exercise than might be wished. It appears to have been the received doctrine in Westminster Hall, before the Revolution, that no man might publish a writing reflecting on the government, nor upon the character or even capacity and fitness of any one employed in it." (See BOOK CENSORS.) William Prynne was fined £5,000 for having written the "Histrio-Mastix," expelled from the university of Oxford and the bar, was exposed in the pillory, and committed to the Tower, in Aug., 1633. He was, with Henry Burton and Robert Bastwick, condemned in the Star Chamber for libels, June 14, 1637, and they were set in the pillory and mutilated, June 30. A resolution adopted in the House of Commons, that privilege of Parliament should not extend to cases of libel, was agreed to by the Lords, Nov. 29, 1763. Major John Scott, a member of the House of Commons, was reprimanded by the House for a libellous publication, in one of the morning papers, May 18, 1790. Fox's Libel Bill (32 Geo. III. c. 60) was, with the support of Pitt, passed in 1792. By 60 Geo. III. c. 8 (Dec 30, 1819), offenders convicted a second time were liable to banishment for such term of years as the court before which the case was tried might order. This penalty was repealed by 11 Geo. IV. & 1 Will. IV. c. 73 (July 23, 1830). The libel laws were amended and mitigated by 6 & 7 Vict. c. 96 (Aug. 24, 1843).

LIBERIA (Africa).—This free republic, in Upper Guinea, was founded April 25, 1822, by some negro colonists, who, sent out by the American Colonization Society, formed Dec. 31, 1816, had settled on the island of Sherboro in 1820, and were compelled to remove, from the unhealthiness of the climate. A constitution was framed in 1839. The independence of the colony, declared in 1847, was formally recognized by France and England in 1848, and by the United States in 1862. A treaty with the United States was concluded in London, Feb. 17, 1863.

LIBERTINES. — Considerable controversy has been excited respecting the synagogue of the Libertines, said to have been in existence at Jerusalem in 37 (Acts vi. 9). Some writers believe it refers to the Libertini, or the children of freedmen; and other authorities believe the Libertines to have been the inhabitants of Libertina, a city near Carthage.

LIBERTINES, or SPIRITUALS, sometimes called Spiritual Libertines, who defended impure morals with a profession of Christian faith, appeared in Flanders in the 14th and 15th centuries. The sect spread into France, and received encouragement from Margaret, Queen of Navarre, in 1533. James Gruet, a member of this sect and an opponent of Calvin, was put to death at Geneva in 1550.

LIBERTY.—(See CAP, JACOBIN, or BRETON CLUB, and RUMP-STEAK CLUB.)

LIBRARIES (Free).—Powers were granted to town councils to establish free libraries, by a rate levied with the consent of a majority of two-thirds of the voters, by 13 & 14 Vict. c. 65 (Aug. 14, 1850). This act, extended to Ireland and Scotland by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 101 (Aug. 20, 1853), was amended, the city of London being specially included, by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 70 July 30, 1855). (See LIBRARY.)

LIBRARY. — From an inscription in the Memnonium at Thebes, which is ascribed to the 14th century B.C., it appears that a library, or "hall of books," formed a part of that palace. This is perhaps the most ancient institution of the kind on record. The earliest libraries throughout Christendom were those attached to churches.

LIBURNIA (Illyria) received Vatinius as its proconsul B.C. 47. A revolt against the Roman rule was suppressed by Octavius B.C. 35. The light galleys of the Liburni rendered important assistance to Augustus at Actium, Sep. 2, 31 B.C. Charlemagne annexed Liburnia to his empire in 788.

LIBYA (Africa) is mentioned by Homer (B.C. 962—B.C. 927) and described by Herodotus (B.C. 484—B.C. 408). The Phœnicians are said to have colonized it B.C. 2080, and endeavoured to monopolize its commerce B.C. 600. Cambyses, King of Persia, led an expedition into Lybia B.C. 526, and Ptolemy (II.) Philadelphus, Ptolemy (III.) Euergetes I., caused it to be explored for purposes of trade. The Romans assigned the country to Ptolemy (VI.) Philometer, B.C. 164. (See AFRICA.)

LICENSER OF PLAYS was first appointed by 10 Geo. II. c. 28 (1736). Brooke's "Gustavus Vasa" was the first play the performance of which was prohibited by this officer.

LICENCES. — Gaming-houses were first ordered to be licensed by 33 Hen. VIII. c. 9 (1541), which was repealed by 2 & 3 Phil. & Mary, c. 9 (1555). Alehouses were licensed by 5 & 6 Edw. VI. c. 25 (1552); wine-retailers by 12 Charles II. c. 25 (1660); tea and coffee dealers by 15 Charles II. c. 11, s. 15 (1663); spirit-merchants by 2 Geo. II. c. 28 (1729); auctioneers by 17 Geo. III. c. 50 (1777); post-horse masters by 19 Geo. III. c. 51 (1779); maltsters by 24 Geo. III. sess. 2, c. 41 (1784); and tobacco dealers by 29 Geo. III. c. 68, s. 70 (1789). The General License Act is 9 Geo. IV. c. 61 (July 15, 1828). Licences for refreshment-houses are regulated by 23 Vict. c. 27 (June 14, 1860), which came into operation July 1.

LICHFIELD (Bishopric).—A bishop's see, established at this town, in 669, was raised to the dignity of an archbishopric by a synod held at Calchutense, or Celchyth, in Northumberland, in 787. The dignity was suppressed by the synod of Cloveshoo, or Cliff, Oct. 12, 803. The see removed to Chester in 1075, and to Coventry in 1102; was restored to Lichfield in 1129, when it was called the bishopric of Lichfield and Coventry. The latter name was discontinued in 1837.

LICHFIELD (Staffordshire).—This ancient city, to which Edward II. granted a charter of incorporation, was, with the suburbs, constituted a distinct county by Queen Mary, in 1553. The cathedral, founded in 1148, suffered greatly during the civil wars, the Parliamentary army having captured the city, March 2, 1643, and was restored in 1661.

LICHFIELD HOUSE COMPACT, alleged to have been made between Daniel O'Connell and the Whigs in 1835, at No. 13, St. James's Square, called Lichfield House, from Anson, Earl of Lichfield, hence its name.

LICHTENBERG (Germany).—This territory, consisting of the old lordship of Baumholder, ceded by Prussia in 1816, to the Duke of Saxe-Coburg, who made it a principality, naming it Lichtenberg, after an ancient castle, was by a treaty signed at Berlin, May 31, 1834, restored to Prussia for an annual rent of 80,000 dollars.

LICINIAN LAW, restricting the quantity of land which any citizen of Rome might possess to 500 jugera, or about 330 acres, proposed by the Roman tribune, C. Licinius Stolo, B.C. 376, was carried B.C. 365.

LIEBAU.—(See LABIAU, Treaty.)

LIECHTENSTEIN, or LICHTENSTEIN (Germany).—This principality, the smallest of the states in the Germanic confederation, belongs to one of the most ancient houses in Europe, which was founded, about 1206, by Ditmar. Count Anthony Florian obtained, in 1713, a vote in the imperial diet, which was confirmed in 1723 to his son and posterity. There is another Liechtenstein, dependent on Saxony.

LIEGE (Belgium).—A bishop's see, established at Tongres, in 97, was transferred to Maastricht in 383, and to Liége in 713, where the tomb of St. Lambert (640—Sep. 17, 708) became a resort for pilgrims. Its bishop became a prince of the empire in the 10th century. One of its bishops, expelled in 1406, recovered possession in 1408. After the defeat of its army at Brusten (q. v.), it surrendered to Charles the Bold, Duke of Burgundy, Nov. 12, 1467. The duke again took offence, and having concluded the treaty of Peronne (q. v.) with Louis XI. marched against Liége, which was taken and burned, Sunday, Oct. 30, 1468. Louis XIV. took Liége in 1688. Marlborough obtained possession of the city Oct. 13, 1702; the citadel surrendered Oct. 23, and a detached work, called the Chartreuse, Oct. 29. The French, who assailed it without success in the summer of 1705, obtained possession Oct. 10, 1746. The French, under Gen. Dumouriez, took possession of Liége, after defeating the Austrians in the vicinity, Nov. 28, 1792; but they were in turn beaten with great loss, March 4, 1793. It was annexed to France in 1795. The Cossacks captured it Jan., 1814. Liége formed part of the Netherlands in 1814, and was added to Belgium in 1830. The cathedral was built in the 8th century, the church of St. James was founded in 1014 and finished in 1536, and the university was founded by the King of Holland in 1817.

LIEGNITZ, or LIGNITZ (Battles).—The Saxons and Swedes defeated the Imperialists May 13, 1634. (See PFAFFENDORF and WAHLSTATT, Battles.)

LIEGNITZ, or LIGNITZ (Silesia).—The capital of a government of the same, was the residence of the dukes of Liegnitz from 1164 to 1675. The Austrians captured it in 1757. The Ritter Academy, founded in 1708, was remodelled in 1810. The old castle was nearly destroyed by fire in 1834.

LIESNA, or LIESZNA.—(See LISSA, Battle.)

LIFE ANNUITIES.—(See ANNUITIES.)

LIFEBOAT.—A patent for a lifeboat was granted to Lukin in 1785. It was improved by Greathead, who launched his first lifeboat Jan. 30, 1790; and for his services in this matter he received a grant of £1,200, June 31, 1802. The Society of Arts voted him their gold medal and 50 guineas in 1804. A prize of 100 guineas, offered by the Duke of Northumberland, in 1850, for the best model, was awarded to Beeching, of Yarmouth. There were 280 competitors. (See ROYAL NATIONAL LIFEBOAT INSTITUTION.)

LIFE-BUOY.—In 1818, Lieut. Cook received a gold medal from the Society of Arts for the invention of a life-buoy. (See LIFE PRESERVER.)

LIFE GUARDS, the name applied to two regiments of guards (q. v.), raised in 1693 and 1702, reduced in 1783, and re-formed as Life Guards.

LIFE INSURANCE.—(See INSURANCE.)

LIFE-PRESERVER.—Various apparatus for the preservation of life from shipwreck have from time to time been invented. A paper kite was employed to effect communication with the shore in 1740, and the Society of Arts, in 1792, gave a premium of 50 guineas to Lieut. Bell for his plan of throwing from the shore a rope to a ship in distress by means of a shell discharged from a mortar. Capt. Manby, who had made an experiment on this plan, had his attention again directed to the subject by witnessing the death of 67 persons within 50 yards from the shore, when the gun-brig Snipe was wrecked at Yarmouth, Feb. 18, 1807. He vowed to devote his life to the prevention of similar catastrophes, and invented the method of communication from the shore by means of a mortar and rope, which bears his name. The apparatus was first employed Feb. 12, 1808, when it saved the crew of a brig. Capt. Manby died Nov. 18, 1854, with the knowledge that he had been the means of saving more than 1,000 lives. R. W. Laurie, of Glasgow, patented several improvements in apparatus to be employed for the preservation of human life, July 9, 1849.

LIGHT.—Pythagoras and the Platonists were the first whose speculations on this subject are recorded. Little definite knowledge on the subject was obtained until the law of the refraction of light was discovered by Willebrord Snell, or Snellius, a mathematician of Leyden, in 1621, and was made public by Descartes in 1637. Its compound nature was discovered by Newton while experimenting on the prismatic spectrum, about 1666. Bradley, astronomer royal, detected its aberration Dec. 21, 1725, and discovered the cause in Sep., 1728. (See OPTICS.)

LIGHT DRAGOONS. (See LANCERS.)

LIGHTHOUSE, or PHAROS.—The Colossus of Rhodes, built by Chares about B.C. 290, is supposed by some writers to have answered the purpose of a lighthouse. These edifices received the name of Pharos from the lighthouse erected on the island of Pharos (q. v.), for the purpose of lighting the harbour of Alexandria, B.C. 283. The Tour de Cordouan, the first modern lighthouse, was founded at the mouth of the Garonne in 1584, and completed in 1610.—(See EDDYSTONE LIGHTHOUSE, &c.)

LIGHTING OF STREETS.—It is doubted whether any system of lighting the thoroughfares existed among the Greeks and Romans, though they illuminated their cities on public festivals. Antioch was probably lighted by artificial means in the 3rd century. The governor of Edessa ordered lamps to be kept burning during the night, about 505. Paris is said to have been the first modern city in which the streets were lighted. An order to the inhabitants to keep lights burning after nine in the evening was issued in 1524, in 1526, and in 1553. Maitland contends that a similar order was issued in London in 1414. Vases containing pitch and rosin were used for this purpose in October, 1558. Householders were required to hang out a light when it was dark in 1668. Authority was granted for lighting the streets by contract by 9 Geo. II. c. 20 (1736). By 17 Geo. II. c. 29 (1744), great improvements were made in the system of lighting the streets of London. The Abbé Laudati secured a 20 years' privilege of letting out torches and lanterns for hire, in Paris, in March, 1662. Lighting the streets was introduced at the Hague in 1553, at Amsterdam in 1669, at Hamburg in 1672, at Berlin in 1679, at Copenhagen in 1681, at Vienna in 1687, at Hanover in 1696, at Leipsic in 1702, at Dresden in 1705, at Cassel in 1721, at Brunswick in 1765, and at Zurich in 1778. (See GAS.)

LIGHTNING CONDUCTORS.—The ancient Romans, who regarded persons or places struck by lightning with horror, believing them to be devoted to the wrath of Heaven, surrounded places struck in this manner by a wall, and buried things with mysterious ceremonies. Some authors believe that they possessed the knowledge of conducting lightning. Modern lightning conductors, for the protection of buildings, were suggested by Franklin immediately after his electric experiment in 1752. Dr. Watson erected the first in England, at Payneshill, in 1762. A plan, submitted to the Admiralty by W. S. Harris, for protecting ships from the effect of lightning, in 1821, was adopted, and its inventor was rewarded with a pension, a grant of £4,000, and knighthood. The plans for the protection of the Houses of Parliament were furnished by him. Professor Richmann, of St. Petersburg, was killed in his room by a shock from a conductor in 1753.

LIGNITZ.—(See LIEGNITZ, Battles.)

LIGNY (Belgium).—This village was captured by the Spaniards June 5, 1544. (See FLEURUS, Battle.)

LIGUORIANS.—(See REDEMPTORISTS.)

LIGURIA (Italy) was inhabited by an ancient people called the Ligures (see GENOA), of whose origin nothing authentic has been recorded. They first came into collision with the Romans B.C. 241, and P. Lentulus Caudinus celebrated a triumph over them B.C. 236. The Ligurians, allied with the Carthaginians, commenced hostilities by attacking Placentia and Cremona, Roman colonies, B.C. 200. A long series of wars, extending over a period of 80 years, ensued between the Romans and the Ligurians. Several tribes were reduced to subjection before B.C. 173; others held out, and one tribe in the Maritime Alps was not reduced to obedience until B.C. 14. The Lombards overran the country in 569.

LIGURIAN REPUBLIC.—The French created a revolution in Genoa early in 1797, and by a convention signed at Montebello, June 5 and 6, this republic placed itself under the protection of France. Napoleon Buonaparte gave it the name of the Ligurian republic June 14, which was incorporated with France, by a convention concluded at Milan, June 4, 1805. The Ligurian republic was dissolved in 1814, and Genoa was annexed to Sardinia. The inhabitants revolted, and proclaimed the restoration of the Ligurian republic, April 3, 1849. The revolt was suppressed April 11.

LILAC, a favourite flowering shrub, was introduced into this country in the reign of Hen. VIII. (1509—47), as "six lilac-trees, which bear no fruit, but only a pleasant smell," are enumerated in the list of trees in the palace gardens at Norwich, taken by order of Cromwell. Other authorities state that it was not cultivated in England before 1597. The Persian lilac was introduced in 1640, the Rouen lilac in 1795, and Josika's lilac in 1835.

LILLE, or LISLE (Conference).—Lord Malmesbury was despatched hither in June, 1797, to resume the negotiations for peace with the French Government, which had been suddenly broken off in Dec., 1796. The demands of England were moderate. The French plenipotentiaries required the recognition of the French republic, and the renunciation by George III. of the title, King of France. After the revolution at Paris, Sep. 4, the former plenipotentiaries were recalled, and two republicans sent, who required Lord Malmesbury to produce authority from the English Government to surrender all the conquests made during the war, or to quit Lille within 24 hours, Sep. 18. Lord Malmesbury broke up the conference and withdrew.

LILLE, or LISLE (France), formerly Isla, or L'Isle, the island, was founded in 1007, and walled in by the Count of Flanders in 1030. Philip II. of France burned it in 1213, and it was besieged and taken by Philip IV. (the Fair), in 1297. The collegiate church of St. Peter was built in 1066, and the town-hall in 1430. Lille was united to the crown of Spain in 1496. The Huguenots failed in an attempt to capture it in 1581, and the French besieged it in 1645. Louis XIV. took it from the Spaniards in 1667, and it was ceded to France by the Treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, May 2 (O.S.), 1668. The allies having besieged it Aug. 13, 1708, the town capitulated Oct. 24, and the citadel Dec. 10. The allies are said to have had 17,000 killed and wounded during the siege. It was restored to France by the Treaty of Utrecht in 1713. The allied army threatened it in 1744. The Austrians besieged Lille Sep. 24, 1792, and were compelled to retire Oct. 8. Louis XVIII. found refuge here for a few days, on the escape of Napoleon I. from Elba in 1815.

LILY. — The gigantic lily was introduced into England from New South Wales in 1800. (See FLEUR DE LYS.)

LILYBÆUM (Sicily), the modern Marsala (q. v.), was built by the Carthaginians B.C. 397. Pyrrhus besieged it for two months unsuccessfully, B.C. 276. The Romans, who laid siege to it during the first Punic war, were defeated B.C. 250, and it capitulated B.C. 241.

LIMA (Peru) was founded by Pizarro as his capital, under the name of Ciudad de los Reyes, or the City of the Kings, Jan. 6, 1535. Here he was assassinated, Sunday, June 26, 1541. The archbishopric was founded in the 16th century, and a council was held here in 1583. The inhabitants revolted against Gen. Santa Cruz, July 29, 1838. It suffered severely from earthquakes in 1746, in 1828, and April 22 and 23, 1860, and was devastated by yellow fever in 1854.

LIMBURG (Belgium).—The French demolished the outworks of this town, the capital of the duchy of Limburg, in the province of Liége, in 1675. Marlborough invested Limburg Sep. 10, 1703, and the garrison surrendered Sep. 27.

LIMBURG (Belgium and Holland).—This province is supposed to have been occupied by the Eburones, in whose territories Julius Cæsar quartered a legion B.C. 54. The Eburones, who attacked the Roman camp, and massacred nearly all the troops, were exterminated by Cæsar, B.C. 53. The country was formed into a duchy, which was annexed to Burgundy in 1430, and constituted one of the United Provinces. It was ceded to France in 1795, and was soon after restored to the Netherlands. After the revolution of 1830, the province of Limburg was divided between Belgium and Holland.

LIMBURG (Germany).—The Prussians were driven from this town, on the river Lahn, in the duchy of Nassau, by the French, Nov. 9, 1792. The Prussians regained possession of Limburg in a few days. The French drove the Austrians from Limburg in June, 1796, and the Austrians recovered it Sep. 16, 1796.

LIME or DRUMMOND LIGHT, invented by Capt. T. Drummond, was first practically applied in the survey of Ireland, commenced in 1824, and is described by the inventor in the "Philosophical Transactions" for 1826. He recommended its application to lighthouses in 1830.

LIME or LINDEN TREE.—This handsome tree, which is not indigenous to this country, existed here as early as the middle of the 16th century.

LIMERICK (Bishopric).—The reputed founder of this Irish diocese is St. Munchin, of whom little is known except his name. Sir James Ware, however, contends that it was erected by Donald O'Brien about the time of the English invasion. Gille, or Gillebert, in 1106, is the first bishop of whom anything is known.

LIMERICK (Ireland).—This city, the capital of the county of the same name, is said to have been a place of some repute in the 5th century. First attacked by the Danes in 812, it was captured by them about the middle of the 9th century. Donald O'Brien founded the cathedral about the period of the English invasion, and built a convent for Black nuns about 1174. King John visited Limerick in 1210, and erected Thomond Bridge over the Shannon, and in 1314 the suburbs were burned by the Scotch, under Edward Bruce. The fortifications were completed in 1495. The bull against Elizabeth was placed on the gates in 1570. In 1641 Limerick was seized by the confederate Roman Catholics, under Lords Muskerry and Skerrin, and in 1643 it became the head-quarters of the Irish papists. Ireton took it after a six months' siege, Oct. 20, 1651, and died here the following Nov. 26. William III. commenced the siege of Limerick Aug. 9, 1690, and after a great expenditure of life, was compelled to raise it Aug. 30. It was, however, renewed in 1691, by Gen. Ginkell, who succeeded in taking the city. A truce was agreed upon Sep. 23, 1691, and the celebrated Treaty of Limerick (q. v.) was signed Oct. 3. The Custom-house was erected in 1769, the Exchange in 1778, the gaol and lunatic asylum in 1821, and the City Infirmary in 1829. The lace manufacture, for which Limerick is celebrated, was introduced in 1829. Serious riots occurred June 15, 1830. The mob attacked the provision warehouses, flour mills, &c., doing damage to the extent of £10,000. The bank was erected in 1840, and the workhouse in 1841.

LIMERICK (Treaty), called the Pacification of Limerick, which put an end to the authority of James II. in Ireland, was signed Oct. 3, 1691. By the first article the Roman Catholics were to enjoy such privileges in the exercise of their religion as were consistent with the laws of Ireland, or such as they enjoyed in the reign of Charles II. A general amnesty was granted to all persons willing to remain in Ireland. They were to have all their estates, and all the rights, privileges, and immunities which they enjoyed in the reign of Charles II., free from forfeitures, or outlawries incurred by them. The garrison were permitted to march out with the honours of war, and to take service in the French army. About 12,000 men were conveyed to France, and enlisted under the banner of Louis XIV. They formed the Irish Brigade, so celebrated in the continental wars of the 18th century. William III. ratified the treaty in Feb., 1692. The English Parliament accepted the treaty, but the Irish Parliament declared that Gen. Ginkell and the lords justices had exceeded their powers, and, in 1695, passed an act putting their own construction upon the terms of the convention. Sir H. Parnell brought forward a motion in the House of Commons, March 6, 1828, for an address to the king, praying that this treaty might be laid before the House. This led to an animated discussion respecting the obligations it imposed upon England to remove the disabilities of the Roman Catholics.

LIMITED LIABILITY.—(See JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES ACTS and JOINT-STOCK BANKS.)

LIMOGES (France), the Augustoritum of the Romans, was, in their time, the chief town of the Lemovices, who joined Vercingetorix against Julius Cæsar, B.C. 52. Councils were held here in 848, 1029, Nov. 18, 1031, and in 1182. It was called Lemovica, became the capital of the province of Limousin, and was taken by Edward the Black Prince in 1370. The Black Prince was shortly after compelled to retire to England, on account of ill health; and the capture of this town, in which he is said to have displayed great cruelty, was his last military exploit. Its cathedral was commenced in the 13th, and the church of St.

Michael-aux-Lions was built in the 15th century.

LIMOUSIN, or LIMOSIN (France).—This province, inhabited by the Lemovices, was wrested from the Visigoths by Clovis I., King of the Franks, in 507. It was included in Guienne, and afterwards made a separate province, for the possession of which the kings of France and England waged frequent war. Richard I. lost his life from a wound received whilst besieging the castle of Chalus-Chabrol, in Limousin, March 26, 1199. Philip II. seized it in 1203, but Louis IX. restored it to the English in 1259, and it was united to France in 1370. It was united to the French crown by Henry IV. in 1589. Turgot was intendant of the Limousin from 1761 to 1773.

LINCELLES (Battle).—Gen. Lake defeated the French at this village, in the Netherlands, Aug. 18, 1793.

LINCOLN (Battles).—Ralph, Earl of Chester, and Robert, Earl of Gloucester, attacked and defeated Stephen at Lincoln, Sunday, Feb. 2, 1141. Stephen was captured and imprisoned in Bristol Castle. Maud was acknowledged as "Lady of England" at Winchester, April 7, 1141. ——A French army that had been sent over to assist the rebellious barons against Henry III., was attacked and totally defeated by the Earl of Pembroke, and Peter, Bishop of Winchester, at Lincoln, Saturday, May 20, 1217. Roger of Wendover states that in derision of Louis, son of Philip II. (Augustus) of France, and the barons, this was called the battle of the Fair.

LINCOLN (Bishopric).—The two sees of Leicester (q. v.) and Lindisse, or Lindsey, erected in 680, were united in 873. In 886 the seat of the diocese was fixed at Dorchester, and about 1078 it was transferred to Lincoln. The see of Ely was created from that of Lincoln in 1109, that of Oxford in 1541, and that of Peterborough in 1541; and it was further reduced by the annexation of several districts previously under its jurisdiction to other sees in 1837.

LINCOLN (Lincolnshire), the Roman Lindum, was a station of the Romans. "Newport Gate" is a ruin of a Roman archway erected in 418. The castle was founded by William I. in 1086. A charter of incorporation was granted to Lincoln by Henry II. (1154—1189). Stephen was captured here by the Earl of Chester, and many of the citizens were slaughtered Feb. 2, 1141. Lincoln was taken by the Parliamentarians under the Earl of Manchester, May 5, 1644. The city was represented in Parliament in the reign of Henry III. (1216—1272). The cathedral, founded by William I. in 1086, was burned down in 1126, and was afterwards rebuilt. St. Peter's church was built in 1723. The famous bell, Great Tom, cast in 1610, cracked in 1827, was broken up in 1834.

LINCOLN COLLEGE (Oxford), founded by Richard Flemmyng, Bishop of Lincoln, Oct. 13, 1428, was extended by Rotherham, Bishop of Lincoln, in 1479. Other emoluments were added by Crew, Bishop of Durham, in 1718, and Dr. Hutchins in 1781. The largest quadrangle was erected in the 15th century, the small court was built by Sir Thomas Rotherham in 1612, and the chapel was built in 1631 by Archbishop Williams, who had the illuminated windows brought from Italy in 1629. The college was repaired in 1818.

LINCOLNSHIRE (England). — A Saxon kingdom, called Lindsey, subordinate to Mercia, occupied the same extent of country as Lincolnshire. The Danes obtained possession of Lindsey in 877.

LINCOLN'S INN (London).—The Earl of Lincoln erected a palace here in 1229, whence the name. It was used by the bishops of Chichester as a palace until 1310, when a law school was established. Queen Elizabeth made a grant of the fee simple of Lincoln's Inn to the benchers. Furnival's Inn, which belonged to the Lords Furnival in the reign of Richard II. (1377—99), was purchased by the society of Lincoln's Inn in the reign of Edward VI. (1537–53). The library of Lincoln's Inn was commenced in 1522, and the chapel was erected from the designs of Inigo Jones in 1626. The hall and the new buildings were opened by Queen Victoria, Oct. 30, 1845.

LINCOLN'S INN FIELDS (London).—Lord William Russell was beheaded in Lincoln's Inn Fields, July 21, 1683. The square was enclosed in 1737.

LINCOLN'S INN FIELDS THEATRE (London) was situated in Portugal Row, on the south side of Lincoln's Inn, at the back of the Royal College of Surgeons. The first was originally a tennis-court, which was converted into "the Duke's Theatre" by Sir William Davenant, and opened in 1662. The second theatre was built by Congreve and others, and opened with the first performance of "Love for Love," April 30, 1695. It was pulled down by Christopher Rich in 1714, and the new theatre was opened after his decease by his son John, Dec. 18, 1714. The "Beggar's Opera" was brought out at this house Jan. 29, 1728. Lincoln's Inn Theatre was converted into a barrack in 1756, and was finally taken down Aug. 28, 1848.

LINDISFARNE.—(See HOLY ISLAND.)

LINDSEY, or LINDUM ISLAND (Lincolnshire).—This province was, according to Bede, converted to Christianity by Paulinus, in 628. The Danes seized Lindsey in 838, and again in 993. A bishop's see, established at Lindisse, supposed to be Stow, in Lincolnshire, in 680, was removed to Lincoln in 1078.

LINEN was woven at a very early period. Pharaoh arrayed Joseph in vestures of fine linen (Gen. xli. 42), B.C. 1715. The Egyptians had attained high perfection in the art of manufacturing linen B.C. 700, and exported it, according to Herodotus, B.C. 478. It was used in Britain prior to the Roman invasion, B.C. 55, and the manufacture attained great perfection in England before the end of the 7th century. In Ireland it was woven in the 11th century. Fine linen was first made in Wilts and Sussex, in 1253. Irish linen was used at Winchester in 1272. In 1314 it formed the chief material of clothing in Wales. The trade was much improved by French refugees in 1685, and encouraged by the establishment of a "Linen Board," which was abolished in 1828. In 1533 a wheel for spinning flax was invented at Brunswick. Machinery was first used in this manufacture in 1725. Linen was manufactured in Scotland early in the 18th century, and a board of trustees for its encouragement was formed in 1727. The English Linen Company was established in 1764. John Kendrew, of Darlington, invented the flax-spinning machine in 1787. Flax-weaving by steam power was accomplished in London in 1812 or 1813. The duty on linen was abolished by the commercial treaty signed with France, Jan. 23, 1860.

LINGHIERA (Sea-fight).—The Venetians, assisted by the Spaniards, defeated the Genoese, off this place, in Italy, Aug. 29, 1353.

LINGONUM CIVITAS, or ANDEMATUNNUM (Gaul).—Constantius I. (Chlorus), in 298, defeated the Alemanni at this town, destroyed by Attila in 407. It was rebuilt by the Burgundians, and became the capital of a country called, in old French, Langone. Louis VII. (1137—80) made it a duchy. The cathedral was founded in 380. (See LANGRES.)

LINKÖPING (Sweden).—The cathedral of this town, one of the most ancient in Sweden, was founded in the 12th century.

LINLITHGOW (Battle).—During the minority of James V. of Scotland, the charge of his person was entrusted to certain peers in rotation. He came of age at 14, in April, 1525; but the Earl of Angus continued to control his actions, and a party was formed against him by the Earl of Lenox and others in 1526. The two armies met at the bridge of Linlithgow, about midsummer, when Lenox was killed, and his forces were defeated. (See LOTHIANS.)

LINLITHGOW (Scotland).—The chief town of Linlithgow, or West Lothian, was founded by David I. (1124—53). The palace, built in the 15th century, was the birth-place of Mary Queen of Scots, Dec. 8, 1542. A council was held here in 1553.

LINNÆAN SOCIETY (London), founded in 1788, was incorporated March 26, 1802. The library and herbarium of Linnæus, now in possession of the society, were purchased for £1,000 by Dr. Smith. The Transactions of the society were first published in 1791.

LINNÆAN SYSTEM.—The classification of plants according to their stamens and pistils was accomplished by the great Swedish naturalist, Charles Linné or Linnæus, who was born at Rashult, in Sweden, May 13, 1707 (O.S.), and died at Upsal, Jan. 10, 1778. It was originally published in the Hortus Uplandicus in 1731, and at once established the reputation of its author. The Species Plantarum was published in 1753.

LINZ, or LINTZ (Austria), the ancient Lentia, at one time a Roman station, was purchased by the Margrave of Austria, in 1036. Fardinger, the peasant leader, made an unsuccessful attack upon it in 1626; and it was entered by the army of the Elector of Bavaria, where he was declared Duke of Austria, in 1741. The town-hall was built in 1414, and Trinity column was erected by Charles VI. in 1723. The fortifications were improved after a plan by Prince Maximilian d'Este in 1850.

LION COLLEGE, at page 267, is a misprint for Sion College (q. v.).

LION AND SUN.—This Persian order, said to have existed as early as 1244, was instituted in 1808.

LION AND UNICORN (Heraldry) were first adopted as supporters of the royal arms of England on the accession of James I., in 1603. The former was previously the supporter of the English, and the latter of the Scottish shield.

LIOPPO (Battle).—Garibaldi defeated the Neapolitans at this place, in Italy, May 16, 1860.

LIPARA, the modern Lipari, was founded on one of the Lipari islands by the Rhodians and Cnidians, B.C. 580. Agathocles ravaged it B.C. 304; the Carthaginians captured it B.C. 264, and made it a naval station; C. Aurelius took it B.C. 251, and it was annexed to the Roman empire. Attalus, who attempted to make himself emperor, was banished here in 416. Robert, King of Naples, captured it in 1339. Khair Eddin Barbarossa seized the town and carried the inhabitants into slavery in 1544.

LIPARI ISLANDS (Mediterranean Sea).—This volcanic group, consisting of seven principal islands, was known to the ancients under the names of the Æoliæ, Hephæstiæ, or Vulcaniæ Insulæ, and of the Liparenses, from Lipara, the largest of the group, said to have been so called from Liparus, one of its early kings. The group was colonized by the Dorians about B.C. 580.

LIPETZK (Russia) was founded by Peter I. (the Great) in 1700.

LIPOGRAMS, verses from which certain letters were excluded, were invented by the Greek poet Lasus, who was born B.C. 538. Tryphiodorus, the Greek grammarian, who flourished in Egypt in the 5th century, according to Addison (Spectator, No. 59), "composed an odyssey, or epic poem, on the adventures of Ulysses, consisting of four-and-twenty books, having entirely banished the letter A from his first book, which was called Alpha (as lucus a non lucendo), because there was not an Alpha in it. His second book was inscribed Beta, for the same reason. In short, the poet excluded the whole four-and-twenty letters in their turns, and showed them, one after another, that he could do his business without them." Fabius Claudius Gordianus Fulgentius wrote similar verse in Latin in the 6th century, and there are many later instances of this kind of verse.

LIPPAU (Battle), fought during the Hussite war, between the Calixtines and the Taborites, at this place, near Prague, May 28, 1434. The two Procops fell in the encounter, in which the Taborites were defeated. It is also called the battle of Boehmischbrod.

LIPPE (Germany).—This town was built in the 12th century, and took its name from the river Lippe, near which Varus and his three legions were slaughtered by the Saxons, under Arminius, in the year 9. It was made a principality in 1129. Bernard VIII., who died in 1563, was the first to assume the title of count, and in 1613 he divided his possessions amongst his three sons, who founded the lines of Lippe-Detmold, Lippe-Brake, and Lippe-Bückeburg, or Schaumburg. The line of Lippe-Brake became extinct in 1709. The Aulic ruler of Lippe-Detmold took possession of the whole of Lippe-Brake; but the Aulic Council, in 1734 and 1737, divided it between Lippe-Buckeburg, or Schaumburg, and Lippe-Detmold, and a convention on the subject was concluded between the two houses in 1748. Lippe-Detmold ceded territory to Prussia, May 17, 1850. A new constitution was adopted March 15, 1853.

LIPPSTADT (Germany).—This town of Lippe-Detmold, now forming part of Prussian Westphalia, was taken by the French in 1757.

LIRIS.—(See GARIGLIANO.)

LISBON (Portugal) received from Julius Cæsar the rights of a municipium, with the title of Felicitas Julia, and was also called Olisipo, or Ulisippo. It was taken from the Romans by the barbarian hordes in 409. The Moors took it in 711, and it was wrested from them by Alphonso I., King of Portugal, in 1147. It was made an archbishopric in 1390, and a patriarchate by Clement XI. in 1716, and became the seat of the government in place of Coimbra in 1433, and was taken by the Duke of Bragança in 1640. The city suffered from an earthquake in 1531, and was nearly destroyed by another, when 30,000 or 40,000 persons lost their lives, Nov. 1, 1755. A mausoleum in the English cemetery is erected over the grave of Fielding the novelist, who died here Oct. 8, 1754. Lisbon was in possession of the French from Nov. 30, 1807, till Sep. 15, 1808, when they retired in accordance with the terms of the convention of Cintra (q. v.). The Duke of Wellington landed here April 22, 1809, upon taking command of the army for the liberation of the Peninsula. The Bank of Lisbon suspended payment Dec. 7, 1827. Insurrectionary movements occurred March 1, and lasted to March 5, and April 25, 1828. The troops revolted against Don Miguel, Aug. 21, 1831, on which occasion 300 lives were lost. It was captured by Don Pedro in July, 1833. A mutiny amongst a portion of the garrison occurred Feb. 13, 1838. A National Exhibition was opened here Sep. 18, 1865.

LISBON (Treaties).—A treaty of peace between Spain and Portugal was concluded at Lisbon, through the mediation of England, Feb. 13, 1668. Spain recognized the independence of Portugal.——A defensive alliance with Great Britain was signed at Lisbon, May 16, 1703, and treaties of commerce, Dec. 27, 1703, and July 3, 1842. (See METHUEN TREATY.)

LISBURN (Ireland).—Sir Fulk Conway erected a castle at Lisburn in 1610, and the town, built by one of his descendants in 1627, was destroyed by the Irish rebels in 1641, and was burned in 1707. Jeremy Taylor, Bishop of Down (q. v.) and Connor, died here Aug. 13, 1667.

LISIEUX (France).—The inhabitants of this town, the ancient Noviomagus, afterwards called Lexovii, joined in the Gallic struggle against Cæsar B.C. 52. The Saxons pillaged it in the 4th century, and the Northmen in 877. It was burned by the Bretons in 1130, taken by Philip II. (Augustus) in 1203, by the English in 1415, by Charles VII. in 1448, by the Huguenots in 1571, and by Henry IV. in 1589. Councils were held here in 1055, and in Oct., 1106. A destructive fire took place Oct. 10, 1864.

LISLE.—(See LILLE.)

LISMORE (Bishopric).—This Irish bishopric was founded by St. Carthagh about 631. Attempts were made to unite it with Waterford in 1225 and 1326; and the union was effected by Edward III. Oct. 2, 1363.

LISMORE (Ireland).—This city, at first called Dunsginne, and then Lismore, or the Great House, in the county of Waterford, was assailed by the Danes in the 9th century. It is celebrated for its castle, which was founded by King John when Earl of Moreton, in 1185. In 1189 it was seized by the natives, and in 1589 was granted to Sir Walter Raleigh, by whom it was sold to Sir Richard Boyle, first Earl of Cork. Lismore, unsuccessfully besieged by the Irish rebels in 1641 and in 1643, was taken by Lord Castlehaven in 1645.

LISSA (Adriatic Sea).—This island, the ancient Issa, was colonized by Dionysius the Elder, B.C. 387, was besieged by Agron, King of Illyria, B.C. 232, and was liberated B.C. 229. The Venetians wrested it from the Normans in 1073.

LISSA (Sea-Fights).—Sir William Hoste defeated a French and Italian fleet off this island, March 13, 1811.——The Austrian fleet, commanded by Admiral Tegethoff, defeated the Italian fleet, with great loss, July 20, 1866.

LISSA, LIESNA, or LESZNA (Battle).—The Russians, under Peter I. (the Great), defeated the Swedes near this town, in Posen, at the junction of the Punca and the Sossa, Oct. 8, 1708. The Swedish Gen. Löwenhaupt, with inferior numbers, repulsed the Russians at the first charge, Oct. 7. The battle was continued Oct. 8; the Russians advanced no less than five times; numbers at last prevailed, and Löwenhaupt passed the Sossa during the night, having with 10,000 men maintained an arduous conflict with 40,000 Russians during two days. (See LEUTHEN.)

LISSUS (Illyria), now called Alessio, or Lesch, was founded by Dionysius the Elder, about B.C. 385. Scanderbeg, after his victorious campaign in Albania, died at this town, Jan. 17, 1467, and it was taken by the Turks in 1476.

LISTOWEL (Ireland) was captured by Sir Charles Wilmot in 1600.

LITANIES, or ROGATIONS, formerly a general name for prayers, were instituted by Mamertus, Bishop of Vienne, in France, about 450, and established by a decree of the Council of Orleans, July 10, 511. Gregory I. instituted such forms at Rome, one in particular under the name of Litania septiformis, in 598. Henry VIII. ordered a litany or procession to be set forth in English, "because the prayers being in an unknown tongue, made the people negligent in coming to church," June 11, 1544. Hallam says it had been translated into English in 1542. In the Common Prayer Book of 1549, the Litany was placed between the Communion office and the office for baptism. In the Second Prayer Book of 1552, it was placed in its present position; and it was used as a distinct service till 1661.

LITERARY CLUB.—(See CLUB.)

LITERARY FUND (London).—The Royal Literary Fund was founded by David Williams in 1790, and incorporated in 1818. Its object is to relieve authors who have been reduced to want through age or misfortune. At the anniversary meeting, April 12, 1804, the Prince of Wales, afterwards George IV., was proposed as a patron.

LITERATURE.—The principal facts connected with literature are recorded in the history of different states, ancient and modern. Much information will be found in Hallam's "Introduction to the Literature of Europe in the Fifteenth, Sixteenth, and Seventeenth Centuries," in the new edition of "Lowndes' Bibliographer's Manual of English Literature," by Mr. Bohn, in Brunet's "Manuel du Libraire," and other works. (See GUILD OF LITERATURE AND ART, HISTORY, LANGUAGE, PHILOSOPHY, POETRY, &c. &c.)

LITHIUM.—Lithia was discovered by Arfwedson in 1817. Brande obtained Lithium in 1822, and Bunsen and Matthiessen discovered the present mode of obtaining it in 1855.

LITHOGRAPHY.—This art was invented by Alois Senefelder, a native of Prague, who produced a piece of music, his first impression from stone, in 1796. He secured a patent for his invention in 1800 in several German states, extending over fifteen years. It was introduced into England in 1801, and he published a work on the subject in 1817. A partnership was entered into, and establishments were formed in London and Paris, in 1799, but they did not succeed. Another, at Munich, in 1806, was more prosperous; and the inventor was ultimately appointed to the inspectorship of the Royal Lithographic Establishment, in October, 1809. The Society for the Encouragement of Arts in London voted Senefelder their gold medal in 1819.

LITHOTOMY.—The operation of cutting for the stone was practised by Ammonius of Alexandria about B.C. 250, and by Celsus about 17. They employed the method known as the less or minor apparatus. The high operation was first practised at Paris by Colot in 1475; the greater apparatus, so called from the numerous instruments employed, was invented by Johannes de Romanis in 1590, and published by Marianus Sanctus in 1524. The lateral operation was invented by Franco before 1561, and was taught at Paris by Frère Jacques in 1697. (See LITHOTRITY.)

LITHOTRITY.—This operation is believed to have been practised by the surgeons of Alexandria before the Christian æra, though it was first suggested in modern times by Gruithuisen, a Bavarian surgeon, who constructed an apparatus for the purpose in 1812. Civiale, a French surgeon, first performed the operation in 1824. Great improvements have been effected in the apparatus.

LITHUANIA (Russia), occupied in 1009 by a savage people, whose origin is unknown, was conquered by the Sword-bearers, and the Knights of Jerusalem, in the 13th century. Having united the independent tribes, and concentrated his power, Ringold assumed the title of grand duke in 1230, and was succeeded by his son, Mendog, who embraced Christianity in 1252, though he abjured it in 1255. Witenes acquired the supreme power in 1282, which he transmitted to his son Ghedemin in 1315. Jagellon came to the throne in 1381; and on condition of receiving in marriage Hedwige, daughter of the King of Poland, together with the crown of that country, he consented to become a Christian, and was baptized, with his nobles and many of his subjects, Feb. 14, 1386. By the treaty of Lublin, in 1569, the two countries were formally united. Part of it passed with Poland under the sway of Russia, Feb. 17, 1772, and the remainder in March, 1794. The ancient serpent-worship is said to have prevailed in Lithuania till late in the 15th century. An insurrection, which was soon suppressed, occurred in 1831. The peasants took part with Russia during the Polish revolt of 1848.

LITTLE or LITTLE HORNED PARLIAMENT. (See BAREBONE'S PARLIAMENT.)

LITTLE ROCK (United States).—This town in Arkansas, founded in 1820, was taken by the Federals Sep. 10, 1863.

LITURGIES were used in the Temple service of the Jews in the time of the Apostles, and, according to Mosheim, among the early Christians, "each individual bishop prescribed to his own flock such a form of public worship as he thought best." Uniformity in the churches of a province was agreed to at various councils, and amongst others at Agda, Sep. 11, 506, and Gerona, June 8, 517. The Breviary of the Romish church was in use about the middle of the 5th century. Henry VIII.'s "Primer" was published in 1535. The Liturgy, compiled under the superintendence of Cranmer, by order of Edward VI., was issued in 1549, and revised by a resolution of Parliament, April 29, 1559. The English Liturgy in its present form was established by an act of Parliament, which received the royal assent May 19, 1662.

LITVATOROK (Treaty), was concluded between Austria and the Ottoman empire, in 1606. The Turks relinquished their claim to tribute from Hungary, and, for the first time in the history of their diplomacy, condescended to conclude peace with the formalities used by the other nations of Europe.

LIVERIES were not assumed by the trade companies of London before the reign of Edward I. (1272—1307); but they afterwards became so dangerous as party badges, that they were regulated by 16 Rich. II. c. 4 (1392), and by 20 Rich. II. c. 2 (1396). The practice was forbidden in the first and seventh years of Henry IV.'s reign; again by 13 Hen. IV. c. 3 (1411); by 8 Edw. IV. c. 2 (1468), and by other statutes. They were, however, allowed at coronations, and in great public ceremonies. In consequence of these restrictions, the companies were compelled to obtain the king's licence before adopting liveries.

LIVERPOOL (Lancashire).—The origin of this important town, and even the etymology of its name, are involved in great obscurity. Baines (Hist. of Liverpool, p. 58) considers the first portion of the name to be derived from the Gothic word "lide" or "lithe," the sea; but other authorities regard it as the water-fowl called the "liver," which they state to have abounded on the shores of the Mersey at an early date. The site of Liverpool was granted by William I. (1066—87) to Roger of Poitou. It was afterwards purchased by King John (1199—1216), and passed through the hands of the Earls of Derby and Chester, until it was granted to the House of Lancaster by Henry III. (1216—72). On the accession of Henry IV. in 1399, it became the property of the crown, and it continued to be so until it was sold by Charles I. in 1628.

LIVERPOOL ADMINISTRATION. — Mr. Perceval having been assassinated as he was entering the lobby of the House of Commons, May 11, 1812, new ministerial arrangements became necessary. A motion for an address to the Prince Regent, praying his royal highness to take such measures as might be best calculated to form an efficient administration, was carried in the House of Commons May 21, by 174 to 170. The Marquis of Wellesley, who received instructions to form an administration June 1, declared that his efforts had been unsuccessful June 3. The Earl of Liverpool announced that he had undertaken the task June 8. The cabinet, formed principally of members of the Perceval administration, was thus constituted :—

Treasury	Earl of Liverpool.
Lord Chancellor	Lord Eldon.
President of the Council	Earl of Harrowby.
Privy Seal	Earl of Westmoreland.
Chancellor of Exchequer	Mr. N. Vansittart.
Home Secretary	Viscount Sidmouth.
Foreign Secretary	Viscount Castlereagh, afterwards Marquis of Londonderry.
Colonial Secretary	Earl Bathurst.
Admiralty	Viscount Melville.
Board of Control	Earl of Buckinghamshire.
Ordnance	Earl Mulgrave.
Without office	Marquis Camden.

The Duke of Richmond was lord-lieutenant of Ireland. Mr. Charles Bathurst was made chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster, with a seat in the cabinet, in 1813. The Hon. W. Wellesley Pole, master of the mint, was admitted to a seat in the cabinet in 1815. Mr. Canning became president of the Board of Control, in place of the Earl of Buckinghamshire, in 1816. Mr. F. J. Robinson, afterwards Viscount Goderich, and ultimately Earl of Ripon, was admitted into the cabinet as treasurer of the navy and president of the Board of Trade, in 1818. The Duke of Wellington was made master-general of the ordnance Jan. 1, 1819, in place of Earl Mulgrave, who retained a seat in the cabinet without office. Mr. Canning resigned the Board of Control in June, 1820, and the post was given to Mr. C. Bathurst, who was also chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster. Lord Maryborough succeeded the Hon. W. Wellesley Pole as master of the mint, in 1821. Sir Robert Peel took the Home Office in Jan., 1822, in place of Viscount Sidmouth, who retained a seat in the cabinet, without office; and the Board of Control was taken from Mr. C. Bathurst, and entrusted to Mr. C. W. W. Wynne. The death of the Marquis of Londonderry, Aug. 12, 1822, induced Mr. Canning to resign the governor-generalship of India, to which he had been appointed, though he had not quitted England, and he accepted the foreign secretaryship Sep. 16. Mr. F. J. Robinson was made chancellor of the exchequer Jan. 31, 1823, in place of Mr. N. Vansittart, who had resigned, and was created Lord Bexley, March 1. He was appointed to the chancellorship of the duchy of Lancaster in place of Mr. C. Bathurst. Mr. Huskisson, as treasurer of the navy, and president of the Board of Trade, obtained a seat in the cabinet in 1825. The Earl of Liverpool was attacked by apoplexy, Saturday, Feb. 17, 1827, and a new ministry was formed in April. The Earl of Liverpool died Dec. 4, 1828. (See CANNING ADMINISTRATION.)

LIVONIA (Russia) was visited by some Baltic traders from Bremen in 1158. A mission of German monks converted the natives to Christianity in 1186. The Sword-bearers subdued the country in 1237. Kettler, the last grand master of the order, abdicated his power in favour of Poland in 1561. It was transferred to Sweden by the treaty of Oliva, May 3, 1660. Peter I. (the Great) of Russia made himself master of the country in 1710, and it was annexed to Russia by the Treaty of Nystadt, Aug. 30, 1721. Alexander II. liberated the serfs of Livonia Sep. 24, 1818.

LLANDAFF (Bishopric).—According to tradition, this bishopric was created by King Lucius, about 180, and Elvanus was the first bishop. Dubritius, who is said to have died in 612, is the first bishop respecting whom anything is certainly known. The deanery of Llandaff was founded and endowed in Nov. 1843.

LLANDEWYER (Battle). — Llewelyn, who had made a descent into the marshes, was defeated and slain near the town of Llandoweyer, or Llandeilo-Fawr, Caermarthenshire, Dec. 11, 1282.

LLERENA Battle.—Lord Combermere defeated a French army commanded by Drouet, near this town, in Spain, April 11, 1812.

LLOYD'S (London).—A number of merchants who were in the habit of congregating at a coffee-house kept by a person named Lloyd, in Abchurch Lane, Lombard Street, to transact business, early in the 18th century, afterwards removed to Pope's Head Alley, and thence to the Royal Exchange in 1774. On the destruction of the Royal Exchange by fire, the business was transferred to the South Sea House, Old Broad Street, Jan. 10, 1838, and thence to the Royal Exchange, Oct. 28, 1844. The Austrian Lloyd's was established at Trieste in 1833.

LOADSTONE.—The attractive power of the natural magnet was known to the ancient Greeks in Homer's time, B.C. 962, and it is alleged to have been known by the Chinese B.C. 1000. The directive power of this substance was probably discovered in Europe about 1150, although a Chinese writer describes it in 1111. The Neapolitans maintain that it was adapted to the compass for maritime purposes by a citizen of Amalphi in 1302.

LOANDA, LOANDO, or ST. PAUL DE LOANDO (Africa), the capital of Angola, was commenced by the Portuguese in 1578. Taken in 1640 by the Dutch, it was recaptured by the Portuguese in 1648.

LOANO (Battle).—The French defeated an Austrian and Sardinian army in the valley of Loano, Nov. 23 and 24, 1795.

LOANS.—Loans to the public on parliamentary security, resorted to in place of aids or benevolences (q. v.), originated in 1382, when Richard II. demanded the loan of £40,000 for the defence of the kingdom, and the merchants refused to lend because they had formerly been subjected to prosecutions under pretence of having defrauded the sovereign. Cardinal Wolsey resorted to forced loans as a means of recruiting the exchequer in 1522 and 1525, and Parliament afterwards released the king from all obligation to pay the debts so contracted, by 35 Hen. VIII. c. 12 (1543). Charles I. demanded loans from his subjects in 1626, and an act of council was passed, requiring a general loan from the subject. Necker (1770—1790) introduced loans into the French financial system.

LOAN SOCIETIES.—By 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 23 (Aug. 21, 1835), the rules, &c., of these associations were ordered to be enrolled, as in the case of friendly societies. New regulations were enforced by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 110 (Aug. 11, 1840), which has been annually continued by act of Parliament.

LOBAU (Germany).—This island, in the Danube, was captured by Napoleon I., May 19, 1809, and the French army retired here after the battle of Aspern, May 22. A council of war was held by Napoleon at 10 at night. Extensive works were erected by the French, who crossed to the opposite bank of the river, July 2—4.

LOBOS, or SEAL ISLANDS (Pacific Ocean), were discovered by the Spaniards, towards the end of the 16th century, though the Americans pretend to have discovered them in 1823. Lord Anson visited the islands, Nov. 10, 1741. The guano (q. v.), for which they are celebrated, was noticed in Acosta's work on the Indies, published at Seville in 1590.

LOCAL EXAMINATIONS. — (See UNIVERSITY LOCAL EXAMINATIONS.)

LOCARNO (Switzerland).—The dome of the church of La Madonna del Gasso, at this town, on Lake Maggiore, crushed by the accumulated snows of winter, fell upon the assembled congregation and killed 53 women and one old man, Sunday, Jan. 11, 1863.

LOCHLEVEN CASTLE (Kinross-shire), said to have been founded by Congal, son of Dongart, King of the Picts, in the 5th century, was the prison to which Mary Queen of Scots was conveyed after the battle of Carberry Hill, June 16, 1567. She made her escape by the aid of George Douglas, May 2, 1568. (See LANGSIDE.)

LOCKS.—(See CANALS.)

LOCKS AND KEYS.—The most ancient lock and key known is one, clumsily made of wood, discovered by Bonomi at Khorsabad, which is believed to be upwards of 4,000 years old. Locks and keys were used by the Israelites at a very early period, as appears from Judges iii. 23—25 (B.C. 1343). The classical authors attributed the invention to the Lacedæmonians, whose celebrated lock was a padlock in principle. Numerous bronze and iron keys, differing little from the more common kinds in use at the present day, were found at Pompeii and Herculaneum. The most beautiful and ingenious mediæval locks and keys were made in the 16th century. The first patent for their improvement was granted to George Black, May 27, 1774, but no great advance was made until Barron patented his "double-acting tumbler lock," Oct. 31, 1778. Bramah's lock was patented April 23, 1784; Chubb's original lock, Feb. 3, 1818; Newell's American Parantoptic lock was invented in 1841, and patented in England April 15, 1851, and Hobbs's protector lock, Feb. 23, 1852.

LOCOMOTIVE.—The idea of the construction of a locomotive was thrown out in 1759 by Watt, who patented one in 1784. Richard Trevithick made one for the Merthyr Tydvil Railway in 1804, and Brunton another of a different description in 1813. George Stephenson's locomotive with toothed wheels was tried at West Moor, Killingworth, July 25, 1814. The "Rocket," the joint production of the two Stephensons, performed an experimental trip on the Liverpool and Manchester Railway Oct. 6, 1829. The use of locomotives on turnpike and other roads was regulated by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 70 (Aug. 6, 1861), which was repealed, fresh regulations being made by 28 & 29 Vict. c. 83 (July 5, 1865).

LOCRI, or LOCRI EPIZEPHYRII (Italy).—This celebrated city, the modern Gerace, was founded by a colony of Locrians from Greece, B.C. 710, 683, or 673, according to different authorities, and received a written code of laws from Zaleucus, B.C. 500. Tradition states that 10,000 of its inhabitants totally defeated 130,000 Crotoniats at the battle of the Sagras, B.C. 510. Much uncertainty prevails respecting the alleged victory. The territory of Caulonia was added to Locri B.C. 389, and that of Hipponium B.C. 388; but the latter city was taken by the Carthaginians B.C. 379. Dionysius the tyrant retired to Locri on his expulsion from Syracuse, B.C. 356, and established an arbitrary and oppressive government. The inhabitants assisted the Carthaginians against the Romans in the second Punic war, B.C. 216, and their city was invested by the consul Crispinus, who was compelled to raise the siege by Hannibal B.C. 208. It was, however, taken by Scipio B.C. 205, and never regained its former importance. It existed in the 6th century of the Christian æra, and was probably finally destroyed by the Saracens.

LOCRIS, or LOCRIANS. — The Locrians, according to Clinton, were a tribe of Leleges who existed before the time of Amphictyon (B.C. 1521), but derived their name from his grandson Locrus. They soon became intermingled with the Hellenes, and in historical times are distinguished into eastern and western Locrians. The eastern Locrians are mentioned by Homer as accompanying Ajax to the Trojan war, but the western Locrians do not appear till the Peloponnesian war, when they were in a semi-barbarous condition. They promised to assist the Athenians against the Ætolians, B.C. 426, but afterwards submitted to Sparta, and joined the Ætolian League. The Fourth Sacred war was undertaken against them B.C. 339, and they, with their allies the Thebans and Athenians, were defeated by Philip II. of Macedon, at Chæronea, Aug. 7, B.C. 338.

LOCUSTS formed one of the ten plagues of Egypt, B.C. 1491. A swarm of these insects invaded Italy, and being drowned in the sea, produced a pestilence, which carried off nearly a million men and beasts in 591. In Venice 30,000 persons perished on account of a famine caused by their depredations in 1478. A cloud of locusts entered Russia, and were found lying dead in heaps to a depth of four feet in 1650. This island was visited by a large number in 1748. Barbary in 1724, and South Africa in 1797, suffered from their ravages.

LOD.—(See DIOSPOLIS.)

LODI (Battle). — Napoleon Buonaparte defeated the Austrians in a hotly-contested battle at the bridge over the Adda, at Lodi, May 10, 1796. For his bravery in this action Napoleon Buonaparte received the name of "Le Petit Caporal," by which he was afterwards known in the French army.

LODI (Italy).—The ancient Laus Pompeia stood near Old Lodi, or Lodi Vecchio, which became a republic, and was destroyed by the Milanese in 1112. The Emperor Frederick I. built Lodi about five miles from the site of Laus Pompeia, in 1158. The Duke of Urbino took Lodi in June, 1526, and the French occupied it in 1800. Napoleon I. made Melzi Duke of Lodi in 1807. The church of the Incoronata was founded in 1476.

LODI (Treaty).—A treaty of peace was signed at this place, between Sforza, Duke of Milan, and the Venetians, April 5, 1454.

LOFOE (Congress).—Under the mediation of Spain, a congress for the restoration of peace between Russia and Sweden, was held at Lofoe, one of the Aland Islands, in May, 1718. A treaty was negotiated, by which the Czar, Peter I. (the Great), in consideration of the cession of certain territory, agreed to assist Charles XII. against Norway, Germany, and Hanover. The preliminaries were, however, never ratified, and the conference was finally broken up, Sep. 24, 1719.

LOGARITHMS, the invention of Baron Napier of Merchiston, were first made known to the learned world by his Latin work, "Mirifici Logarithmorum Canonis Descriptio, seu Arithmeticarum Supputationum Mirabilis Abbreviatio," published in 1614. Henry Briggs, of Gresham College, London, made some improvements upon them, and printed a set of tables in 1618. Gunter applied them to navigation in 1620.

LOGIC.—Aristotle (B.C. 384—322) was for many years almost the only authority in matters of abstract reasoning; the first who ventured to originate a new system of thought being Marius Nizolius, who published his work "De Veris Principiis, &c." in 1553. Aconcio's treatise, "De Methodo," appeared in 1558, and Lord Bacon's "Novum Organum" in 1620. Hobbes' system was published in 1655, in his "Elementa Philosophiæ," and Gassendi's "Syntagma Philosophicum" appeared in 1658, above two years after the death of the author. Locke's views on logic were announced in the "Essay on the Human Understanding," which was published in 1690, and the Cartesian system was published in the posthumous works of Descartes in 1701. Amongst modern writers on logic may be mentioned Archbishop Whately, whose "Elements of Logic" appeared in 1826; John Stuart Mill, whose "System of Logic" appeared in 1843; Sir William Hamilton, and Dr. Latham.

LOGIERIAN SYSTEM.—This system of musical instruments was invented by John Bernard Logier, born at Hesse-Cassel in 1780. In 1797 he first turned his attention to the formation of a system for facilitating the acquirement of music. He obtained a patent for the chiropast in 1814, and his system was soon after adopted in Dublin. Academies on this plan were established in England and Scotland, and one was opened in London in 1816. The system flourished from 1817 to 1827. Logier died in 1846.

LOG-LINE is known to have been used in navigation as early as 1570. Bourne mentions it in 1577.

LOGOGRAPHIC PRINTING.—A mode of printing with types expressing entire words or common radices and terminations, instead of single letters, was invented by Walter, of the Times, and Henry Johnson, about 1778, and was described in a work published by the last-mentioned in 1783. The Daily Universal Register, a four-page paper, designed to introduce this new system of printing to the public, appeared Jan. 13, 1785. The price was 2½*d.*, and its name was changed to that of the Times, Jan. 1, 1788.

LOGOGRIPHES.—(See CHARADE.)

LOGRONO, NAJARA, or NAVARRETE (Battle).—Edward the Black Prince defeated Henry, brother of Peter I. (the Cruel) of Castile, at this place, in Spain, April 3, 1367. Before the battle the Castilians encamped at Najara, and the allies at Navarrete, and it is sometimes named after these places.

LOGWOOD.—This dye was introduced into England soon after the accession of Queen Elizabeth; but owing to the fugitive character of the tints it produced, was prohibited and ordered to be forfeited and burned, by 23 Eliz. c. 9 (1581). This act was repealed by 13 & 14 Charles II. c. 11, s. 26 (1662). The English logwood-cutters formed their settlement on the Bay of Campeachy about 1667.

LOIRE (France).—On the banks of this river, the ancient Liger or Ligeris, Julius Cæsar defeated the Turones, B.C. 57. The Danes ascended the river as far as Tours in 838 and in 852. The embankments of the Loire gave way, causing a great loss of life and destruction of property in 1846, and in June, 1856.

LOJA, or LOXA (Spain).—Ferdinand besieged this town, in Granada, July 1, 1482, raised the siege in 1483, and returned and captured it in 1486.

LOJERA (Sea-Fight).—A Genoese fleet of 59 galleys, commanded by Antonio Grimaldi, attacked an Arragonese squadron of 22 vessels at Lojera, on the northern coast of Sardinia, Aug. 29, 1353. The Spaniards were on the point of surrendering, when the Venetian fleet under Pisani came to their assistance, and completely changed the fortune of the day. Only eighteen of the Genoese galleys were saved from destruction or capture, and the total loss of the vanquished in killed, wounded, and prisoners, amounted to nearly 5,000 men.

LOLLARDS.—The origin of this term, applied to a religious sect of the 14th century, is by some authorities derived from the German lallen, lollen, or lullen, "to sing in a low voice;" and by others is referred to Walter Lollard, who was burned alive at Cologne in 1322. The early Lollards tended the sick and followed the dead to the grave, chanting in mournful tones. They were constituted a religious order through the influence of Charles, Duke of Burgundy, in 1472. Julius II. conferred further privileges upon them in 1506. The name was also applied to the society of itinerant preachers established by Wycliffe in England in 1379, and his followers. Unlicensed preachers, or Lollards, were ordered to be imprisoned until they justified themselves according to the law and reason of the Holy Ghost, by 5 Rich. II. st. 2, c. 5 (1381). Henry IV., under pretence that they conspired against him, punished them with great severity. By 2 Hen. IV. c. 15 (1401), no person was allowed to preach without the bishop's licence, and heretics who refused to recant were to die at the stake. A similar act was passed in Scotland in 1425. William Sautre was burned at London, under the English statute, Feb. 12, 1401. Thomas Badby, a Lollard, was executed in April, 1410. Sir John Oldcastle, commonly called Lord Cobham, was condemned as a heretic Sep. 25, 1413. He escaped from the Tower, was captured in Wales in 1418, and executed in London, Dec. 25.

LOMBARD ARCHITECTURE, a modification of the Romanesque (q. v.), was first employed in a small chapel at Friuli, built in the 8th century. The cathedral at Novara, erected in the 11th century, is the most remarkable example of this style, which became extinct in the 13th century.

LOMBARDISTS.—Peter Lombard, Bishop of Paris, wrote in 1164 a "Book of Sentences," in which he endeavoured to unite the two systems of ecclesiastical and scholastic theology. His disciples were called Lombardists.

LOMBARD LEAGUES.—The first league between the independent cities of Lombardy, signed at Puntido, between Milan and Bergamo, April 7, 1167, had for its object the defence of Italian liberties against the pretensions of the Emperor Frederick I. (Barbarossa), who was compelled, in 1183, to sign the treaty of Constance (q. v.).——A second Lombard league was formed March 2, 1226, against Frederick II., who was compelled to retire to Naples. (See LEGNANO and LEAGUES.)

LOMBARD MERCHANTS arrived in London from Italy for the purpose of prosecuting their trade of usury, in 1229. Edward III., then about to enter upon a war with France, issued a commission for seizing all their estates in 1337. The company of Lombard Merchants was made answerable for the debts of their fellows by 25 Edw. III. st. 5, c. 23 (1352). The street in which they took up their residence in London is named Lombard Street, after them.

LOMBARDY (Italy).—The fertile plains of Lombardy were originally peopled by the Siculi, who were expelled by a tribe of Celtæ about B.C. 1400. The Etruscans established their authority over the country about B.C. 1000, and retained it until expelled by the Gauls B.C. 506, when it received the name of Gallia Cisalpina. (See GAUL.) It was ravaged by Attila in 452, became subject to the Heruli in 476, was conquered by the Ostrogoths in 489, by the troops of the Eastern empire under Narses in 554, and by the Longobardi (q. v.), from whom it received its name, in 568. The empire of the Longobards was terminated by Charlemagne in 774, when Lombardy, with the rest of the peninsula, was annexed to his territories, and in 843 formed the Frankish kingdom of Italy, which was ruled by its own kings till it submitted to Otho I. (the Great) in 961. The cities gradually adopted independent forms of government, each possessing separate laws and customs. In 1002 they elected Ardouin, Marquis of Ivrea, as king, in opposition to the Germans, who nominated Henry II., and the country was in consequence involved in war till the death of Ardouin in 1015. On the death of Henry II. (the Holy), in 1024, the Lombards again made futile efforts to obtain an independent sovereign. A civil war between the "gentlemen" of Lombardy and Eribert, Archbishop of Milan, commenced in 1035, and lasted till Conrad II. (the Salic promulgated his Feudal edict in 1037. Milan became a republic in 1107, and Lodi, Cremona, Verona, Genoa, Pavia, and other cities, soon followed her example, and asserted their newborn independence by rushing into civil war. During the 11th and 12th centuries they united to form the Lombard leagues (q. v.) against the German emperors, and were afterwards desolated by the contentions of the Guelphs and Ghibellines, which they sought to escape by purchasing protection from Charles of Anjou, King of Naples (1266—1285). The history of Lombardy is, after this period, the history of the several republics of which it was composed, until the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle, Oct. 18, 1748, by which the greater part of the country was attached to the house of Austria. In Oct., 1796, Buonaparte erected Lombardy into the Transpadane republic, which was incorporated with the Cisalpine republic in June, 1797, and formed part of the Italian republic in 1802, and of the kingdom of Italy in 1805. The Lombardo-Venetian kingdom was created by the allies, and given to Austria, in lieu of her Flemish territories, by the treaty of Paris, Nov. 20, 1815. In March, 1848, Lombardy revolted from Austria, and joined the King of Sardinia, but it was reduced to subjection by the battles of Custoza, July 23, 1848, and of Novara, March 23, 1849. By the peace of Villafranca, July 11, 1859, the Emperor of Austria ceded nearly all Lombardy to the Emperor of the French, who transferred it to Victor Emanuel, King of Sardinia, and the remainder was incorporated with Italy in 1866.

LONATO (Battle).—Napoleon Buonaparte defeated the Austrians at this town, in Lombardy, Aug. 3, 1796.

LONDON (Bishopric).—The traditional account is that an archiepiscopal see was established at London by Theanus, in 180, during the reign of King Lucius, and that 16 prelates completed the number of archbishops. When Gregory I. despatched Augustine to England in 596, it was his intention that London and York should form the metropolitan sees of the country; but Augustine established his seat at Canterbury. Mellitus became the first bishop of London in 604. He was expelled in 616, and had no successor till 656, when Cedd was consecrated by Finan, Bishop of Northumbria. By an order in council, Aug. 8, 1845, the county of Hertford and part of Essex were separated from the diocese of London and annexed to Rochester.

LONDON (Canada), founded in 1826, was the scene of extensive conflagrations in 1844 and 1845.

LONDON (England) is first mentioned under the name of Londinium by Tacitus, who, in recording its destruction by the Britons in 61, during the reign of Nero, speaks of it as having been at that time famed as the resort of traders, and for its affluence and commerce. In the time of Ammianus Marcellinus, 362, it was called Augusta, an appellation frequently bestowed upon great cities, and in the Chorography of Ravenna it is styled Londinium Augusta. According to Geoffrey of Monmouth, it was built by a king named Brutus, and called New Troy, afterwards Trinovantum, and having been surrounded with walls by Lud, was called Kaer Lud, i. e., the City of Lud, or Lud-town. Pennant derives the name from Llyn din,—llyn being, in Celtic, a lake, and din a town. Julius Cæsar does not mention London, though it must have been in existence when he invaded England, B.C. 54.

LONDON (Gates).—The old Roman gates were four in number, viz., Ludgate, said to have been built by King Ludd B.C. 66; Aldgate, named on account of its antiquity; Cripplegate, and Dowgate. In addition to these, were Bishopsgate, built before 685; Aldersgate; Newgate, erected by Henry I., or Stephen; Moorgate, built in 1415; and Temple Bar, rebuilt by Sir Christopher Wren in 1670.

LONDON (Treaties).—Numerous conventions and treaties with the representatives of Foreign Governments have been concluded here. The best known are three treaties between Louis XII. of France and Henry VIII., signed in London, Aug. 7, 1514. The first provided for an alliance, offensive and defensive, between France and England; the second for a marriage between Louis XII. and Mary, the youngest sister of Henry VIII.; and the third secured to Henry VIII. the payment annually, for 10 years, of 100,000 gold crowns, in satisfaction of arrears. —— Treaties of peace, friendship, commerce, and alliance, with Portugal, were concluded at London, June 16, 1373, and Jan. 29, 1642.——A treaty for the settlement of affairs in Italy was signed at London, Feb. 17, 1720.——A treaty of peace, friendship, and alliance, with Spain, was concluded at London, Jan. 14, 1809; an additional article on commerce March 21.——A treaty between the Five Great Powers and Belgium, for the separation of that country from Holland, was signed here Nov. 15, 1831.——A treaty between Russia, France, and England, for the settlement of the affairs of Greece, was concluded at London July 6, 1827, and another, between Russia, France, Bavaria, and Great Britain, regulating the succession to the Crown of Greece, Nov. 20, 1852.——A treaty for the settlement of the dispute between Turkey and Egypt, was signed between Austria, Prussia, and England, July 15, 1840. Mehemet Ali acceded to it, Nov. 27.——The treaty for the pacification of Spain and Portugal, was signed at London, April 22, 1834; additional articles Aug. 18, 1834.—— The treaty regulating the succession to the crown of Denmark, was signed between the Great Powers and Denmark at London, May 8, 1852. Würtemberg acceded to it, Nov. 28, 1852; Sardinia, Dec. 4, 1852; the Two Sicilies, Dec. 4, 1852, and Jan. 28, 1853; Spain, Dec. 6; Tuscany, Dec. 6; Saxony, Dec. 9; Oldenburgh, Dec. 10; Hanover, Dec. 11; Hesse-Cassel, Dec. 16; Netherlands, Dec. 20; Belgium, Dec. 28, 1852; and Portugal, March 19, 1863.

LONDON BRIDGE.—The first bridge over the Thames at London was built of wood, about 994, and stood lower down the river, near Botolph's wharf. It was much injured by the Danes in 1008, and the ruins were carried away by a flood in 1091. In 1097 William II. imposed a heavy tax for its reconstruction, and this bridge, destroyed by fire in 1136, was restored in 1163. The old stone bridge, commenced by Peter of Colechurch in 1176, was completed in 1209. It was 926 feet long, 40 feet wide, and about 60 feet above the water, and stood upon 19 pointed arches, between which were massive piers. A handsome stone chapel, dedicated to St. Thomas Becket, stood upon the centre pier, and appears to have been the only building erected upon the bridge at its foundation, though in course of time a row of houses on each side of the road was added. The entire construction was defended by a drawbridge. A fire, which occurred July 10, 1212, occasioned the death of more than 3,000 persons, and did considerable damage to the bridge itself; and in 1282 the frost destroyed five of the arches. The custom of placing the heads of traitors over London Bridge was commenced by Edward I. in Aug., 1305, and Paul Hentzner, the German traveller, counted 30 heads on the bridge in 1598. A celebrated passage of arms between an English and a Scotch knight took place on the bridge April 23, 1390; and on the entry of Richard II. and his consort into London, Nov. 13, 1395, nine persons were killed, owing to the excessive crowding. The drawbridge tower was erected in 1426, and the great gate and tower on the Southwark side of the river, together with two arches of the bridge, fell Jan. 14, 1437, but without causing any loss of life. The houses on the bridge were burned by Falconbridge during his attempt on London, May 14, 1471, and six houses were destroyed by fire Nov. 21, 1504. In 1577 the drawbridge tower was rebuilt, the heads were removed to Traitors' gate, the famous Nonsuch House was erected about 1579, and in 1582 the water-works were established. A fire which broke out Feb. 13, 1633, destroyed more than a third of the houses on the bridge; but the Great Fire of 1666 did comparatively little damage. The bridge gate and several other buildings were burned, Sep. 8, 1725. Owing to the insecure state of the bridge, the houses were removed in 1757, and a temporary wooden bridge was erected, and opened in Oct. This temporary bridge was destroyed by fire April 11, 1758. The drawbridge was removed in 1760, and in 1800 exertions were made for the erection of an entirely new bridge. Nothing was done, however, till June 15, 1822, when the corporation offered three premiums for the best designs, and in Dec., Messrs. Fowler, Borer, and Busby were declared the successful competitors. The design ultimately adopted was that of Mr. John Rennie. The rebuilding of the bridge was officially referred to Parliament, Feb. 19, 1823, and was ordered to be carried into effect by 4 Geo. IV. c. 50 (July 4, 1823). The first pile was driven March 15, 1824; the foundation stone was laid by Lord Mayor Garratt, June 15, 1825, and the bridge was opened by William IV. and Queen Adelaide, Aug. 1, 1831. The contract for building the bridge was £506,000. The dimensions are:—

LONDON CONFERENCE. — A conference, attended by plenipotentiaries from European states for the purpose of restoring peace between Denmark, Austria, and Prussia, held its first meeting in London, April 25, 1864. It separated without accomplishing the object, June 25. (See DENMARK.)

LONDONDERRY, or DERRY (Ireland).—This city, situated in the county of the same name, originated in a monastery founded about 546. It was frequently assailed and burned in civil strife and by the Danes. The great church was built in 1163. Londonderry was taken by John de Courcey in 1198, and was granted by Edward II. to Richard de Burgh in 1311. Londonderry formed part of the escheated territory granted to the London companies, by whom it was fortified; the first English garrison arriving in 1566. In 1568 it was much injured by an explosion in the powder magazine, which caused the English to leave the place; but it was reoccupied in 1600. It was burned by Sir Cahir O'Doherty in 1608, and it received a charter in 1613. The town-hall was erected in 1622, and the cathedral was completed in 1633. On the breaking out of the rebellion of 1641, Londonderry became the asylum of the Irish Protestants, who successfully defended the place against the Royalists in 1649. The memorable siege by James II. commenced April 20, 1689, and terminated in the retreat of the besiegers, July 30. During the interval, 3,200 of the defenders died from wounds or starvation, and the assailants lost about 8,000 men. The town-hall, burned during the siege, was rebuilt in 1692. The court-house was commenced in 1813, and the county gaol was completed in 1824. The colossal statue of the Rev. George Walker, who had conducted the defence in 1689, was inaugurated Aug. 12, 1828. The Londonderry Literary Society was established in 1834.

LONDON HOSPITAL, founded in 1740, was incorporated in 1759. The first stone of the new wing was laid by the Prince of Wales July 4, 1864.

LONDON INSTITUTION.—For educational purposes, was established in 1806 in the Old Jewry. Professor Porson, who was the first librarian, died Sep. 25, 1808. It was incorporated April 30, 1815. The first stone of the building in Finsbury Circus was laid May 4, 1815, and it was opened April 21, 1819.

LONDON LIBRARY, in St. James's Square, was opened May 1, 1841. The first volume of the catalogue was published in 1847, the second in 1852, and a new edition in 1865.

LONDON PHILANTHROPIC SOCIETY was founded in 1841, to supply the poor of the metropolis and its neighbourhood with bread and coal during the months of winter.

LONDON SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY was established in 1848, to encourage the practice and performance of oratorios, anthems, services, chanting, psalmody, &c.

LONDON STONE.—Camden considers this stone to be the central milestone from which the British high-roads radiated; but Stow states that "the cause why this stone was set there (in Cannon Street), the time when, or other memory hereof, is none." The stone was removed from the south to the north side of Cannon Street, Dec. 13, 1742; and in 1798 it was again removed, and built into the outer wall of St. Swithin's Church, Cannon Street.

LONDON UNIVERSITY.—Thomas Campbell, the poet, in a letter to Lord Brougham, written in 1825, suggested the foundation of a college, open to members of all sects and denominations, and ground for the establishment of an institution of this kind was obtained by a deed of settlement dated Feb. 11, 1826. The first stone of the building in Gower Street was laid April 30, 1827, and the institution was opened as the University of London, Oct. 1, 1828. The name was changed to London University before 1831. An application having been made for a charter April 25 and 26, 1834, a special meeting of the proprietors, to consider the proposals of the Government, was held Dec. 2, 1835, and two charters were granted Nov. 28, 1836, by which the University of London was established, and the name of London University was changed to that of University College (q. v.).

LONE STAR SOCIETY.—The English newspapers announced, Aug. 21, 1852, the formation about 1848 in Alabama and other Southern American States, of a society called the order of the Lone Star, of which the object was "the extension of the institutions, the power, the influence, and the commerce of the United States over the whole of the Western hemisphere, and the islands of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans."

LONG ANNUITIES. (See FUNDS.)

LONGARA (Italy).—On the approach of an allied French and German army, a portion of the citizens of Vicenza took refuge in a large cavern called the grotto of Masano, or Longara, in the mountains near their city, in 1510. L'Hérisson, a French captain, finding it impossible to force a passage into the cavern, lighted faggots at the entrance, when all the inmates, amounting to 6,000, with the exception of one young man, were smothered.—In more modern times, 700 Arabs in Algeria (q. v.) were destroyed by the French generals in a similar manner. (See DAHARA or DAHRA MASSACRE.)

LONGEVITY.—The Antediluvians attained an extraordinary age, some nearly a thousand years. Methuselah, who lived the longest, was 969 years old when he died. Noah was 500 years old when Shem, Ham, and Japhet were born (Gen. v. 32), and some of his descendants exceeded what are now considered the ordinary limits of human existence, though no one born after the Deluge passed the age of 464 years, or one half of that attained by some of the antediluvians. Terah, the last who exceeded 200, died B.C. 1921, and since his time but few instances are recorded of persons living beyond the term mentioned in Scripture as the ordinary limit of human existence: "the days of our years are threescore years and ten, and if by reason of strength they be fourscore years, yet is their strength labour and sorrow." Alison, referring to modern times (Hist. of Europe, 1815–52, vol. v. p. 408), states that the oldest inhabitants of the globe known to authentic history have been found amongst the slaves of the West Indies, and speaks of one in Jamaica who attained the age of 180 years. The following list contains a selection of the best-authenticated cases of longevity, though the evidence in many is by no means satisfactory. A remarkable instance of the mode in which the age of persons is exaggerated appears in Notes and Queries (3rd series, vol. vii. pp. 154, 207, and 503). The reader will find that Miss Mary Billinge, who died at Liverpool Dec. 20, 1863, at the age, it was said, of 112 years, was in reality only 91. The same process, applied to many names in the following list, would produce a similar result.

LONG FRIDAY.—(See GOOD FRIDAY.)

LONG ISLAND (Bahamas) was discovered by Christopher Columbus in 1492. With the group to which it belongs it was seized by the Spaniards in 1781, and was restored to the British by the treaty of Versailles, Sep. 3, 1783.

LONG ISLAND (Battle).—The English, under Gen. Howe, routed the American revolutionary forces, commanded by Gen. Putnam, at the village of Flat Bush, in Long Island, New York, Aug. 27, 1776. The English lost 61 killed and 257 wounded, and the rebel army 2,000 men.

LONG ISLAND (New York).—Capt. Weymouth discovered Long Island in 1605.

LONGITUDE.—(See LATITUDE.)

LONGJUMEAU (Treaty) was concluded here between the Huguenots and the Roman Catholics, by the lame Marshal Biron, March 20, 1568. It was proclaimed in the edict of Longjumeau, March 23, but being a mere stratagem on the part of the Roman Catholics to weaken their opponents, was speedily broken. It was called the Ill-grounded and Patched-up, or the Lame and Unstable Peace.

LONG-LIVED ADMINISTRATION, also called the Short-lived Administration, held office Feb. 11 and 12, 1746. The Pelham, or Broad-Bottom Administration, having resigned Feb. 10, 1746, the Earl of Bath accepted the Treasury, with Lord Carlisle as Privy Seal, Lord Granville as one of the secretaries of state, and Lord Winchelsea at the Admiralty. George III. was not, however, satisfied with the ministerial arrangements, and the Broad-Bottom Administration (q. v.), was restored to office Feb. 12.

LONGOBARDI, or LANGOBARDI.—The name of this German tribe of barbarians is derived either from the length of their beards or from the circumstance of their inhabiting the plains beside the Elbe—börde or bord signifying a "fertile plain by the side of a river." They are stated by the ancient authors to have been a branch of the Suevi; but Paul Warnefrid, who wrote in the time of Charlemagne, and was himself a Longobard, asserts that they originally migrated from Scandinavia. They first appeared in history during the reign of Augustus, when they were settled between the Elbe and Oder, and but little more was heard of them till the reign of Justinian I. (527—565), by whom they were invited into Noricum and Pannonia. Under their chief Alboin, they invaded Italy in 568, and speedily reduced the greater portion of the country to subjection, establishing their kingdom of Lombardy, which composed the modern states of Venice, the Tyrol, the Milanese, Piedmont, Genoa, Mantua, Parma, Modena, Tuscany, a large portion of the papal states, and the greatest part of the kingdom of Naples. (See LOMBARDY.)

LONG PARLIAMENT, summoned by Charles I., met at Westminster, Tuesday, Nov. 3, 1640, and continued its sittings until it was dissolved by Cromwell, April 20, 1653. The journal of this Parliament terminates Tuesday, April 19. It was said of this Parliament, that "many thought it never would have a beginning, and afterwards that it never would have an end." (See DELINQUENTS.)

LONGWOOD (Battle).—The Americans, under Capt. Holmes, defeated the English at this place, on the river Thames, Upper Canada, March 4, 1814.

LONGWOOD (St. Helena).—This villa, about six miles from James's Town, and the best in the island, became, Dec. 10, 1815, the residence of the exiled Napoleon I., who died here May 5, 1821.

LONGWY (France), founded in the 7th century, annexed to Bar in the 13th, taken by the French in the 17th, was ceded to France in 1678, and was fortified by Vauban. The Austrians and Prussians, under the Duke of Brunswick and Gen. Clairfait, invested it Aug. 20, 1792, and it surrendered Aug. 24. It was bombarded July 1, 1815, and the besiegers were compelled to retire July 13. The siege was renewed Aug. 10, and the French commander, Ducos, capitulated Sep. 18.

LOO (Holland).—William III. ratified the peace of Ryswick at his hunting seat of Loo, Sep. 20, 1697. A treaty between Great Britain, Prussia, and Holland, was concluded here under the auspices of William Pitt in 1790.

LOO-CHOO, LEKEYO, or LIEOU-KIEOU ISLANDS (Pacific Ocean).—Capt. Broughton visited these islands, then little known to Europeans, in 1797. A Christian mission was established in 1851.

LOODIANA (Hindostan).—This town and the district came into possession of the British in 1836, through the failure of the line of succession.

LOOKING-GLASSES are mentioned Job xxxvii. 18, B.C. 2337, and Exodus xxxviii. 8,

B.C. 1490, and were probably made of polished metal. Praxiteles, who flourished about B.C. 364, is said to have made a mirror of silver, and the American Indians were found to possess such articles, made from a kind of vitrified lava, plane, concave, and convex, in 1492. Beckmann gathers from Pliny that they were manufactured of glass by the Sidonians in 77. He quotes a treatise of 1279, by John Peckham, a Franciscan monk of Oxford, in which mirrors are particularly described, and as having the back covered with lead. The Anglo-Saxon women wore them at their girdles. A process for silvering was patented by Drayton in Nov. 1843. (See GOBAIN, ST.)

LOOM depicted on the tombs at Thebes, about B.C. 2000, the invention having been ascribed to the goddess Isis, was in use in ancient Greece and Rome, especially amongst the females of a family. In India and China it has been in use, in a rude form, from the earliest period. Among the Anglo-Saxons, too, its structure was exceedingly simple. Improved apparatus was introduced into England by the Flemings, of whom Gervaise says that weaving is their "natural" business. A number of these people established themselves at Norwich in 1132, and John Kemp, with a body of workmen from Flanders, came over at the invitation of Edward III., in 1331. A method for the application of mechanical power to the hand-loom was submitted to the French Academy of Sciences by M. de Gennes, in 1678, although it does not appear to have been carried into effect. A machine was patented by the Rev. Dr. Cartwright, which imitated the three movements in weaving, in 1785, and another in 1787; but these failed, and after an expenditure of £40,000, that gentleman, in 1809, received a grant of £10,000 from Parliament as compensation. The first power-loom for cotton-weaving was erected near Glasgow in 1798. Jacquard exhibited his machine at Paris in Sep., 1801 (See JACQUARD LOOM), and an electric loom was constructed in 1854 by M. Bonelli, director-general of the Sardinian telegraphs, which he brought to England in 1859. (See ELECTRIC LOOM.)

LOOSE COAT, or LOSE-COAT FIELD (Battle).—Sir Robert Wells, a Lancastrian, having raised the standard of revolt against Edward IV., fell upon the royal troops at Erpingham, near Stamford, March 19, 1470. He was with Sir Thomas Deland taken prisoner, and the soldiers, alarmed by the capture of their leaders, took to flight, casting off their coats, lest they should impede their retreat, on which account the battle received this name.

LORCA (Spain), the ancient Eliocroca, was besieged several times during the Moorish occupation of Spain. The bridge was built in 1847.

LORD.—(See CONGREGATION OF THE LORD.)

LORD ADVOCATE (Scotland), also called King's or Queen's Advocate, is the principal law-officer of the Crown in Scotland, the same as the Attorney-general in England. The office of King's Advocate is known to have existed in 1479, but it was not until 1540 that it was raised to the dignity of a great office of state. A record of the Court of Justiciary in 1598 contains the first mention of a Lord Advocate.

LORD CAMPBELL'S ACT.—(See DEATH BY ACCIDENTS COMPENSATION ACT.)

LORD CHAMBERLAIN OF THE HOUSEHOLD is mentioned as early as 1208. In 1341 it was ordered that he should swear, on his appointment, to keep the laws of the land, and the great charter; and, in 1406, he was appointed a member of the Privy Council.

LORD CHANCELLOR (Scotland) was originally the king's conscience-keeper, issuing his writs for the remedy of injustice, and became the chief judge of the Court of Session at its establishment, in 1533. The office was abolished at the Union, March 6, 1707.

LORD CHIEF JUSTICE.—(See KING'S or QUEEN'S BENCH.)

LORD GENERAL.—(See GENERAL.)

LORD GREAT CHAMBERLAIN.—This office, which has existed in England from a very early period, was granted to the family of De Vere during the reign of Henry I. (1100—1135). Owing to the extinction of the family in 1625, it became the subject of litigation, but was ultimately confirmed to Lord Willoughby d'Eresby, in whose family it still remains.

LORD HIGH ADMIRAL.—When admirals were first appointed in this country, each officer of the kind received the command of a particular fleet, such as, the king's ships north, south, or west of the Thames, or the fleet of the Cinque Ports. Sir John Beauchamp was appointed "admiral of the king's southern, northern, and western fleets" (July 18, 1360), and this, Sir Harris Nicolas observes, is the first instance of the command of all the fleets being vested in one person. Beauchamp died in Dec. 1360, and Sir Robert Herle was (Jan. 26, 1361) appointed to succeed him as admiral of the three fleets. Many similar appointments followed, and, May 9, 1398, John, Marquis of Dorset, was made admiral of the northern and western fleets for life, the Irish fleet having been placed under his direction on the same terms. Sir Thomas of Lancaster (second son of Henry IV.), afterwards Duke of Clarence, was appointed "Admiral of England," Feb. 20, 1405; and from that period, as Nicolas remarks, "there was always an admiral of England, who commanded in chief all the fleets in England, Ireland, and Aquitaine," the office having been held successively by the Earls of Somerset and Kent, and Sir Thomas Beaufort, who was afterwards created Earl of Dorset and Duke of Exeter. Sir Thomas of Lancaster was probably the first who took the title of lord high admiral, which was borne by an uninterrupted series of individual officers till Nov. 20, 1632, when the office was, for the first time, put in commission. During the Interregnum, the affairs of the navy were managed by a committee of Parliament, until Cromwell himself undertook the direction. The Duke of York (afterwards James II.) was lord high admiral from the Restoration till May 22, 1684, when Charles II. took the office, James II. resuming it on his accession in the following year. It remained in commission after his abdication, till Prince George of Denmark was appointed lord high admiral of England, May 20, 1702, and of Great Britain, on account of the Union, June 28, 1707, with a council of four persons to assist him. At his death, Nov. 8 (O.S. Oct. 28), 1708, the Earl of Pembroke was appointed his successor, with a similar council. The Earl resigned in 1709; since which time the office has always been in commission, except during the interval from May 1827, to Sep. 1828, in which it was held by the Duke of Clarence, afterwards William IV. The only instance of a lord high admiral for Ireland, is that of James, Lord Butler, high treasurer, created "Great Admiral and Keeper of the Ports in Ireland," by patent, May 11, 1535. There was a lord high admiral in Scotland from the 15th century until the Union. A lord high admiral having been appointed in France, Richelieu suppressed the office in 1627, but it was re-established by Louis XIV. in 1669.

LORD HIGH ALMONER OF ENGLAND, an ecclesiastical officer, generally a bishop, who in olden times had the power of giving the first dish from the king's table, or, instead thereof, alms to any poor person he pleased. His duties, enumerated in an old juridical treatise of the time of Edward I., were to collect the fragments from the royal table for daily distribution to the poor, to visit the sick and poor persons in distress, to remind the king of the duty of almsgiving, and to see that the value of the cast-off robes should be given to increase the king's charity. From the wardrobe accounts of the 14th year of King John, it appears that the alms were at that time distributed by the sovereign on Maunday Thursday. Since 1730 the office of Lord High Almoner has been held by the Archbishops of York.

LORD HIGH CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND.—The office of king's chancellor has been traced to the reign of Ethelbert, King of Kent (568—616). It was usually held by an ecclesiastic, and frequently by the king's chaplain. The first chancellor after the Conquest was Arfastus, Bishop of Helmham, whose name occurs in a charter dated 1068. The office assumed a judicial character in the reign of Henry I., and underwent a change in its constitution under Henry III., who appointed an officer empowered to act as a chancellor, but without possessing that title, his special province being the custody of the seal. (See LORD KEEPER.) The first charter making this distinction is dated June 14, 1232. The chancellor assumed the title of chancellor of England in 1266, and of lord chancellor in the reign of Edward II. (1307—27.) By 5 Eliz. c. 18 (1563), the offices of lord chancellor and lord keeper were declared identical. The vice-chancellor (q. v.) was appointed by 53 Geo. III. c. 24 (March 23, 1813). The salaries of the chief officers of the lord chancellor are regulated by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87 (July 1, 1852). The lord chancellor, who is keeper of the king's conscience, takes precedence of all the other law officers of the realm, ranking next to the Archbishop of Canterbury. Foss (Judges of England) gives the following list:—

LORD HIGH CONSTABLE (England).—This officer, called also the Constable of All England, existed in the Anglo-Saxon period of our history. His jurisdiction was defined by 8 Rich. II. c. 5 (1385). The Duke of Buckingham, tried and executed for high treason, May 21, 1521, forfeited the office, and it has never been revived. The lord high constable and the earl marshal were judges of the court of chivalry, called in the reign of Henry IV. Curia Militaris. This office ranked as the first in France, where it existed as early as 1060, and was suppressed in 1626. Napoleon I. created his brother Louis constable of the empire.

LORD HIGH CONSTABLE OF SCOTLAND.—This office is of great antiquity, and in 1162 was held by Richard de Moreville. Robert Bruce conferred the dignity of constable on Gilbert de Hay, Earl of Errol, and his heirs for ever, Nov. 12, 1315.

LORD HIGH STEWARD OF ENGLAND.—The office of Lord High Steward is of great antiquity, having existed before the time of Edward the Confessor (1043–66), and the holder thereof was at that period the first great officer of the crown. It was for many years hereditary in the family of the Earls of Leicester, but on the attainder of Simon of Montfort in 1265, it was abolished, and is now only revived for the special occasions of a coronation, or the trial of a peer. Henry, Earl of Arundel, was created, Jan. 12, 1559, high steward for the coronation of Queen Elizabeth, Jan. 15, to hold that office from "the rising of the sun on the same day to the setting thereof." Whenever a grand jury finds a true bill against a peer on a charge of treason or felony, a commission is issued constituting a lord high steward, with authority to try the accused. Edward, Earl of Devon, appointed lord high steward in 1400, in the reign of Henry IV., for the trial of the Earl of Huntingdon, is the first lord high steward created for this purpose. The trial over, the lord high steward breaks his rod, in order to show that his commission has ended.

LORD HIGH TREASURER OF ENGLAND.—This, the third great officer of the crown, had the custody of the royal treasury, and of the foreign and domestic documents kept there. The office was held during pleasure. The first lord high treasurer was Odo, Earl of Kent and Bishop of Bayeux, in the reign of William I. For many years the office was held by ecclesiastics, the first lay treasurer being Richard, Lord Scrope, in 1371. The Duke of Shrewsbury, appointed by Queen Anne, July 29, 1714, and who resigned office soon afterwards, was the last Lord High Treasurer of England. Since that time the office has always been vested in commissioners, the chief of whom is the first lord of the treasury, and prime minister.

LORD HIGH TREASURER OF IRELAND.—The dignity of this officer, who ranked third of the crown officers in Ireland, is as ancient as the English government of that country. Originally he was styled the treasurer of the exchequer. John de St. John was the first holder of the office, in 1217.

LORD OF THE ISLES.—(See HEBRIDES.)

LORD KEEPER.—The office of lord keeper of the great seal (q. v.) of England is stated on doubtful authority to have been held during the chancellorship of Ranulph (1108—1124), in the reign of Henry I., by Richard, a chaplain. Foss says the first charter making a distinction is dated June 14, 1232. The offices of lord chancellor and lord keeper were declared identical, as far as England is concerned, by 5 Eliz. c. 18 (1563). A list of lord keepers is given under lord high chancellor of England.

LORD LIEUTENANT.—Hallam (Hist. of Eng. vol. ii. c. 9) states that the military jurisdiction in counties was transferred from the sheriffs, or justices of the peace, to a new officer called the lord lieutenant, during the reign of Mary. "The office gave him the command of the militia, and rendered him the chief viceregent of his sovereign, responsible for the maintenance of public order. This institution may be considered as a revival of the ancient local earldom." Lords lieutenant of counties were appointed in Ireland by 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 17 (Aug. 23, 1831).

LORD MARSHAL.—(See EARL MARSHAL.)

LORD MAYOR.—The title of Lord was granted to the mayor of London in 1354. Charles I. conferred this distinction on the chief magistrate of Dublin in 1641, but it was not borne by him until 1665. The chief magistrate of York and of Edinburgh is also styled Lord Mayor.

LORD MAYOR (London).—According to the Liber Albus, the principal representatives of the sovereign power in the city of London have since the Norman conquest acted at various times under different names. William I. styled this officer his Portgrave, or Portgreve, afterwards corrupted into Portreve. In a charter of Henry I. he is called a Justiciar, and in a charter of Henry II., in which the right of the aldermen to elect one every year is confirmed, he is styled Mayor. In olden times the mayor was elected on the feast of the apostles Simon and Jude (Oct. 28), and it was customary for him on the day of his election to go on foot by land, or by boat on the river Thames, to Westminster, or the Tower, to be sworn into office. At first the Lord Mayor frequently held the office for several consecutive years; but Edward I., in 1285, limited it to one year, and this rule, except in special cases, has since been observed. Henry Fitz-Elwyne, the first who held the office, was appointed by the crown in 1188. The title Lord was added to mayor in 1354. The procession was converted into a pageant in 1454 by Sir John Norman, who proceeded to Westminster in a barge.

LORDS.—(See HOUSE OF LORDS, and PEERS.)

LORDS OF ARTICLES (Scotland), a committee of the Scottish Parliament, abolished in 1690.

LORD'S BRETHREN.—(See CANONS.)

LORD'S DAY.—(See SUNDAY.)

LORDS JUSTICES. — Persons under different titles have been appointed by various English kings since the Norman Conquest, to act as their substitutes in the government of part or the whole of their kingdom when absent, or under other exceptional circumstances. William I. appointed Odo, of Bayeux, and William Fitz-Osbern, Earl of Hereford, custodes regni, or guardians of the realm, on his departure for Normandy, in Lent, 1067. Seven persons were appointed as lords justices by 4 & 5 Anne, c. 20 (1705), and by 6 Anne, c. 41 (1707); and on the death of Queen Anne, Aug. 1, 1714, 18 persons acted with the lords justices until the arrival of George I. from Hanover. George I. entrusted the government to 13 lords justices, on quitting the kingdom in May, 1719; the same course was pursued during his visits to the continent, in 1720, 1723, 1725, and 1727. George II., during the lifetime of Queen Caroline, left her as regent when he went abroad, and after her death appointed lords justices during such absence. George III. never quitted the kingdom; but George IV., on setting out for Hanover, in Sep., 1821, entrusted the administration of affairs to 19 lords justices. No such appointment has been made during the temporary absence of Queen Victoria, and in reply to questions asked in Parliament in 1843, ministers declared that it was not deemed necessary to nominate either a regent, or lords justices.

LORDS JUSTICES OF APPEAL (Court of Chancery).—By 14 & 15 Vict. c. 83, Aug. 7, 1851, power was given to the sovereign to appoint two barristers of not less than 15 years' standing, to be judges of the Court of Appeal in Chancery, and, with the lord chancellor, to form such Court of Appeal. They were to be styled lords justices, and the power exercised by the lord chancellor in the Court of Chancery was, from Oct. 1, 1851, transferred to this new court.

LORDS AND LADIES OF THE BEDCHAMBER.—The groom of the stole, an officer who from ancient times had custody of the stole, or long robe worn on state occasions by the sovereign, was the first lord of the bedchamber. The Duke of Lauderdale, who held the office under Charles II. (1660—1685), and the Duke of Hamilton in the reign of George I. (1714—1727), each bore the name of First Gentleman of the Bedchamber, and had 12 lords under them. On the accession of Queen Victoria, June 20, 1837, this office was superseded by that of the First Lady of the Bedchamber, by whom the duties are still discharged. (See MAIDS OF HONOUR and MISTRESS OF THE ROBES.)

LORD STEWARD OF THE HOUSEHOLD. This office has the supreme control of the royal household. The post is one of great dignity, and was instituted at a very early date. By 3 Hen. VII. c. 14 (1486), the lord steward was empowered to hold a court for the trial of treasons committed by members of the royal household, and by 33 Hen. VIII. c. 12 (1541), this jurisdiction was extended to all cases of quarrelling and striking within the palace. This authority was abolished by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 101 (Aug. 1, 1849). By 32 Hen. VIII. c. 39 (1540), the office of lord steward was changed to that of great master of the king's house. It was restored by 1 Mary, s. 3, c. 4 (1553). (See LORD HIGH STEWARD OF ENGLAND.)

LORETO, or LORETTO (Italy).—This town, near Ancona, is celebrated for the Santa Casa, or Holy House, which is said to be that in which the Virgin Mary was born, the scene of the Annunciation and of the Incarnation, and the residence of the Holy Family, on their return from Egypt, April B.C. 3. According to the legend, the Santa Casa was (May 6, 1291) conveyed by angels from Nazareth to a hill near Fiume, in Dalmatia, called also Torsatto, thence, Dec. 10, 1294, to Recanati, and finally to its present site, Dec. 16, laurel grove, called Lauretta, from its owner. Such is the origin of the name of the town that has grown up around the sanctuary. The wealth of the place proved a temptation to the Turkish corsairs, and Sixtus V. fortified it in 1586. The French, under Marmont, took possession of Loreto Feb. 12, 1797, and carried the lady of Loreto to Paris. The image was, however, restored April 8, 1802, and was received in a procession.

LORIMERS, makers of bits, spurs, and horse furniture generally, were incorporated in 1712.

L'ORIENT (France).—Louis XIV. granted the French East India Company permission to establish magazines and docks in the Bay of St. Louis in 1666. The building of the town commenced in 1709; it was incorporated in 1738, and fortified in 1744. An English force, under Gen. Sinclair, landed Sep. 20, 1746, but was obliged to re-embark Sep. 28. On the dissolution of the French East India Company, in 1770, the French Government made L'Orient one of the stations of their navy.

LORRAINE (France) was conquered by Clovis I. in 491, and apportioned to Lothaire II., receiving from him the name of Lotharingia, or Lothair-regne, the kingdom of Lothaire, in 855. It was erected into a duchy in 916. France and Germany contended for its possession, and, in 959, agreed to divide it into Lower and Upper Lorraine. Lower Lorraine, which formed part of the Netherlands, is divided between Belgium and Holland. The Alsatian line of dukes in Upper Lorraine, founded by Albert of Alsace in 1044, continued in power till the duchy was annexed to the French crown. By the treaty of Vienna, concluded Nov. 18, 1738, the duchy of Tuscany was exchanged for the duchies of Lorraine and Bar, which were ceded to Stanislaus I. (Leczinski) during his life. He died Feb. 23, 1766, and Lorraine was reunited to France.

LOSANTE-VILLE.—(See CINCINNATI.)

LOST AND FOUND OFFICE.—(See HACKNEY COACHES.)

LOTHIANS (Scotland).—This district, anciently called Laudonia, comprises the counties of East Lothian or Haddington, Mid Lothian or Edinburgh, and West Lothian or Linlithgow. It was seized in 449 by the Saxons, who retained possession till 1020, when it was ceded to Malcolm II., and has since formed part of the kingdom of Scotland.

LOTTERY.—The Congiaria of the ancient Romans, which formed part of the Saturnalia, bore some resemblance to the modern lottery, the emperors employing them to secure the favour of the people. In this manner Augustus distributed gifts, B.C. 30; Nero (54—68); and Elagabulus (218—222). Florence appears to have been the first country in Europe in which a lottery was established, the emergencies of the state having been met by such a device, in 1530. Lotteries passed from Italy into France, under the name of blanques, and were legalized by Francis I. in 1539. In 1572 and 1583 the Duke de Nivernois instituted a lottery at Paris for providing marriage portions to young women belonging to his estates. The lottery received such high approval from the Pope, that he granted to its supporters the remission of their sins. The disposal of merchandise by this means, which had become common, was prohibited in Jan., 1658; and all private lotteries were forbidden, under severe penalties, in 1661, 1670, 1681, 1687, and 1700. The name lottery, common in Italy, was first used in France about 1658. A lottery was drawn at Osnaburg in 1521; one at Amsterdam, for building a church-steeple, in 1549; one at Delft in 1595; and one at Hamburg, to erect a house of correction, in 1615. The first at Nuremberg was drawn in 1715; and at Berlin in July, 1740. The famous Italian or Genoese lottery was introduced by a member of the senate of Genoa, named Benedetto Gentile, in 1620. It was forbidden by Benedict XIII. (1724—1730); but Clement XII. (1730—1740) established it at Rome; and it was thence introduced into Germany, the first having been drawn at Berlin, Aug. 31, 1763. A lottery existed in the principality of Anspach and Bayreuth, from 1769 to 1788; and one at Neufchâtel in 1774 became bankrupt. The first lottery in England, proposed in 1567 and 1568, was drawn at the west door of St. Paul's Cathedral, day and night, from Jan. 11 to May 6, 1569. The profit was devoted to the repair of harbours. Another was drawn for the benefit of the Virginian Company in 1612. Lotteries were suspended in 1620, on the ground of their immoral tendency. A lottery was, however, permitted in 1630, to aid a project for supplying the metropolis with water. Charles II. used them after the restoration in 1660, to reward his adherents. A loan of £1,000,000 was raised by Government on the sale of tickets in 1694; another of £3,000,000 in 1746; and another of £1,000,000 in 1747. For a short period in the reign of Queen Anne they were prohibited. In 1778 an act requiring an annual licence, at a cost of £50, to be taken out, reduced the number of offices from 400 to 51; and they were altogether abolished by 6 Geo. IV. c. 60 (1826); the last public lottery having been drawn Oct. 18, 1826. An act imposing a penalty of £50 for advertising them (6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 66), was passed Aug. 13, 1836. Lotteries were legalized in the United States by act of congress in 1776, but are said to have been suppressed. The art-unions in England, involving the same principle as the lottery, originated in Edinburgh in 1836, and were legalized by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 48 (Aug. 13, 1846). Lotteries were abolished in France in 1836, and in Hesse Darmstadt in 1852.

LOUDON HILL (Battle) was fought near Drumclog (q. v.), June 1, 1679.

LOUDUN (Treaty) was signed at this town in France May 3, 1616, and promulgated at Blois as an edict. The regent Mary de Medici confirmed the rights of the Huguenots as assured by the Edict of Nantes, and by a supplementary article granted a large sum of money to the Prince of Condé and others.

LOUISA (Order).—This Prussian order was created Aug. 3, 1814, for the reward of women who had rendered services in hospitals to the sufferers in the war of 1813 and 1814.

LOUISBURG (Cape Breton) was fortified by the French in 1720. The English established themselves here April 30, 1745, wresting the town from the French June 15, 1745. The English flag was hoisted June 17. It was restored by the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, Oct. 7 (O.S.), 1748. An English force landed in the neighbourhood June 8, 1758, repulsed a sortie by the garrison July 9, and captured the town July 26, 1758. It was finally ceded to Great Britain by the 4th article of the Treaty of Paris, Feb. 10, 1763. (See LUDWIGSBURG.)

LOUIS D'OR, or GOLDEN LOUIS, a piece of money first coined in France in 1641, during the reign of Louis XIII., ceased to be a legal coin in 1795. Louis XVIII. re-established this gold coin on his return to Paris in 1814. It has been replaced by the Napoleon. Those coined previous to 1726 are also called Louis-blancs and Louis d'argent.

LOUIS, FORT (Africa), on the banks of the river Senegal, was captured by an English force April 22, 1758. Fort Louis, in Guadaloupe, was taken Feb. 13, 1759.

LOUISIADE ISLANDS (Pacific). — This group was discovered by Bougainville, in 1768.

LOUISIANA (North America). — This country, said to have been discovered by the French in 1673, was named after Louis XIV. by D'Iberville, a Frenchman, who formed the first settlement in 1699. A charter was granted to the colony in 1712. The company formed by Law's Mississippi scheme received the territory in 1717, and in 1762 it was ceded to Spain. Transferred to the French by the secret treaty of Ildefonso, signed Oct. 1, 1800, it was sold to the United States Government for 15,000,000 dollars in 1803. Louisiana was admitted into the Union April 8, 1812, and it seceded Jan. 26, 1861.

LOUISON. —(See GUILLOTINE.)

LOUIS, ST. (Africa).—This town of Senegambia, founded by the French in 1626 and burned in 1827, became in 1837 the headquarters for the steam navigation of the Senegal.

LOUIS, ST. (Missouri), was founded in 1764. The university was established by the Roman Catholics in 1832.

LOUIS, ST. (Orders).—Louis XIV. of France instituted an order of this name in 1693, as a reward of literary merit. It was enlarged in 1779 by Louis XVI., and having been suppressed at the revolution, was restored in 1815. No knights have been created since 1815. The order of St. Louis of Hesse was established in 1807; and that of Lucca in 1836.

LOUISVILLE (United States).—This place in Kentucky, founded in 1773, was named in honour of Louis XVI. when made a town in 1780.

LOUTH (Ireland), conquered by De Courcey 1179–1180, was made a county by King John in 1210, and included in the province of Leinster some time in the reign of Elizabeth.

LOUVAIN (Belgium), said to have been founded by Julius Cæsar, was walled in 1156. It gave employment to 150,000 weavers in the 14th century, when it was capital of the duchy of Brabant, large numbers of whom having been banished, emigrated to England in 1382. The castle was built about 900, and the cathedral of St. Pierre, founded in 1040, was completed in 1358. The guildhall was built in 1317; the university, established in 1423, was attended by 6,000 students in the 16th century; and the town-hall was built in 1448. The Austrian governor, Don John, received the submission of the inhabitants in 1577; and a French revolutionary force mastered the place in 1792. The university, suppressed at the commencement of the century, was restored in 1817. It was relinquished by the state in 1834, and restored by the Roman Catholic clergy in 1835.

LOUVIERS (France).—Richard I. concluded a treaty, which was soon broken, with Philip II. (Augustus), at this town in 1196. Henry V. captured it in 1418, and the French recovered it in 1450. The Duke of Bedford having taken it after a long siege in 1451, razed it to the ground. In 1545 Charles V., anxious to give a check to the Lutherans, caused the university of Louvain to draw up a Concession of Faith in 32 articles. The town was rebuilt, and the manufacture of cloth, for which it is celebrated, commenced in 1680, and that of cotton in 1789.

LOUVRE (Paris).—The early history of the Louvre is lost in obscurity. St. Foix says Dagobert I. kept his horses and hounds in a building on its site about 629. Philip II. (Augustus) repaired the edifice in 1204, converted it into a state prison, and built a large tower. About the middle of the 14th century it was used as a residence for foreign princes visiting the king. Charles VI. lived there about 1380, but afterwards quitted it for the Tuileries. Francis I. commenced the present edifice in 1528. Charles IX., during the massacre of St. Bartholomew, Aug. 24, 1572, is said to have fired on the retreating Huguenots from one of the windows. Charles IX. and other kings made great additions. Louis XIV. laid the first stone of the façade from designs by Bernini, Oct. 17, 1665. The crown pictures were deposited here in 1681. Louis XV. in 1719 lived here. The Luxemburg collection, including a fine series by Rubens, was removed here in 1785. A decree was passed in May, 1791, for making it a depository of objects of science and art. In July, 1793, all pictures, statues, vases, &c. in royal collections were ordered to be transferred here, and the collection was opened to the public Aug. 10. The museum of sculptures, commenced in 1797, was opened under the name of the Musée Napoléon in 1803. The buildings of the new Louvre, begun by Napoleon I., were finished and inaugurated by Napoleon III. Aug. 14, 1857. The Louvre was assailed during the revolution of July, 1830.

LOVAT'S REBELLION.—Simon Fraser, afterwards Lord Lovat, was despatched from St. Germain by the son of James II. for the purpose of attempting a rising in Scotland, where he landed towards the end of 1702. Having betrayed his trust, he returned to France in 1703, was thrown into the Bastille, and remained a prisoner till 1708. He returned to Scotland, drove the Pretender's forces out of Inverness, Nov. 15, 1715, and held it for the Government. For aiding the cause of Prince Charles Edward in 1745, he was sent to the Tower June 17, 1746; brought to trial March 9, 1747; and beheaded on Tower Hill Thursday, April 9.

LOVE.—(See AGAPÆMONE, COURTS OF LOVE, &c.)

LOVE-FEASTS.—(See AGAPÆ, and FEASTS.)

LOVERS (War of the).—Henry III. of France, having for politic reasons disclosed to Henry of Navarre the amour of his wife Margaret with the Viscount of Turenne, the ladies of the Navarrese court incited their lovers to warfare against the discourteous sovereign as an enemy of womankind. Hostilities commenced April 15, 1580. Cahors was taken after a siege of four days, and the war was terminated after lasting seven months by the treaty of Fleix (q. v.), Nov. 26. This was the seventh of the French wars of religion.

LOVERS OF GOD.—(See AMEDIANS.)

LOVICZ (Poland).—First mentioned in 1136, became the residence of the primates of Poland about 1355.

LOW CHURCH.—(See HIGH AND LOW CHURCH.)

LOW COUNTRIES (Europe).—The term is frequently applied to portions of the country now constituting Belgium (q. v.), and Holland (q. v.).

LOWELL (United States).—This town of Massachusetts was incorporated in 1826.

LOWER EMPIRE.—The designation applied to the Roman Empire in its decline, commencing, according to some historians, with the reign of Constantine I., and, according to others, with its separation into the Eastern and Western Empires at the death of Theodosius I., in 395. The term is applied more particularly to the Eastern Empire (q. v.). Its history (L'Histoire du Bas Empire) by Lebeau and Ameilhou, appeared at Paris, in 29 vols., in 1757.

LOWESTOFT (Suffolk).—This town, believed to have been founded as early as the 4th century, received, in 1573, privileges from Queen Elizabeth, which were renewed by Charles I. Feb. 26, 1629. It was much injured by fire March 10, 1645. A lighthouse was erected in 1676, and a ship canal to Lake Lothington was commenced in 1827. The harbour was connected with the sea in 1831. The infirmary was opened in 1840. (See SOLEBAY.)

LOWOSITZ, or LOBOSITZ (Battle), was fought between the Austrians and Prussians at this place, in Bohemia, Oct. 1, 1756. Each of the combatants claimed the victory, but the Austrians were compelled to retire.

LOW SUNDAY.—The first Sunday after Easter received this name, according to Hone, because the church service was lowered from the pomp of the festival of the preceding Sunday. It was also called Quasi Modo, from the first words of the hymn, or mass on that day, and Dominica in Albis.

LOYALTY LOAN.—This term is applied to a loan, showing the patriotic feeling of the country, raised between Dec. 1—5, 1796, when £18,000,000 were subscribed in a few hours, and hundreds went away disappointed at being too late to contribute their share.

LÜBECK (Germany), founded in 1140, was ceded to the Dukes of Saxony in 1158, and taken by the Danes in 1201, was made a free imperial city in 1226, when the Danish garrison was expelled. It became the head of the Hanseatic League in 1241. Its cathedral was founded in 1170, and finished in 1341; the Marien-Kirche was built in 1304, and the Raathaus in 1442. Blucher threw himself into the town to avoid the French army, when it was carried by assault, and suffered a three days' pillage, Nov. 6, 1806. It was annexed to the empire Nov. 12, 1810, and regained its freedom after the battle of Leipsic, Oct. 19, 1813.

LÜBECK (Treaty), was concluded at this town, between the Emperor Ferdinand II. and Christian IV., King of Denmark, May 22, 1629.

LUBLIN (Poland).—This town, founded in the 10th century, was ravaged by the Mongols in 1241. The church of St. Nicholas was commenced in 986. A treaty was signed here in 1569, for the incorporation of Lithuania with Poland. A diet was held here in 1703.

LUCANIA (Italy), settled by the Samnites about B.C. 420, rose into such importance that a league was formed against it by the cities of Magna Græcia B.C. 393. The Lucanians triumphed in a great battle fought B.C. 390, and the younger Dionysius concluded a treaty with them B.C. 358. They were reduced to subjection by the Romans, B.C. 272, and in the civil war between Marius and Sylla, B.C. 88, their nationality was extinguished.

LUCAR, ST., or SAN LUCAR DE BARRAMEDA (Spain), was taken from the Moors by Alphonso X., in 1264. Christopher Columbus landed here on returning from his fourth voyage in Dec. 1504. Magalhaens sailed from this port on the first voyage round the world, Sep. 20 or 21, 1519, and one of the ships belonging to the expedition returned Sep. 6, 1522.

LUCAYOS.—See BAHAMA ISLANDS.)

LUCCA (Italy).—The ancient Luca, the chief town of the duchy of that name, is mentioned by Livy as having given shelter to the consul Sempronius, when he retired before Hannibal, B.C. 218. Subsequently it fell into the hands of the Ligurians, and became a Roman colony B.C. 177. A meeting of 200 senators, including Cæsar, Pompey, and Crassus, was held here B.C. 56; and by virtue of the Lex Julia it was made a municipal town B.C. 49. Narses, the eunuch, took it after a long siege, in 553. It became a Lombard duchy in 572; was conquered by Arnulph in 895; and, having acquired its independence, in 1055, joined the league of the Ghibellines in 1262. Pisa commenced hostilities against it in 1341, to prevent its union with Florence, and it submitted to that town in 1342. The inhabitants paid 300,000 florins to Charles IV. for their freedom in 1370. Pope Urban VI., offended at the Genoese, honoured Lucca with his presence in 1386; and Gregory XII. made it his residence in 1408, previous to taking refuge in Venice. It was besieged by the Florentines in 1430, and was the place selected for a conference between the Emperor Charles V. and Paul III., Sep. 10, 1541. The French took it in March, 1799; it was made a principality, and bestowed by Napoleon Buonaparte on his sister Elise, June 23, 1805. It was made a duchy in 1815, and was annexed to Tuscany (q. v.), Oct. 11, 1847. The market-place is formed from an ancient amphitheatre. The church of St. Frediannus was founded in the 7th century; St. Michael's was built of white marble in 764. The church of St. Romanus was founded in the 8th century; the cathedral by Pope Alexander in 1060; and the old town-hall, now a poor-house, in 1413. The Academy of Letters and Sciences was instituted in 1817; the fine aqueduct by Nottolini was commenced in 1815, and finished in 1832.

LUCENA (Spain).—The Moors besieged this city April 21, 1483, and, having been defeated by the Spaniards in a great battle under its walls, retired.

LUCERA (Italy), the ancient Luceria, according to tradition, founded by Diomedes about B.C. 1184, allied itself, B.C. 326, with the Romans, who delivered it from the power of the Samnites B.C. 320. Constans II. took the city from the Lombards, and destroyed it in 663; and in 1227 it was restored by the Emperor Frederick II. A mosque, built by the Saracens, was converted into a cathedral in 1269.

LUCERNE (Switzerland).—This canton joined the Swiss confederation in 1332. The town of the same name was surrounded by towers in 1385. A treaty between the French and the Swiss was concluded here May 5, 1521. Incited by the French, the inhabitants rose in revolt in 1798. The town was retaken by the Federal forces Dec. 16, 1813. Toleration was granted to the Protestants in 1828. The government having determined to entrust the Jesuits with the education of the young, an attack was made on the place by a large body of Protestants, Dec. 8, 1844. The monument to the Swiss Guards who defended the Tuileries against the Parisian mob, Aug. 10, 1792, was erected in 1821. (See LEGITIMISTS.)

LUCIA, or LUCIE, ST. (West Indies), one of the Leeward Islands, was first colonized by the English in 1639. The settlers were expelled by the Caribs, and the French planted a colony in 1650. It was the cause of many contests between the French and English. The latter took it in Feb., 1762; again Dec. 30, 1778; again May 25, 1796, and finally June 22, 1103. The capitulation was signed June 30. It suffered from an earthquake Aug. 12, 1788.

LUCIFERIANS, the followers of Lucifer, Bishop of Cagliari, a zealous opponent of the Arians, who, having been sent to espouse the cause of Athanasius at the Council of Milan in 355, was so violent in his conduct that Constantius II. banished him. He attended a council at Alexandria in 362, summoned by Athanasius, on hearing of the death of Constantius II. After going from place to place, he at length retired to Sardinia in 363, and founded the sect that bears his name. He died in 371, and though he had some followers in Italy and Spain, the sect had disappeared by the commencement of the 5th century.

LUCIFER MATCHES superseded the more costly and less convenient Eupyrions and Prometheans, of instantaneous light-box notoriety, in 1832. The splint-cutting machine employed in their manufacture was patented by Partridge in 1842. Sturge's improved lucifer matches were patented in 1853. Lundstrom, a Swede, invented the Swedish safety match at Jonköping, in 1855. Hochstaetter's safety matches were patented in 1859.

LUCIGNANO (Battle).—The Florentine army, under the Marquis of Marignano, defeated the French, under Marshal Strozzi, at this place, in Italy, Aug. 2, 1554.

LUCKNOW (Hindostan), with Oudh, the province of which it is the capital, was conquered by the Mohammedans about 1300. The nabob was defeated in an engagement with the English, Oct. 23, 1764. (See BUXAR, Battle.) The city was made the residence of the court in 1775, and was, with the territory, annexed to the English possessions in India, Feb. 7, 1856. The native soldiers grew refractory May 1, 1857, and the place was invested by the rebels July 1, 1857. It was relieved by Gen. Havelock and Sir James Outram, Sep. 25, 1857, and by Sir Colin Campbell, Nov. 17, 1857. The English retired Nov. 22, 1857, and Sir Colin Campbell recaptured it March 21, 1858. The foundation stone of a memorial to Sir Henry Lawrence and others who fell in the mutiny of 1857, was laid Jan. 2, 1864.

LUÇON (France), made a bishopric in 1317, was taken by the Huguenots in 1568. The Vendeans were defeated here June 21 and Oct. 1, 1793, and the treaty for the pacification of La Vendée was concluded here, Jan. 17, 1800. (See LUZON.)

LUDDITES, so called from a mythical Capt. Ludd, under whose authority they professed to act, commenced their riots at Nottingham in opposition to the application to stocking-weaving of improved machinery Nov. 10, 1811. They attacked the house of a manufacturer at Bulwell, and destroyed its contents, Nov. 11, and extended their operations into Derby and Leicester, where many frames were destroyed in Dec. In consequence of the serious aspect matters had assumed, a bill was introduced into Parliament Feb. 14, 1812, for the purpose of adding new legal powers to those already existing for their suppression. It was during the debate on this bill that Lord Byron delivered his maiden speech in the House of Lords, opposing it with great vehemence. The Prince Regent sent a message to both houses of Parliament June 27, 1812, calling upon them to take proper measures for the restoration of order, as the combinations had become more powerful, subjected themselves to military training, and were bound by an oath of secrecy and confederation. A new bill was accordingly brought in, and passed July 24, its operation being limited to March 25, 1814. A military force was assembled, and the local militia called out, for the protection of life and property. Fourteen of the ringleaders were executed at York, Jan. 10, 1813. After a temporary inactivity the Luddites recommenced their nefarious proceedings in May, 1814, and again in 1816. Some of the ringleaders were executed at Derby Nov. 7, 1817. (See DERBY TRIALS.)

LUDLOW (Shropshire).—This town, called by the Britons Dinan Leys Tywysog, passed, soon after the Norman Conquest, into the possession of Roger de Montgomery, who erected the castle. It was bestowed by Henry I. (1100—1135) on a Norman knight who assumed the name of Sir Fulke de Dinan. Taken by King Stephen (1135—1154), it subsequently became the residence of the lords of the Welsh marches. The town was walled in the reign of Edward I. (1272—1307). The castle, after undergoing many changes of ownership during the Wars of the Roses, became in 1483 the abode of the young King Edward V. and his brother the Duke of York, before their removal to London. Prince Arthur, son of Henry VII., died here, April 2, 1502. The grammar-school was founded in 1552. Milton's masque of "Comus" was performed in the castle in 1631.

LUDWIGSBURG, or LOUISBURG (Würtemberg), founded in 1704 and completed in 1718, was made a royal residence in 1727.

LUGDUNUM (Battle).—Albinus, who at the head of an army from Britain, had crossed into Gaul, was defeated and slain by Severus near Lugdunum, now Lyons, Feb. 19, 197. The victors plundered Lyons, and having captured Albinus, cut off his head.

LUGO (Italy).—This town was taken and pillaged by the French in 1796, when the unfortunate inhabitants were put to the sword.

LUGO (Spain.)—The ancient Lucus Augusti, founded by the Romans, who named it after Augustus. It was taken by the Moors in 714, and was wrested from them in 755. It was seized by the French in 1809.

LUKE (Gospel), the third in order of the books of the New Testament, was written by Luke the physician, friend and companion of Paul. By the best authorities it is referred to the year 63 or 64. It was in common use in the Christian church in 120.

LUNA (Etruria.)—The Romans established a colony at this place, the modern Luni, B.C. 177. The Normans plundered it in 867, and it afterwards fell into decay. Benedict VIII. repulsed the Saracens here in 1016.

LUNATIC ASYLUMS.—The public exhibition of patients at Old Bethlem Asylum, Moorfields, London, was prohibited in 1771. Pirlel introduced the non-restraint system into the Bicêtre, at Paris, in 1792, but it was not until after the revelation of the enormities practised at the York Asylum, made by Mr. Higgins in 1813, that it was adopted in England. It was tried at Lincoln in 1837, and proved so successful in its operation, that it was introduced at Hanwell in 1839, and shortly afterwards in other important establishments. Provisions for the erection of county lunatic asylums were made by 48 Geo. III. c. 96 (June 23, 1808), which was amended by 9 Geo. IV. c. 40 (July 15, 1828). This act was repealed by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 126 (Aug. 8, 1845), which was explained and amended by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 84 (Aug. 26, 1846), and by 10 & 11 Vict. c. 43 (June 25, 1847). The laws respecting lunatic asylums in England were consolidated and amended by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97 (Aug. 20, 1853). County lunatic asylums were ordered to be erected in Ireland by 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 33 (May 28, 1821), and in Scotland they are regulated by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 1 (Aug. 25, 1857), amended by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 89 (Aug. 2, 1858). (See GEEL and HOSPITALS.)

LUNATICS.—Formerly a legal distinction existed between a lunatic and an idiot, the former being a person who had lost the use of reason, which he once possessed; the latter, one who had no understanding from the day of his birth. By the Roman law, persons of unsound mind might be deprived of the management of their property on application to the prætor by the next of kin. The custody of idiots and of their lands, formerly vested in the lord of the fee, was, by 17 Edw. II. c. 19 (1324), made a prerogative of the crown. By 17 Edw. II. c. 10 (1324), the king was to provide for the custody and sustentation of lunatics, and to preserve their lands and the profits of them for their use, when they came to their right mind. Various laws on the subject are found in the statute-book. By 15 & 16 Geo. II. c. 30 (1742), the marriage of lunatics was declared illegal. The laws on lunacy were consolidated and amended by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 70 (Aug. 15, 1853). (See LUNATIC ASYLUMS.)

LUNAWARA (Hindostan), the chief town of the principality of the same name, was freed from the tribute paid by its rajah to Scindia, by a treaty concluded with the British Government Dec. 30, 1803. It was, however, re-imposed in 1806, and Scindia ceded his right to supremacy over the rajah in 1819.

LUND HILL (Yorkshire).—An explosion of gas took place at a colliery here Feb. 19, 1857, when 189 persons lost their lives. The first body was not recovered until April 10.

LUND, or LUNDEN (Battle).—Charles XI. of Sweden, after a hard fight, gained a slight advantage over the army of Christian V. of Denmark at this place in Sweden, Dec. 14, 1676.

LUND, or LUNDEN (Sweden), in Gothland, was a considerable city before the introduction of Christianity in 830. The Scandinavian pirate kings, who took it in 920, were elected here. Its cathedral was founded in the 11th century; the university by Christian I. in 1479, the present structure having been erected in 1668. In 1104 its archbishop exercised authority over all bishops in Denmark, Norway, and Sweden. Puffendorff filled a professional chair in this university in 1670; and Linnæus matriculated here in 1727.

LUND, or LUNDEN (Treaty).—A treaty of peace between Denmark and Sweden was signed at this place in Sweden, Sep. 26, 1629.

LUNDRENSES.—(See FARTHING.)

LUNDY ISLAND (Bristol Channel).—This island, off the coast of Devonshire, was fortified by Morisco, a pirate, in the beginning of the 13th century. It was held for Charles I. during the Parliamentary wars in 1643, and was sold for about £9,400 in 1840.

LÜNEBURG (Hanover) was till 1369 the residence of the Dukes of Brunswick-Lüneburg. The gymnasium was founded in 1383, and the Ritter Academy, or college of nobles, in 1656. In 1692 the duchy was united to Hanover, and in 1807 it was incorporated with the French kingdom of Westphalia. In 1810 it was divided into the departments of Bouches-de-l'Elbe and Bouches-du-Weser, and in 1814 it reverted to Hanover.

LUNÉVILLE (France), only a village previous to the 11th century, was afterwards fortified, and during the wars between the Dukes of Burgundy and Lorraine sustained several sieges. The French captured it in 1638, and destroyed the fortifications. The castle of the dukes of Lorraine was built in 1707. Leopold, Duke of Lorraine, built a palace at Lunéville in the 18th century.

LUNÉVILLE (Treaty) was concluded at Lunéville, in France, between the French republic and the Emperor of Germany, Feb. 9, 1801, and consisted of 19 articles. Many of these explained, and others confirmed, the provisions of the Treaty of Campo-Formio, Oct. 17, 1797. The Rhine, as far as Holland, was made the boundary of France, and the independence of the Batavian, Cisalpine, Helvetic, and Ligurian republics was recognized.

LUPERCALIA, or WOLF FESTIVAL.—This annual festival, established at Rome at an early period, in honour of Romulus and Remus, and so called from lupus, a wolf, the animal recorded to have suckled them, was observed Feb. 15. Augustus endeavoured to restrain the license of this festival, which was altogether abolished in 496. The place where the priests of Pan assembled was called Luperca.

LUSATIA (Germany).—Made a marquisate by Henry I., in 931, was converted to Christianity by Otho I., in 968. It was annexed to Bohemia in 1319, and was ceded to Saxony by the Treaty of Prague in 1635. The greater portion of Lusatia was assigned to Prussia by the Treaty of Vienna, June 8, 1815.

LUSIAD.—This epic poem, commenced by Louis de Camoëns, the Portuguese, at Santarem about 1547, and continued at intervals in Africa and India, was published at Lisbon in 1572. An edition translated into English by Richard Fanshawe, was published at London in 1655; and another by Mickle in 1776. Camoëns, born about 1524, died in great poverty in 1579.

LUSITANIA.—(See PORTUGAL.)

LUSTRUM.—This expiatory sacrifice, a lustration or purification of the whole people, performed by one of the Roman censors at the end of every five years, was instituted by Servius Tullius B.C. 566. The last was celebrated at Rome in 74, during the reign of Vespasian.

LUTE.—This instrument, of Arabic origin, first introduced into Spain, whence it was diffused over all Europe, attained its highest popularity during the 16th century, when the best lutes were constructed in England.

LUTHERANS, the term applied to the followers of Martin Luther, born at Eisleben, in Thuringia, Nov. 10, 1483, is used for the German Protestants, most of whom are Lutherans. At an early age Luther became acquainted with the views disseminated by Wycliffe and John Huss, and is said to have received those impressions which induced him to separate from his church, on a visit to Rome in 1510. At Wittenberg, where he filled the theological chair, Tetzel, the legate of Pope Leo X., arrived to raise money by the sale of indulgences; whereupon Luther drew up his famous 95 theses, condemning the abuse of indulgences, and he transmitted a copy of them to the Archbishop of Magdeburg, Oct. 31, 1517. Summoned to appear before Cardinal Cajetan at Augsburg, after several conferences Luther appealed "from the Pope ill informed to the Pope better informed," Nov. 28, 1518. After a conference with Militz, in Jan., 1519, he wrote an explanatory and submissive letter to the Pope, March 3, 1519. In a disputation at Leipsic he denied the Pope's supremacy, June 27, 1519, and published an address to the Emperor and the Christian nobility of Germany in June, 1520. A bull against Luther and his writings was issued by Eck in Aug.; and in the same month Luther's treatise on the Babylonian captivity of the Church appeared, denouncing the papacy as the kingdom of Babylon and antichrist. In Oct. he had a conference with Militz, and having been excommunicated, he destroyed the bull before an immense multitude, Dec. 10, 1520. At the diet of Worms he maintained his opinions, April 16, 1521, and an edict was consequently issued commanding his apprehension and the destruction of his writings, May 8, 1521. He was conveyed to Wartburg, under the protection of Frederick, Elector of Saxony, where he began his translation of the Bible into German, completing the New Testament in 1521. Luther repaired to Wittenberg, where religious disturbances had arisen, and restored order in 1522. He abandoned the monastic life, and his monastery being deserted, was given into the hands of the Elector, in 1524, when a league of German princes was formed to check the progress of his opinions, which had spread over Switzerland, found entrance into Scotland, and were adopted as the national faith in Sweden and Denmark, 1524. Luther married Catherine von Bora, a nun who had left her convent, in 1525, in which year many of his followers were burned as heretics. His Liturgy and Order of Divine Worship was published in 1526; and he presented the Articles of Torgau to the Elector of Saxony in 1530. At the diet of Augsburg, the Protestants read their celebrated "Confession," June 25, 1530. A complete edition of Luther's translation of the Bible, in three folio volumes, was published in 1534. A league called the Holy Alliance was formed at Nuremberg, between the Emperor and the Roman Catholic princes, for 11 years, against the Protestants, June 10, 1538. Luther died at Eisleben, Feb. 18, 1546.

LUTTER (Battle).—Gen. Tilly, commanding the army of the German Roman Catholic league, defeated the Danes under Christian IV. at this town in Brunswick, Aug. 27, 1626.

LÜTZEN (Battles). — The Swedes, commanded by Gustavus II. (Adolphus), who lost his life in the battle, gained an important victory over the Austrians, under Wallenstein, near this town in Saxony, Nov. 16, 1632.—— Napoleon I. defeated the Russians and Prussians in an engagement fought at the village of Gross Görschen, near Lützen, May 2, 1813.

LUXEMBURG (Belgium and Holland) was ceded to Siegfried by the monastery of Trèves, and created a county in 965. In the 12th century it came into the possession of the Counts of Limburg, who took the title of Counts of Luxemburg. The Emperor Charles IV. erected it into a duchy in 1354. It came to Philip of Burgundy by his marriage with Isabella, daughter of the King of Portugal, in 1443, and through him passed to the house of Spain, with whom it remained till the peace of the Pyrenees, when part of it was ceded to France, Nov. 7, 1659. It was ceded to France by the Treaty of Campo-Formio, Oct. 17, 1797, and it passed to Holland in exchange for certain German principalities in 1814, and became a grand duchy. In consequence of the Belgian revolution, Luxemburg was dismembered, and a portion was assigned to Belgium by the conference of London, Oct., 1831, and a fresh division was made by a treaty signed in London April 19, 1839.

LUXEMBURG (Holland).—This town, formerly the capital of the old duchy, and now of Dutch Luxemburg, was taken by the Spaniards from the Duke of Orleans in 1542; by Francis I. in 1543; and was captured by Charles V. May, 1544. Louis XIV. blockaded it in 1681, but withdrew on the protest of the European powers, in 1682. It was ceded to him by the Treaty of Ratisbon in 1684, and restored at the peace of Ryswick, Sep. 20, 1697. Having been besieged by the French, under Gen. Hatry, it capitulated, after its supplies were nearly exhausted, June 7, 1795. It was taken by the allies in 1813, and was surrendered by the Treaty of Paris, May 30, 1814. As a fortress it was stipulated, in the Treaty of Vienna, that it should be held by the German confederation, Feb. 3, 1815. The fortifications have been greatly strengthened since 1830. A projecting rock called Le Bouc has been hollowed out, and contains casemates for 4,000 men.

LUXOR, or EL-UKSUR (Egypt). — This palace, at a village near Thebes, was built by Amenophis Memnon, one of the Pharaohs who reigned during the sojourn of the Israelites in Egypt, about B.C. 1518. Several chambers and columns were added to the temple by Amenoph III., B.C. 1327. The sculptures on the wings of the portals represent occurrences in the reign of Rameses Miamum, B.C. 1556. It was plundered by the Persians B.C. 520; and one of the massive obelisks of red granite was removed by the French in 1831, and set up in the Place de la Concorde, Paris, in 1836.

LUXURY was carried to excess amongst the Romans during the latter period of the Republic and under the Empire. Gibbon declares that the most remote countries of the ancient world were ransacked to supply the pomp and delicacy of Rome, and, in commenting upon a passage in Tacitus, remarks: "It was a complaint worthy of the gravity of the senate, that, in the purchase of female ornaments, the wealth of the state was irrevocably given away to foreign and hostile nations. The annual loss is computed, by a writer of an inquisitive but censorious temper, at upwards of £800,000 sterling." Caligula is said to have served up pearls of great value, dissolved in vinegar, about 31. In 1340 an edict was issued in France to restrain men from partaking of more than soup and two dishes. Various Sumptuary Laws (q. v.) for the restraint of luxury are found in our statute-book. By 10 Edw. III. st. 3 (1336), all classes were prohibited from having more than two courses at any meal, excepting at certain stated festivals. This statute was repealed by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 64 (July 21, 1856). The diet and apparel of each class of the community were regulated by 37 Edw. III. c. 8—14 (1363), and many subsequent acts, all of which were repealed by 1 James I. c. 25 (1604).

LUZON, or LUÇON (Indian Archipelago), one of the Philippines (q. v.), was discovered by Magalhaens in 1521. (See MANILLA.)

LUZZARA (Battle).—A desperate but indecisive contest occurred at this place in Italy between the Imperialist army, under Prince Eugène of Savoy, and the Franco-Spanish and Piedmontese forces of the Duc de Vendôme, Aug. 13, 1702.

LYBIA.—(See LIBYA.)

LYCÆAN GAMES, celebrated by the Arcadians in honour of Zeus, were instituted by Lycaon, son of Pelasgus, B.C. 1320.

LYCANTHROPIA, or WOLF MADNESS, prevailed in the Jura in 1600, when persons affected acted like wild beasts, devouring children and committing every kind of atrocity.

LYCAONIA (Asia Minor).—This district, the boundaries of which frequently varied, is first mentioned in history B.C. 401, when it was traversed and plundered by Cyrus the Younger. For some years the inhabitants maintained their independence, but they subsequently succumbed, and, with the other peoples of Asia Minor, passed successively under the rule of Alexander III. (the Great) B.C. 336—323, of the Seleucidæ, B.C. 311, and of Antiochus the Great, B.C. 223, on whose defeat by the Romans, B.C. 190, the country was conferred upon Eumenes II. of Pergamus. On the death of King Amyntas in battle against the Cilicians, B.C. 25, it was annexed to the Roman empire.

LYCEUM. — In this celebrated school at Athens, dedicated to Apollo Lyceius, Aristotle and his disciples taught while walking about, and their philosophy from that circumstance is called the Peripatetic. Philip, son of Demetrius, during his invasion of Attica, destroyed the trees of the Lyceum, B.C. 200.

LYCEUM THEATRE (London), called also the English Opera-house, derives its name from an academy built in 1765. It was converted into a theatre in 1790, and into an English opera-house in 1809. Having been destroyed by fire Feb. 16, 1830, it was rebuilt, and reopened Monday July 14, 1834.

LYCIA (Asia Minor), originally Milyas, was known to Homer, who makes frequent allusions to it in the Iliad, B. C. 962, and enumerates its people among the allies of Troy, B.C. 1192. This country was subdued by Harpagus, the general of Cyrus, and made a Persian province B.C. 546. It was conquered by Alexander III. (the Great) B.C. 333; by the Romans, who ceded it to the Rhodians, B.C. 188; became a Roman province in 48; and was constituted a separate province by Theodosius II. (402—450). It was visited in 1838—1840 by Sir Charles Fellows, who discovered the remains of 11 cities.

LYDDA.—(See DIOSPOLIS.)

LYDIA (Asia Minor).—Its history dates as far back as B.C. 1200; but the real Lydian æra commenced about B.C. 713, with Gyges, who reigned till B.C. 678, the dynasty of the Mermnadæ closing with Crœsus, B.C. 556, when Cyrus reduced the country to the condition of a Persian province. The Romans bestowed it upon the King of Pergamus B.C. 189, and it reverted to them again B.C. 133. (See MEDIA.)

LYING-IN HOSPITALS.—The first institution of this kind was opened in a private house at Dublin by Dr. Bartholomew Mosse, March 25, 1745, and proved so advantageous that in 1747 several influential men in London obtained from him information as to his regulations, with a view to the establishment of similar hospitals at London. (See HOSPITALS.)

LYME REGIS (Dorsetshire), received a royal charter in 1284, and was represented by two members in Parliament. It was plundered by the French in 1404, and again in 1416, and it withstood a two months' siege by the Royalists in 1644. It has only returned one member to the House of Commons since the passing of the Reform Bill in 1832.

LYMPHATIC VESSELS. — (See LACTEAL VESSELS.)

LYNCHBURG (United States).—This town in Virginia, founded in 1786, was incorporated in 1805.

LYNCH LAW is described in Webster's American Dictionary as "the practice of punishing men for crimes and offences by unauthorized persons, without a legal trial." The same authority adds: "The term is said to be derived from a Virginian farmer, named Lynch, who thus took the law into his own hands." The accuracy of this definition is questioned. Some writers believe Judge Lynch to be a mythical personage, and others trace the origin of the phrase to one Lynch, sent to America in 1687–8, to suppress piracy. He had authority to dispense with the usual forms of law in the punishment of the pirates, and from this circumstance the term arose. Sir Harris Nicolas mentions the case of a widow who had committed murder, put to death in this manner by some of her own sex, in 1429. By others the term is derived from James Lynch Fitzstephen, Mayor of Galway in 1526, who caused his own son, convicted of murder, to be hanged before his own door.

LYNN, LYNN REGIS, or KING'S LYNN (Norfolk), received its charter from King John, who remained three days in the town, when evading the forces of the barons, Oct. 9, 1216. It returned two members to Parliament in 1295, and was detached from the see of Norfolk, of which it formed a fief, under the name of Lynn Episcopi, by Henry VIII. (1509—1547). St. Margaret's Church was founded in 1100, St. Nicholas' by Edward III., and the grammar-school in 1510. After a three weeks' siege it capitulated to the Parliamentary forces in 1643.

LYON COURT (Scotland).—This, the chief heraldic tribunal of Scotland, presided over by the Lyon King-at-Arms, was regulated by the Scotch Parliament in 1592—1672.

LYON KING-AT-ARMS (Scotland). — This office existed at a remote period,—according to some authorities as early as the 12th century. The first recorded appearance of Lyon king-at-arms is at the coronation of Robert II., in March, 1371.

LYON or LYONS (Battle).—Clodius Albinus was defeated and slain by Septimius Severus, in a great battle fought at Lyons, Feb. 19, 197. It terminated the civil war, and 150,000 Romans are said to have been engaged on the occasion.

LYON, or LYONS (France).—The ancient Lugdunus, Lugdunum, or Lugudunum. A Roman colony is said to have been settled B.C. 43, by L. Munatius Plancus, with the people of Vienne, driven from their homes by the Allobroges. In the reign of Augustus it was the capital of the province of Gallia Lugdunensis.

LYON, or LYONS (Treaties).—The Archduke Philip, on the part of Spain, negotiated a treaty with Louis XII. of France at Lyons, where it was signed April 5, 1503. It provided that Philip's infant son Charles should marry Claude, a princess of France; and the youthful couple were thenceforth to assume the titles of King and Queen of Naples, and Duke and Duchess of Calabria. The French division of the kingdom was to be ruled by some person named by Louis XII., and the Spanish division by the Archduke Philip, or some person appointed by Ferdinand in the interval before the marriage took place. All places unlawfully seized by either party were to be given up. War broke out soon after the treaty was signed, and much controversy has been excited amongst French and Spanish writers respecting this transaction.——Another treaty between France and Spain was concluded at Lyons Feb. 11, 1504, and was ratified by Ferdinand and Isabella at the convent of St. Maria de la Mejorado, March 31. It guaranteed to Aragon the undisturbed possession of her Italian conquests for three years, from Feb. 25, 1504, and provided for a general cessation of hostilities.——By a treaty concluded here Jan. 17, 1601, Henry IV. obtained from Savoy all the country included between the Soâne, the Rhone, and Mount Jura, in consideration of the marquisate of Saluces, which he relinquished to Duke Charles Emanuel I.

LYONNAIS (France).—This territory, which belonged to the Burgundians in 413, and to the Franks in 534, was afterwards erected into a county, the greater portion of which Philip IV. united to France in 1307.

LYON'S INN (London).—This inn of chancery, originally an hostelry with the sign of the Lion, belonged (Crabb's History of English Law, p. 554) to the Inner Temple from the reign of Henry V. (1413—1422), if not before. The hall was erected in 1700. This Inn was sold by auction, Dec. 2—4, 1862.

LYON VERSES differ from Palindromes (q. v.) in that each word, and not each letter, is reversed in order to ascertain the double reading, which frequently assumes the nature of question and answer. They were invented by Caius Sollius Sidonius Apollinaris, who was born at Lyons about 431, and died Aug. 21, 482, or 484. The following epitaph in Cumwallow churchyard, Cornwall, is an English Lyon Verse:—

"Shall we all die?
We shall die all;
All die shall we—
Die all we shall."

LYRE. — The invention of this musical instrument was ascribed by the Greeks to Apollo, or to Mercury. A similar instrument was known to the ancient Egyptians, and was also in use amongst the Hebrews.

LYSIMACHIA (Thracian Chersonesus), founded by Lysimachus, King of Thrace, B.C. 309, whence its name, was injured by an earthquake about B.C. 282, captured by the Syrians B.C. 281, by the Egyptians B.C. 247, and by Philip V., of Macedon, B.C. 205, when it was destroyed. Restored by Antiochus the Great B.C. 195, it was taken by the Romans B.C. 191. The Emperor Justinian I. (527—65), surrounded it with fortifications, after which it was called Hexamilium.

LYTHAM (Lancashire). — This town, mentioned in Domesday Book (1085-6) under the name Lidun, became late in the reign of Richard I. (1189—1199) the site of a Benedictine priory, founded by Richard Fitz-Roger. Lytham Hall was erected between 1757 and 1764, and a church was built on the ground occupied by the priory, in 1770. The school was rebuilt in 1821, the baths were erected in 1829, and the church of St. Cuthbert commenced March 20, 1834. The lighthouse, on a point called "The Double Stanners," between Lytham and Blackpool, was swept away in a gale, Jan. 22, 1862.

M.

MAASTRICHT, or MAESTRICHT (Holland), called the German Gate of the Netherlands, the ancient Trajectum ad Mosam, the capital of the province of Limburg, founded in the 5th century, has sustained several memorable sieges. The seat of the bishopric was transferred there from Tongres in 383. In 1576 the inhabitants expelled the Spaniards, who regained possession, and committed great atrocities, Oct. 20. Having again driven out the Spaniards, the Duke of Parma invested it March 12, 1579. A general assault, April 8, was repulsed, but it was carried by storm June 29. The city was delivered up to the infuriated soldiers for three days, when men, women, and children were treated with great barbarity. One historian relates that not more than 400 citizens remained alive, and Strada says that 8,000 of the inhabitants were slain during the siege, and of these 1,700 were females. It regained its independence in 1622, and was taken by Louis XIV. in 1673. William, Prince of Orange, failed in an attempt to capture it in 1675. The Duke of Marlborough occupied Maastricht in 1703. It was invested by the French April 3, 1748, and though they did not succeed in capturing it, yet the preliminaries of peace, signed a short time after, provided that it should be delivered to them, and the garrison marched out with the honours of war May 3. The French again besieged it Feb. 11, 1793, and retired in March, without having effected their object. They returned in 1794, and the city capitulated to them Nov. 4. Holland ceded Maastricht to Belgium by a treaty with France in 1795, and having long remained under French influence, it was restored to Holland by the treaty of Paris, May 30, 1814. This city remained faithful to Holland during the revolution of 1830.

MACADAMIZING.—John Loudon Macadam, who invented the mode of road-making that takes its name from him, first put it into practice on the Bristol roads in 1815. He was appointed general surveyor of roads in 1827, and received from Parliament two grants, amounting to £10,000.

MACALO (Battle). — The Milanese forces, under Carlo Malatesta, were defeated at this place, near Cremona, by the Venetians, under Carmagnola, Oct. 11, 1427.

MACAO (China).—The Portuguese formed a settlement here in 1517, and it was granted to them for purposes of trade in 1537. They kept it a close port till 1849, when it was declared free. By a treaty concluded at Tien-tsin Aug. 13, 1862, Macao was definitely ceded to Portugal.

MACARONI. — This preparation of wheat flour is an invention of the Italians, and has for many years formed an important branch of manufacture in Genoa and Naples. An establishment for its manufacture was opened in Spitalfields in 1730.

MACARONI CLUB (London).—This club of dandies was formed in 1772, by a number of young men of fashion, who had travelled in Italy, and adopted the title in contradistinction to the London Beefsteak Club (q. v.). Hence, ladies and gentlemen of extravagant dress were known as macaronies.

MACARONIC VERSE, or MACARONICS.—The term was first applied to this kind of verse by Theophilus Folengo, or, as he called himself, Merlinus Coccaius, an Italian monk (1491—Dec. 9, 1544). Hallam says that Folengo, having written an epic poem which he thought worthy of the Æneid, and being told by a friend that he had equalled Virgil, threw it into the fire in a rage, and wrote Macaronics for the rest of his life. Antonius de Arena, of Avignon, is said to have written macaronic verse in 1519. It became very fashionable, and was introduced into English literature, about 1483, by John Skelton, who died June 21, 1529, and has been called a rhyming Rabelais.

MACARTHY ISLAND (Africa), comprised in the colony on the Gambia, was guaranteed to England by the treaty of Versailles, Sep. 3, 1783.

MACASSAR (Eastern Seas).—This station, on the island of Celebes, was obtained as a settlement by the Portuguese in 1512. In 1603 the rajah, with all his subjects, embraced Mohammedanism. It fell into the power of the English in 1811, and they defeated the King of Boni in 1814. It was restored to the Dutch in 1816. The harbour was made a free port from Jan. 1, 1847. The Dutch call it Vlaardingen.

MACCABEES. — A name considered to be cabalistically derived from the motto "Who among the gods is like Jehovah!" inscribed on the Jewish banner used during their war with Syria, B.C. 166. The first of these apocryphal books of the Old Testament, giving a history of the struggles of the Jews with their enemies in the period B.C. 175—135, was written soon after the events narrated, by an unknown author. The second, an abridgement of the larger work of Jason of Cyrene, now lost, and embracing the time from about B.C. 185—170, was written about B.C. 150. The third is considered by Dr. Allix to have been written B.C. 200; and the fourth, attributed to Josephus, about 70. Of the authorship of a fifth book, a relation of Jewish affairs from some time previous to the birth of Christ to that event, nothing whatever is known. The four books were admitted as canonical by the Council of Trent, Dec. 13, 1545—Dec. 3, 1563.

MACCABEES (Æra), commenced Nov. 24, 166.

MACCABEES (Festival), instituted in honour of the seven Maccabees, who opposed the tyrant Antiochus Epiphanes, B.C. 167, and died in defence of the Jewish law, was celebrated generally in the Christian Church in the 4th century. In the Roman martyrology it is fixed Aug. 1.

MACCLESFIELD (Cheshire) was incorporated by charter in 1260. The church of St. Michael was founded by Eleanor, Queen of Edward I., in 1278, the grammar-school in 1502. A subscription library was established in 1770, and a school of design in 1851. A free school was founded in 1838. The manufacture of silk, for which this town is celebrated, made great advances between 1808 and 1825.

MACE, an improvement on the club as a weapon of war in barbarous times, is mentioned in Homer, B.C. 962, and was probably introduced into Europe about the middle of the 13th century. The heavy cavalry were supplied with the mace in the 15th and 16th centuries; but it went out of use in England in the reign of Elizabeth (1558—1603). Dr. Clarke considers its use in corporations to be derived from the ceremonies attendant on the preservation of Agamemnon's sceptre by the Chæroneans, B.C. 1201. Cromwell, when forcibly dissolving the Long Parliament, April 20, 1653, said, pointing to this symbol of the speaker's authority, "Remove that fool's bauble!" This mace was melted down and sold by order of the House of Commons, Aug. 9, 1649. Charles II. presented one to the Royal Society, to be placed before the president. Lord Chancellor Finch's house in Queen Street was broken into and the mace stolen Nov. 7, 1677.

MACEDONIA, or MACEDON (Greece).—The name is derived by some writers from Macednus or Macedon, a descendant of Deucalion, and other authorities believe it to be a corruption of Mygdonia, a district of the country. The early inhabitants of Macedonia are believed to have been Thracian and Illyrian tribes, with which Hellenic settlers intermingled.

MACEDONIANS.—This name, given to the Semi-Arians, is derived from Macedonius, a deacon who was made Bishop of Constantinople by the Arians in 341, and was acknowledged as Patriarch in 342. When the Arians separated into the Arians and the Semi-Arians, in 359, Macedonius took part with the latter, and he was expelled from the see in 360, after which time the Semi-Arians were called Macedonians. They were condemned by the second general council, held at Constantinople May—July 30, 381. They are also called Pneumatomachians, or Adversaries of the Spirit.

MACELLUM.—In this castle near Cæsarea Constantius II. confined Julian and Gallus, nephews of Constantine I., from 345 to March 5, 351.

MACERATA (Italy), the capital of a province of the same name annexed to the ecclesiastical estates by Charlemagne, was made a bishop's see in 1322. Napoleon I., by a decree dated March, 1807, annexed this province to the kingdom of Italy. It was restored to the Papal States in 1814–15, and formed part of the new kingdom of Italy in 1860.

MACHIAVELLIAN PRINCIPLES. — This term is applied to the principles advocated in the celebrated work "Il Principe," by Niccolo Machiavelli (1469—June 22, 1527), the Florentine statesman. It was first published at Rome, Jan. 4, 1532.

MACHINE-BREAKING. — By the fourth clause of 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 30 (June 21, 1827), a person breaking or destroying any machine employed in any manufacture in England, was liable to transportation for seven years, or imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years. If the offender was a male, whipping, either publicly or privately, might be added to the imprisonment. A special commission for the trial of machine-breakers was held in Hampshire in 1830.

MACHINES.—(See CARRIAGES.)

MACHPELAH.—(See BURIAL and HEBRON.)

MACHYNLLETH (Wales). — The Romans had a station at this town in Montgomeryshire. Here the Parliament of Wales met and acknowledged Owen Glendower, as prince of Wales, in 1402; and Owen Glendower entered into a treaty in 1403 with the Percys and the Mortimers to restore Richard II., if he could be found alive, to the English throne; or, in case of his decease, to make the Earl of March king. This alliance was dissolved by the battle of Hateley Field (q. v.). The church was rebuilt in 1827.

MACIEJOVICE, or MACIEWICE (Battle).—A Russian army of 12,000 men, commanded by Fersen, defeated 10,000 Poles led by Thaddæus Kosciusko at this place, in Poland, Oct. 10, 1794. Kosciusko was taken prisoner. He was liberated after two years' imprisonment, and died at Soleure, in France, Oct. 15, 1817.

MACKENZIE RIVER (North America) is named after Alexander Mackenzie, who discovered it in 1785, and explored the stream, at first called the Athabasca River, to the place where it discharges itself in the Frozen Ocean, which he reached July 15.

MACKINTOSH.—(See INDIA-RUBBER.)

MÂCON (France), the ancient Matisco, was occupied by one of the legions of Julius Cæsar B.C. 52. Councils were held here in 581 (Nicolas says Nov. 1, 582), Oct. 23, 585, in 624, and July, 1286. During the Middle Ages, Mâcon was governed by its own counts. Louis IX. annexed it to France in 1238. It was ceded to Burgundy by Charles VII. in 1435, and reunited to France in 1477. It was made a bishop's see in the 5th, and suffered severely in the religious wars during the 16th century. Great atrocities were perpetrated in the Mâconnais in 1789. The seats of the nobility and several churches were completely destroyed. The French were repulsed in an attack upon an Austrian detachment at this town, March 11, 1814. An inundation committed much havoc at Mâcon and in the neighbourhood, in Nov., 1841. A reform banquet was held at Mâcon Sep. 20, 1847.

MACON (N. America). — This town in Georgia was only a village about 1822. The Wesleyan female college was founded in 1839.

MACQUARIE RIVER.—(See GOLD DISCOVERIES.)

MADAGASCAR (Indian Ocean).—The existence of this island, long known to the Arabs and Moors, was first brought to Europe in 1298 by the Venetian traveller Marco Polo, who describes it under the name Mugaster.

MADAIN, or MADYN, AL.—(See CTESIPHON.)

MADEIRA (North Atlantic Ocean).—This, the largest of a group of islands, called the Madeiras, or Northern Canaries, is said to have afforded a refuge to an Englishman named Robert Macham, or Machin, who, fleeing from France with Anna d'Arfet in 1346, was cast by a storm upon its coast. From this circumstance the island is said to have been called Machico. This story is, however, generally regarded as an invention, and the real discoverer of Madeira is believed to be Gonzalves Zarco, the Portuguese, who visited it in 1419. It was covered with forests, and its name is derived from the Spanish word madèra, signifying timber. The Portuguese soon after formed a settlement, and erected Funchal into a city in 1508. Madeira, with Portugal, passed under Spanish rule in 1580, and again became a Portuguese colony in 1640. A garrison of British troops, under Col. Clinton, landed on the island July 24, 1801, in anticipation of an attack from the French; and these having been withdrawn, a second force, commanded by Commodore Hood and Major Beresford, took possession Dec. 24, 1807, and remained till the peace of June 20, 1814. The partisans of Don Miguel seized it Aug. 23, 1828, and it declared for Donna Maria June 10, 1834. The vines were nearly all destroyed by the oïdium in 1851.

MADISON (N. America).—A town of Jefferson county, Indiana, was founded in 1808.

MADISON (N. America).—The capital of Wisconsin, founded in 1836, is the seat of a university established in 1851.

MADONNA DELL' OLMO (Battle).—The French and Spanish army besieging Coni, was attacked at Madonna dell' Olmo, by Charles Emanuel I., King of Sardinia, Sep. 30, 1743. The former, who gained the day, abandoned the siege Oct. 22.

MAD PARLIAMENT, summoned to effect an accommodation between Henry III. and the barons, assembled at Oxford Barnabas-day, June 11, 1258, and was attended by all the nobility, archbishops, &c., and nearly 100 barons. The king and the barons respectively elected 12 persons to form a committee of 24, to amend all matters appertaining to the king and the kingdom. The committee required, amongst other things, that the king should observe faithfully Magna Charta, provided that the chief justiciar, chancellor, and other high officers, should be chosen from year to year, and ordered that three parliaments should be held every year: namely, the first Oct. 6, the second Feb. 3, and the third June 1. These, called the Provisions of Oxford, were received publicly by the citizens of London July 22. Henry III., who refused to abide by them in Feb., 1261, accepted them in 1262, and again in 1263. They were publicly promulgated at a council held at London, Sep. 8, 1263. The King of France having been appealed to by both Henry III. and the barons, annulled them at a council held at Amiens, Jan. 23, 1264.

MADRAS (Hindostan).—Its original designation was Chennapatanam, i. e., the city of Chennappa, an Indian prince, Madras being the name of a village which existed before the present city was founded.

A.D.
1637. March 1. The East India Company receive permission from the native princes to establish a factory.
1641. Fort St. George is built at Madras.
1652. Fort St. George is erected into a separate government.
1680. The first English church is commenced.
1687. Fort St. George is made a corporation.
1701. David Khan, general of Aurungzebe, lays siege to Madras, but without success.
1728. The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel establish a mission.
1746, Sep. 14. Madras is bombarded and taken by the French, under M. de la Bourdonnais, when the Mission House is destroyed.
1748, Oct. 18. Madras is restored to England by the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle.
1749, Aug. Madras is evacuated by the French.
1750. The Company obtain large grants of land near Madras.
1756. The fortifications are strengthened.
1758, Dec. 12. The French under Lally lay siege to Madras.
1759, Feb. 16. The garrison is relieved by Admiral Pocock, and Lally is compelled to raise the siege.
1769, April 4. Hyder Ali, having surprised Madras, and obtained possession of nearly the whole of it, compels the governor to sign a treaty of peace.
1770, July 26. Sir John Lindsay, the King's commissioner, arrives at Madras, where disputes commence between himself and the president.
1776, Aug. 10. Madras is threatened by the approach of Hyder Ali.—Aug. 24. Lord Pigot, the governor, is imprisoned by the council.
1780, July. The province is thrown into consternation by the arrival of Hyder Ali and 100,000 men.—Nov. 5. Sir Eyre Coote takes the command of the Madras army.
1781, Jan. 10. Sir Thomas Rumbold, governor, and four members of the council, are dismissed by the Company.—July 1. Sir Eyre Coote defeats Hyder Ali.
1783. Gen. Stuart is arrested by the governor and sent to England.
1784, April 26. Sir Eyre Coote dies at Madras.
1787. The Military Male Orphan Asylum is founded.
1788. The Female Orphan Asylum is founded.
1790, Dec. 12. Lord Cornwallis arrives at Madras.
1796. A lighthouse is erected.
1800, Dec. 26. Sir Thomas Strange is appointed the first chief justice.
1803. A navigable canal is opened, connecting the Black town with the river Ennore. A fire destroys more than 1,000 houses.
1807, Dec. 9. A hurricane does considerable damage.
1809. The Sepoys at Madras mutiny.
1811. Much damage is done by a hurricane.
1812. The college for the instruction of young civilians in the native languages is founded.
1817, Feb. Public schools are commenced at Madras.
1818. St. Andrew's bridge is finished.
1820. St. Andrew's church is opened.
1833, Aug. 28. By 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 85, s. 89, power is given to the crown to appoint a bishop.
1835, Feb. 14. The Rev. Daniel Corrie is appointed first Bishop of Madras, pursuant to the act of 1833.
1844, Jan. 1. The new lighthouse on the Esplanade is opened.
1847. Measures are taken for improving the drainage of the Black town.
1864, July 6. The railroad to Bangalore is opened.
1865, Sep. 11. The branch to Cuddapa is opened.

MADRAS (Presidency). — A governor and council were appointed for Madras by 24 Geo. III. c. 25 (Aug. 13, 1784); and Lord Macartney, nominated in 1784 as the first governor under this act, arrived at Madras early in 1785.

A.D.
1785. Lord Macartney.
1785. June 4. Alexander Davidson.
1786. Sir A. Campbell.
1789. John Holland.
1790. Feb. 13. E. J. Holland.
1790. Feb. 20. Maj.-Gen. William Medows.
1792. Sir Charles Oakely, bart.
1794. Lord Hobart.
1798. Maj.-Gen., afterwards Lord Harris.
1799. Lord Clive, afterwards Earl Powis.
1803. Lord William Bentinck.
1807. Sep. 11. William Petrie.
1807. Dec. 24. Sir George Hilaro Barlow, bart.
1813. Lieut.-Gen. John Abercromby.
1814. Hugh Elliot.
1820. Sir Thomas Munro, bart.
1827. July 10. Henry Sullivan Graeme.
1827. Oct. 18. Stephen Rumbold Lushington.
1832. Lieut.-Gen. Sir Frederick Adam.
1837. Lord Elphinstone.
1842. Marquis of Tweeddale.
1848. Sir Henry Pottinger, bart.
1853. James Thomason.
1854. Lord Harris.
1859. Sir Charles E. Trevelyan.
1860. Sir W. T. Denison.

MADRID (Spain).—Some Spanish authorities claim greater antiquity for their metropolitan city than is possessed by Rome, but no mention of it occurs in history until the reign of Ramiro II., about 931.

A.D.
1083. The Moorish fort of Majerit, or Madrid, is taken by Alphonso VI.
1190. Madrid is taken by the Moors.
1212. Alphonso IX. recaptures it.
1461. Madrid is enlarged by Henrique IV.
1473. Jan. A council is held at Madrid.
1532. Charles V. makes it a royal residence.
1560. Philip II. declares Madrid the only seat of the Spanish court.
1563. Philip II. founds the Escorial (q. v.).
1629. Philip IV. founds the college of St. Isidoro.
1698. The hospital of St. Fernando is founded.
1706, June 24. Madrid is taken by the Earl of Galway.
1734. The old palace is destroyed by fire.
1737. The theatre de la Cruz is built.
1749. The Plaza de Toros is built, and the Academy of Arts is founded.
1755. Ferdinand VI. founds the Botanical Gardens.
1806. The theatre del Principe is established.
1808, March 23. Murat arrives at Madrid.—May 2. The inhabitants fail in an attempt to expel the French.—July 25. Joseph Buonaparte is proclaimed King of Spain at Madrid.—July 27. He is compelled to leave the city.—Dec. 4. The city again surrenders to the French.
1812, Aug. 12. Madrid is entered by the English, under Sir Arthur Wellesley.
1842. The museum de la Trinidad is opened.
1852, Oct. 7. Funeral services are performed in honour of the Duke of Wellington.
1854, July 17. An insurrection breaks out in consequence of the unpopularity of the queen mother, who is compelled to leave the kingdom.
1856, Jan. 7. A mutiny breaks out amongst the national militia. (See SPAIN.)

MADRID (Treaties).—The following are the most important treaties concluded at this city:—

A.D.
1526, Jan. 14. Between Francis I. of France, and Charles V. The former, at that time a prisoner, restored Burgundy and Charolais to the Emperor, renounced all claim to the kingdom of Naples, to the duchy of Milan, to Asti, and Genoa. Other humiliating conditions were extorted, and Francis I. summoned a secret meeting in his chamber, at which he declared that he did not intend to abide by the conditions of the treaty.
1667, May 23. Peace and friendship between Great Britain and Spain.
1670, July 18. Peace and friendship between Great Britain and Spain.
1715, Dec. 14. Commerce between Great Britain and Spain.
1750, Oct. 5. Commerce between Great Britain and Spain.
1814, July 5. Friendship and alliance between Great Britain and Spain.—Aug. 28. Additional articles.

1824, Feb. 9. A convention between France and Spain for the stay of French troops in Spain.—June 30. Prolongation of the convention.
1828, Dec. 30. A convention between France and Spain for settlement of French claims.
1835, June 28. For the suppression of the slave trade between Great Britain and Spain.
1836, Dec. 28. Peace and friendship between Mexico and Spain.
1840, Feb. 6. Peace and friendship between Ecuador and Spain.
1844, April 25. Peace and friendship between Chili and Spain.
1845, March 30. Recognition, peace, and friendship between Venezuela and Spain.
1850, May 10. Recognition, peace, and friendship between Costa Rica and Spain.—July 25. Peace and friendship between Nicaragua and Spain.
1851, March 16. Concordat with Rome.

MADRIGAL.—This short lyrical poem, invented by the Flemings about the middle of the 16th century, was imitated by the Italians. In England, Morley's first book of madrigals was published in 1594. The Madrigal Society, a club of amateurs, was founded in London in 1741, the Western Madrigal Society in 1840, and the English Glee and Madrigal Union in 1851. Rimbault's Bibliotheca Madrigalium was published in 1847. Hallam remarks that "some of our old madrigals are as beautiful in language as they are in melody."

MADURA (Hindostan), the capital of a district of the same name, came into the possession of the East India Company with the Carnatic, in 1801. It sustained several sieges during the 18th century. Capt. Calliaud failed in an attempt to capture the town of Madura in May, 1757. A second attack in July was not more successful.

MADURA (Indian Ocean).—This island off the coast of Java has belonged to the Dutch since 1747.

MÆANDER (Battles).—This river, now called Meinder, in Asia Minor, celebrated for its numerous windings, which have rendered its name proverbial, was the scene of a defeat of the Turks by John II. in 1119; and of another by the army of Manuel I. in 1177.

MAESTRICHT.—(See MAASTRICHT.)

MAGALHAENS' or MAGELLAN STRAIT (South America), the most extensive strait in the world, connecting the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, was discovered in Oct., 1520, by Ferdinando Magalhaens, incorrectly called Magellan, a Portuguese, who sailed in the Spanish service. Magalhaens cleared it Nov. 28.

MAGAZINES.—The following list contains the names of the principal literary magazines in the United Kingdom, with the date at which they were first published:—

Some of the above are completed, as in the case of the Penny Magazine, and others have ceased to appear.

MAGDALENE COLLEGE (Cambridge).—Henry Stafford, Duke of Buckingham (executed for high treason May 17, 1521), commenced building Buckingham House on the site of an ancient hostel in 1519, and this was completed and converted into St. Mary Magdalene College by Thomas, Lord Audley, lord high chancellor of England, in 1542. Samuel Pepys, secretary to the Admiralty in the reigns of Charles II. and James II., bequeathed his library to this institution. He died May 26, 1703. It is now called Magdalene College.

MAGDALEN HALL (Oxford).—This school, erected by William Waynefleete, to prepare students for admission to Magdalene College, was called St. Mary Magdalen Hall as early as 1487, and became an independent hall in 1602. The president and fellows of Magdalene College, by act of Parliament, in 1816 obtained Hertford College, to which they removed in 1822.

MAGDALEN HOSPITAL (London) was established Aug. 8, 1758, for the relief and reformation of penitent women.

MAGDALEN or ST. MARY MAGDALENE COLLEGE (Oxford) was founded by William Patten, commonly called Waynefleete, lord high chancellor of England, July 18, 1458. (See MAGDALEN HALL.) The great quadrangle was commenced in 1743, and the foundation of the tower was laid in 1492. The foundations of the new buildings were laid in 1733, and the chapel was restored in 1833. James II. recommended Anthony Farmer as president in 1687. The fellows elected Dr. John Hough April 15, and for this were expelled by the king Dec. 10. The constitution has been changed by rules published under the authority of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 81 (Aug. 7, 1854).

MAGDALENS, or MAGDALENES.—The first religious association formed for the reformation of fallen women was established in Germany before 1215. A similar order of nuns was established in France by Bertrand, a citizen of Marseilles, about 1272. The convent of the Magdalene of Naples was founded by Queen Sancha, of Aragon, in 1324, and that at Metz was established or refounded in 1452. The Paris convent dates from 1492, when Louis, Duke of Orleans, gave his hotel for the purpose of providing a nunnery for penitents. The Magdalen at Rome was established by Pope Leo X. in 1515. The Magdalen Hospital, London, was opened Aug. 8, 1758.

MAGDEBURG (Prussia), the capital of the province of Saxony, and one of the strongest fortresses in Europe, was in existence in the 8th century. The Elector Maurice, who besieged it in Nov., 1550, took it Nov. 3, 1551, and entered the city Nov. 7. It was taken by the Austrian general Tilly, the inhabitants mercilessly slaughtered, and the city, with the exception of about 140 houses, burned to the ground, May 10, 1631. The archbishopric was founded in 968 by the Emperor Otho I. (the Great), whose statue stands in the market-place. In 1648 the archbishopric was converted into a duchy, and given to Brandenburg in exchange for Pomerania. The cathedral, a fine Gothic edifice, which contains the tombs of Otho I. and the Empress, was erected between 1211—1363, and restored 1825—1834. The church of the Virgin was built in the 11th century, and the French Reformed church in the 17th century. A conspiracy, concocted in 1761 by Baron Trenck, while a prisoner in the fortress, to release 16,000 captive Austrians, and master the garrison, was frustrated. After having been invested 15 days by the French, under Marshal Ney, Magdeburg capitulated Nov. 8, 1806, and was annexed to the new kingdom of Westphalia, by the treaty of Tilsit, July 9, 1807. It was restored by the treaty of Paris, May 30, 1814.

MAGDEBURG CENTURIES.—The publication of the centuries of Magdeburg, written according to a plan drawn up by Matthias Flacius in 1552, to show the agreement of the Lutheran doctrine with that of the primitive Christians, commenced at Magdeburg in 1560 and terminated in 1574. The "Centuriators," as its editors were called, only carried the history down to 1300.

MAGELLAN STRAIT. —(See MAGALHAENS' STRAIT.)

MAGENTA.—This shade of crimson dye, named after the battle of Magenta, and prepared from gas tar, was brought out in France in 1860, and thence quickly introduced into England.

MAGENTA (Battle).—The French and the Sardinians, after a desperate struggle, defeated the Austrians near this town in Lombardy, June 4, 1859.

MAGHAZUL (Battle), was fought in a field near Toledo, between the Saracenic monarch Abderahaman, grandson of King Abdallah, and the rebel Caleb Aben Hafsun, in 912. The royal troops gained the victory, losing 3,000, whilst the rebels lost 7,000 men.

MAGI were entrusted with the care of religion by Dejoces, and formed one of the six tribes into which he divided the Medes, B.C. 700. They were constituted into a sacred caste or college when the Medes and Persians became united under Cyrus, B.C. 559. Two brothers of the magi revolted against Cambyses, and usurped the supreme authority during his absence in Egypt, B.C. 523; but were put to death with such a large number of their sect that the day was afterwards observed by the Persians as the "Massacre of the Magi," B.C. 522. The primitive religion, which consisted in the worship of Ormuzd, the symbol of light and goodness, having become much debased, was reformed by Zoroaster, about B.C. 555. (See GUEBRES.)

MAGIC, called the Black Art, was originally taught by the magi, who diffused a knowledge of their mysteries through Greece and Arabia, on their expulsion from Persia, about B.C. 500. Smedley (Occult Sciences, p. 190) states, that "according to the Talmud and the Cabbala, which profess to agree with the Bible, magic is divided into three classes,—the first, including all evil enchantments and magical cures, the citation of evil spirits, and the calling forth the dead through the aid of demons,—to be punished, like idolatry, with death; the second, including those magical practices which are carried on by the aid of evil spirits, by which man is often led astray and sunk into eternal darkness,—to be punished with scourging; and the third, including astrology and all intercourse with the lower spirits, excepted from punishment, but pronounced wrong, as leading from reliance upon God." The Council of Laodicea, in 366, condemned all magicians and enchanters, and the ancient laws dealt with them very severely. Trials on charges of having employed magical arts were common in the Middle Ages. (See ALCHEMY, WITCHCRAFT, &c.)

MAGICIANS.—(See JUGGLERS and MAGIC.)

MAGIC LANTERN.—Roger Bacon is said to have invented this instrument about 1260; but it was not generally known till a much later date. Cellini, who died Feb. 13, 1570, describes optical experiments which apparently depended for their effects on an apparatus of this kind. Kircher, who was born in 1602 and died in 1680, is frequently styled the inventor of the magic lantern. The invention of the Argand lamp in 1787, and of the phantasmagoria in 1802, produced considerable improvements in the construction and operation of the instrument.

MAGIC MIRROR.—(See CRYSTAL GLASS or STONE.)

MAGIC SQUARE.—This mathematical arrangement of a set of numbers was known at an early period to the Hindoos, Egyptians, and Chinese. Emanuel Moschopulus, who wrote upon them in Greek in the middle of the 15th century, was the first author who refers to the magic square.

MAGISTRATES. — (See JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, and STIPENDIARY MAGISTRATES.)

MAGNA CHARTA, or THE GREAT CHARTER, embodying some of the "good old laws of Edward the Confessor," with numerous provisions, intended to secure the liberty of the subject, was extorted by the barons from King John. Soon after the king's return from France, Stephen Langton and several barons determined to obtain redress of grievances, met at Edmundsbury Nov. 20. They presented their demands to the king Jan. 6, 1215, and were censured by the Pope May 19. They entered London May 24, and agreed to meet the king at Runnymede, a field between Staines and Windsor, where the charter was sealed, June 15, 1215. John violated its stipulations in Aug., 1215, appealed to the Pope Sep. 13, 1215, who annulled the agreement, excommunicated the barons, and suspended Stephen Langton, Archbishop of Canterbury, in Dec., 1215. It was confirmed by the guardians of the youthful King Henry III. at Bristol, Nov. 12, 1216, and subsequently by other kings so frequently, that Sir Edward Coke counted 32 confirmations, additions, or renewals about 1600. From a copy preserved in Lincoln Cathedral, the Board of Commissioners on the Public Records caused a facsimile to be engraved and published, which is to be found, with a translation, in the first volume of "Statutes of the Realm." (See GRAND, or GREAT PRIVILEGE.)

MAGNA GRÆCIA, or MAJOR GRÆCIA (Italy). — This name was applied by Greek writers to their colonies formed on the southern shores of Italy, Cumæ having by general consent the precedence in point of antiquity, although the date of its foundation, B.C. 1050, is not to be relied upon. There is much uncertainty as to the precise dates of the various settlements; but the greater number of them were probably made between B.C. 735 and B.C. 685. Sybaris, B.C. 720, and Crotona, B.C. 710, the two most powerful cities, were founded by the Achæans. Tarentum, a Spartan colony, was established about B.C. 708; Metapontum by the Achæans, B.C. 700—680; and Locri by the Locrians, about B.C. 700. The date of the league between Crotona, Sybaris, and Metapontum, to expel the Ionians from Siris, cannot be fixed with any degree of accuracy. A great change in the political condition of these cities was brought about by the teaching of Pythagoras, who arrived at Crotona about B.C. 530. An army of 100,000 Crotonists took the field against 300,000 Sybarites, and, after defeating them on the banks of the Traeis, utterly destroyed the city of Sybaris, B.C. 510. Thuril, founded B.C. 443, and Heraclea, B.C. 432, were the two latest of these settlements. The Italian Greeks having allied themselves against Dionysius of Syracuse, were defeated by him in an important engagement on the river Helleporus, or Helorus, near Caulonia, B.C. 389, and at the same time they were attacked in the north by the Lucanians, with whom they waged war till B.C. 282, when they applied to the Romans for aid. The celebrated expedition of Pyrrhus, King of Epirus, whose assistance had been invoked by the Greeks, began B.C. 280. He left them entirely at the mercy of the Romans on his departure, B.C. 274. Nearly all these cities declared for Hannibal after the victory of that general over the Romans at Cannæ, Aug. 2, B.C. 216; but they suffered the penalty of this partisanship when fortune turned in favour of the Romans; the towns were pillaged and the people put to the sword or sold into slavery,—a subjugation from which they never recovered. Cicero describes them in his time, B.C. 106—43, as sunk into utter ruin.

MAGNANO (Battle).—Marshal Kray, at the head of an Austrian army, defeated the French, commanded by Gen. Schérer, at this place, near Verona, April 5, 1799.

MAGNESIA (Battle).—The two Scipios gained a complete victory over Antiochus the Great, King of Syria, near Magnesia, usually called Magnesia ad Sipylum, in Lydia, and drove him out of Western Asia, B.C. 190. (See MANISSA.)

MAGNESIA AD MÆANDRUM (Greece).—This Æolian city, said to have been founded by Magnesians from Thessaly, was destroyed by the Cimmerians B.C. 726, and rebuilt by the Milesians B.C. 725. It was assigned to Themistocles by Artaxerxes, to supply him with bread, when he was banished from Athens, B.C. 471; and the inhabitants raised a statue to his honour in the Agora. The Romans incorporated it with the kingdom of Pergamus B.C. 188. A town of Lydia, of the same name, called Magnesia ad Sipylum to distinguish it from the above, is known under the modern name of Manissa (q. v.).

MAGNESIUM. — This metal was first obtained by Sir Humphry Davy, in 1808, and examined by Bussy in 1830. Sonstadt patented various processes for producing it in 1862–3.

MAGNETISM.—This word is supposed to be derived from Magnes, the name of a Phrygian shepherd, who, according to the legend, was detained on Mount Ida by the nails in his boots, or by his metal crook. Other authorities state that it is derived from the Lydian province of Magnesia, whence the Greeks obtained the loadstone about B.C. 1000.

A.D.
1576. Robert Norman discovers the dip of the magnetic needle.
1590. Julius Cæsar, a surgeon of Rimini, observes the conversion of iron into a magnet by position.
1600. Gilbert publishes his treatise "De Magnete."
1650 (about). Bond discovers the true progress of the deviation of the compass.
1688. Halley publishes his theory of terrestrial magnetism.
1699. Halley constructs the first magnetic chart.
1721. Graham discovers the diurnal variation.
1746. Dr. Gowan Knight constructs artificial magnets.
1750. Michell publishes his treatise on artificial magnets.
1756. Canton makes 4,000 observations on the variation of the needle, and ascertains that it is greater in summer than in winter.
1780. Coulomb propounds the double fluid theory.
1786. Cassini discovers the annual periodical variation of the magnetic needle. Coulomb constructs his balance of torsion.
1813. Morichini magnetizes a needle by exposing it to the violet rays of the spectrum.
1817. Professor Hansteen, of Christiana, publishes his work on the Magnetism of the Earth.
1821. Mr. J. H. Abraham, of Sheffield, receives the large gold medal of the Society of Arts for his magnetic guard, to protect persons engaged in needle-pointing, &c.
1825. Christie proves that heat diminishes magnetic force.
1830. Haldat produces magnetism by friction.
1831. Sir W. Snow Harris improves the mariner's compass, and invents the hydrostatic magnetometer. Faraday produces electricity by means of a magnet.
1846. Professor Faraday propounds the laws of diamagnetism.
1848. Faraday discovers magneto-crystalline force.

A.D.
1851. Gen. Sabine demonstrates that the terrestrial magnetic force has periods.
1856. Professor Tyndall proves the existence of diamagnetic polarity.

(See ANIMAL MAGNETISM, LOADSTONE, and MARINER'S COMPASS.)

MAGNI.—(See CHINA.)

MAGNOLIA, of several varieties, has been introduced into England at different periods. The Magnolia glauca, or the deciduous swamp magnolia, was brought from North America in 1688; the Magnolia grandiflora, great-flowered magnolia, or laurel bay, was introduced from the same country in 1734; and the Magnolia Yulan, or conspicua, from China in 1790. The Yulan magnolia has been cultivated in China since 627.

MAGOG.—(See GOG AND MAGOG.)

MAGYARS, called Ugri by the Russians, being members of the Ugrian race, whence, by corruption, the name Hungary (q. v.), migrated from the southern part of the Uralian mountains, and settled on the plains of the Lower Danube, under Arpad, their leader, in 889. They invaded Bavaria in 900, inspiring such terror by the prowess of their arms and the rapidity of their movements, that walled towns in Europe are said to have had their origin at that period. Defeated in battle by the Saxon Prince Henry I. (the Fowler), in 934, and again by Otho I. (the Great), in 955, their power was completely broken. Andrew III., who came to the throne in 1290, was the last king of the Arpad family, which became extinct in the male line in 1301.

MAHABULESHWA (Hindostan).—Sir John Malcolm established this station in 1828, and a sanatarium has since been erected.

MAHARAJPORE (Battle).—Sir Hugh (afterwards Lord) Gough defeated a Mahratta army of 18,000 men, supported by 100 guns, at this town, in Gualior, Dec. 29, 1843. Sir Hugh had about 14,000 troops and 40 guns. The Mahrattas lost 3,400 men.

MAHE (Hindostan). — This place, on the Malabar coast, was taken by Munro, Feb. 10, 1711, and fell into the hands of the French in 1722. It was captured by the English in 1760; restored by the treaty of Paris, Feb. 10, 1763; again captured in 1793; and restored to France in 1815.

MAHOGANY, so called from Mahogani, the American name of the tree, was introduced into England in 1595. Sir Walter Raleigh's carpenter is said to have discovered its value in making articles of furniture; but it was brought into notice by Woolaston, a cabinet-maker of Long Acre, who, in 1720, was employed by Dr. Gibbons to make first a candle-box, and afterwards a bureau, with some planks which he had received from the West Indies. The Duchess of Buckingham having seen the latter article, begged some of the wood from the doctor, and had one made, which soon brought it into general use.

MAHRATTAS, or MAHARATTAS. — The origin of this people of Hindostan is unknown, but the empire bearing their name was founded in the latter half of the 17th century, by Sevajee, who received from the King of Bejapore a jaghire in the Carnatic. He supplanted his father in the jaghire of Poonah in 1647, and was succeeded by his son Sambajee in 1680. From 1689 till 1818 the nominal sovereign of the period was kept a close prisoner, the Peishwa wielding the supreme authority. When the succession of Ragoba was disputed in 1773, he entered into a treaty with the English Government, by which he was to give them possession of Salsette and Bassein, and they in return were to replace him in office; but as the English obtained the coveted towns by other means, the treaty was not carried out. Bajeron, the Peishwa, having tried to form a confederacy against the English, was compelled to cede a territory worth £340,000 a year in 1815. Having attacked the houses of the British residency, Nov., 1817, he was defeated in an engagement, and fled. He wandered as a fugitive till he surrendered to Sir John Malcolm in June, 1818. At this time 50,000 square miles of Poonah territory came into British possession, a small principality being assigned to the rajah of Satara, representative of the founder of the rule. Failing legitimate heirs, this principality fell to the English in 1848. A battle between the Mahrattas and the British, under Sir Hugh Gough, was fought at Maharajpore, in which the former were defeated, with the loss of 56 pieces of artillery, Dec. 29, 1843.

MAIDA (Battle).—An English force of about 4,800 men, under the command of Sir John Stuart, having effected a landing in Calabria, July 1, 1806, attacked and defeated the French, entrenched in a strong position near the village of Maida, 7,000 strong, commanded by Gen. Reynier, July 4, 1806.

MAIDEN, HALIFAX GIBBET, or WIDOW, an instrument for putting criminals to death, somewhat similar to the modern guillotine, was in use in Halifax and other parts of England as early as the 13th century, and was brought into Scotland during the 16th century; the commonly received account, that it was introduced into that kingdom by the Regent James, Earl of Morton, being incorrect. It was last used in England in 1650, and the Earl of Argyle, the last in Scotland who suffered by it, June 30, 1685, declared that it was "the sweetest maiden he had ever kissed." An instrument of this kind is said to have been in use in various Italian towns about the same period.

MAID OF ORLEANS.—(See ORLEANS.)

MAIDS OF THE CROSS.—(See CROSS, MAIDS OF THE.)

MAIDS OF HONOUR.—Four ladies bearing this title are mentioned as having formed part of the queen's establishment in the wardrobe account of Edward I. (1272—1307). The number is now limited to eight, each of whom enjoys a salary of £400 per annum. Maids of honour were suppressed in France by Madame Montespan in 1673. (See LORDS AND LADIES OF THE BEDCHAMBER.)

MAIDSTONE (Kent), anciently called Caer Meguaid, or Medwig, the city of the Medway, and by the Saxons Medwegestan and Meddestane, was a possession of the Archbishops of Canterbury, and is so described in Domesday Book, in 1086–7. A hospice for pilgrims travelling to Canterbury was founded in 1260. It received charters from Edward VI., Elizabeth, James I., Charles II., and George II., and has returned two members to Parliament since the time of its first charter. During the Great Rebellion the Kentish men, who had risen for the king, were attacked and defeated at Maidstone by Fairfax, June 1, 1648. The Gothic palace of the Archbishops of Canterbury was built in 1348; its parish church, one of the largest in England, was erected in the 14th century, and has been recently restored. A college, founded by Archbishop Courtenay in the reign of Richard II. (1377—1399), was suppressed by Edward VI., the building now accommodating All Saints' College, founded in 1846. The county gaol was erected at a cost of £200,000 in 1818.

MAIL COACHES.—John Palmer, manager of the Bath and Bristol theatres, submitted to Mr. Pitt, then prime minister, the first sketch of his plan for the conveyance of letters in 1782, and a second, further developed, in 1783. In July of the same year the post-office authorities furnished Government with three volumes of objections to the proposed innovation. In spite, however, of this opposition, the first mail coach started from London for Bristol Aug. 8, 1784, performing the journey the same day. The post-office declared its opinion that the plan was prejudicial to revenue and commerce in 1786. Mr. Palmer's original agreement was for 2½ per cent. on the surplus of the net revenue over £240,000, and a salary of £1,500 a year, as comptroller-general of the post-office, but Parliament refused to ratify the agreement, and he only obtained a grant of £50,000.

MAILLOTINS.—The name given to the citizens of Paris who revolted on account of the tax of the twelfth denier upon provisions in 1382. They rushed to the Hôtel de Ville, and finding no weapons but leaden mallets,—hence their name,—fell upon the collectors of the tax with these, and killed several. The example set by Paris was imitated by many provincial towns. The dukes of Anjou, Berri, and Burgundy, who acted as guardians for their nephew Charles VI., entered into a treaty with the revolted Parisians. The French army, after the battle of Rosebec, or Rosbach, Nov. 17, 1382, marched upon Paris, and the citizens were punished with fines and confiscation in 1383.

MAILS.—An act for the conveyance of mails by railway (2 Vict. c. 98) was passed Aug. 14, 1838.

MAIMING, once punished by inflicting a similar injury on the offender, as in the Mosaic economy, "an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth," was afterwards met by fine and imprisonment. By 22 & 23 Charles II. c. 1 (March 6, 1671), the Coventry Act (q. v.), since repealed, malicious wounding and maiming was made a capital offence. It was made a capital felony, if the intention to commit murder is proved, or otherwise, punishable with transportation for life, by 1 Vict. c. 85 (July 17, 1837). By 9 & 10 Vict. c. 25 (1846), maiming by fire, gunpowder, or explosive and destructive substances, was declared to be felony.

MAIN DRAINAGE.—(See DRAINAGE.)

MAINE (N. America) was discovered by one of the Cabots in 1497. The French visited it soon after, and called the northern part of the country Maine, and the eastern portion Acadie or Acadia. The first settlement was made at Phippsburg in 1607, and several others were formed by the English about 1635. Sir Ferdinand Gorges received a proprietary charter in 1639. Maine, united to Massachusetts as the county of Yorkshire in 1652, was purchased from the Gorges family by Massachusetts in 1676. It was the theatre of the war between France and England from 1702 to 1713, at the close of which Acadia was ceded to England by the treaty of Utrecht, April 11, 1713. In 1820 Maine became an independent state. After the war, in 1814, the settlement of the boundary between Maine and the British province of New Brunswick was, by the fourth article of the treaty of Ghent, Dec. 24, 1814, referred to two commissioners, one to be appointed by the King of England, and the other by the President of the United States. In the event of a disagreement between these commissioners, the matter was to be referred to some friendly sovereign or state, whose decision was to be final and conclusive. Disputes arose, and the King of Holland was named arbitrator. He decided in favour of Great Britain, but the United States Government refused to be bound by the award. Commissioners were sent out in 1839, to examine the boundary-line claimed by England. In 1841 another commission went to examine the line advocated by America, and they both reported in favour of the English claim. The controversy was at last settled by the Ashburton treaty (q. v.), concluded at Washington Aug. 9, 1842, by which the Americans obtained seven-twelfths of the disputed territory. Maine was separated from Massachusetts in 1820.

MAINE, or LE MAINE (France), under the Romans formed part of the Lyonnais, and, made a county in the 10th century, was in 1110 united to Anjou, with which it passed into the possession of England in 1156. Philip II. (Augustus) took it in 1204, but the English regained possession. Henry III. of England renounced all claim to it by the treaty of Abbeville, May 20, 1259, and Edward III. did the same by the treaty of Bretigny, May 8, 1360. Retaken by Henry V. (1413—22), it was surrendered by treaty in 1448, and formed a separate duchy till 1481, when Louis XI. re-united it to France. Henry II. of France gave it to his third son, afterwards Henry III., who, on becoming king, bestowed it upon the Duke of Alençon, one of Queen Elizabeth's suitors, and at his death without heirs, June 10, 1584, it reverted to France.

MAINE LIQUOR LAW.—This law, prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, except for certain stated purposes, and ordering the arrest and imprisonment of drunkards, was established in Maine, June 2, 1851.

MAIN PLOT, a conspiracy formed in 1603, to place Arabella Stuart on the throne, was called the Main to distinguish it from the Bye, the Surprise, or the Surprising Plot (q. v.). Arabella Stuart was a cousin of James I., being the daughter of the Duke of Lennox, brother to Lord Darnley, the king's father. Sir Walter Raleigh and Lord Cobham are said to have been the prime movers in this plot. They were seized in July. Sir Walter Raleigh was indicted on a charge of high treason, Aug. 21, and was tried and condemned at Winchester, Nov. 17, and Lord Cobham Nov. 25. They were both reprieved, the latter on the scaffold, Dec. 9; but Raleigh was kept in the Tower until 1616, and was after another imprisonment executed Oct. 29, 1618.

MAINTENANCE.—The Cap of Maintenance, Dignity, or Estate, was used by English sovereigns at a very early period, and mention is made of one at the coronation of Richard I., Sep. 3, 1189. The Pope frequently sent a cap of estate as a present to a temporal prince, and Edward IV. received one from Sixtus IV. April 23, 1482.

MAINZ.—(See MAYENCE.)

MAIPU, or MAYPU (Battle). — The republican army, led by San Martin, defeated the Royalists in a plain bordering on the river Maipu, in Chili, April 5, 1818.

MAITLAND CLUB (Glasgow), named after Sir Richard Maitland, who died March 20, 1586, was instituted March 31, 1828. The object of the association is the publication of works illustrative of the history, antiquities, and literature of Scotland.

MAJESTY.—The title of majesty, at first applied amongst the Romans to the dictators, the consuls, and the senate, as the representatives of the power of the people, was appropriated by the Emperor Tiberius (14—37). It was also adopted by the German emperors, and was introduced into France by Louis XI., who was the first to assume it permanently and officially. Francis I. saluted Henry VIII. with this title at their interview in 1520, and he was the first English monarch to whom it was applied. The French Assembly, in 1791, abolished the title.

MAJOLICA, soft enamelled pottery made by the Moors, was introduced into Italy from Majorca, whence the name, in the 12th century. The classical designs of Raffaelle, and other distinguished artists, were adopted from 1520 to 1560, and it received the name of Raffaelle ware. The manufacture gradually declined in the 16th century.

MAJORCA, or MALLORCA (Mediterranean Sea).—This island is the largest of the Balearic (q. v.) group, and but little is known of its early history. After the final expulsion of the Moors, in 1268, James I., King of Aragon, conferred the islands upon his third son, and they formed a separate kingdom till 1349. In 1521 the peasants revolted against the nobility, and committed great excesses. Majorca declared for Charles in the war of the Spanish succession. The island was captured in June, 1715, and it remained faithful to Spain during the occupation of the peninsula by the French. (See MINORCA.)

MAJOR EXCOMMUNICATION.—(See ANATHEMA and EXCOMMUNICATION.)

MAKIAN (Indian Archipelago).—This island, one of the Moluccas, was destroyed by the eruption of a volcano, and the inhabitants, amounting to 4,000, were nearly all killed, June 16, 1862.

MALABAR (Hindostan).—This tract of country, extending from Cape Comorin to the river Chandragiri, was conquered by a king from above the Ghaut mountains, at a very early period. Vasco de Gama landed May 20, 1498, and the Portuguese soon after formed settlements. In 1761 Hyder Ali subdued the country, and he appointed a deputy in 1782. A serious rebellion was provoked by an attempt made by Tippoo Saib to introduce religious changes in 1788. Christianity was introduced at Malabar at a very early period. (See NESTORIANS.)

MALACCA (Malay Peninsula), the capital of a district of the same name, was founded by a Malay king in 1250. The Portuguese visited the town in 1507, Albuquerque captured it in 1511, and it was made a Portuguese settlement. The Dutch, who failed in an attack in 1605, reduced the place in 1640, and held it till Aug. 17, 1795, when it was taken by the English. Having been restored at the peace of Amiens, March 25, 1807, it was soon recaptured, and again given to the Dutch in 1814. The town and a district of 1,000 square miles were exchanged by the King of the Netherlands for the British possession of Bencoolen, in the island of Sumatra, by a treaty concluded March 17, 1824. The exchange was fixed to take place March 1, 1825. Malacca, with Singapore and Prince of Wales Island, have been included in the Bengal Presidency since 1851.

MALACHI, the last of the prophetical books of the Old Testament, written by Malachi, a contemporary of Nehemiah, is by the best authorities referred to B.C. 410. It is noticed in Mark i. 2, ix. 11, 12, Luke i. 17, and Rom. ix. 13.

MALACHITE, a green mineral found in large quantities in the copper mines of Siberia and Australia. A solid mass weighing above 20 tons was found in the Ural mountains in 1835.

MALAGA (Sea-Fight). — An allied English and Dutch fleet, consisting of 41 English and 12 Dutch ships of the line and 6 frigates, engaged the French fleet, of 50 ships of the line and 8 frigates, off Malaga, Sunday, Aug. 13, 1704. The battle lasted till night. It was not renewed Aug. 14, and the French fleet sailed away Aug. 15. No ships were captured; but the English and Dutch lost nearly 3,000, and the French 4,000 in killed and wounded. Sir George Rooke commanded the allied fleets.

MALAGA (Spain), the ancient Malaca, is supposed to have been founded by the Phœnicians, and passed under the sway of the Carthaginians, the Romans, the Goths, and the Moors, in rapid succession. Ferdinand and Isabella wrested it from the Moors, after a siege of three months' duration, Aug. 18, 1487. Sebastian, at the head of a French army, captured Malaga, with 120 pieces of cannon and a quantity of stores, Feb. 5, 1810. The castle, built by the Moors in 1279, shows traces of the effects produced by the Spanish artillery in the siege of 1487. The cathedral, commenced in 1526, was not completed until 1782; and the custom-house, begun in 1791, was finished in 1829. The breakwater was commenced in 1588. The national guard revolted, and proclaimed the Spanish constitution of 1812 in this town, July 25, 1836.

MALAKHOFF (Crimea).—During the expedition to the Crimea by the allied English, French, and Turkish forces, in the autumn of 1854, this small white stone tower, forming one of the defences of Sebastopol, was much strengthened by the Russians, who constructed a large semicircular mound, with 30 guns at its base. As the siege progressed, the defences of the Malakhoff were still farther extended, and it became, in fact, the key of the whole position. It was assaulted June 18, 1855, by the French, who, after a gallant struggle, were compelled to retire. The Russians did everything in their power to render the Malakhoff impregnable, and the result of their labours has been described as "a formidable palisade or abattis of sharpened stakes in front; then an earthen parapet of enormous height and thickness; then a deep and wide ditch; then three tiers of batteries rising one above another, armed with more than 60 guns of large calibre; then sheltered spots at which riflemen might be posted; and, lastly, a place d'armes large enough to contain a powerful defensive or offensive body of infantry." The French collected 25,000 men, exclusive of 5,000 Sardinians and the reserves, for the second assault on the Malakhoff, and it was delivered Sep. 8, 1855, with success. For six hours the Russians made fruitless attempts to expel the French.

MALAY, EASTERN or INDIAN ARCHIPELAGO (Pacific), also called Malasia, comprises the Moluccas, or Spice Islands (q. v.), the Philippines (q. v.), the Sunda Islands (q. v.), &c.

MALDIVE, or MALEDIVA ISLANDS (Indian Ocean). — This group, according to some authorities, consisting of 40,000 or 50,000, and, according to others, of 1,900 or 2,000 islands, is described by two Mohammedan travellers of the 9th century. Soarez re-discovered them in 1506, and a Portuguese mariner, wrecked upon them in 1512, found them occupied by Mohammedans. (See MALI.)

MALDON (Essex).—A writer in Smith's "Dict. of Greek and Roman Geography" (i. p. 645), questions the generally received opinion, that Colonia and Camelodunum (q. v.) are identical, and believes Colchester to represent the former, and Maldon the latter place. It is first mentioned in the reign of Edward the Elder, who, in 920, built and fortified the town. The Danes, who attacked it in 921, were repulsed, but they returned and captured it in 993. Queen Mary granted it a charter June 18, 1553. It has sent members to Parliament since 1329. The free grammar-school was founded in 1608.

MALEGNANO.—(See MARIGNANO and PAVIA, Battles.)

MALEKITES.—This branch of the Sonnites was founded by Malek Ibn Ans, who died at Medina about 802.

MALET'S CONSPIRACY. — Gen. Malet, a republican, spread a report at Paris, Oct. 23, 1812, of the death, during the Russian campaign, of Napoleon I., and, aided by a few accomplices, obtained the control of the city. They were arrested and condemned to death by a military commission, Oct. 29.

MALICIOUS INFORMATIONS.—(See INFORMERS.)

MALICIOUS WOUNDING AND MAIMING. —(See COVENTRY ACT.)

MALIGNANTS.—(See ENGAGERS.)

MALI, or MALDIVA ATOLL (Maldive Islands), the largest of the group, and the residence of the native prince, called "The Sultan of the Thirteen Atolls and Twelve Thousand," was first visited by the Portuguese in the 16th century.

MALINES (Treaty), concluded against France April 5, 1513, between Leo X., the Emperor Maximilian I., Henry VIII., and Ferdinand V. Henry VIII. undertook to invade Normandy, Picardy, and Guienne; Ferdinand V. Bearn and Languedoc; Leo X. Provence and Dauphiny; and Maximilian I. the interior of France.

MALINES, MECHLIN, or MECHELEN (Belgium). — This city, founded in the 5th century, destroyed by the Northmen in 884, was rebuilt in 887, and fortified in 930. The fine Gothic church of St. Rombaud was commenced in 1220. In 1333 Adolphus de la Marck sold Malines to the counts of Flanders, and it subsequently passed into the power of the dukes of Burgundy. The explosion of a powder-magazine occasioned great loss of life and property in 1546. Malines has been several times sacked,—by the Spaniards in 1572, by the Prince of Orange in 1578, and by the English in 1583. Marlborough took it in 1706, and it was taken by the French in 1746, 1792, and 1794, and in 1804 they destroyed the fortifications. The Academy of Painting was founded in 1771. Malines was erected into an archbishopric in 1561. Synods were held here in 1570 and 1607.

MALISSET.—(See PACTE DE FAMINE.)

MALLICOLO, or MANICOLA (New Hebrides).—This island, one of the largest in the group, was discovered by Quiros in 1606. Capt. Cook landed upon it in July, 1774.

MALMAISON (France).—A castle, near Versailles, was the retreat of the Empress Josephine after her divorce from Napoleon I., and the scene of her death, May 29, 1814. A decree was passed in 1853 for the erection of a monument to her memory.

MALMESBURY (Wiltshire). — The monastery, founded in 670, was destroyed by the Danes in the 9th century. It was restored, destroyed, again restored, and was made a mitred abbey by Edward III. (1327—77). The town was taken by the Parliamentary army in 1643.

MALMÖ (Sweden).—An important town in 1259, was fortified in 1434. A treaty was concluded here between Sweden and Denmark in 1524. On the death of Frederick I. of Denmark, April 10, 1533, Malmö declared in favour of Christian II., who had been kept in captivity from 1523. An armistice between the Danes and the army of Sleswig-Holstein was signed at Malmö, Aug. 26, 1848.

MALO-JAROSLAWITZ (Battle).—Napoleon I. with a portion of the French army, having reached this town, Oct. 23, 1812, on the retreat from Moscow, was assailed by the Russians under Doctoroff, Oct. 24, when a series of furious encounters ensued. The town, fired in several places, was taken and retaken seven different times, and was almost entirely destroyed. Though the French succeeded in expelling the Russians, their losses were very severe, and at a council of war held the night of the battle, Napoleon I. determined to fall back by the Smolensko road.

MALO, ST. (France.)—This seaport town, supposed to have been founded about the 10th century, was attacked by John of Gaunt in 1378. The privateers of St. Malo did so much mischief to English commerce, that in 1693, and again in 1695, the English bombarded the town, but without success. They destroyed a number of privateers and other ships in the harbour of St. Malo, June 8, 1758. Another descent made upon the coast of France at St. Malo, Sep. 16, 1758, terminated in a severe loss, 600 having been killed and wounded and 400 taken prisoners. The railway to Rennes was opened in 1864.

MALPLAQUET (Battle).—The Duke of Marlborough and Prince Eugène, at the head of an allied English and German army, defeated the French under Marshal Villars in this plain, near the river Sart, Sep. 11, 1709. The allies lost 18,000, and the French 15,000, in killed and wounded.

MALSERHEYDE, or MALSHERAID (Battle).—The Swiss defeated the army sent against them by Maximilian I. at this place in 1499.

MALT.—A duty on malt was first imposed during the reign of Charles I., and has formed a regular branch of the revenue since 1695. It was made perpetual by 3 Geo. IV. c. 18 (April 3, 1822), and the law was amended by 11 Geo. IV. c. 17 (May 29, 1830). New regulations were imposed by 1 Vict. c. 49 (July 12, 1837). Malt used in feeding animals was allowed to be made duty free by 27 Vict. c. 9 (April 28, 1864), and the excise duty is changed according to the weight of grain used by 28 & 29 Vict. c. 66 (June 29, 1865), which took effect Sep. 7, 1865. The question of the repeal of the malt-tax has frequently been debated in the House of Commons. The tax was introduced into Scotland in 1713, and into Ireland in 1783. The imposition of a new malt-tax in Scotland caused serious riots at Edinburgh and Glasgow in 1724.

MALTA (Knights).—This island was conferred by the Emperor Charles V. upon the Hospitallers (q. v.) for the heroism which they displayed against the Saracens during the siege of Rhodes. They took possession Oct. 26, 1530; and are frequently called the Knights of Malta.

MALTA (Mediterranean Sea).—This island, the ancient Melita, was first colonized by the Phœnicians, and afterwards by the Carthaginians. The Romans laid it waste B.C. 257. The apostle Paul was wrecked here on his voyage from Palestine to Rome, in 59 (Acts xxviii. 1). It fell under the power of the Vandals, and was wrested from them by Belisarius in 533. They retained possession till it was conquered in 870 by the Arabs, who were expelled by the Normans, under Count Roger, in 1090, and they held the island till 1189, when it passed under the sway of the German emperors. It was in the possession of France from 1258 till 1282, when it passed to the house of Aragon. The Emperor Charles V., who inherited it as King of Aragon, made a grant of it to the Hospitallers, or Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, in 1530. Soliman I. assailed Malta with a fleet of 159 vessels, carrying 30,000 troops, May 18, 1565. The attack on the castle of St. Elmo commenced May 24, and the besieged were reduced to the last extremity when relieved by a Sicilian fleet, and the Turks withdrew Sep. 8. A new city, called La Valetta, after the grand master, who had defended the place so heroically against the Turks, was commenced in 1566, and completed Aug. 18, 1571. The Turks failed in another attack upon the island in 1601. The French expedition to Egypt arrived off the island June 9, 1798, and the grand master, Ferdinand Hompesch, surrendered without striking a blow, June 11. Napoleon pursued his course to Egypt June 19. The inhabitants revolted in 1798, and waged war against the French, in which they were assisted by an English squadron, until Sep. 5, 1800, when the French commander surrendered the whole island to the English. By the 10th article of the treaty of Amiens (March 25, 1802), England engaged to restore Malta to the Hospitallers, and its independence was to be placed under the guarantee and protection of Great Britain, France, Austria, Spain, Prussia, and Russia. In consequence of the aggressions of Napoleon I. in Italy, Germany, and Holland, and his preparations to carry on war, the English Government refused to give up the island, and hostilities were renewed. Malta was formally ceded to England by the treaty of Paris, May 30, 1814.

MALVERN, or GREAT MALVERN (Worcestershire).—Edward the Confessor (1043—66) established a hermitage at this place, which was afterwards erected into a priory, and on the destruction of the monasteries, Latimer requested that it might be spared for the maintenance of preaching and hospitality. Henry VII. (1485—1509) frequently resided at Malvern; but it owes its modern celebrity to the mineral waters which abound in its vicinity. Dr. Wall wrote a treatise on their efficacy in 1756.

MALVERN HILL.—(See CHICKAHOMINY, Battles.)

MALWAH (Hindostan).—This extensive province was invaded by the Mahrattas in 1707, and was wrested by them from the Mongol empire about 1732.

MAMELON (Crimea).—This hill, about one-third of a mile in advance of the Malakhoff, and a quarter of a mile from the allied French and English batteries, formed one of the chief defences of Sebastopol during the siege. It was about a mile in circumference at the base, and the sides, consisting of quarries, were steep and rugged. This was fortified by the Russians in Feb., 1855. The French captured the Mamelon June 8, 1855.

MAMELUKES, MAMLOUKS, or MEMLOOKS.—Malek Salech, the Ayoubite sultan of Egypt in 1230, formed some Turkish and Circassian slaves into a body-guard, under this name, the word mameluke signifying, in Arabic, slave. They revolted, and placed one of their own body on the throne, in 1254. There were two dynasties of the Mameluke sovereigns; namely, the Baharites, founded by Bayers in 1244; and the Borgites, who supplanted the Baharites in 1381. Tumanbeg, the last sultan of the Mamelukes, was put to death at Cairo, by order of Selim I., April 23, 1517. The Mamelukes were massacred at Cairo by Mehemet Ali, March 1, 1811.

MAMERS (France), once a fortified town, was taken by the Normans in the 11th century. The English seized it in 1359 and in 1417, when they destroyed the fortifications.

MAMERTINES.—Some Campanian mercenaries, who took possession of Messina about B.C. 284, assumed the name of Mamertini, or "children of Mars," from Mamers, an Oscan name of that deity. Hence Messina q. v. was sometimes called Mamertina. Hieron II. of Syracuse besieged them in Messina for five years (B.C. 270—65).

MAMRE.—(See HEBRON.)

MAN.—(See ISLE OF MAN, and SODOR AND MAN.)

MANAAR (Manaar Passage).—This island, on the coast of Ceylon, was occupied by the Portuguese in 1560. They were expelled by the Dutch in 1658, and it passed under the rule of the English in 1796.

MANASSAS, BULL or BALL'S RUN (Battles).—The Confederates gained a victory over the Federalists, or the Union party, after nine hours' severe fighting, at Bull's Run, near Manassas Junction, in Tennessee, N. America, July 21, 1861. The Federalists, who were in much greater strength than their opponents, were seized with a sudden panic, and, abandoning arms, &c., fled in wild confusion from the field of battle. (See "STONEWALL" BRIGADE.)

——The second, frequently called the battle of Groveton, the name of a village where some of the most desperate struggles occurred, was fought Aug. 30, 1863. Preliminary encounters had taken place Aug. 28 and 29, and on the last-mentioned day a very bold attempt was made by the Federals to capture the provision and ammunition trains, but the real contest came off Aug. 30. The Confederates, under Jackson, Longstreet, and Lee, completely defeated the Federals commanded by Pope, and they fled in confusion to Centreville. In the encounter of the three days the Federals lost 20,000 in killed, wounded, and prisoners, 30 cannon, and 40,000 small arms. A monument in memory of those who fell in the two battles was erected on the field June 10, 1865.

MANCHESTER (Bishopric).—An order in council, dated Dec. 12, 1838, passed for the erection of this diocese, did not take effect, and was subsequently repealed by 10 & 11 Vict. c. 108 (July 23, 1847), which established the bishopric upon another footing. Another order in council was issued Aug. 10, 1847, for carrying this act into effect, and the new see was subjected to the metropolitan jurisdiction of the Archbishop of York. James Prince Lee, nominated the first bishop Oct. 23, 1847, was consecrated Jan. 23, 1848.

MANCHESTER (Lancashire).—The Celts, who migrated from Gaul, established a fort here, called Mancenion, or, "the place of tents," about B.C. 38; and it fell into the hands of the Romans in 78, who gave the name of Mancunium to this station. The town was afterwards called Manigceastre, or Mancestre.

MANCHESTER (N. America), in New Hampshire, merely a village in 1840, received a charter in 1846.

MANCHESTER ART-TREASURES EXHIBITION.—The proposal for holding an art-treasures exhibition at Manchester was made at a meeting held at Manchester, March 26, 1856. A guarantee-fund of £74,000 having been raised in three weeks, a site was selected at Old Trafford, adjoining the Botanical Gardens, for the erection of the building, which was a parallelogram, of 660 feet by 220 feet, covering an area of 130,000 square feet, at a cost of about £30,000. The arrangement of the art-treasures was placed under the direction of George Scharf, F.R.S. The number of paintings of all kinds, collected in this building, by old masters, was 1,115, and by modern masters, 689. There were, in addition, 969 water-colour drawings, 388 British portraits, 59 cases of enamels, 260 original sketches and drawings by the old masters, 937 engravings in line, 161 in mezzotinto, 246 etchings, and 600 photographs. The museum of ornamental art comprised 17,000 articles. It was opened by Prince Albert, May 5, 1857, and closed Oct. 17. During the time it remained open it was visited by 1,335,915 persons.

MANDATES, or LETTERS FROM THE POPE, requesting a bishop to confer the next vacant benefice upon some person named therein, were first issued by Adrian IV. (1154—1159). The practice was continued by Alexander III. (1159—1181), until Clement IV., in 1266, issued a bull claiming the right of nomination in certain cases. The right of issuing royal mandates to judges, for interfering in private causes, was relinquished as a prerogative of the crown by Edward I. (1272—1307).

MANFREDONIA (Italy), named after King Manfred, who founded it in 1250, was at first named Novum Sipontum, because it stood near the site of that ancient town. A bay in the vicinity is called the Gulf of Manfredonia. It was taken by the Turks in 1620.

MANGALORE (Hindostan). — This town, supposed to have been colonized by Arabs at a very early period, was taken by Hyder Ali in 1767. The English, who captured it Feb. 25, 1768, and retired early in May, recovered it in 1783, the fortress surrendering March 9. Tippoo Saib besieged it May 23, and, having converted the siege into a blockade, the garrison capitulated Jan. 26, 1784. The English restored it by the treaty of 1784; but it came into their possession, with the whole of the Carnatic, after the overthrow of Tippoo in 1799.

MANGALORE (Treaty), was concluded between the English and Tippoo Saib at this town, in Hindostan, March 11, 1784. A restitution of conquests was agreed to on both sides.

MANGANESE was included among iron ores until 1774, when Scheele, and afterwards Gahn, proved that the metal in this mineral was distinct from iron.

MANGAREVA GROUP.—(See GAMBIER ISLANDS.)

MANICHÆANS.—This heretical sect was founded in Persia, about 261, by Mani, Manes, or Manichæus, who styled himself the Apostle of Christ and the Paraclete. He endeavoured to engraft Christianity upon the doctrines of the Magi, who believed in the two principles. The heresy spread rapidly through Persia, Egypt, and Palestine, ultimately affecting the whole Roman empire. Mani was burned alive by Varanes I. in 277. Milman (Lat. Christianity, b. ii. c. 4) remarks, "That sect, in vain proscribed, persecuted, deprived of the privilege of citizens, placed out of the pale of the law by successive Imperial edicts; under the abhorrence not merely of the orthodox, but of almost all other Christians, were constantly springing up in all quarters of Christendom with a singularly obstinate vitality." It appeared under various disguises, and many of its main features were adopted by the Paulicians (q. v.), who arose at Samosata. Diocletian, in 296, issued severe laws against the

Manichæans, who were condemned by several councils, and Pope Leo I. ordered their books to be burnt in 443. (See DOCETÆ.)

MANILIAN LAW.—Caius Manilius, one of the tribunes (B.C. 66), proposed the revival of a law relating to the enrolment of Freedmen, which had been carried by the popular party under Carbo, and was afterwards repealed by Sylla. By proposing it suddenly, at a late hour of the day, when the majority of the citizens were absent from the forum, he succeeded in his object; but it was instantly annulled by the senate, because it had been illegally passed. This is said to have been the origin of the celebrated Manilian law, vesting the sole management of the war against Tigranes I. and Mithridates VI. in Pompey. It was supported by Cæsar and Cicero, and passed B.C. 65.

MANILLA ISLANDS.—(See PHILIPPINES.)

MANILLA, or MANILA (Indian Archipelago).—This city, on the island of Luzon (q. v.), and capital of the Philippines, was founded by the Spaniards in 1543. An expedition, fitted out at Madras, under Admiral Cornish and Col. W. Draper, took the place Oct. 6, 1762; when, to save the rich cargoes that lay in the port, a ransom of £1,000,000 was promised; an arrangement which the King of Spain afterwards refused to ratify. It was restored to Spain by the peace of Paris, Feb. 10, 1763. The cathedral, commenced in 1654, was completed in 1672. The royal college for the instruction of youths was founded by Philip IV. in 1645; the bronze statue of Charles IV., standing in the public square, was presented to the town by Ferdinand VII. in 1824. England was allowed to trade in 1809, a privilege previously withheld from foreigners, and extended to all nations in 1814. An earthquake in 1645 destroyed 3,000 lives; and others in 1762, 1824, and 1852, did much damage. A fire, by which 10,000 huts were destroyed, 30,000 persons rendered homeless, and 50 lives lost, occurred March 26, 1833. It suffered from an earthquake July 3, 1863, which destroyed about 1,000 lives and much property.

MANISSA (Greece), the ancient Magnesia ad Sipylum, surrendered to the Romans under Scipio, B.C. 190, and was nearly destroyed by an earthquake. Tiberius granted funds from the treasury to aid in its restoration in 17. The Emperor of Nicæa, Theodore II., died here in 1258, and it fell into the hands of the Turks in 1312.

MANNHEIM (Baden). — Frederick IV., the Elector Palatine, enlarged and fortified this place, then merely a village, in 1606. It suffered greatly during the Thirty Years' War. The French captured it in 1688, and the fortifications were improved in 1699. The French besieged Mannheim in 1793; and, having retired, returned and captured it Sep. 20, 1795. The French garrison capitulated to the Austrians, Nov. 22. Mannheim was again taken, March 2, 1799, by the French, who were expelled by the Austrians Sep. 18, 1799. One portion of the allied army passed the Rhine at this place in the night Dec. 31, 1813. Mannheim was made the seat of the electoral court in 1719. It was removed to Munich in 1778, and the town was assigned to Baden-Baden by the treaty of Luneville, Feb. 9, 1801. The palace, founded in 1720, was completed in 1731, and the academy was founded in 1757.

MANOR.—In feudal times, a manor was a territorial district, with jurisdiction, rights, and perquisites thereto belonging. In England manors were afterwards called baronies, and ultimately lordships. Each lord held a court, called Court Baron (q. v.), for redressing wrongs and settling disputes among the tenants. A writer in the National Cyclopædia remarks: "The modern English manor derives its origin from subinfeudation, as it existed before the modifications of the system of tenures introduced in 1215 by Magna Charta, and the still more important alterations made in 1290, by the statute 'Quia Emptores,' and in 1324 by the statute 'de Prærogativâ Regis,' by which statutes the granting land in fee simple, to be held by the grantee as a tenant or vassal to the grantor, was stopped."

MANRESA (Spain).—A French brigade was cut off by the Spaniards, near this town, in 1810. The French captured and destroyed it in May, 1811. The modern bridge over the Carbonero was built in 1804.

MANSARD, or MANSART ROOF, was invented by the French architect, Francis Mansard, or Mansart (1598—1666), and named after him.

MANSION HOUSE (London) was founded in 1739, from the designs of George Dance, city surveyor. The use of the Mansion House, furniture, carriages, &c., and an allowance of £8,000, is granted to the Lord Mayor during the year that he holds the office. It was first occupied in 1753, by Thomas Winterbottom, who died during his mayoralty.

MANS, LE (France), the capital of Maine, till 1790, is built upon the site of the Roman Suindinum, which in the 4th century was called Cenomani, from which the present name is derived. Its earlier inhabitants, the Cenomani, joined Vercingetorix against Cæsar, B.C. 52. The church of Notre Dame du Pré dates from the 11th, the church de la Couture from the 12th, and the cathedral of St. Julian from the 13th century. Henry II. of England was born at Le Mans in March, 1133. It was frequently assailed in the wars between England and France, and passed into the power of the latter in 1481. The church de l'Ancienne Visitation was opened in 1737. Henry IV. took it in 1589, and the Vendeans Dec. 10, 1793, but they were expelled by Marceau Dec. 16. The Chouans took Le Mans in March, 1799.

MANSURAH, or EL MANSOORAH (Battle). —The Saracens defeated the Crusaders at a great battle near this town in Lower Egypt, the ancient Tanis, April 5, 1250, when Louis IX. was compelled to purchase peace on very humiliating terms. The French garrison here was massacred by the Arabs in 1798.

MANTAILLE (France).—A council assembled at this castle on the banks of the Rhone, Oct. 15, 879, conferred the title of king on the Duke of Boson.

MANTES (France). — William I., having marched with an army from Normandy into France, burned this town to the ground in Aug. 1087, when his horse is said to have set its foot on some hot ashes, and, by plunging violently, bruised its rider on the pommel of his saddle. The injuries William I. received brought on an illness, of which he died at the monastery of St. Gervas, Sep. 9. Bertrand du Guesclin took it April 7, 1364, and the English in 1418, who lost it in 1449. Henry IV. (1589—1610 destroyed the fortifications.

MANTINEA, or MANTINEIA (Greece).—This city of Arcadia, said to have been named after Mantineus, son of Lycaon, was founded by the inhabitants of four or five villages at an early period. Mention is made of it about B.C. 540; and an indecisive battle was fought between Mantinea and Tegea, B.C. 423. The Spartans, under Agis II, defeated the combined army of Argives, Mantineans, and Athenians, near this place, in June, 418 B.C. They were defeated by the Spartans B.C. 385, and compelled to retire from their city, the walls of which were destroyed. They returned after the battle of Leuctra, July, 371 B.C., and began to rebuild their city. Epaminondas, the Theban general, defeated them at the second battle of Mantinea, June 27, B.C. 362. He was mortally wounded in the action and died exclaiming, "I have lived long enough, for I die unconquered." The city was taken and pillaged, and the inhabitants were sold as slaves, by Antigonus Doson, King of Macedonia, B.C. 222. It was rebuilt, and called Antigonea, after Antigonus Doson, and did not resume its former name until the time of Hadrian. In addition to the aforementioned battles, the defeat of Archidamus and the Spartans by Demetrius Poliorcetes, B.C. 295; the defeat of the Spartans under Agis IV., by Aratus and the Achæans, B.C. 242; and the defeat of the Spartans by the Achæan forces under Philopœmen, B.C. 207, are all known as battles of Mantinea, because they were fought in a plain near that city. It is now called Palæopoli.

MAN-TRAPS and SPRING-GUNS.—By 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 18 (May 28, 1827), any person setting any spring-gun, man-trap, or other engine calculated to destroy life, or inflict grievous bodily harm, was to be guilty of a misdemeanour. The act did not extend to Scotland. By the fourth clause, spring-guns, &c., might be set inside a dwelling-house for the protection thereof, from sunset to sunrise.

MANTUA (Italy).—This city of Northern Italy was founded by the Etruscans at a very early date, but little is known with certainty respecting its ancient history. It passed under the Roman power B.C. 197, and was the birthplace of Virgil, B.C. 70. Its territories were distributed among the veterans of Augustus, B.C. 41; and it was sacked by the troops of Vitellius in 69. It was pillaged by the Marcomani in 270, and in 403. It was taken by Alaric I. in 408. After numerous reverses of fortune, Mantua passed into the hands of Louis I. of Gonzaga in 1328; and, under his rule, attained great importance. In 1392 a confederation was signed here with other Italian cities, for the maintenance of the equilibrium of Italy. It was erected into a marquisate in 1433, and into a duchy in 1530. Mantua was erected into a bishopric in 808. Councils were held here in 827, 1053, and 1067. The war of the Mantuan succession commenced in 1627. The Imperialists took Mantua July 17, 1630, and the war ended with the peace of Cherasco, signed April 6, 1631. In 1701 it was occupied by the French, and in 1707 was taken by the Imperialists. On the extinction of the house of Gonzaga in 1708, it passed into the power of Joseph I. of Austria; and in 1791 Leopold II. and the Bourbon emigrants organized a coalition here against the French republic. It was taken by Napoleon Buonaparte after a siege which lasted from June 14, 1796, till Feb. 2, 1797, and erected into the chief town of the department of the Mincio. The Austrians regained possession July 30, 1799. It was restored to France in 1800, after the battle of Marengo, and to Austria in 1814. By the treaty of Zurich, Nov. 10, 1859, Mantua and Peschiera were the only towns of Lombardy left to the house of Austria, and these were surrendered in Oct. 1866.

MANTUA (Treaties).—At a congress held here in 1392, an alliance between Florence, Bologna, Mantua, and other Italian states, was concluded.——Pius II., who remained here from May, 1459, to Jan., 1460, assembled a congress, but failed in his attempt to get up a crusade against the Turks, who had taken Constantinople.——Maximilian I., Julius II., and Ferdinand IV. entered into a treaty here in 1511, respecting Milan, which they had wrested from Louis XII.——Leopold II. and the exiled princes of the house of Bourbon met here in 1791, in order to form a coalition against France.

MANU.—(See MENU.)

MAORIES, supposed to be the aboriginal inhabitants of New Zealand, have a tradition that their ancestors arrived in the island in seven canoes 500 years ago. In 1814, the Church Missionary Society established a mission for their conversion, which laboured with little effect till 1830, when the progress of Christianity became very rapid. The last case of cannibalism occurred amongst them in 1843. The Maories were at war with the colonists from 1843 to 1847, in 1860, and from 1863 to 1864. The Pai Marire (q. v.) religion arose in 1864. (See NEW ZEALAND.)

MAPLE.—The scarlet maple was introduced into England, from N. America, before 1656, and the ash-leaved maple from the same part of the world before 1688.

MAPS AND CHARTS. — Anaximander of Miletus is the reputed inventor of geographical maps, about B.C. 568. The first maps engraved on copperplate were used to illustrate an edition of Ptolemy's Geography, published in 1478; and the first maritime charts seen in England were brought by Bartholomew Columbus in 1488. Mercator's projection was invented in 1556, by Gerard Mercator, and improved in 1599 by Wright.

MARACAIBO, or MARACAYBO (Battle).—The republicans were defeated by the royalist forces Nov. 13, 1822, near this town, in Venezuela, at that time forming part of the republic of Colombia.

MARANON.—(See AMAZON.)

MARATHON (Battles).—A great battle, in which the Greeks, under Miltiades, defeated the Persians and secured the independence of Greece, was fought on the plain of Marathon, in Attica, mentioned as a place of importance in the Homeric poems, Sep. 11, B.C. 490.——The Greeks, during the war of independence, defeated 2,000 Turks at Marathon, July 18, 1824.

MARBACH LEAGUE.—The Elector of Mayence, the Margrave of Baden, several powerful princes, and many of the free towns, under pretence of redressing various wrongs and abuses, formed a league at Marbach in Wurtemberg, 1405, against the Emperor, who made some concessions, and the league was dissolved.

MARBLE.—Pliny (23—79) states that marble was first employed as a material for sculpture by Dipœnus and Scyllis, who were born in Crete about B.C. 580. They used the white marble of Pharos in their works. Crassus, the orator, B.C. 91, was the first who used foreign marble in his house. The practice of staining marble commenced during the reign of Claudius I. (41—54), and of covering it with gold under Nero (54—68). It was very costly during the Middle Ages, and Edward III. (1327—77) paid £10 for a slab to cover the grave of Richard de Gravesend, Bishop of London.

MARBLE ARCH (London) was erected by George IV. as a gateway to Buckingham Palace, in 1830, and was removed to Cumberland Gate, Hyde Park, March 29, 1851. The original cost was £80,000, and the expense incurred by the removal amounted to £11,000.

MARBURG (Hesse-Cassel) was made a town in 1227, and was one of the residences of the Landgraves of Thuringia. The church of St. Elizabeth, commenced in 1235, was not completed until 1283. The Landgrave Philip founded the first Lutheran university at this town in 1527. A conference was held in its castle between Luther, Melancthon, and other German reformers, Oct. 1–3, 1529. The botanical garden was formed in 1530. The French, who captured Marburg June 3, 1759, were expelled by the Austrians Sep. 11. The French took it again in 1760; and the garrison, assailed by the Austrians without success in 1761, was compelled to surrender in 1762. The French destroyed its fortifications in 1807. (See HESSE.)

MARCH.—The third month in the year was named Martius by the Romans, after the god Mars. The Anglo-Saxons called it Hlyd Monath, i.e. stormy month. The old proverb, "A bushel of March dust is worth a monarch's ransom," expresses the value formerly attached to a dry March. (See FIELD OF MARCH.)

MARCHES, or country lying near the marks or boundaries of two kingdoms, often had peculiar rights and customs. Edward I., in 1296, appointed a lord warden of the Marches to guard the border against invasions by the Scotch. The authority of the lords of the marches, called lords marchers,—whence the title marquis,—between England and Wales, was abolished by 27 Hen. VIII. c. 26 (1536). The Court of the Marches of Wales was abolished by 1 Will. & Mary, c. 27 (1689).

MARCHFELD (Battle). — Ottocar II., of Bohemia, was defeated and killed in this battle, fought on the plain of the Marchfeld, near Vienna, by Rodolph I., Aug. 26, 1278.

MARCHIONESS.—The title of marchioness was bestowed upon Lady Anne Rochfort in 1532, and she was invested at Windsor, Sunday, Sep. 1.

MARCIANISTS, a branch of the Euchites, or Messalians, and a distinct sect from the Marcionites, were thus named from Marcianus Trapezita, who, in the time of Justinian I. (527—565), observed the Sabbath as a fast.

MARCIANOPOLIS (Mœsia), named after Marciana, the sister of Trajan (98—117), who built it in her honour, was the capital of the second Mœsia. The Goths assailed it in the 3rd century, but, on the payment of tribute, retired. It was made the capital of Bulgaria, and was frequently besieged.

MARCIONITES.—A sect of heretics founded by Marcion, said to have been a sailor, son of the Bishop of Sinope, about 150. He held that there were three original principles. His followers were the forerunners of the Manichæans. They admitted no married persons to their baptism, requiring all candidates to be either virgins, widows, bachelors, or divorced persons. Marcion held it lawful to repeat baptism three times for the remission of sins. Tertullian wrote against this heresy in 207, and it was not extinct till the 6th century. (See CERDONIANS and DOCETÆ.)

MARCODURUM.—(See DUREN.)

MARCOMANNI.—The name Marc-o-manni, i.e. Men of the Marches, or Frontier, or Borderers, was given by the Romans to various tribes on the confines of Germany. Some hordes under this name were driven out of Gaul by Julius Cæsar, B.C. 58. Marobodnus formed a league amongst these tribes, and concluded a treaty with Tiberius (afterwards emperor) in the year 6. The Cherusci defeated the Marcomanni in 17, and a peace was mediated between them by Drusus. Domitian made war upon them, and was defeated in 90. In alliance with other tribes they invaded the Roman empire in 166, when a war commenced, which was not brought to a close until 180. They ravaged Italy in 270. The last notice of the Marcomanni is in 451, when they formed a contingent of the army with which Attila invaded Gaul and Italy.

MARCOSIANS.—The followers of Marcus and Calarbasus, who adopted the Valentinian system, and are said to have anointed their dead, arose in the 2nd century.

MARCOU, or MARCOUF, ST. (English Channel.)—These islands, off the coast of France, were taken by the English in 1795. The small garrison repulsed an attack made by a flotilla of French gunboats, May 7, 1798. The English lost one man killed and four wounded, whilst the French admitted a loss of several hundred in killed and wounded. These islands were restored to France by the treaty of Amiens, March 25, 1802.

MARCOUSSIS (Treaty), between Louis XII. and Ferdinand V., by which all differences between France and Spain were arranged, was concluded at Marcoussis, Aug. 5, 1498.

MARDIA (Battle).—Constantine I. defeated his rival Licinius, in this plain, in Thrace, in 315. In consequence of this defeat, Licinius entered into a treaty with Constantine I. in Dec., 315. Thrace, Asia Minor, Syria, and Egypt were assigned to Licinius.

MARENGO (Battle).—The Austrian army under Melas was totally defeated by the French at this village, near Alessandria (q. v.), in Italy, June 14, 1800. The Austrians had defeated their antagonists at all points, and Napoleon Buonaparte was about to order a retreat, when Dessaix, who was killed in the moment of victory, counselled further resistance, and Kellermann by a brilliant charge changed the fortunes of the day. A pageant, representing the battle, was held on this plain, in presence of Napoleon I., the empress, and a large assemblage of spectators, in 1805.

MARGARITA (Caribbean Sea).—This island was discovered by Columbus in 1498.

MARGATE (Kent).—The name is said to be derived from Meregate, on account of the hollow between two hills in which the town is situated. Bathing-machines were introduced about 1790. The first stone of the General Sea-Bathing Infirmary was laid June 21, 1792, and Trinity church was erected in 1825.

MARGUS, MORGUM, or MURGUM (Battles).—Carinus, who disputed the empire with Diocletian, was defeated and slain near this city of Mœsia, at the confluence of the Margus and the Danube, in May, 285. The Goths defeated a Roman army under Sabinian at Margus, in 505. Its site is occupied by Passarowitz.

MARIA ISLAND (Pacific) was discovered by Tasman in 1642.

MARIA LOUISA (Order), of Spain, was founded in 1792 for ladies only.

MARIAN PERSECUTION commenced in Jan., 1555, when 30 persons found using the service-book of Edward VI. were seized and imprisoned. Rogers was burned at the stake in Smithfield, Feb. 4, and Hooper, Bishop of Gloucester, at Gloucester, Feb. 9. Justices of the peace were ordered to search for heretics, and many persons were apprehended and executed, 13 having been burned at Smithfield, June 27. Ridley and Latimer, condemned as obstinate heretics, were burned at Oxford, Oct. 16. Cranmer suffered in the same manner at Oxford, March 21, 1556. According to the lowest estimate, 500 persons, belonging to the clergy and the laity, suffered during this persecution, which terminated at the death of Mary, Nov. 17, 1558. Above 1,000 persons sought refuge in Germany and Switzerland whilst the persecution lasted.

MARIA THERESA (Order), of Austria, was founded in 1757.

MARIE-GALANTE (Caribbean Sea).—This island, discovered by Christopher Columbus in 1493, and named after his ship, was settled by the French in 1647.

MARIENBERG (Saxony).—This town, celebrated for its iron and silver mines, was founded by Henry, Duke of Saxony, in 1519.

MARIENBURG (Belgium), built in 1542, was taken in 1554 by the French, and restored by them in 1559 to the Spaniards, who ceded it to Louis XIV. in 1659. The French, who took it in 1814, were expelled in 1815, and its fortifications were demolished in 1849.

MARIENBURG (Prussia).—The grand master and the knights of the Teutonic order, who had a fortress here in 1274, removed their seat from Venice to this town in 1309. A league of Prussian cities, called the Convention of Marienburg, was formed in 1436. The Teutonic knights compelled the Prussians to dissolve this league. The Poles having assailed the castle unsuccessfully in 1410 and 1420, captured it in 1457. The Swedes captured it in 1626 and 1655. Casimir IV. of Poland, took it in 1460. The castle, which had fallen into decay, and the palace were restored by the King of Prussia in 1820.

MARIENBURG (Treaty), concluded at this town, in Brandenburg, between Charles X. of Sweden and Frederick William, Elector of Brandenburg, June 15, 1656, was an offensive and defensive alliance, formed for the prosecution of the war against Poland.

MARIENWERDER (Prussia).—The Prussian cities of the province having formed a league against the Teutonic knights, in 1440, transferred their allegiance to the King of Poland in 1454. The capital, of the same name, was founded by the Teutonic knights in 1233, and the cathedral was commenced in 1255, in the neighbourhood. Eugène de Beauharnais was surprised by the forces of Wittgenstein, and suffered a severe defeat, Jan. 12, 1813.

MARIETTA (N. America), founded by colonists from New England, in 1788, was named after Marie Antoinette. The college was founded in 1832.

MARIGNANO, or MALEGNANO (Battles).—Francis I. defeated an allied German, Italian, and Swiss army, under the command of Maximilian I., at this village, near Milan, Sep. 13 and 14, 1515. After this victory, Bayard was knighted by the French king. It is sometimes called the battle of the Giants and of St. Donato.——A second encounter near the same place, is better known as the battle of Pavia. ——The French and Sardinians defeated the Austrians here, June 8, 1859.

MARINE INSURANCE.—(See INSURANCE.)

MARINER'S COMPASS.—The Chinese are said to have used this instrument as early as B.C. 2634, though their written records of the properties of the loadstone only date from 125. In their great dictionary Poi-wen-yeu-fou, it is said to have been used 265—419. The precise time at which it was introduced into Europe is very uncertain, but it was known at a much earlier period than is generally supposed, and is noticed in a French satire, La Bible, written by Guyot de Provins about 1190. It is described by Bailak-Kibdjaki in 1242, as being in use on the Syrian coast, and is noticed by Brunetto Latini in 1260. Some authorities insist that Marco Polo brought the instrument from China in 1260, while others claim the honour of its invention for Flavio Gioja, a seaman of Amalphi, near Naples. Flavio Gioja, in 1310, attached a card to the needle, and thus obtained the credit of the invention, and as he supplied the Mediterranean sailors, the invention came into more general use. The declination of the magnetic needle was discovered by

Columbus in 1492, the dip of the needle by Robert Normand, of Wapping, in 1576, and the variation of the declination by Gellibrand in 1625. The Liverpool compass committee was formed in 1854. (See MAGNETISM.)

MARINES were first established as a nursery to man the fleet by an order in council, Oct. 16, 1664. The third regiment of the line was called the Marine regiment in 1684. In the reign of William III. the soldiers on the navy establishment seem to have been put in training as seamen. Marines were regularly established in 1698, and six regiments were raised in 1702. On the recommendation of Lord Anson, 130 companies were raised and placed under the control of the Admiralty in 1755. The title "Royal" was bestowed upon the corps by George III., May 1, 1802, as a mark of approbation for their services during the war.

MARINO, SAN (Italy).—A hermit named Marinus, who had been a mason, came from Dalmatia, and settled in this locality in 469, and at his death a church was built, and a village gradually formed. It had become a walled town, and was called Plebs Santi Marini cum Castello, in the 10th century; and the commune of San Marino purchased some neighbouring lands from the lords of Urbino, in the 12th century. In the civil wars between the Guelphs and Ghibellines, the people sided with the latter, for which they were excommunicated by Innocent IV. (1243—1254). Called upon to pay taxes to the papal government about the end of the 14th century, they refused, and on reference of the dispute to a judge of Rimini, decision was given in their favour; from which period San Marino has been acknowledged as an independent state. This independence was respected by Napoleon I., and confirmed by Pius VII. on his restoration in 1814.

MARIOLATRY.—The worship of the Virgin Mary, practised in the Roman Catholic Church, founded on the salutation of the Angel Gabriel, and Mary's exclamation in the Magnificat (Luke i. 48), was not known in the first ages of Christianity. The Collyridians (q. v.) were condemned for their adoration of the Virgin towards the end of the 4th century. Mary was declared to be the mother of God by the third general council assembled in the Church of the Mother of God, at Ephesus, in 431. Mosheim (b. iii. pt. ii. ch. iv. s. 3), commenting on the 10th century, says: "The worship of the Virgin Mary, which previously had been extravagant, was in this century carried much further than before. Not to mention other things less certain, I observe, first, that near the close of this century, the custom became prevalent among the Latins, of celebrating masses, and abstaining from flesh, on Saturdays, in honour of St. Mary. In the next place, the daily office of St. Mary, which the Latins call the Lesser Office, was introduced; and it was afterwards confirmed by Urban II. in the Council of Clermont. Lastly, pretty distinct traces of the Rosary and Crown of St. Mary, as they are called, or of praying according to a numerical arrangement, are to be found in this century. For they who tell us that St. Dominic invented the Rosary, in the thirteenth century, do not offer satisfactory proof of their opinion. The Rosary consisted of fifteen repetitions of the Lord's Prayer, and one hundred and fifty salutations of St. Mary: and what the Latins called the Crown of St. Mary, consisted of six or seven repetitions of the Lord's Prayer, and sixty or seventy salutations, according to the age ascribed by different authors to the holy Virgin." (See ANNUNCIATION, ASSUMPTION, CANDLEMAS DAY, IMMACULATE CONCEPTION, INVOCATION OF SAINTS, NATIVITY, &c.)

MARISCHAL.—(See EARL MARISCHAL.)

MARISCHAL COLLEGE.—(See ABERDEEN.)

MARK.—An old gold coin in England, value 13*s.* 4*d.*, bore this name. The silver mark seems to have originated in Denmark, and was long current on the continent, especially amongst the northern nations. James VI. (1567—1603) of Scotland coined a two-mark piece, a balance-mark, and a half-mark, in silver. Previous to his accession to the British throne, he had two sets of thistle-marks, so named from the thistle on the reverse, and half-marks struck. These seem to have been the last coins of this name struck in Great Britain.

MARK-DUREN.—(See DÜREN.)

MARKETS, held in former times chiefly on Sundays and holidays, as the people then assembled for divine service, were forbidden to be held in churchyards by 13 Edw. I. c. 5 (1285). By 27 Hen. VI. c. 5 (1448), Sunday markets, except on the four Sundays in harvest, were prohibited; and by 29 Charles II. c. 7 (1677), markets were declared illegal on any Sunday. (See FORUM, and List in INDEX.)

MARK, ST. (Gospel), is supposed by the best authorities to have been written between 60 and 63, by John, whose surname was Mark (Acts xii. 12, 25), the cousin of Barnabas. He is said to have been the founder of the Coptic Church, and to have suffered martyrdom at Alexandria, about 66.

MARK'S, ST. (Venice), considered the finest Byzantine church in Western Europe, was built between 977 and 1043, the original church having been destroyed in 976. The foundation-stone came into possession of Mr. Douce in 1834, and is preserved in the Doucean Museum, Goodrich Court, Herefordshire. Howell, in his letters, mentions a huge iron chest as tall as himself, which he saw in the treasury, with a crevice for receiving the gold, bequeathed to the saint, in 1619. The Emperor Frederick I. and Pope Alexander III. met here, when a proclamation of peace was made with much ceremony, July 24, 1177.

MARLBOROUGH (Wiltshire) received its first charter in 1205. A parliament met here Nov. 18, 1267, in the reign of Henry III., when the statutes of "Marleberg" were made, which have since been constantly received as the law of the land. The grammar-school was founded by Edward VI. in 1551, and the college, for the education of 500 pupils, sons of clergymen and others, was incorporated in 1843. (See BERANBIRIO, Battle.)

MARLBOROUGH CLUB (London) was founded in 1864 and closed in 1866.

MARLBOROUGH HOUSE (London) was built by Sir Christopher Wren for the great Duke of Marlborough, in 1709–10, and was bought by the Crown as a residence for the Princess Charlotte and Prince Leopold in 1817. Soon after the death of Queen Dowager Adelaide, Dec. 2, 1849, Marlborough House was used for the Vernon gallery of paintings. These were removed, and it was prepared for the residence of the Prince and Princess of Wales, on their marriage in 1863.

MARMANDE (France).—This ancient town is said to have been occupied by the Goths, and was destroyed by the Saracens in the 8th century. It was rebuilt in 1185 by Richard I. of England, and captured by Simon De Montfort in 1212, and by Amaury De Montfort in 1219. The English took it in 1427. It was besieged by Henry of Navarre in 1577, and by Condé in 1652.

MARONITES.—Gibbon (ch. xlvii.) asserts:—"In the style of the Oriental Christians, the Monothelites of every age are described under the appellation of Maronites, a name which has been insensibly transferred from a hermit to a monastery, from a monastery to a nation. Maron, a saint or savage of the 5th century, displayed his religious madness in Syria; the rival cities of Apamea and Emesa disputed his relics, a stately church was erected on his tomb, and 600 of his disciples united their solitary cells on the banks of the Orontes." The subject is involved in obscurity; but the truth appears to be, that John Maro, or Maron, a monk, founded several convents on Mount Lebanon during the 5th century. He maintained the independence of his followers, and assumed the title "Patriarch of Antioch." His followers became infected with the Monothelite doctrines in the 7th century, and were from that time called Maronites, and regarded as a distinct sect. They renounced the Monothelite doctrines in 1182, and were readmitted into the Roman Catholic Church. They yielded, however, only a modified obedience to Rome, and have frequently been subjected to severe persecutions. A college for the education of the Maronite clergy was founded at Rome in 1585, and they accepted the decrees of the Council of Trent in 1736. A large number of the Maronite Christians were massacred by the Druses (q. v.), in the neighbourhood of Beyrout and Lebanon, in May and June, 1860, and from 1,000 to 2,000 were killed in the streets of Damascus, July 9. The remarks of Gibbon hold good, that "the humble nation of the Maronites has survived the empire of Constantinople, and they still enjoy, under their Turkish masters, a free religion and a mitigated servitude."

MAROONS.—When Spain was dispossessed of Jamaica (q. v.) by the English, May 3, 1655, the slaves belonging to the Spaniards betook themselves to the mountains, and, recruited by runaways, soon became formidable under the name of Maroons. Gen. Trelawney, in 1738, succeeded in making an arrangement by which they were confined to certain localities. A rebellion broke out amongst them in 1795, which was suppressed March 21, 1796, and 600 of the insurgents were transported to Nova Scotia, 350 of whom were removed to Sierra Leone in Oct., 1800, at a cost to the Government of £5,903 19*s.* 8*d.*

MAROUGA (Battle).—The Roman army, led by Julian, on their retreat from Assyria, defeated the Persians at Marouga in 363.

MAR-PRELATE TRACTS.—The first of these tracts, under the name of Martin Mar-Prelate, was printed at a movable press, and appeared in 1588. A letter, instructing the archbishop to find out and commit to prison the authors and printers, was issued by the council in Nov., 1588. John Penry, a Welshman, executed May 29, 1593, for writing a pamphlet, was suspected of having assisted in the preparation of these libels upon the prelacy. They have also been attributed to Throgmorton, to Udal, and to Fenner.

MARQUE.—(See LETTERS OF MARQUE.)

MARQUESAS, or MENDANA ISLANDS (South Pacific Ocean), were discovered by Alvaro de Mendana in 1595, who named them in honour of the Marquis of Mendoza, Viceroy of Peru. Hood's Island, one of the group, was discovered by Capt. Cook, April 6, 1776, and several others by the Americans in 1797. The Moniteur announced, Dec. 20, 1842, that they had been taken in the name of the King of the French. With the exception of three—Huahine, Raiatea, and Borabora—they were placed under the protectorate of France, June 19, 1847, and a project formed by the French in 1850, of making one of them a penal settlement, was abandoned.

MARQUIS.—The title of marquis is derived from the lords marchers, appointed to guard the marches, or boundary lands, who were suppressed by 27 Hen. VIII. c. 26 (1536). In the time of Edward III. a foreign nobleman, the Marquis of Juliers, was made an English peer, with the title of Earl of Cambridge; and Richard II. created Robert de Vere Marquis of Dublin in 1385, he being the first English peer who bore the title. Winchester, created in 1551, is the most ancient in existence. The Marquis of Huntly and the Marquis of Hamilton, created in 1599, were the first who bore the title in Scotland. The practice of granting it as a second title to a dukedom was adopted after 1689.

MARRIAGE.—The institution of marriage is usually referred to Gen. ii. 21–25, when God, in the garden of Eden, gave Eve to Adam as his wife. This view of the subject is confirmed by the answer given by Christ to the Pharisees, in 29 (Mark x. 6–10). Among the ancient Greeks the nuptials were celebrated with various ceremonies; but no record was kept of their solemnization, and the only proof of their having taken place was afforded by the guests who were present at the wedding feast. The social position of wives among the Greeks was extremely low, sterility being esteemed in some states a sufficient cause for separation. Among the Romans no forms were requisite, though certain ceremonies were usually observed. The Lex Julia et Lex Papia Poppea, passed B.C. 18 and A.D. 9, placed certain restrictions respecting the parties between whom marriages might be contracted. Roman wives were treated with great consideration. They presided over the education of the children, conducted the household, and shared in the honour and respect shown to their husbands.

A.D.
345. Ecclesiastics are forbidden to marry after ordination by the Council of Nicæa.
366. Marriage during Lent is prohibited by the Council of Laodicea.
692. Bishops are prohibited from marrying.
721. The Council of Rome defines the degrees of consanguinity within which marriage is unlawful.
868, May 16. The Canons of Worms prohibit the clergy from marrying.
1073—85. Priests are compelled to take the vow of celibacy.
1100—1200. Matrimony is first mentioned as a sacrament.
1199. Innocent III. orders the marriage ceremony to be solemnized in churches.
1533. Bishops are empowered to grant licences for marrying without banns.
1538. A proclamation is issued in England enforcing clerical celibacy.
1545—1563. The Council of Trent includes marriage amongst the seven sacraments.
1549. The marriage of the clergy is permitted by 2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 21.
1554. The married clergy who do not separate from their wives are expelled.
1695, May 1. A duty on a somewhat similar scale to that adopted in the tax upon births (q. v.) is imposed upon marriages by 6 & 7 Will. III. & Mary, c. 6.
1754, March 1. Clandestine marriages are prohibited by 26 Geo. II. c. 33 (Lord Hardwicke's act).
1772. The Royal Marriage Act (12 Geo. III. c. 2) prohibits the descendants of George II., unless of foreign birth, from contracting any marriage without the royal consent, until they attain the age of 25 years. After that age the consent of Parliament is necessary.
1808, July 2. By 48 Geo. III. c. 149, a stamp-duty of 10*s.* is imposed upon every licence for marriage, and of £4 for every special licence.
1822, July 22. The act of 1754 is amended by 3 Geo. IV. c. 75, which limits the right of granting licences to the Archbishops of Canterbury and York.
1823, March 26. Certain provisions of the act of 1822 are repealed by 4 Geo. IV. c. 17.—July 18. Former laws are repealed by 4 Geo. IV. c. 76, which requires a religious ceremony as essential to the marriage contract.
1836, Aug. 17. Marriages are (by 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 85) made legal without a religious ceremony, by registrar's certificate, or in dissenting chapels. They are ordered to be registered by 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 86.
1837, June 30. The marriage acts are amended by 1 Vict. c. 22.
1840, Aug. 7. Provisions are made (by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 72) for solemnizing marriages near the residence of the contracting parties.
1856, July 29. The marriage and registration acts are amended by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 119. (See DIVORCE.)
1858, July 2. The bill for authorizing marriage with a deceased wife's sister passes the Commons.—July 23. It is rejected by the Lords.
1862, Feb. 19. The bill for authorizing marriage with a deceased wife's sister passes the second reading in the House of Commons.—March 12. It is thrown out on the motion to go into committee.

(See BIRTHS, DEATHS, AND MARRIAGES, and REGISTRATION OF BIRTHS, DEATHS, AND MARRIAGES.)

MARRIAGE LAW REFORM INSTITUTION (London), for the purpose of legalizing marriage with a deceased wife's sister, was founded Jan. 15, 1851.

MARROW CONTROVERSY, respecting a book entitled "Marrow of Modern Divinity," written by Edward Fisher, a Puritan soldier, and published in 1646. It was republished in 1717 by the Rev. J. Hog, who issued an explanatory pamphlet in 1719. A committee appointed by the General Assembly presented their report in 1720 condemning the book, and ordering the people not to read it. This produced a protest, signed by twelve ministers, called the "Twelve Brethren," the "Representers," and the "Marrow Men," presented to the General Assembly in 1721. Another committee was appointed, and it condemned the Marrow men, who were called before the bar of the General Assembly in 1722, and rebuked.

MARRUCINI.—This nation, of Sabine origin, frequently in alliance with the Marsi and Peligni, became allies of the Romans, B.C. 304. During the Social war (q. v.) they revolted, and about the end of B.C. 89 they were defeated and their territory ravaged by Sulpicius, Pompey's lieutenant, and they were afterwards reduced to submission by Pompey himself, B.C. 52. They revolted against Antonius B.C. 43.

MARSAILLE, or MARSAGLIA (Battle).—Marshal Catinat defeated Victor Amadeus and Prince Eugène near this town, between Pignerol and Turin, in Piedmont, Oct. 4, 1693. It is sometimes called the battle of Orbazzano.

MARSALA (Sicily), the ancient Lilybæum (q. v.), was restored by the Saracens, who esteemed its harbour so highly that they called it Marsa Alla, i. e. the port or harbour of God. In the 16th century the harbour was blocked up with a mound of sunken rocks, by order of Charles V., to protect it from the Barbary corsairs. Garibaldi selected it as a landing-place on his invasion of Sicily in 1860.

MARSEILLAISE.—This celebrated republican hymn was composed by Rouget de Lille, a French officer of engineers, whilst quartered at Strasburg, in Feb., 1792. It was called the Marseillaise, because a body of troops on their march from Marseilles entered Paris in July, 1792, playing the tune, at that time little known in the capital. The author, who had fallen in love with the daughter of Dietrich, mayor of Strasburg, is said to have composed the verses in a single night, and to have repeated them the following morning to the young girl, to whom he was passionately attached. Alison calls the Marseillaise hymn the "Rule Britannia" of the Revolution.

MARSEILLE, or MARSEILLES (France), the ancient Massalia, called by the Romans Massilia, was founded by the Phocæans, B.C. 600.

B.C.
542. A second colony settles at Massalia.
218. The inhabitants assist the Romans in the second Punic war.
154. They call in the aid of the Romans against the Deceates and Oxybii.
49. The people refuse to admit Julius Cæsar within the gates, and the place is besieged and captured.

A.D.
409. Cassian founds two abbeys.
470. Euric, King of the Visigoths, takes Marseilles.
839. It is plundered by the Saracens.
1190. Richard I. of England embarks at Marseilles for the Holy Land.
1214. Marseilles is erected into an independent republic.
1251. It passes under the dominion of the counts of Provence.
1423. It is sacked by Alphonso V. of Aragon.
1481. It is reunited to the French crown.
1524. The inhabitants repel an attack by the Constable of Bourbon.
1596. Marseilles submits to Henry IV.

A.D.
1650. The Chamber of Commerce is established on a permanent basis.

1789, April 30. The inhabitants of Marseilles join in the Revolution.
1793, Aug. 25. Marseilles is taken by the republicans, for having assisted the Girondins.
1855. The new harbour of La Joliette is completed.
1858—1860. The Exchange is erected.
1862, July 5. A fire causes great destruction.

MARSHAL, or MARESCHAL.—This term, derived by Nicod from polemarchus, and by Matthew Paris from Martis senescallus, was first applied to an officer who had the care or command of horses. Napoleon I. created 18 marshals of the empire in 1804. (See EARL MARISCHAL and EARL MARSHAL.)

MARSHALSEA COURT, or BOARD OF GREEN CLOTH, was a court of justice, noticed as early as the reign of Henry III. (1216—72), having exclusive jurisdiction in the king's palace and within the verge, described by 13 Rich. II. st. 1, c. 3 (1390), not to exceed 12 miles of the king's lodging. Its power, confirmed by several statutes, was derived from the common law. By 28 Edw. I. st. 3, c. 3 (1300), the pleas that could be held in the court of Verge were defined, and by 2 Hen. IV. c. 23 (1400), regulations respecting fees were laid down. Its powers were extended to treasons, misprisions of treasons, murders, manslaughters, bloodsheds, &c., by 33 Hen. VIII. c. 12 (1542). This court was abolished by 9 Geo. IV. c. 31 (June 27, 1828). (See PALACE COURT).

MARSHALSEA PRISON (London), erected in Southwark in the 13th century, was under the control of the king's marshal. In 1376 the citizens of London rescued a prisoner committed contrary to the liberties of the city. The Gordon rioters released the prisoners, Wednesday, June 7, 1780. By 5 Vict. sess. 2, c. 22 (May 31, 1842), it was abolished, and it has since been taken down.

MARSIAN, or MARSIC WAR.—(See SOCIAL WAR.)

MARSI, or MARSIANS, a nation of central Italy, first mentioned in Roman history B.C. 340, at which time they were on friendly terms with the Romans, against whom they leagued with the Samnites, B.C. 368. They concluded a treaty with the Romans 304 B.C., but again took up arms B.C. 301, when, having been defeated, they were compelled to purchase peace by the cession of part of their territory. They became faithful allies of Rome, and were among the first to offer volunteers to the fleet and army of Scipio, B.C. 205. In the Social, sometimes called the Marsic war, B.C. 91, they took a prominent part, and gained several victories over the Romans; but in the next campaign, B.C. 89, after repeated defeats, they were compelled to sue for peace. The Marsi received the full rights of Roman citizens, and from that time ceased to exist as a separate nation.

MAR'S INSURRECTION.—The Earl of Mar, called Bobbing John, from his tendency to change sides, invited the gentry to meet at a hunt, Aug. 27, 1715, and proclaimed the Pretender as James VIII. of Scotland and III. of England, at Brae-mar, in Aberdeenshire, Sep. 6. His force had gradually increased from about 50 to 5,000 men, when he entered Perth, Sep. 28. Mar, who remained some time inactive, was defeated at Sheriff-muir, near Stirling, Nov. 13, and escaped with the Pretender from Montrose, Feb. 4, 1716, whence they proceeded to France. Some of the chiefs of the insurrection were captured and about 20 were executed.

MARS STEAMER, plying between Waterford and Bristol, struck on a reef on the Welsh coast, April 1, 1862, and sank almost immediately. Of the 55 persons on board, 50 perished.

MARSTON MOOR (Battle), was fought between the Royalists under Prince Rupert, and the Parliamentary army under Lord Fairfax and Oliver Cromwell, at Marston Moor, in Yorkshire, July 2, 1644. It commenced about 7 o'clock in the evening, and the left wing of the king's army totally routed the right wing of the Parliamentarians; but Cromwell with his "Ironsides" managed to defeat the king's right wing. After a severe struggle, victory declared in favour of the Parliamentarians, the Royalists losing all their artillery, ammunition, and baggage.

MARTABAN (Pegu).—This fortress was surrendered to the English in 1824, and it was captured by them during the second war in Burmah, April 5, 1852.

MARTA, ST. (New Grenada).—This city, founded in 1525, was made the seat of an archbishopric in 1529.

MARTELLO TOWERS.—(See DUNGENESS.)

MARTIAL LAW.—Power exercised by the king of dispensing with ordinary law proceedings in time of war, and proceeding by his own absolute authority. By a clause of the Bill of Rights, 3 Charles I. c. 1 (1628), commissions for proceeding by martial law were declared illegal, and prohibited; but Parliament was itself compelled to issue similar commissions in 1644. Martial law, signifying military law, is regulated by court martial (q. v.).

MARTINESTI (Battle).—An allied Austrian and Russian army, commanded by Prince Coburg and Gen. Suwarrow, defeated the Turks at this place in Wallachia, Sep. 22, 1789. No less than 5,000 Turks fell in the battle, and 2,000 in the pursuit. It is also called the battle of Rimnik, from the name of the village, near Martinesti, where it was fought.

MARTINICO, or MARTINIQUE (Atlantic Ocean), called by the natives Madiana, erroneously supposed by some writers to have been discovered by the Spaniards in 1493, was in reality discovered by Christopher Columbus, June 15, 1502, during his fourth voyage. It was settled by some French colonists from St. Christopher's in 1635. The Dutch assailed it in 1674, and were repulsed with great loss. Admiral Penn failed in an attempt to capture it in 1695. The cultivation of the coffee-plant was introduced in 1727. The principal fortifications were attacked by an English squadron Jan. 24, 1759, and after doing considerable damage, the expedition withdrew. The island surrendered, Feb. 16, 1762, to an English force, which had landed Jan. 16; and it was restored to the French by the treaty of Paris, Feb. 10, 1763. It was retaken Feb. 5, 1781, and restored at the peace of Versailles, Sep. 3, 1783. The English again effected a landing Feb. 5, 1794, and after gaining several battles, the whole island capitulated March 23, 1794. The French failed in an attempt to recover it, Dec. 7, 1795, and it was restored at the peace of Amiens, March 25, 1802. An English fleet landed 10,000 troops on the island, Feb. 3, 1809. It surrendered Feb. 24, and was restored to France at the general peace in 1814. The slaves rebelled in 1833, and a number of them were killed, and several taken prisoners, in a battle fought Dec. 24. An earthquake did serious damage to Fort Royal, and caused the death of about 700 persons, Jan. 11, 1839. Slavery was abolished in 1848.

MARTIN MAR-PRELATE. — (See MAR-PRELATE TRACTS.)

MARTINMAS, MARTLEMASS, MARTIL-MASS, or ST. MARTIN'S DAY, Nov. 11, was formerly observed as a day of feasting and jollity. It was instituted in honour of St. Martin, the son of a Roman military tribune. He was born in Hungary, in 316, settled in the neighbourhood of Poitiers, was Bishop of Tours in 374, and died in 400. His festival was instituted in 650. Some authors refer the festivities practised on this day to an ancient Athenian festival in honour of Bacchus. (See MICHAELMAS.)

MARTIN'S (ST.) HALL (London). — The first stone of this edifice, built from designs by R. Westmacott, was laid June 21, 1847; and it was opened Feb. 11, 1850. It was damaged by fire Aug. 26, 1860.

MARTYR. — Since the martyrdom of Stephen, a man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost (Acts vi. 5), chosen in 31 to be one of the seven deacons first appointed, the Christian Church has furnished a long succession of martyrs, who have freely given up their lives in defence of the truth. Stephen the protomartyr was stoned at Jerusalem (Acts vii. 58—60) in May, 37. Polycarp, the last of the Apostolic Fathers, suffered death in 169. Eusebius, who wrote in the beginning of the 4th century, is the first writer who gives an account of the early martyrs.

MARTYRS (Æra).—(See DIOCLETIAN ÆRA.)

MARY (Queen of England), the only child of Henry VIII. and Queen Catherine that arrived at maturity, was born at Greenwich, Monday, Feb. 18, 1516, was proclaimed Queen in London, July 19, and entered the city Aug. 3, 1553. Although Jane (q. v.) was acknowledged queen for a few days, the accession of Mary is reckoned from the day on which Edward VI. died, July 6, 1553. Mary was crowned Oct. 1, 1553, and was married at Winchester to Philip of Spain, July 25, 1554. They had no children, and Philip became King of Spain on the abdication of his father, the Emperor Charles V., Jan., 1556. Mary died at St. James's, broken-hearted from grief, caused by the negligence of her husband and the loss of Calais, Nov. 17, 1558, and was buried in Henry VII.'s chapel at Westminster, Dec. 13. She was called Bloody Queen Mary from the severity with which she persecuted the Reformers. According to the lowest estimate, one archbishop, three bishops, several clergymen, and about 300 of the laity, perished at the stake, whilst numbers died in prison during her reign. She is sometimes called Mary I. (See WILLIAM III. and MARY II.)

MARYLAND (N. America).—The first English province created in America was named Maryland, after Henrietta Maria, queen of Charles I., who granted the absolute proprietary to Lord Baltimore, in 1632. The first colonists were chiefly Roman Catholic gentlemen and their families, sent out from England under the charge of Lord Baltimore's brother, in 1634. A house of assembly was established in 1639; it was divided into two houses in 1650,—the one consisting of members chosen by the Proprietary, and the other chosen by the Freemen. In 1645 Cleyborne succeeded in stirring up an insurrection, the governor was obliged to flee to Virginia, and peace was not restored till 1646. Parliamentary commissioners took possession of the government in 1652, but restored it to the governor in 1658. In 1689 an association, formed for the defence of the Protestant religion, overthrew the proprietary government. A governor was sent out in 1692, and the province remained in the hands of the Crown till 1715, when it was restored to the heir of the proprietary. In 1765, on the passing of the Stamp Act, riots occurred, and the house of the stamp-master was destroyed. A provincial congress assembled in 1774, and took the government into its own hands, and a constitution was adopted in 1776, declaring it a free state. In 1814 a British fleet landed troops under Gen. Ross, who routed the Americans at Bladensburg (q. v.), Aug. 24.

MARYLAND COLONY (Africa), near Cape Palmas, was founded in 1834 by free coloured emigrants sent from the state of Maryland, in America;—whence the name.

MARYLEBONE (London).—The manor of Marylebone was obtained by Henry VIII. in exchange for certain crown lands, in 1544. The park was assigned by Charles I. as security for debts contracted by him during the civil war in 1646. Marylebone Street was built about 1679, and received this name because it led from Hedge Lane to Marylebone. The gardens, which were a favourite resort of Sheffield, Duke of Buckingham, were situated at the back of the old manor-house. Admission to this fashionable place of amusement was free until 1737, when a shilling was charged. They were closed in 1778. The manor-house was pulled down in 1791.

MARYLEBONE THEATRE (London).—The new building was opened Monday, Dec. 12, 1842.

MARY MAGDALENE (ST.).—(See MAGDALENE COLLEGE and HALL, &c.)

MARY OF MERTON, ST. (Canons).—Regular canons of the order of St. Austin settled at Merton, in Surrey, in 1117. Henry I. made a grant to them of the whole town in 1121, and they erected a church and priory in honour of the Virgin.

MARYPORT (England). — This seaport in Cumberland was founded in 1750.

MARY, ST.—(See CARMELITES, GLORIOUS VIRGIN, MARIOLATRY, &c.)

MARY (ST.) HALL (Oxford).—This hall was conferred by Edward II. on Oriel College in 1325. It was made a separate place of education in 1333, and it subsequently became an independent academical hall. Thomas Dyke bequeathed funds towards the support of four scholars in 1667.

MAS-A-TIERRA.—(See JUAN FERNANDEZ.)

MASCALI (Sicily), anciently called Callipolis, was besieged by Hippocrates of Gela early in the 5th century B.C. The Saracens erected a fortress, but the town possesses no modern importance.

MASCALUCIA (Sicily). — This town was much injured by an eruption of Mount Ætna in 1669, and was nearly destroyed by an earthquake in 1818.

MASCARA (Algeria), the ancient Victoria, was at one time the residence of Abd-el-Kader. The French seized it Dec. 5, 1835, and again in 1841; and on the last occasion annexed it to their colony in Algeria.

MASCARENHAS.—(See BOURBON.)

MASKS. — The kings and priests of Egypt wore, upon certain occasions, masks of papyrus, representing the heads of hawks, lions, and other birds and animals, and from them the knowledge of masks passed to the Greeks and Romans, by whom they were employed in dramatic exhibitions. The tragic masks of the Greek stage were frequently very beautiful; but in comedy a grotesque effect was produced by representing the mouth opened and the features distorted. The custom of the use of masks by public executioners is mentioned in 1295. They were first worn by English ladies during the reign of Elizabeth (1558—1603). In the time of Charles II. (1660—1685), they were always worn by ladies in the theatre, and in the time of Anne they were used on horseback, being suspended to the side by a string. (See IRON MASK.)

MASONS were incorporated in 1411.

MASOURAH (Battle).—(See MANSURAH.)

MASQUERADES, or MASKED BALLS.—Dramatic masques were introduced into this country about 1340. The masked ball, or masquerade, originated in Italy towards the commencement of the 16th century, was introduced into the French court by Catherine de Medici (1519—1589), into England by Henry VIII. in 1513, and into Germany towards the end of the 17th century. The Bishop of London preached a sermon against them, Jan. 6, 1724; in consequence of which orders were issued that no more than the six subscribed for at the beginning of the month should take place.

MASS.—The word missa, or mass, was first employed in religious ordinances in 394, to indicate the particular services specially appropriated to different persons, who left the church when the portion of the service which concerned them was concluded. It was, indeed, the general name for every part of divine service, sometimes signifying the lessons, sometimes the collects or prayers, and sometimes the dismission of the people. The Roman Catholic mass was introduced into England in 680. The term was afterwards applied to the elements of the Eucharist, and a decree, ordering all to bow down at the elevation of the host, or mass, was published in 1201. In England the order of Communion was substituted for the Mass April 1, 1548.

MASSACHUSETTS (N. America).—This state was first settled by the Puritans, who arrived at New Plymouth, U.S., in the Mayflower, Dec. 22, 1620. Salem and Charlestown were founded in 1629, and Boston in 1630; and in 1692 the colonies were united under the Indian name of Massachusetts. A charter for Massachusetts Bay was obtained from the crown in 1629. Its first constitution, formed in 1780, was amended in 1820. Slavery was abolished by law in 1783, and the constitution of the United States was adopted in 1788.

MASSA DI CARRARA, MASSA, or DUCALE (Italy), the chief town of a duchy of the same name, which was in 1829 united to Modena, and was, with it, incorporated in the new kingdom of Italy in 1860.

MASSAGETÆ.—This Asiatic tribe, by some supposed to be Scythians, drove the Cimmerians from the Araxes B.C. 635, and penetrated into Media B.C. 632, whence they were expelled by Cyaxares, B.C. 609. Cyrus the Elder was killed in battle against them, B.C. 529. Alexander III. (the Great) defeated them B.C. 328. Ammianus Marcellinus calls the Alani "the ancient Massagetæ." Niebuhr considers them Mongols, and Humboldt assigns them to the Indo-European family.

MASSALIA, or MASSILIA. — (See MARSEILLE, or MARSEILLES.)

MASS-BOOK, "MISSALE," or MISSAL, the ritual used by the Roman Catholic Church, was compiled by Gelasius I. (492—6), and improved by Gregory I. (the Great) (590—604). The services were translated into English for the Church of England in 1549, and by 3 & 4 Edw. VI. c. 10 (1549), the use of missals was abolished. In early times various missals were in use, but the adoption of the Roman missal was ordered by the Council of Trent (1545—1563). It was revived by Clement VIII. in 1604, and by Urban VIII. in 1634.

MASSILIANS.—(See SEMI-PELAGIANS.)

MASTER OF THE CEREMONIES. — The official master of the ceremonies at the English court was instituted by James I., in 1603, for the purpose of introducing foreign ambassadors, &c., to the sovereign. Sir Lewis Lewkenor was appointed to the office, with a salary of £200 per annum. The first person who assumed the title to signify his supremacy in the ball-room was Capt. Webster, who preceded Beau Nash in the office at Bath. He became master of the ceremonies on the occasion of the visit of Queen Anne, in 1703.

MASTER-GENERAL OF THE MILITARY. —Constantine I. (306—337) instituted two masters-general, one for the cavalry and one for the infantry. Before the end of the reign of Constantius II. (337—361) their number had been increased to four. A master of the military was elected annually at Venice between 737 and 742, instead of a doge.

MASTER OR KEEPER OF THE ROLLS OF CHANCERY.—The rolls of the exchequer commence in the reign of Henry I., the earliest extant being that of his 31st year (1131). The title of "Custos Rotulorum Cancellariæ Domini Regis" is found for the first time attached to the name of John de Langton, on the Patent Roll of 14 Edw. I. (1286), although the office no doubt existed before that date. The duties of this officer are defined by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 94 (Aug. 28, 1833). His salary is regulated by 1 Vict. c. 46 (July 12, 1837). The master of the rolls is a patentee officer and a privy councillor. He may sit in Parliament, and administer justice in the Rolls Court; but his decrees are not valid until signed by the chancellor. By virtue of his office he is chief of the masters in chancery and of the Petty-Bag Office. Lord Romilly, Master of the Rolls, submitted to the treasury, Jan. 26, 1857, a proposal for the publication of materials for the History of England from the invasion of the Romans to the reign of Henry VIII. The Lords of the Treasury, in a minute dated Feb. 9, 1857, approved of the plan, and the publication of two series, one of Chronicles and Memorials, and the other of Calendars of State Papers, commenced in 1857.

MASTERS OF THE ROLLS FROM THE REIGN OF GEORGE III.

1760, Oct. Thomas Clarke.
1764, Dec. 4. Thomas Sewell.
1784, March 30. Lloyd Kenyon.
1788, June 4. Richard Arden.
1801, May 27. William Grant.
1818, Jan. 6. Thomas Plumer.

GEORGE IV.

1820, Jan. Thomas Plumer.
1824, April 5. Robert, Lord Gifford.
1826, Sep. 14. John Singleton Copley (afterwards Lord Lyndhurst).
1827, May 2. John Leach.

WILLIAM IV.

1830, June. John Leach.
1834, Sep. 29. Charles Christopher Pepys.
1850, Jan. 16. Henry, Lord Langdale.

VICTORIA.

1837, June. Henry, Lord Langdale.
1851, March 28. John Romilly (afterwards Lord Romilly).

MASTER OF THE REVELS.—The following list of persons who held this appointment was communicated to "Notes and Queries" by Mr. E. F. Rimbault. It was copied from the handwriting of Sir Henry Herbert, one of the last to hold the office:—

DATE.
Not on record	Sir Richard Guildford.
[1544] 36 Hen. VIII.	Sir Thomas Cawerden.
Not on record	Sir Thomas Benegar.
Not on record	Sir John Fortescue.
July 24 [1578], 21 Eliz.	Edmund Tilney, Esq.
June 23 [1603], 1 Jac.	Sir George Buck.
[1612], 10 Jac. I.	Sir John Astley.
[1617] 15 Jac. I.	Benjamin Johnson.
Aug. 21 [1629], 5 Car. I.	Sir Henry Herbert, and Simon Thelwall, Esq.

To these may be added the following: –

1673. Thomas Killigrew.	1725. Charles Henry Lee.
1683. Charles Killigrew.	1744. Solomon Dayrolle.

The ancient jurisdiction of the master of the revels was transferred in 1737 to the "licenser of the stage," who, with the deputy licenser, performed all the duties of the office; and on the death of Solomon Dayrolle, no successor was appointed.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS (Ireland).—The earliest on record was William de Bardelby, appointed in 1334.

MASTERS OF THE ROLLS (IRELAND).

VICTORIA.

1837, Jan. 28. Sir Michael O'Loghlen.
1842, Nov. 1. Francis Blackburne.
1852, March 1. Thomas Lefroy.

MASTERS IN CHANCERY.—Foss considers that masters or clerks in chancery existed as early as the reign of Richard I. (1189—99), and that they were appointed to attend the king in his progresses, when they assumed the title of vice-chancellor. Sir Christopher Hatton, who was made chancellor April 29, 1587, always had masters in chancery present when he sat in court, to assist him in his decisions. The office was abolished by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80 (June 30, 1852).

MASTER AND SERVANT.—Various statutes have been passed for the regulation of the law between master and servant. By 32 Geo. III. c. 56 (1792), a master knowingly giving a good character to a bad servant is liable to a fine of £20, or three months' imprisonment with hard labour. The payment of certain classes of servants is required to be made in money by 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 37 (Oct. 15, 1831). A committee of the House of Commons appointed to inquire into the law between master and servant issued their report in 1866.

MASTER OF THE WARDROBE.—This office existed in very early times, and received from Henry VI. (1422—61) important privileges, which were enlarged by James I. (1603—25). The salary attached to the office was £2,000 per annum, and there were, in addition to the master, many inferior functionaries. They were all abolished by 22 Geo. III. c. 82 (1782), which transferred the duties of the wardrobe establishment to the lord chamberlain's department.

MASULIPATAM (Hindostan).—This city was mentioned by Marco Polo, in his travels, circulated in 1298, and was conquered by the Bhamenee sovereigns of the Deccan in 1480. In 1751 it was taken and fortified by the French, who were expelled by the British, under Col. Forde, April 6, 1759; and Masulipatam was ceded to the East India Company in 1765.

MATAMORAS (Battle).—The Americans, under the command of Gen. Taylor, defeated the Mexican army at this town, in Mexico, May 8, 1846.

MATARO (Spain).—This place, made a city in 1701, was sacked by Duhesme, under circumstances of great cruelty, June 17, 1808. The church of St. Maria was founded in 1675, the college in 1737, and it was incorporated with the university of Cervera in 1829. The railroad to Barcelona, the first constructed in Spain, was opened in October, 1848.

MATCHES.—Friction matches were invented by Walker, of Stockton-on-Tees, in April, 1827. (See LUCIFER MATCHES.)

MATCHIN (Bulgaria).—The Turks constructed a camp here, which was destroyed by the Russians Oct. 20, 1771. The Russians obtained an advantage over the Turks in an encounter near this town, July 9, 1791. The Turks defeated the Russians in an engagement here Dec. 24, 1853.

MATHEMATICS.—This term, which anciently signified all knowledge calculated to strengthen the mental powers, is applied to algebra, arithmetic, geometry (q. v.), and kindred sciences.

MATINS.—Prayers were offered in the morning by the early Christians. Clement, who died about 220, declares that men are unworthy of light who do not offer adoration to its Author at the earliest dawn. The massacre on Bartholomew's Day (q. v.) (Aug. 24, 1572), was termed the French or Paris Matins, and the massacre of the false Demetrius and the Poles at Moscow, May 29, 1606, the Matins of Moscow.

MATRIMONIAL CAUSES ACT.—(See DIVORCE.)

MATRONALIA.—(See JUNONIA.)

MATTERHORN.—(See ALPINE CLUB.)

MATTHEW, ST. (Gospel), written, according to the best authorities, in 57 or 58, though various dates between 37 and 61 are assigned to it. Horne assigns it to 37 or 38.

MATTIUM.—(See CATTI.)

MATURINES, MATHURINS, or TRINITARIANS.—This order of friars, founded in France for the redemption of captives, by St. John de Matha and Felix de Valois, about 1197, and at first called Trinitarians, received the name of Maturines, or Mathurines, because, from 1226, they occupied a church at Paris, dedicated to St. Mathurin. They were suppressed in France in 1790. The order was introduced into England in 1224, and received the lands, revenues, and other privileges of the decayed order of the Holy Sepulchre. The Maturine friars, who were governed according to the rule of St. Augustine, possessed about 12 houses in this country.

MAUBEUGE (France).—This town was founded in the 7th century, and was for a considerable period the capital of Hainault. It was taken by the French in 1649, and was ceded to them by the treaty of Nimeguen, Aug. 10, 1678. Vauban erected the fortifications in 1680; and in 1793 it was besieged by the Prince of Coburg, who was compelled to retire by Marshal Jourdan. Its manufactory of arms was founded by Louis XIV. in 1704. It has sustained several sieges, and surrendered to the Prussians in June, 1815.

MAUI.—(See HAWAIIAN ARCHIPELAGO.)

MAUNDY THURSDAY, the day before Good Friday, is so called because on this day it was usual to distribute to the poor bread and other "doles," contained in mannds or baskets. St. Augustine is the earliest who is known to have practised it. It was also customary to wash the feet of pilgrims on this day. The first English monarch who distributed alms to the poor on Maundy Thursday was Edward III., in 1363. The day was sometimes called "Shere Thursday," because people used to shear or cut their hair and beards for the occasion. It was so named in 1511. A money payment was substituted for the "doles" in 1838.

MAUPERTUIS.—(See POITIERS, Battle.)

MAURA SANTA.—(See LEUCADIA).

MAURETANIA, or MAURITANIA (Africa).—This country, now forming part of Algiers (q. v.), Morocco, and Fez, was unknown to the inhabitants of Europe until B.C. 202, when the Romans fought in Africa against Hannibal. Julius Cæsar confirmed Bogudes and Bochus, as joint kings of Mauretania, B.C. 49, and the kingdom was erected into a Roman province B.C. 46. Augustus conferred it upon Juba II., B.C. 25, and on his death it passed to his son Ptolemy, who was slain by Caligula in 41. Claudius I. divided the kingdom into the two provinces of Mauretania Tingitana, and Mauretania Cæsariensis, in 42. It was invaded by a horde of Frankish invaders from Spain, in 256, and was conquered by Genseric the Vandal in 429. The Arabs first appeared in the country in 667, and completed its conquest in 709.

MAURICE, ST.—This military order, established in Savoy in 1434, by Duke Amadeus VIII., was renewed by Emanuel Philibert, and joined to that of St. Lazarus in 1572. It was reorganized and extended to civilians in 1816.

MAURITIUS, or ISLE OF FRANCE (Indian Ocean).—This island was discovered by the Portuguese in 1505. The Spaniards called it Cerne, and in 1598 it was seized by the Dutch, who named it Mauritius in honour of their Stadtholder, Maurice; but they formed no settlement till 1644. They abandoned the colony in 1712, and it was neglected until the French formed a settlement in 1715, and took possession of the island in 1721. It was captured by the English Dec. 2, 1810, and has remained in their possession ever since. It was made a bishopric in 1854.

MAUR, or MAUR LES FOSSES, ST. (France), a Benedictine Abbey, founded in 638, and called St. Peter, was named St. Maur in the 13th century. The treaty of St. Maur des Fosses between Louis XI. and the leaders of the League of the Public Good, was signed here Oct. 29, 1465. Charles IX. issued an edict here against the Huguenots in 1569. It became the home of the celebrated congregation of the Benedictines in 1618.

MAUSOLEUM.—On the death of Mausolus, King of Caria, B.C. 353, his wife Artemisia testified her affection by erecting at Halicarnassus (q. v.) a magnificent building to his memory, which received the title of the Mausoleum, and ranked as one of the seven wonders of the world: hence all sepulchral edifices of more than usual magnificence are styled mausolea. The ruins of this edifice were used by the Hospitallers, who had taken possession of the site in 1404, in the erection of their castle of St. Peter in 1484 and 1522. In 1846 the British Government arranged with the Porte for the purchase of the remaining ruins; and in 1856 Mr. Charles Newton was appointed vice-consul at Mitylene, with full powers to transmit the acquisitions to England. He formed a valuable collection, including the colossal statue of Mausolus; and the whole arrived in this country in July, 1857, and was deposited in the British Museum. (See ALBERT MAUSOLEUM.)

MAUVE.—In 1848 Dr. Stenhouse announced

the possibility of extracting purple dyes from lichens by macerating them in lime water. This discovery was applied and extended by Marnas, of Lyons, who produced in 1857 the fashionable dye known as mauve.

MAXIMIANISTS, a branch of the Donatists, so named from Maximinus, their leader, arose in the Donatist community in Africa towards the close of the 4th century.

MAY.—This month derives its name either from Maia, the mother of Mercury, or from its having been dedicated by Romulus to the Roman majores, or senators. It was the second month in the old Alban calendar, the third in that of Romulus, and the fifth in that of Numa Pompilius. The Saxons termed it Tri-Milchi, because pasture was so plentiful that they were able to milk their cows thrice during the day. (See FIELD OF MARCH OR MAY.)

MAYBURY.—(See DRAMATIC COLLEGE.)

MAY-DAY.—From the earliest periods it has been customary to celebrate the return of spring with peculiar sports. The Romans had their Floralia, held on the 4th of the calends of May. The earliest recorded circumstance in connection with the celebration of May-day in England is, that the Druids were accustomed to assemble on the night of the last day in April and light large bonfires to hail the return of spring. Chaucer alludes to the universality of its observance in his time; and as late as the reign of Elizabeth, the queen and court joined in the sports. May Fair was abolished in London in 1708. (See EVIL MAY-DAY.)

MAYENCE, MAINZ, or MENTZ (Hesse-Darmstadt), originated in the Roman fort of Moguntiacum, erected by Drusus, B.C. 13, on the site of which the city stands. It was destroyed by the Vandals in 406, and was rebuilt by Dagobert II. The archbishopric of Mayence was founded by Boniface in 747, and the cathedral was commenced in 978. Councils were held here in 752 or 753, 813, 829, 847, 848, 852, 857, 860, 1023, 1049, 1051, March, 1055, 1069, 1071, 1080, 1085, 1094, 1131, 1159, 1225, 1233, 1239, 1259, 1261, 1310, 1387, 1439, and 1441. Printing is said to have been invented in this city by John Gutenberg in 1440. It was a free and imperial city for some years, but submitted to the archbishop in 1462. In 1631 Mentz was taken by the Swedes, and in 1644 and 1688 by the French, who lost it in 1689. It was again seized by the forces of the republic in 1792, and retaken by the Prussians in 1793. It was ceded to France by the treaty of Campo Formio, Oct. 17, 1797, and erected into the chief town of the department of Mont Tonnerre, and in 1814 it was ceded to the Grand Duke of Hesse-Darmstadt. The university, founded in the 15th century, was suppressed in 1802. It was made a Federal fortress in 1825. The bronze statue of Gutenberg was erected in 1837. A powder magazine exploded in Nov., 1857, and caused a serious loss of life. The Prussians occupied the city Aug. 26, 1866.

MAYENNE (France).—The Earl of Salisbury captured this ancient town in 1424. Charles IX. made it a duchy in 1573. The Vendeans took it in 1793.

MAYNOOTH COLLEGE (Ireland).—The Roman Catholic college of St. Patrick at Maynooth, in the county of Kildare, was founded in 1795, according to the provisions of an act of the Irish Parliament, for the education of persons destined for the Roman Catholic priesthood. It was built at a cost of £32,000, and is supported by an annual parliamentary grant. A lay college was opened in 1802, dependent on voluntary subscriptions. By 8 & 9 Vict. c. 25 (June 30, 1845), the college was placed on a new footing, and permanently endowed for the maintenance and education of 500 students and 20 senior scholars. A commission was appointed to inquire into the operation of the institution, Sep. 19, 1853. Several unsuccessful motions have been made in the House of Commons for the repeal of the Maynooth grant.

MAYO (Bishopric), is said to have been established in 665, though it was not in existence long, and little is known of its history.

MAYO (Ireland), forming part of Connaught, was granted by Henry II. to William Fitz-Adelm de Burgho, in 1180. William de Burgho, Earl of Ulster, was assassinated in 1333, and about this time Mayo was made a county. For two centuries it remained in a very unsettled state. The native chiefs submitted to Elizabeth in 1575, but the supremacy of the English was not acknowledged until 1586. The old families took part in the rebellion of 1641, and the French attempted an invasion in 1798.

MAYOR.—This office dates from the reign of Richard I., who appointed a mayor as chief officer of the city of London, in place of the bailiffs, in 1189, and the precedent was copied by King John, in respect to the bailiff of King's Lynn, in 1204. The first mayor of Dublin was appointed in 1409. (See LORD MAYOR.)

MAYOR OF THE PALACE.—An important officer of the French court under the Merovingian kings. His duty was originally to supervise the royal funds, and to regulate the government of the household. Afterwards the mayors acquired political influence, and acted as regents during the minority of the sovereign, until ultimately the whole power of the kingdom devolved upon them, and the kings, called Fainéants (q. v.) became mere puppets. Gogon, mayor of Austrasia, obtained the direction of the government in 575, and after 679 there were no more kings. The mayor of Burgundy, in 614, induced Clotaire II. to grant that in future the office should be conferred by the great proprietors, not by the king, and held during life. The office became hereditary in 687, and Pepin the Short deposed Childeric III. and was proclaimed king in his stead in 752. (See FRANCE.)

MAYOTTA ISLAND (Indian Ocean).—This volcanic island, which forms one of the Comoro group, was avoided by Europeans until 1840. It was ceded to the French in 1841, who commenced their occupation June 13, 1843.

MAY-POLE.—The custom of rearing the May-pole is traced to the Roman Floralia, but nothing is known respecting the period at which it was introduced into this country. Du Cange speaks of a charter of the year 1207, which states that May-poles were taken by grant, and erected in the streets and at the houses of great men. The May-pole in the Strand was taken down in April, 1718.

MEAL-TUB PLOT.—This was a fictitious plot fabricated by a known criminal named Dangerfield, and ascribed by him to the Presbyterians. He directed the revenue officers to search the lodgings of Col. Mansel, where they found a number of seditious documents, which were afterwards proved to be forgeries. Dangerfield was accordingly committed to Newgate, where he acknowledged that he had been bribed by the Papists to forge these papers, and that proofs of the truth of his confession were deposited in a meal-tub in the house of a Mrs. Cellier, a Roman Catholic and his mistress, where they were in fact found. This took place in 1679. Dangerfield was put in the pillory, and also whipped, and was again convicted of libel, May 30, 1685. On his return a man named Francis assaulted him, and he died a few days afterwards. Francis was tried and executed.

MEANEE.—(See MEEANEE, Battle.)

MEASURES.—The English measure of Winchester was made the general standard by a law of King Edgar, in 974. The first standard ell was established from the length of Henry the First's arm in 1101, and the measure for cloth was made uniform throughout the kingdom by 18 Hen. VI. c. 16 (1439), which established the yard and the inch as the standards. Public standards of measures were ordered to be deposited in all the principal towns by 11 Hen. VII. c. 4 (1494); and the capacity of the bushel was regulated by 12 Hen. VII. c. 5 (1496). The length of the statute mile was regulated by 35 Eliz. c. 6 (1593). Charles I. issued a proclamation ordering a uniform measure for every commodity throughout the kingdom in 1636. Parliament attempted to introduce uniformity of measure in 1759, but without success. By 10 Geo. III. c. 39 (1770), a standard Winchester bushel of eight gallons was ordered to be kept in every market-town. The various laws on the subject were amended by 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 63 (Sep. 9, 1835), which abolished heaped measure, and ordered inspectors of measures to be appointed.

MEATH (Bishopric).—This Irish bishopric is composed of several minor sees, which were anciently distinct. The most important appears to have been Clonard, which was founded by St. Finian in 520. Eugene was the first prelate who assumed the title of Bishop of Meath in 1174.

MEATH (Ireland) formed one of the kingdoms into which Ireland was divided in early times. Richard Strongbow subjected Meath to the English in 1171, and Henry II. (1154—89) conferred it as a county palatine on Hugh de Lacy. For nearly a century and a half it was the theatre of continual warfare; and in the reign of Henry VIII. (1509—47) the ancient county was divided into East Meath and West Meath.

MEAUX (France).—This town, supposed to be identical with the Roman Iatinum, was burned by the Northmen in the 9th century. The bishopric of Meaux was founded in 375, and a council was held here June 17, 845. The cathedral was commenced in the 12th century. It obtained a charter in 1179. Henry V. of England besieged it in 1422, and it surrendered June 5. Artillery is said to have been used in the siege. The French recovered it in 1439; it joined the League in 1587; and submitted to Henry IV. in 1594. The prisoners were massacred here by the republicans Sep. 5, 1792. The Russians attacked Meaux Feb. 26, 1814, and the allies passed the Marne, at Meaux, March 28, 1814.

MEAUX (Treaty), concluded at this place during the regency of Blanche of Castile with Raymond VII., April 12, 1229, secured the marquisate of Provence to France, and provided for the marriage of one of Raymond's daughters with a brother of Louis IX.

MECCA (Arabia) is celebrated as the birthplace of Mohammed, April, 570, who was expelled July 15, 622, and captured it Jan. 11, 630. In 692 it was captured by Abdelmelik, and in 929 it was plundered by the Carmathians. In 1184 Renaud de Châtillon failed in an attempt upon Mecca. In 1803 it was seized by the Moslem sect of the Wahabees, from whom it was taken in 1818 by Ibrahim Pasha.

MECHANICS.—The ancients were no doubt acquainted with the application of the mechanical powers at a very early period, but the principles on which their action depends were not known till a comparatively late period. Aristotle (B.C. 384—322) is the first author who wrote on mechanics, and Archimedes (B.C. 287—212) is the most eminent of ancient mechanicians.

A.D.
1577. Stevinus, of Flanders, discovers the true theory of the inclined plane.
1594. Galileo is said to have written his treatise "Della Scienza Mecanica."
1634. Galileo publishes the work "Della Scienza Mecanica."
1638. Galileo publishes his dialogues on motion, and Castelli writes on the motions of fluids.
1661. The laws of percussion are discovered simultaneously by Huyghens, Wallis, and Sir Christopher Wren.
1670. Wallis publishes his treatise "De Motu."
1687. Newton publishes his "Principia," and Varignon his "New System of Mechanics."
1695. La Hire publishes a treatise on mechanics.
1736. Euler describes rectilinear and curvilinear motion.
1743. D'Alembert makes important discoveries in dynamics.
1750. The preservation of areas is discovered simultaneously by Euler, Daniel Bernoulli, and the Chevalier D'Arci.
1752. Euler, D'Alembert, and Clairault, solve the problem of the three bodies.
1788. Lagrange publishes the "Mécanique Analytique."
1798. Laplace commences the "Mécanique Céleste."
1823. Professor Whewell publishes his treatise on dynamics.

MECHANICS' INSTITUTIONS.—The first was established in London by Dr. Birkbeck, at Southampton Buildings, Holborn, Dec. 2, 1823.

MECHANICSVILLE.—(See CHICKAHOMINY, Battles.)

MECHITARISTS, or MEKHITARISTS, Armenian Christians named after Peter Mechitar, or Mekhitar, who was born at Sebaste in 1676. He repaired to Constantinople in 1700, and having in vain endeavoured to unite the Armenians, was compelled to quit the city and took refuge in the Morea, founding at Modon, in 1708, an Armenian monastery. On the conquest of the Morea by the Turks in 1717, Mechitar repaired to Venice, and the island of St. Lazaro was granted to him, and here he established a printing press, and formed the society that bears his name, for the diffusion of a knowledge of the Armenian language and literature. Mechitar died at Venice April 27, 1749. The society have branches at Constantinople, Paris, Vienna, and other places, and their publications have a large circulation in the Levant.

MECHLIN.—(See MALINES.)

MECKLENBURG (Germany).—This ancient duchy was originally peopled by the Heruli and the Vandals, who were expelled by the Obotrites in 782. Charlemagne failed in his attempts to reduce this tribe to subjection; but in 1159 Henry the Lion subdued their chief, Niclot, and seized his territories. The two lines of Mecklenburg and Werle were founded by John the Theologian and Niclot, on the death of their father, Henry-Burwin II., in 1236. The latter became extinct in 1436. The entire duchy was conferred upon Wallenstein by the Emperor Ferdinand II., March 4, 1628; but in 1631 it was restored to Adolphus Frederick and John Albert, the then existing representatives of the lines of Mecklenburg-Schwerin and Mecklenburg-Gustrow. The division of the duchy between the great branches of Strelitz and Schwerin was effected March 8, 1701. In 1815 the dukes assumed the title of grand dukes. The two governments assembled at Schwerin, in 1848, to consider the adoption of a new constitution, which was agreed to by the Grand Duke of Schwerin. Owing to the opposition of the nobility, he was compelled to withdraw his assent in 1850.

MEDALS.—This term, properly speaking, originated in the Middle Ages. The medallions of the Roman empire were large metal pieces, presented by the emperors as tokens of esteem, or by the mint-masters to the emperors as specimens of workmanship. These were not common until after the accession of Hadrian, in 117; after which they seem to have continued in frequent use until the end of the Western empire. It is a contested point whether they were or were not current as pieces of coin. The earliest modern medal is one in gold, of David II. of Scotland, thought to have been struck between 1330 and 1370. A medal of John Huss, dated 1415, is of questionable authenticity. The German medals commence in 1453, the Papal medals in 1464, the Danish in 1474, the English in 1480, the Spanish in 1503, and the Venetian in 1509.

MEDELLIN (Battle).—Marshal Victor, at the head of a French army, defeated March 28, 1809, the Spaniards under Cuesta, near this town, the ancient Metellinum, founded by Q. C. Metellus.

MEDIA (Asia). — Berosus states that the Medes had conquered Babylon before B.C. 2000, and that the dynasty lasted 224 years. Rawlinson (Anct. Monarch. iii. ch. vi.), who ranks Media third amongst the five great monarchies of the ancient world, declares that Median history from B.C. 2234 to B.C. 835, is a blank.

B.C.
710. The Medes are subdued by Sargon, King of Assyria.
647. The Medes establish their independence.
634. The Medes invade Assyria, and are defeated with great loss, their king being slain.
631. Cyaxares leads another Median army into Assyria. He is compelled to withdraw on account of the invasion of his own territories by the Scythians.
627. Cyaxares again invades Assyria.
625. Cyaxares and his allies capture Nineveh.
615. The war between Media and Lydia commences.
610, Sep. 30. The battle of Halys (q. v.) is interrupted by the eclipse of Thales, and peace is concluded between Media and Lydia. The date of this battle is Sep. 30, 610 B.C., according to Ideler; B.C. 610, according to Rawlinson; B.C. 585, according to Bouanquet; and May 28, 594 B.C., according to Airy.
558. Cyrus, King of Persia, rebels. Astyages invades Persia and is victorious in a battle lasting two days. Astyages, who advances on Pasargadæ, is defeated in a second battle, also extending over two days. He continues his advance, and is completely routed in the vicinity of Pasargadæ, by Cyrus, who assumes the style "King of Media and Persia." (See PERSIA.)

MEDIÆVAL or MIDDLE AGES, according to Hallam (View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages), comprised about 1000 years, from the invasion of France by Clovis I., in 486, to that of Naples by Charles VIII. in 1494. Dowling, in his "Introduction to the Critical Study of Ecclesiastical History," fixes the Council of Chalcedon, in 451, as the commencement, and the revival of classical literature in the 15th century as the end, of the period. Fleury fixes the commencement at the fall of the Western empire in 476, and the termination with the capture of Constantinople by the Turks, May 29, 1453. G. T. Manning, in "Outlines of the History of the Middle Ages," makes them extend from 400 to 1500, divided into the following periods:—

First period	400 to 800
Second period	800 to 964
Third period	964 to 1066
Fourth period	1066 to 1300
Fifth period	1300 to 1500

MEDIATIZED PRINCES.—By articles 24 and 25 of the German Act of Confederation, signed July 12, 1806, those German princes and nobles who had been subject to the emperor were designated mediatized princes, being placed under the sovereigns in whose dominions their territories were situated.

MEDICAL COUNCIL.—This council was established by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 90 (Aug. 2, 1858), an act to regulate the qualifications of practitioners in medicine and surgery. Sir Benjamin Brodie, elected the first president of the council in Nov., 1858, died Oct. 21, 1862.

MEDICINE.—A writer in the eighth edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica" (xiv. p. 450) remarks that "the earliest historical development of scientific medicine is everywhere traced from a priesthood." The Egyptians were the earliest medical practitioners. With them medicine was under the control of the state, and doctors who departed from the prescribed methods of treatment were guilty of a capital offence, in the event of their patient's decease. The earliest work on medicine is the Hindoo Ayur Veda, which is supposed to have been written about B.C. 1400. The worship of Æsculapius, the god of medicine, was introduced into Greece about B.C. 1200; but the profession of physic was restricted to the priesthood until about B.C. 500. Hippocrates, born about B.C. 460, founder of the Hippocratean or the Dogmatic school, is the father of the Greek system of medicine, which declined about B.C. 336, and was succeeded by the Alexandrian school, B.C. 332. The epistle of Diocles on the Preservation of Health was written about B.C. 312, and continued in high repute for about 400 years. Herophilus, who flourished B.C. 285; Erasistratus, B.C. 300—260; and Serapion, B.C. 250, were the most eminent practitioners of the Alexandrian school. The medical became a distinct profession at Rome about B.C. 200. It was at first practised exclusively by slaves or freedmen. Archagathus, a Peloponnesian who settled at Rome, B.C. 200, was the first regular practitioner, but it was not regarded with much interest until after the great pestilence which depopulated the city B.C. 187. Asclepiades, B.C. 90: Themison, B.C. 60; Thessalus, in 55; and Galen, in 165, are the most eminent Roman physicians; and after the death of the last-named, medical science suffered a serious decline. The Greek system was revived at Constantinople in 328, and flourished under Oribasius in 360; Aëtius in 525; and Paul of Ægina in 640. The Arabian physicians attained celebrity in the 7th century, the most important being Ebu Sina, or Avicenna, whose great work, the "Almalecus," was written about 1020. Mondini, who became professor of medicine at Bologna in 1316; Guy de Chauliac, who flourished in 1350; and the celebrated painter Leonardo da Vinci (1452—1520) were eminent medical practitioners, and contributed greatly to the advance of the science. The medical profession in Britain owes its rise to Thomas Linacre, who founded the College of Physicians in London in 1518. Harvey published his work on the circulation of the blood in 1628; Pecquet discovered the anatomy of the lacteal vessels in 1647; Malpighi demonstrated the relation of the pulmonary tissue to the circulation in 1661; and Mayow obtained advanced views on the subject of respiration in 1668. (See DOCTOR.)

MEDICI FAMILY, first rose to importance in 1251, and Silvester de Medici became gonfaloniere at Florence in 1378. Cosmo de Medici, called "the father of his country," born in 1389, died Aug. 1, 1464, and Lorenzo de Medici, called "the Magnificent," born in 1448, died April 8, 1492, were the most illustrious members of this family. The last male of the family died in 1737, and the last female in 1743. (See FLORENCE and TUSCANY.)

MEDINA DEL CAMPO (Spain).—During a revolt in Spain, in 1520, this town was taken by the royal troops, under Antonio de Fonseca, who treated the inhabitants with great cruelty.

MEDINA, or MEDINET EL NABI (Arabia), is celebrated as having been the asylum of Mohammed when he fled from Mecca, July 15, 622, and the scene of his death, June 8, 632. The celebrated mosque containing the tomb of the Prophet was totally destroyed by fire in 1508. It was restored by Kayd Beg, King of Egypt, in 1514. Medina was taken by the Wahabees in 1803, but was recovered from them by Ibrahim Pasha in 1818.

MEDINA DE RIO SECO (Spain), supposed by some authorities to be the ancient Tela, was the scene of a victory gained by the French army, under Bessières, over the Spaniards, July 14, 1808, when the town of Rio Seco was taken and pillaged. The Spaniards defeated the French here, Nov. 23, 1809; but were, in their turn, defeated and dispersed Nov. 26, and the French entered the town Nov. 27.

MEDINA SIDONIA (Spain) was taken by Abderahman I. in 764, and surrendered to Alphonso X. in 1254.

MEDIOLANUM INSUBRUM (Italy), the capital of Cisalpine Gaul, was taken by the Romans from the Insubres, B.C. 222. A battle between the Romans and the allied Insubrians and Boii, in which the latter lost several thousand men, took place here B.C. 194. It probably submitted with the other towns of the Insubres about B.C. 190. Under the Romans it became a municipium, and rapidly grew in importance. The usurper Aureolus was besieged here in 268 by the Emperor Gallienus, who was killed by the hands of his own soldiers in the course of the siege (March 20). The place subsequently surrendered to Marcus Aurelius Claudius II., surnamed Gothicus, who put Aureolus to death. About 303 it gained in importance by being chosen as the residence of the Emperor Maximian I., who thus made it the capital of Northern Italy. For a century it was the residence of successive emperors. Attila ravaged it in 452, and it was selected as a residence by the Gothic king Odoacer in 476. Belisarius having taken the place, it was recovered by the Goths in 539, after a protracted siege, which was characterized by great barbarity on the part of the besiegers. They put the male inhabitants, 300,000 in number, to the sword, and reduced the women to slavery. (See MILAN.)

MEDJIDIE.—This Turkish order was instituted in 1852, and was conferred on several English officers who served in the Crimea.

MEDLEY CLOTHS.—(See CLOTH.)

MEDMENHAM CLUB.—A society of wits and humorists are said to have assembled at Medmenham Abbey, Desborough, Bucks, in the middle of the 18th century. They took the title of Monks of St. Francis.

MEDSCHID or MESCHED ALI (Asia), the ancient Hira (q. v.), was taken in 1806 by the Wahabees, who were speedily expelled by the inhabitants.

MEEANEE, or MIYANI (Battle).—Fought Feb. 17, 1843, during the campaign in Scinde. Sir Charles Napier, with a force amounting only to 2,600 men, assailed the Beloochees, who mustered 30,000 infantry and 5,000 cavalry, with 15 guns. They were strongly posted, their wings resting on large woods extending on each side of the plain, with a natural ravine in front of their position. After a fierce contest of three hours' duration, the Beloochees gave way, leaving their artillery, stores, &c., in the hands of the victors.

MEERUT, or MERUT (Hindustan), an ancient city of Delhi, is mentioned as one of the first conquests of Mahmoud of Ghizni, in 1018. In 1240 it resisted the forces of Turmacherin Khan; but in 1399 it surrendered to Timour. Together with the rest of the district in which it is situated, Meerut passed into the possession of the British in 1803, and it was selected as the seat of a judicial and revenue establishment in 1809. The native troops, after having on several occasions shown signs of insubordination, mutinied here May 10, 1857, and left for Delhi May 11.

MEGALOPOLIS (Greece), or the "Great City," once the capital of Arcadia, was founded B.C. 370. It was besieged by Polysperchon, who failed in the attempt to take it, B.C. 318, it joined the Achæan League, B.C. 239, and was captured B.C. 222, by Cleomenes III., who laid a great part of the town in ruins. It was rebuilt, but never regained its former importance.

MEGARA (Greece), according to some authorities, was founded by Car, son of Phoroneus, while others attribute its origin to Pandion, in the reign of Pylas. At a very early period the city was conquered by the Dorians, and in the 7th century B.C. was one of the most flourishing cities of Greece. The Megarians formed an alliance with the Athenians B.C. 455, and surrendered to Philip II. of Macedon after the battle of Chæronea (q. v.), Aug. 7, B.C. 338. Demetrius Poliorcetes declared it a free city B.C. 307, and it joined the Achæan League B.C. 242.

MEGIDDO (Battles).—Joshua (xii. 21) gained a victory over its king B.C. 1451.——The Kings of Canaan fought at Taanach (Judges v. 19), near the waters of Megiddo, B.C. 1265.——King Josiah was killed by Pharaoh Necho, in the valley of Megiddo, B.C. 610 (2 Chron. xxxv. 22–24).

MEHUDPORE (Battle).—Sir Thomas Hislop defeated Holkar and the Mahratta army at this town, in Hindostan, Dec. 21, 1817.

MEININGEN (Germany) was made the capital of the duchy of Saxe-Meiningen in 1681.

MEISSEN (Saxony).—Founded in 922, or, according to some authorities, in 928, by the Emperor Henry I., who built a castle, long the residence of the ancient Saxon princes. The cathedral, founded by Otho I. (936—973), contains some antique monuments, and some paintings by Albert Durer and Cranach. Frederick I. founded the prince's chapel in 1425. The castle was almost entirely rebuilt in 1471, and the manufacture of the celebrated china, known as Dresden, commenced here in 1710. Frederick II. of Prussia entered Meissen, on the retreat of the Austrians, Dec. 6, 1745, and 1,400 Prussians surrendered to the Austrians at this place, Dec. 3, 1759. A part of the Prussian army attacked the French at the bridge of Meissen, in order to give Blucher an opportunity of crossing the Elbe at another point, Oct. 1, 1813.

MEISTERSINGERS, or MASTERSINGERS.—A corporation of German citizens, formed for the cultivation of poetry in the 13th century, and the successors of the Minnesingers (q. v.). They are said to have originated at Mayence, whence they spread to Augsburg, Nuremberg, Strasburg, and other cities. The Emperor Charles IV. incorporated them in 1378, and they attained great celebrity in the 16th century. They had rules like other corporations, and the members were obliged to submit to an apprenticeship. The most celebrated poems of this school are, "The History of Reynard the Foxe," translated into English in 1481, and the "Owle Glass," published in London in 1709. Hans Sachs, the shoemaker of Nuremberg, who wrote much between 1530 and 1538, was a celebrated Meistersinger.

MEKHITARISTS.—(See MECHITARISTS.)

MELAZZO, or MILAZZO (Battle).—The Royalist forces were defeated near this town, the ancient Mylæ (q. v.), by Garibaldi, June 20, 1860. The Royalists having taken refuge in the town, surrendered June 21.

MELBOURNE (Australia), named after Lord Melbourne, at that time prime minister of England, made the capital of Port Philip, or Victoria, in 1851, is seated on the River Yarra-Yarra. It was colonized from Van Diemen's Land in 1835, and was officially recognized and designated in 1837. Melbourne was made a municipality in 1843, and the seat of a bishop in 1847. It has increased rapidly since the discovery of gold in its vicinity in 1851. It became the seat of the Legislative Assembly in 1852. The hospital was founded in 1846. The university was opened in April, 1855, and the post-office in 1859. A flood, caused by the rising of the waters of the Yarra-Yarra forty feet above their usual level, submerged the greater portion of the city, and destroyed about a quarter of a million of property, Dec. 14—24, 1863. The first stone of the Victoria Institution for the Deaf and Dumb was laid by Sir C. Darling, March 6, 1866.

MELBOURNE ADMINISTRATIONS.—Owing to some disagreement respecting the Irish Coercion Bill, then under the consideration of Parliament, Viscount Althorp resigned the office of chancellor of the exchequer, July 7, 1834, and Lord Grey, the Prime Minister, following his example, resigned July 9. After certain negotiations, Viscount Melbourne kissed hands as Prime Minister, July 16. Several members of the Grey administration remained in the cabinet, which was thus constituted:—

Treasury	Viscount Melbourne.
Lord Chancellor	Lord Brougham.
President of the Council	Marquis of Lansdowne.
Privy Seal	Earl of Mulgrave.
Chancellor of Exchequer	Viscount Althorp.
Home Secretary	Viscount Duncannon.
Foreign Secretary	Viscount Palmerston.
Colonial Secretary	Hon. S. Rice.
Admiralty	Lord Auckland.
Board of Control	Mr. Charles Grant.
Postmaster-General	Marquis of Conyngham.
Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster	Lord Holland.
Paymaster of the Forces	Lord John Russell.
Chief Secretary for Ireland	Mr. E. J. Littleton.

The death of Lord Spencer, Nov. 10, rendered new arrangements respecting the chancellorship of the exchequer necessary, as Viscount Althorp succeeded to his father's title. Viscount Melbourne went to Brighton Nov. 14, 1834, to make certain propositions to William IV., who informed him that he should not require him to complete the arrangements, and the first Melbourne administration was dissolved. (See PEEL (FIRST ADMINISTRATION.) ——The second Melbourne administration was formed on the resignation of the first Peel administration, April 8, 1835, and was announced in both houses of Parliament, April 18. The cabinet consisted of—

Treasury	Viscount Melbourne.
President of the Council	Marquis of Lansdowne.
Privy Seal	Lord Duncannon.
Chancellor of the Exchequer	Mr. Spring Rice, created Lord Monteagle, Aug. 27, 1839.
Home Secretary	Lord John Russell.
Foreign Secretary	Lord Palmerston.
Colonial Secretary	Mr. Charles Grant, made Baron Glenelg, May 4, 1835.
Admiralty	Lord Auckland.
Board of Control	Sir J. C. Hobhouse.
Secretary at War	Viscount Howick.
Board of Trade	Mr. Poulett Thomson, created Baron Sydenham, Aug. 10, 1840.
Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster	Lord Holland.

The great seal was placed in commission. The Earl of Minto succeeded Lord Auckland at the Admiralty Sep. 19, 1835. Sir C. C. Pepys, with the title of Baron Cottenham, was made lord chancellor Jan. 19, 1836. Mr. Francis Thornhill Baring became chancellor of the exchequer Aug. 26, 1839; the Marquis of Normanby became colonial minister Feb. 20, 1839, and Lord John Russell succeeded him Aug. 30, 1839. The Earl of Clarendon became privy seal Jan. 15, 1840. Mr. T. B. (afterwards Lord) Macaulay became secretary at war Sep. 27, 1839; Mr. Henry Labouchere was made president of the board of trade, in place of Mr. Poulett Thomson, Aug. 29, 1839; and the Earl of Clarendon took the chancellorship of the duchy of Lancaster Oct. 20, 1840. Ministers only obtained a majority of five in committee on the Jamaica Suspension bill, May 6, 1839, whereupon they resigned, and Sir Robert Peel, aided by the Duke of Wellington, undertook the task of forming an administration. They obtained the co-operation of Lord Lyndhurst, the Earl of Aberdeen, Lord Ellenborough, Lord Stanley, Sir James Graham, Sir Henry Hardinge, and Mr. Goulburn; but the Queen refused to dismiss the ladies of the bedchamber, May 10, and Sir Robert Peel abandoned the task, the Melbourne administration being reinstated in office. A vote of want of confidence in ministers, introduced into the House of Commons by Sir Robert Peel, was carried June 4, 1841, by 312 to 311, whereupon ministers dissolved Parliament. After the recess, a vote of want of confidence, introduced in both branches of the legislature, was carried against ministers in the House of Lords, Aug. 24, by 168 to 72, and in the House of Commons, Aug. 27, by 360 to 269; and the resignation of the ministry was announced in both houses Aug. 30. (See PEEL (SECOND) ADMINISTRATION.)

MELCHITES, or IMPERIALISTS.—Those who sided neither with the Eutychians nor the Nestorians at the Council of Chalcedon, Oct. 8—Nov. 1, 451, first received this name.——Members of the orthodox party in the Monophysite controversy at Alexandria, about 537, were styled Melchites, a Syrian word, meaning Imperialists, because they adhered to the faith of their emperors. The name is applied to Christians in Syria and other parts of the East, who were induced by the Jesuits in the 17th century to use the liturgy and ceremonies of the Greek, or Eastern Church, whilst acknowledging the authority of the Pope, and accepting the Romish doctrines.

MELETIANS, the followers of Meletius, Bishop of Lycopolis, in Thebais, who was deposed by Peter, Bishop of Alexandria, at a council at Alexandria, in 301. The Meletians afterwards made common cause with the Arians. The Council of Nicæa, June 19—Aug. 25, 325, in vain attempted to heal the breach. They were numerous about 306. Mosheim, who states that the cause of the deposition of Meletius is involved in uncertainty, says that the Meletian party was in existence in the 5th century.

MELFI, or MELPHI (Italy).—This ancient town, made the capital of the Norman states of Apulia in 1042, was nearly destroyed by an earthquake Aug. 14, 1851. The cathedral and all the principal buildings were overwhelmed, and about 600 persons were killed.

MELIGNANO, or MELEGNANO.—(See MARIGNANO, Battle.)

MELITENA, or MELITENE (Armenia).—Trajan (98—117) erected it into a city, and Anastasius I. (491—518), and Justinian I. (527—65) surrounded it with walls. A council was held here in 357. (See EUSTATHIANS.)

MELITENA, or MELITENE (Battle).—The Persian monarch, Chosroes I. (Nushirvan), fought a great battle at this place, the modern Malathiah, in Lesser Armenia, in 577. Chosroes I. retreated the day after the battle, burning the town before he retired.

MELLINGEN (Battle).—The French defeated the Swiss at the passage of the Reuss, at Mellingen, in 1798.

MELODICA.—This keyed instrument was invented by Stein, at Augsburg, in 1770.

MELODICON.—This keyed instrument was invented by Peter Riffelsen, of Copenhagen, in 1803.

MELODISTS' CLUB.—(See CONCERT.)

MELODRAMA.—Is said to have been first applied to a kind of opera by Rinuccini, a Florentine, who died in 1621. The dramatic entertainment known in England by the name was introduced by Thomas Holcroft, who was born in London Dec. 10, 1745 (O.S.), and died March 23, 1809. His first comedy appeared in 1781.

MELON.—The musk melon was introduced into England from Jamaica in 1570, and the water melon from Italy in 1597.

MELORIA, or MELORIA (Sea-fight).—The Pisans defeated the Genoese in a naval battle at this place, near Leghorn, in 1241, and the Genoese defeated the Pisans in another, fought at the same place, Aug. 6, 1284.

MELOS (Ægean Sea), one of the Cyclades, is said to have been colonized by the Phœnicians, and at a later period to have received a colony of Lacedæmonians. It was invaded by the Athenians, under Nicias, B.C. 426, and was again invaded by a large force B.C. 416. The city was besieged by sea and land, but held out for several months. Two successful sallies were made by the Melians, but their provisions having become exhausted, they surrendered at discretion. The victors put all the men capable of bearing arms to death, and sold the women and children for slaves, 500 Athenian settlers being sent to form a new colony. A Peloponnesian squadron, under Antisthenes, defeated the Athenian navy here B.C. 413. The Lacedæmonians, under Lysander, having defeated the Athenians, their colony was recalled, and the captive Melians restored to their country, B.C. 404. It subsequently became part of the Roman empire, and was conquered by the Turks, under Soliman I. (1520—1566). It is called Milo, and is included in the modern kingdom of Greece.

MELPUM.—This city of Cisalpine Gaul was destroyed by a force of Insubrii Boii and Senones, B.C. 396.

MELRICHSTADT (Battle).—An undecided battle between Rodolph of Swabia and the Emperor Henry IV. was fought at this place, in Franconia, in 1078.

MELROSE (Scotland).—This site, occupied by a Culdee house, called Old Melrose, after the 12th century, founded in 635, and burned by Kenneth II. in 839, or, according to other authorities, by the Danes in 850, was superseded by an abbey for Cistercian monks, founded in 1136 by David I., and completed in 1146. In 1322 it was destroyed by Edward II. In 1326 it was rebuilt by Robert Bruce, and completed in the reign of James IV. (1488—1513). It was again destroyed by the English in 1545. The chronicle of Melrose, containing annals from 731 to 1275, was printed in 1684 and 1835.

MELTON MOWBRAY (Leicestershire), called Medeltune and Meltone Mowbray, received the name of Mowbray from its ancient lords, by command of Henry II. (1154—89.) In 1613 the town was considerably damaged by fire, and in 1637 the plague raged with great violence. A battle was fought here between the Royalists and the Parliamentary troops, the latter, 2,000 strong, being routed with great slaughter, in 1645. In 1736 the church, a handsome and spacious structure with lofty towers, was struck by lightning, and fragments of the south and north-east pinnacles, weighing from 5 cwt. to 6 cwt., were precipitated through the north transept.

MELUN (France), the ancient Melodunum, a town of the Senones, was taken by Clovis I. in 494, and by the Northmen in the 9th century. Councils were held here in 1216, Nov. 8, 1225, and Jan. 21, 1301. Bertrand du Guesclin first distinguished himself at the siege of Melun, commenced in June, 1359, and terminated by the surrender of the city to the Dauphin. Henry V. of England took it in 1420, and the French recovered possession in 1435.

MEMEL (Prussia).—This town, built in 1279, was fortified in 1312. It was greatly damaged by fire in 1323, and came into the possession of the Teutonic knights in 1404. It was taken by the Russians in 1757, and again occupied by them in Dec., 1813. The king and queen of Prussia concluded a convention with Napoleon I. at this town in 1807. Large portions of the town were destroyed by fires in 1379, 1457, 1540, 1678, and again Oct. 4, 1854.

MEMLOOKS.—(See MAMELUKES.)

MEMMINGEN (Germany) was ceded to Bavaria by arrangements definitively concluded Feb. 25, 1803. It was fortified by Mack in 1805, was taken by the French Oct. 9, and the Tyrolese occupied it in 1809.

MEMNONIUM.—(See LIBRARY and THEBES.)

MEMPHIS (Egypt).—Herodotus ascribes the foundation of this place, the Moph of the Old Testament, to Menes, first King of Egypt, B.C. 3893, according to Lepsius; B.C. 3643, according to Bunsen; B.C. 2412, according to Hales; and B.C. 2320, according to Wilkinson. Some fix as the date of its foundation B.C. 2188; and Diodorus Siculus ascribes it to Uchoreus, one of the successors of Osymandyas, King of Thebes, B.C. 2100. In order to reconcile the discrepancy in these statements, some historians ascribe its foundation to Menes, and its completion and extension to Uchoreus, who first made it a royal city. Memphis was taken by the Persians under Cambyses, B.C. 525, when many of its temples and palaces were destroyed. Alexander III. (the Great), who wintered here B.C. 332, did it much injury by founding Alexandria. Memphis, made the capital B.C. 272, was taken by Antiochus Epiphanes B.C. 171, and was visited and restored by Septimius Severus, in 202. In the 7th century it passed under the dominion of the Arabs, and gradually fell into decay, Cairo being built from its ruins. The Arabian traveller Abdallatif visited it in the 12th century. The ruins were discovered and excavated by M. Mariette, between 1850 and 1854. The most celebrated of its sacred buildings were, the temple of Ptah, or Hephæstos,—the elemental principle of fire,—said to have been coeval with the foundation of the city, and improved and beautified by several monarchs; the temple of Proteus, said to have been founded by the Phœnicians about the æra of the Trojan war; the temple of Isis, founded at an early period, and completed by Amasis B.C. 564; and the temple of Apis, called the cathedral of Egypt, founded by Psammetichus. Memphis ceased to be the metropolis of Egypt on the foundation of Alexandria, B.C. 332. It soon after fell into obscurity, and of this celebrated city, which, according to Diodorus, was seven leagues in circumference, and contained numerous beautiful temples, not one stone remains, — even the site on which it stood being disputed.

MEMPHIS (N. America).—This town, in Tennessee, founded early in the century, was captured by the Federals June 6, 1862. An engagement between the Confederate boats and the Federal fleet took place off the town the same day.

MENAI STRAIT (Wales).—The Romans crossed this strait, separating Caernarvonshire from the island of Anglesey, to attack the Druids in their last stronghold, in 59. A ferry-boat was lost, containing 50 persons, Dec. 4, 1785. A suspension-bridge over the strait, 100 feet above the level of high water, was commenced by Telford in 1818, and completed in 1825, at a cost of £120,000. The bridge was opened Jan. 30, 1826. The Britannia tubular bridge, 101 feet above the level of high water, was completed by Stephenson March 5, 1850, at a cost of £621,865.

MENDE (France).—This town, under the rule of its bishops from an early age till 1306, was fortified by Bishop Adalbert in 1151. It was frequently besieged during the religious wars of the 16th century; and Henry IV. of France destroyed its citadel in 1597.

MENDICANTS, or BEGGING FRIARS, religious orders in the Romish Church, supported by charitable contributions, were established in 1215, by Pope Innocent III. They increased rapidly in numbers, and became a great burthen not only to the people but to the Church. Gregory X., by the 23rd article of the Constitutions of the Council of Lyons, May 7—July 17, 1274, reduced the mendicant orders to four: viz., Dominicans, Franciscans, Carmelites, and Augustines, or Austin Friars. The Dominicans and Franciscans obtained great power both in Church and State. Their influence began to decline at the commencement of the Reformation in the 16th century. (See JACOBITES.)

MENDICITY SOCIETY (London), for the suppression of mendicity, was founded in 1818. It was established for the purpose of checking the practice of public begging, by putting the laws in force against impostors who adopt it as a trade, and by affording prompt and effectual assistance to those whom sudden calamity and unaffected distress may render worthy of the attention of the benevolent.

MENDOZA (South America), the capital of a province of the same name, in the Argentine Republic, was almost entirely destroyed by an earthquake, March 20, 1861. The city, situated on the eastern slope of the Cordilleras, was in one moment reduced to a mass of ruins. The calamity occurred at about a quarter to nine, p.m. Out of a population of 12,000 souls, 10,000 were buried, and of these 2,000 were rescued, many of them having sustained severe injuries. The same night a fire broke out among the ruins of one of the largest buildings in the city, and about 600 persons were actually burned alive. An eye-witness remarks, "This earthquake is probably the worst on record; never was destruction so complete."

MÉNEHOULD, ST. (France).—This ancient town was captured by the English in 1436, and afterwards sustained several sieges. A peace was concluded here May 15, 1614, with Condé and some nobles who had revolted, and by one of the articles the Etâts-Généraux assembled at Paris in October. It was the last meeting under the old monarchy. The Spaniards, who took it in 1652, were expelled in 1653.

MENES (Æra).—The æra of Menes, the first king of Egypt, is fixed by Lepsius, B.C. 3893; by Bunsen, B.C. 3643; by Hales, B.C. 2412; by Wilkinson, B.C. 2320; and by Prichard, B.C. 2214.

MENIN (Belgium).—The allied army took possession of this town Aug. 25, 1706, and it was captured by the French in June, 1744.

MENNONITES.—A sect of Anabaptists founded by Menno, surnamed Simonis, in 1536. Born at Witmarsum, in Friesland, in 1505, and commencing life as a Roman Catholic, he became a convert to the Anabaptists in 1536, and was allowed to settle in the United Provinces by William I., Prince of Orange, towards the close of the 16th century. Menno died in Holstein Jan. 13, 1561. In 1630 and 1649, conferences of the Anabaptists of Germany, Flanders, and Friesland were held at Amsterdam, when the rigorous laws of their founder were mitigated. During the 17th century they obtained toleration in England, Holland, and Germany. The Mennonites of the United States, at their annual conference at Germantown, March 6 and 7, 1865, passed a series of resolutions in favour of the Federals. (See GALENISTS.)

MENSA ET THORO.—This partial kind of divorce, a mensâ et thoro (from table and bed), effected by a sentence of the ecclesiastical courts, but not annulling the marriage, was superseded by a decree for a judicial separation, under the 7th clause of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85 (Aug. 28, 1857). (See DIVORCE.)
